Missouri State Public Defender System – By the Numbers

Cases and Costs - In FY2015, MSPD attorneys provided representation in 73,595 cases; more than 68,000 of these cases were handled by MSPD's trial division at an average cost of $374 per case (with overhead) on everything from misdemeanors to murders. While this is evidence of a lean system, it also raises concern about whether Missourians are receiving adequate representation before tax payers are burdened with the high cost of incarceration. What's more, cases are on the rise in FY16.

Litigation Expenses – The costs associated with practicing law have significantly increased (e.g., mental health experts). However, MSPD has not received a single new dollar for litigation expenses since 2008. MSPD's litigation costs for FY2015 were $2,775,120 or 60% of the total E & E Appropriation. In 2004, MSPD's E & E budget was cut by $2.5 million and it was never restored. This forces us to make devastating internal cuts such as not filling a number of positions for nearly half of the fiscal year. For instance, MSPD currently has a moratorium on backfilling all vacancies until the end of the fiscal year.

Budget – MSPD is 49th out of 50 in the funding it receives for indigent defense. As a result, Missouri is 11th highest in the rate at which it incarcerates its citizens, with DOC funding rising from $575 million in FY2006 to $710 million in FY2015. In just one budget year (FY14-FY15), DOC's budget increased by an amount greater than MSPD's entire operating budget, nearly $48 million. Simply put, there is a direct correlation between not funding MSPD and the $140m plus increase to DOC over the last ten years.

Time Keeping – MSPD is the first public defender system in the country to require its attorneys to keep their time, which is done in five minute increments. This allows the Director to ensure that resources are appropriately distributed and that attorneys are working diligently on their cases. Time keeping also provides data with which to request appropriate levels of funding.

The Missouri Project – In 2014, the ABA asked RubinBrown, a national accounting firm, to study MSPD's caseload. The project compared how much time MSPD attorneys were spending on each task for each case type (e.g., client meetings, motion practice) with how much time private criminal defense attorneys were spending. After removing outliers, RubinBrown established time standards for specific cases. Applying these time standards to MSPD's current caseload and current roster of attorneys revealed that MSPD is in need of 291 more attorneys in order to provide constitutionally adequate representation.

Turnover – The caseload crisis is exacerbated by employee turnover. Starting salary is very low - $38,928 - and with too many cases and not enough time to work on individual cases, MSPD attorneys are the target of regular ethics' complaints. These circumstances create a turnover rate of about 20%, which means MSPD spends needlessly to train new attorneys. Also, reassigning cases from attorneys who leave the system drastically increases the workload for the remaining attorneys in the local office.

Outside Reports – "The indigent public defense system in Missouri has faced extraordinary challenges for a number of years due to extremely limited resources and a chronic budgetary crisis." July 2015, U.S. Department of Justice, Civil Rights Division. "Missouri's indigent defense system is in crisis and has endured at least two decades of crushing caseloads and inadequate resources to provide its mandated services." Missouri: Justice Rationed, An Assessment of Access to Counsel and Quality of Juvenile Defense Representation in Delinquency Proceedings, Spring 2013, National Juvenile Defender Center.

MISSOURI STATE PUBLIC DEFENDER
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR

March 15, 2017

The Honorable Eric Greitens
Governor of Missouri
P.O. Box 720
Jefferson City, Missouri 65102

Dear Governor Greitens:

I read with interest Executive Order 17-09, which grants executive-branch employees paid parental leave that is not to be counted against their annual or sick leave. This is the right thing to do, and for that I applaud you. As the Director of the Missouri State Public Defender System, an independent department within the judicial branch (Sec. 600.019.1, RSMO), I want very much to follow your lead and adopt a similar policy for MSPD employees as you suggest in the EO. As leaders, it is our responsibility to take care of the people whom we rely on to fulfill the mission, to help recruit the very best talent, and to value their roles as mothers and fathers and caregivers.

That said, I will regrettably not be extending this benefit to the employees of MSPD and I want to tell you why.

Because of crushing caseloads, MSPD attorneys are only able to spend 8.7 hours on each class A/B felony, where clients often face life in prison, just 4.4 hours on a C/D felony, 2.3 hours for a misdemeanor, and 1.4 hours for a probation violation, which is a driving force behind Missouri's artificially inflated prison population. These dedicated and skilled attorneys for the poor know that for each additional hour they take as leave, it further reduces the amount of time that can be spent on a client's case, thus increasing the rate at which defendants plead guilty so that they can be released from county jail in hopes that their jobs and housing are still in place. Public defenders know that more time off, without expanding the current cadre of public defenders, only increases the chances of a wrongful conviction and enhances the likelihood that a person convicted of a non-violent offense will be sentenced to state prison (47% of Missouri's prison population is incarcerated for a non-violent offense).

Also, for many MSPD employees, it would be a policy distinction without much of a practical difference. The reason is that an alarming percentage of MSPD attorneys simply do not take the leave they have. In 2016, 79 of MSPD's attorneys forfeited a total of 3,431 hours of annual leave - that's 86 weeks. Creating additional policies that suggest they can, or should, take time off beyond what is currently offered is to suggest that even less time should be spent defending poor persons who face loss of liberty and excessive fines and fees, including having to pay for the cost of their pre-trial jail stay because they are too poor to post bond during a time when they are presumed innocent.

I believe that these mission critical employees would instead prefer that I work to alleviate their impossible caseload burden and deliver them a salary that is worthy of their contribution to the state and its citizens. MSPD's attorneys are drastically underpaid with a starting salary of $39,708, many of whom have student loans in excess of $100,000, and a maximum salary for the most senior attorney classification of $63,912, many of whom have more than twenty (20) years' experience. As a result, MSPD's turnover rate hovers around 20% - that's about 1 out of every 5 attorneys each year who leave the system, forcing MSPD to spend a disproportionate amount of its budget training new employees. While employees regularly leave for higher pay and better benefits, the number one reason we lose experienced attorneys is because they do not have the time to do what needs to be done on their clients' cases.

It is important to point out that these are public servants – they are not motivated by prosperity, but rather the ability to do their jobs in a way that complies with what the Constitution requires, in a manner that allows them to utilize the skills that they have worked so hard to develop, and in a way that gives them an opportunity to help the state distinguish between the innocent and the guilty, as well as among those who need to be incarcerated, at great expense to the state, and those who do not.

This Saturday, March 18, 2017, commemorates the 54th Anniversary of Gideon v. Wainwright. This landmark Supreme Court decision, which makes the right to counsel guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment applicable to the State through the 14th Amendment, is particularly special to us in the Show-Me State, not just because of our love of liberty, but because Clarence Earl Gideon was a Missourian, a poor man with an eighth grade education, who was born in Hannibal.

While I appreciated the comments you put forth in the State of the State address regarding the right to counsel, you have since not released any of the $3.5 million currently being withheld from MSPD, my letters of November 16, 2016 and January 17, 2017 have gone unanswered by your office, and you have suggested a FY2018 budget that only equals what the legislature passed in CY2014 (MSPD's caseload has increased more than 13% since then). This approach does not move the needle on our ranking of 49th among 50 states in indigent defense funding. To be sure, you did not create this mess; however, it is now ours to address and I stand ready to assist you in that effort.

This We'll Defend,

Michael Barrett, Director

VIDEOGRAPHER: The court reporter please swear in the witness and we may proceed.

COURT REPORTER: Do you swear or affirm that the testimony you are about to give in this proceeding will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MS. ROSCA:

Q. Good afternoon, Mr. Reynolds. Have you ever been deposed before?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So I -- I assume you understand how the rules work, but I'm just going to give you some reminders if that's okay. Could you please answer my questions in verbal responses?

A. Yes.

Q. And please wait to hear my question and then respond so we're not speaking over each other?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you don't understand one of my questions, just please let me know and I'll be happy to rephrase them. And if you need a break, just let us know and I'm happy to give you a break. But I just ask that we respond to the question -- we not take breaks while a question is pending. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Great. What did you do to prepare for this deposition?

A. I met with the public defender legal counsel.

Q. And is that counsel present at this table?

A. Yes.

Q. And who is that counsel?

A. Ms. Shipma.

Q. And was there anyone else present at this meeting?

Page 10

A. No.

Q. Did you review any documents during this meeting?

A. No.

Q. Did you review any documents in preparation for this -- the deposition in general?

A. After the meeting with Ms. Shipma I reviewed some statistics in our computer case management system.

Q. And what statistics were you reviewing?

A. Caseload numbers, open cases per fiscal year.

Q. And you mentioned you read them on the system. Can you explain what that system you're referring to is?

A. It's the Lotus Notes case management system that's used in every office.

Q. Do you have any of those statistics with you right now?

A. I have what I looked at in my head.

Q. Okay. And did reviewing those statistics refresh your recollection about any of the issues with respect to this case or this deposition?

A. Yes.

Q. And what specifically did it remind you of?

A. The number of cases opened per fiscal year.

Q. And what is that number?

A. Fiscal '17 I believe was around 4700.

Q. Is that total for the office?

A. For the Clayton trial office.

Q. Could you state your title for the record?

A. I am the district defender of the St. Louis County trial office.

Q. And does the St. Louis County trial office have other counties within it?

A. Not at this time.

Q. So it's just the St. Louis County?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Can you provide your employment history since you graduated law school?

A. I graduated law school in 1998 and started as an assistant public defender in the city of St. Louis in the trial division. In 2004 I left the city of St. Louis trial division and was in private practice from 2004 to 2007.

In 2007 I returned to the Missouri public defender in the position of assistant district defender in the city of St. Louis. In March of 2010 I transferred to St. Louis County where I became the district defender of the St. Louis County trial office.

Q. Okay. And when you became a public defender in 1998 you said in the city of St. Louis, what was your roles -- roles and responsibilities coming into the public defenders office?

A. I was a trial attorney.

Q. And what would a trial attorney be -- typically would have to do? What were your responsibilities?

A. Representing clients in criminal matters.

Q. Did you -- did you get assigned certain types of cases when you started as a trial attorney?

A. In my first years I was assigned less serious felonies. After two years I believe I was assigned all ranges of felonies.

Q. And then when you moved up -- when you came back to the public defenders office in 2007; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you assigned more serious cases

then?
A. I had a small caseload that depending upon the needs of the office would either be serious felonies or not serious felonies.
Q. Okay. And then in 2010 that's when you became the district defender for the St. Louis County office?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And has your roles and responsibilities changed since you became district defender?
A. Yes.
Q. And how have they changed?
A. I'm now manager of that office.
Q. And what does that mean? What do you manage?
A. I manage 20 lawyers, three investigators, one office management specialist, three clerks, and two legal assistants.
Q. Okay. So you said 20 lawyers, three investigators, one office management specialist, three clerks, and two legal assistants. Do you have any paralegals in your office?
A. We do not.
Q. Do you have any other staff in your office aside from the ones you've mentioned?

A. No.
Q. Okay. Do you personally still have a full caseload?
A. I do not have a full caseload, but I do have a caseload.
Q. And how is the ratio between -- or what is the percentage of time dedicated to your caseload would you say?
A. Nearly 50 percent.
Q. Okay. And is your caseload, does it typically include certain kinds of cases or do you get the same range of cases as you did prior to being district defender?
A. It largely consists of complicated serious felonies and/or mentally ill clients or clients who have mental illness and are very difficult for lawyers to interact with and manage.
Q. And then what is the other 50 percent of your time dedicated to?
A. Management.
Q. How do you supervise your attorneys?
A. Meaning?
Q. Meaning do you evaluate them? Is there a process by reviewing their work? Do they come to you and have discussions about their -- their caseloads?

A. Would it be okay to answer as to how lawyers are managed in the office and trained?
Q. Sure.
A. Is that what you're asking?
Q. Yes. We'll start with that.
A. So myself and the assistant district defender, we manage the office. And new lawyers, both myself and the deputy district defender train the lawyers. Certainly in their first six months to a year. We're responsible for reviewing all the lawyers' work throughout the year and for promotions. And there's four step promotions for attorneys.
We handle client complaints, client problems with the lawyers. We work with them on specific cases. We second chair lawyers. We brainstorm with lawyers. We handle hostile workplace issues, both within the office and within the courthouse.
Q. Do you have a human resource manager in your office that assists with any of that or is it just --
A. We have a state human resource manager.

Q. Okay. But no one internally?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And you were saying -- is there anything else aside from hostile work environment?
A. And then the same applies to the investigators, the clerk staff, and the legal assistants, we train them and manage them.
Q. Okay. Can we talk about how your office is organized? You said you had 20 attorneys.
A. Yes.
Q. What -- who is the -- or what is the most experienced attorney, what year are they essentially? How long have they been in practice?
A. We have one lawyer who's close to having 25 years' experience.
Q. Okay.
A. We have two lawyers, including myself, who have close to 20. We have another lawyer who has between 25 and 30 years' experience. We have two or three with ten years' experience. We have three to four right around the five-year experience. And then everyone else is less than five years.
Q. So you said one who has 25. That's -- and then you follow after that. So that's two.
A. We have two with right around 25. Two with right around 20.

Q. Oh, okay. So would you say about ten -- ten of your lawyers have less than ten years' experience?
A. Oh, certainly, yes.
Q. Okay. And how many lawyers have the least amount, like less than a year?
A. Right now I believe we have three lawyers who have less than a year experience.
Q. And how are the attorneys organized? So do the attorneys with less than a year experience get a certain -- or less -- less serious cases or does everyone get the same batch? How does it work?
A. For your first year if you're a lawyer in our office, meaning first year of experience as a criminal defense lawyer, and even if you're a transfer from another jurisdiction we will -- for the first six months we give a reduced caseload, which in our office is around 50 cases, and those 50 cases are low-level nonviolent felonies.
We will make some exceptions for some transfers, but not all. At around a year mark we will -- just because the number of cases are so high, the cases -- the number of cases go up to what everybody else has, which range from a hundred to 200 cases generally speaking.

And then for the less experienced lawyers, right around the year mark we introduce more serious felonies, and depending upon that lawyer's ability we slowly add serious felonies to their caseload.
Q. Does -- so the attorneys with less than a year, would they handle felony cases?
A. Yes.
Q. Would they -- would they work on any trials?
A. Yes.
Q. And -- but they would be nonviolent?
A. Generally speaking.
Q. Okay. And then --
A. With the exception of domestic violence.
Q. Meaning that they would handle domestic violence cases?
A. They would handle domestic violence.
Q. Okay. And what about juvenile cases, is there someone in your office that's specialized to handle those types of cases?
A. Yes.
Q. And how many attorneys are -- are equipped to handle those kind of cases?

A. One.
Q. And do they get funneled to this one attorney?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And probation -- probation revocation cases, are they also handled by everyone?
A. Yes.
Q. Are there other cases that I haven't mentioned that are handled by your attorneys generally speaking?
A. It's probation revocations, felonies, juvenile cases. We have very few misdemeanors.
Q. Okay. You mentioned 100 to 200, your more experienced attorneys' caseload number. Is there attorneys in your office that are actually at the 200 mark?
A. In certainly in November, yes.
Q. Of this year?
A. Yes.
Q. And why was that the case?
A. We distribute cases evenly at the same rate. The lawyers who had more than 200 cases are highly experienced lawyers who tend to set more cases for trial, so their cases move more slowly.

Their caseload moves more slowly because of that.
Q. So as the district defender you -- you stated that you have 50 percent of your time to your personal caseload and then you have 50 percent to managing your attorneys. Do you spend other time on other administrative tasks like budget requests, for example?
A. Budgeting is generally done statewide, and the requests for money that we have for litigation expenses are all done electronically. I'm in charge of that, but I -- I sort of wrap that up into administrative tasks in working with lawyers. It's a very quick process.
Q. Okay. Do you set any policies for your office in terms of how they should be litigating their cases?
A. We train them to litigate their cases and we work with people to litigate pretrial motions and push cases to trial. There's nothing in writing, though.
Q. Okay. Would you have the discretion, though, as the district defender to set what those policies would be to reach whatever goals your office might have with respect to getting a case to trial?

A. I mean, one could write a policy, but whether something goes to trial is so dependent upon the specific case and the clients' needs that I don't know if a policy would change anything.

Q. Okay.

A. It's really learning how to work with clients and achieve their goals and taking risks with clients who want to take risks.

Q. Okay. Can we talk about the -- you said you had three investigators in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And how -- how does the investigators work with your attorneys, are they -- are they assigned to specific attorneys or do they work for the office as a whole?

A. They're assigned to specific attorneys.

Q. And what about the other attorneys that aren't assigned to an investigator?

A. All attorneys are assigned an investigator. So we have three investigators. And each investigator works with roughly seven -- six or seven lawyers.

Q. Okay. And does the investigator assist as soon as an attorney is assigned a case or do they have to request that kind of assistance from their primary investigator?

A. Both. It depends on the working relationship. Some lawyers and investigators have a working relationship where the investigator automatically reads all the police reports and discovery for that lawyer's case and then the two collaborate. Other lawyers prefer to assign items.

Q. Okay. So it's not working with them through the start and finish of a case, but piecemeal as needed essentially?

A. It depends on the lawyer.

Q. Okay.

A. But even if it's piecemeal, and I don't know if that's the best word, if there's an assignment to do something and three months later there's another assignment, that investigator is sticking with the case and the lawyer.

Q. Okay. And you said it's one -- one for every seven?

A. Approximately.

Q. Okay. And then you said you had five legal assistants?

A. Two legal assistants.

Q. Oh, two legal assistants. And three clerks?

Page 23

A. Correct.

Q. Clerks.

A. Two clerks and then one office management specialist.

Q. And -- and how does the work or assignments to the legal assistants be -- or are assigned? Are they also for -- you know, one for every seven or --

A. The legal assistants we use in associate court to manage the intake of new clients and to organize the associate dockets for the entire office. The associate dockets are quite busy and logistically complicated, and that's where we get most of our new cases.

So we have two associate divisions, and each legal assistant works in one of those divisions and manages all the paperwork, client intake, and opening up cases for new clients. In addition, the legal assistants will play discovery for video discovery for clients on occasion when requested by lawyers.

They also are largely in charge of ordering and gathering all records, whether they be employment records or medical records or school records, and we divide the office in half based upon the associate division. So each legal assistant roughly has ten lawyers.

Q. Would you say that -- you said the legal assistants manage the intake of new clients and organizing the docket. Would you say that that's a daily job?

A. Yes.

Q. And then on top of that they also assist with discovery?

A. Yes.

Q. Has there been a time or an instance when a legal assistant was too busy to assist an attorney with discovery requests?

A. Yes.

Q. How often does that occur?

A. It happens I would say with some degree of frequency because given the number of cases that need to be opened, the incoming clients, that takes priority sometimes, and then the -- the records can be delayed, ordering the records. So then the investigators have to step in and help. Vice versa, sometimes the investigators can be out finding witnesses and overloaded.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And they also play discovery for clients, and then the legal assistants have to step in.

Q. What do you mean by play discovery for clients? Just not familiar with the term.

A. There is a lot of video discovery now in criminal cases. It could be video recordings of witness interviews by the police. It could be 911 calls. It could be videotapes of interrogations. It could be videos of the crime scene. It could be surveillance footage.

It could be recorded phone calls from the jail. Some cases may have 50 hours of this material. And it's impossible for the lawyer to meet with the client to -- and view all the discovery together, so we have to break it up and have assistants help out.

Q. Okay. And then you have the two clerks, and what -- what are their functions and how do they get their assignments?

A. The two clerks manage the -- the phones up front.

Q. Okay.

A. And they are also opening up cases, probation revocation cases. They are reviewing applications that come from the jail and determining indigency. They are opening up applications that we get at the circuit arraignment docket.

This is when a case moves from associate court to circuit court. There's a formal proceeding where the client appears before a judge and enters a plea of not guilty. We do pick up new cases at this docket for various reasons.

Q. So are both the clerks and the -- the legal assistants making indigency determinations?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And then the office manager, what -- what are their functions?

A. The office manager helps open cases. She's also in charge of conflicting all cases. She helps manage the phones. She does all the IT work. She also fills in for legal assistants and clerks as needed.

Q. So --

A. And all billing. She also is in charge of all billing.

Q. So when you say the office manager helps open cases, does that also mean that there's indigency determinations by the office manager?

A. Correct.

Q. So does your attorneys spend any time doing administrative tasks aside from pursuing their -- their individual cases? Like aside from researching cases or going to court, do they send out their letters themselves, do they prepare the templates themselves?

A. Most letters are created and generated and printed and mailed by the attorneys. We do have a system where discovery on low-level cases will be copied by the two clerks and mailed to the clients automatically as it comes in.

Administratively one of the -- the problems is there's no interface between the court's computer system of Case.net and our Lotus management. So all court dates have to be manually entered to keep up in our system, and most lawyers fall behind in that administrative task just given the caseload.

Q. And there's -- is there any time available on the part of the legal assistants or the clerks to take on that role?

A. No.

Q. And being the district defender and managing your attorneys in your office, on average how much time percentage wise do you think your attorneys are spending on administrative work?

Page 28

A. I would say if you were to count checking your voicemail, updating the computer, meaning you visited a client in the jail, you have to put notes into the computer, you've been to court, you have to put notes into the computer, put in a new court date, I would say it would at least have to be an hour a day if you were on top of it.

Q. And how many hours does your attorneys generally work in a day?

A. Eight to ten.

MR. MOORE: That was eight a.m. to ten p.m.?

THE WITNESS: Eight hours to ten hours.

MR. MOORE: Okay.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Would you say that your office would benefit from having more administrative staff?

A. It could.

Q. What's your basis for that?

A. I would say more investigation would help cases move through the system more equitably and more quickly. And I don't know if there's a tech solution or if it's a personnel solution to the administrative tasks would be helpful.

Q. Would your office benefit if they had more investigators?

A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that?
A. More investigation I think would show earlier what was going on with a case and what needs to be litigated.
Q. Can you think of an instance -- and I'm not trying to pry into any attorney-client privilege communications. But can you think of an instance, a specific one where a case was hampered because it just didn't have an investigator assistance just because the investigators were not available?
A. That's tough because you learn about it on the back end. There have been cases -- I can -- there have been cases where lawyers have realized early on that surveillance video needed to be obtained quite quickly or certain records needed to be obtained quite quickly and that resulted in a better result for the client. I think the fear is just given the flood of cases that those instances cannot be seen by a lawyer that's overloaded with cases.
Q. Is that -- would you say that's true -- well, strike that.
Do you think your office would benefit from more legal assistants?

A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that?
A. Discovery could be shown to clients much more quickly and efficiently. I think it would increase the problems with diligence and communication that the Hinkebein case has raised for the whole system. And so I -- I think that would be very helpful.
Q. You said that discovery would be shown much more quickly. At the going rate right now, when are these discovery videos being shown?
A. I would say after the discovery is received it can take two to four months for the discovery to be shown to the client.
Q. And does that impact at all do you think the amount of time that the -- that the case gets resolved?
A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that?
A. I think a lot of the serious violent felonies -- this is the dynamic in our office is the C and D and E felonies, those are the low-level felonies in Missouri. Those are the majority of our cases.

The time to disposition is 79 days, which is quite short for that large of a caseload. And so the lawyers are focusing on visiting those clients, getting them out on bond, perhaps resolving the case a little bit too quickly.
And then what happens with the 30 or 40 violent felonies that the lawyer has, those get neglected, and those are the cases where there could be 50 hours of discovery, where the case lingers in court for nine months before getting set for trial, which is another nine months off.
So it's the serious crimes that get neglected, the clients don't get visited, discovery doesn't get reviewed, it doesn't get played. That's the most serious problem in our office at this time due to the number of cases.
Q. So just so I understand, the attorneys in your office are trying to move as many cases as they can so they'll focus on the lower-level felonies, and that will take away from the time from the more serious offenses?
A. Partially correct. The flood of the low level is intense and moves quickly.
Q. Okay.
A. And the demand and the need, it's a legitimate need, to have those clients released and do bond hearings, that's taking up a huge amount of time and there's no problem with that. But because that part of the caseload is moving quickly, that's where the river so to speak is -- where the lawyer is standing in the river.

Q. Right.
A. The -- the murders, the rapes, the robberies, the things that are generally going to move slower tend to move much more slower and get neglected because the focus is always on the incoming case.
MS. ROSCA: I'm going to hand you what I think is -- are we on 35?
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 35, St. Louis Public Radio article, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) So the court reporter is going to mark this document Reynolds Exhibit 35. If you could just review that document and let me know when you finish reviewing it. Are you finished reviewing it?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you seen this document before?
A. Yes.

Q. Can you state for the record what -- or can you describe what this document is?
A. This appears to be the web version of a news story on St. Louis Public Radio from 2012.
Q. And just for the record, the title of the news article is "Missouri public defenders take problem of high caseloads to high court."
A. Yes.
Q. So if you turn to the second page of that printout, do you see where your last name seems to appear sort of middle of the page, or your full name actually?
A. Yes.
Q. Did you provide statements for this radio interview?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you have any -- do you have any concerns about the accuracy of the statements you provided in this radio interview.
A. No.
(WHEREIN, a discussion was held off the record.)
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) So what was the subject matter of this interview?
A. Caseloads in our office, and at the time there was litigation regarding public defender caseloads across the state.

Q. And you see on the -- again the second page of the printout it says that (quote as read):
Missouri's public defenders have argued for years that they have too many cases.
Or it's at the top of the second page, I guess. Do you agree with that statement?
A. Yes.
Q. And what's your basis for that agreement?
A. To my knowledge, since 2007 caseload numbers have been a high priority of the public defender system, and there's been numerous efforts in the legislature and the courts to reduce those numbers.
Q. And does that caseload issue -- has that caseload issue also affected your office in particular?
A. Yes.
Q. And it says if you look further down that St. Louis County is the biggest county in Missouri, and at that time it said that the public defenders office has more than 18,000 cases pending and just 12 full-time lawyers. Do you see where that statement is written?

A. Yes.
Q. And since that time you've increased to 20 attorneys?
A. I would say 18. I cannot recall if at the time the 12 lawyers -- I can tell you the 12 lawyers did not include myself and Pat Brayer.
Q. Okay.
A. It did not include management lawyers when I made that statement.
Q. Does -- does that 18,000 cases strike you as a particularly high number?
A. I believe it's 1800 cases.
Q. 1800, excuse me.
A. And I would say it's -- it's a high number for 12 lawyers full-time caseload dedicated lawyers to handle. Currently our live caseload, meaning our pending caseload, is 2,200. So that number is not unfamiliar.
Q. And then later in that same page it says one of the attorneys has 118 cases. That appears from this article that you were looking at a screen that tracks the caseload; is that correct?
A. Correct.

Q. And you testified earlier that your more experienced attorneys have about 100 to 200 cases per attorney; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. So would you agree that your caseload per attorney at least for the experienced ones have increased since this article was written or this interview was taken?
A. It very well could have. Because this article only references one lawyer with 118 cases, I don't recall what the numbers were for the other 11 lawyers at that time. I can tell you right now just every one but two full-time dedicated lawyers has over a hundred cases in our office right now.
Q. And does that figure strike you as particularly high?
A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that opinion?
A. I think once cases go above 60, I think it's incredibly difficult for even the most trained lawyer to maintain communication and diligence on a caseload over 60.
MS. ROSCA: Okay. And the article also says that -- I will introduce another exhibit. So the court reporter is going to mark this Exhibit 36, Reynolds Exhibit 36.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 36, The New York Times article, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Could you please review this document and let me know when you've finished reviewing it?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen this document before?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you state for the record or describe what the document is?

A. This is a computer printout of a article from February 19th of 2014 that was published in The New York Times about public defender caseloads.

Q. And just for the record, the article is titled "Public Defenders, Bolstered by a Work Analysis and Rulings, Push Back Against a Tide of Cases?"

A. Correct.

Q. If you turn to the second page of the printout, it's the backside of the first page towards the bottom, do you see your name stated there?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you provide comments for this article?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you have any concerns or doubt as to the accuracy of those comments?

A. No.

Q. You state in the article that, quote (quote as read):

Until recently lawyers here were carrying more than 200 felony cases from drugs to rape and murder.

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that -- was that true for your office just before 2014?

A. Yes.

Q. Has that number continued this year?

A. Not to the extent -- still a problem, but it's not as intense as it was shortly before this article was written.

Q. And what was the reason for I guess the reduction in intensity of cases?

A. It's -- I don't know if I can give a cause. In 2012 and 2013 the prosecutor's office switched the head of the warrants office and there were more filings, and those filings increased our numbers where across the board nearly every lawyer in our office had 200 or more. And then that number dropped, but as recently as this summer we had several lawyers over -- we had two lawyers over 200 and several approaching 200.

Q. And just to be clear, the Exhibits 35 and 36, they -- they both reference a ruling. Do you know what -- what was happening at the time the Supreme Court case that they're describing in both articles, do you know what that's in reference to? You can also look at Exhibit 35. That would help too.

A. I don't remember the -- the style of the case, but it was the case that was being litigated in the Missouri Supreme Court about whether public defenders could manage their caseload numbers.

Q. Was it the Waters decision, would that --

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And just back to Exhibit 36, you also state right under the comment that we just read that the burden has eased, but it's still more than we can probably -- properly handle. Do you still agree with that statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And what do you mean by what your office can properly handle?

A. Communication, diligence, litigating cases, all of those three areas, particularly communication and diligence our lawyers struggle with, and do not make reasonable -- I guess they do not meet reasonable standards.

Q. Are you -- when you say reasonable standards, are you referring to ethical standards?

A. Yes.

Q. And the term communications, diligence are -- is that a term of art that you're referencing?

A. I believe those are terms also used in the ethical rules.

MS. ROSCA: I am going to introduce -- this one exhibit has been previously marked, so this is Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4.

(Exhibit 4, Previously marked exhibit.)

MS. ROSCA: And then with that I am also going to introduce Reynolds Exhibit 37.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 37, Cumulative caseload metrics spreadsheet, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Have you seen these documents before? I know one is hard to read. I apologize.

A. I do not believe I've seen 4. And I do not believe I have seen 37 either.

Q. Okay. So I'll represent to you that these documents were produced by the public defenders office to our office, and they list cumulative caseload metrics. And if you look at row 21 or area 21 it lists the St. Louis County. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

MR. MOORE: I'll also object to the form of the question as it's leading and argumentative as to what the exhibits show, but subject to that you can continue.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Mr. Reynolds, could you just describe for the record what you see on these exhibits, what you think these documents are?

A. My understanding of these documents, and I've seen these doc -- not these specific documents, but iterations of statistics in the past because they were distributed to district defenders as they were produced, these -- this shows caseload metrics for each office.

Q. And just looking at Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4, can you see is there any date on this document?

A. It appears to be January 1, 2017 to March 31st of 2017.

Q. And you mentioned that you've seen iterations of these documents before. Have you seen any prior metrics from prior time periods?

A. Yes. The last time that I -- I saw documents similar to these would be probably 2014, somewhere around there I believe they stopped being distributed to the district defenders unless you specifically requested it.

Q. All right. Is there a reason why you wouldn't request sort of the caseload metrics for your -- for your office?

A. Nothing's changed. I mean, you can tell just by the number of cases that come into our office that the metrics would not be changing much.

Q. Okay. So let's look -- let's start with Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4. So it says you have 20 attorneys. Is that -- that's still accurate, correct?

Page 43

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. And do you have any understanding of what these columns mean?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So for example, the column that says net new cases, what -- what does that -- what is your understanding of what that column is displaying?

A. The number of cases that were opened in that quarter minus cases that we withdrew from.

Q. Okay. And then do you see that that figure for Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4 says 1,118?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And then if you look at the column that says workload, it's sort of the last -- fourth -- fourth to the last?

A. Workload units plus count time plus travel?

Q. Yes. Do you have an understanding of what the information in that column is conveying?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you see that it says 27,352?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Just going back to the net new cases, the 1118, does that seem accurate to you for the first three months of this year?

A. Yes.

Q. And for the -- do you see the column that says percent of capacity?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is your understanding of that column?

A. Based upon the number of lawyers and the formula devised by RubinBrown, there's an hour capacity assigned to an office, and then based upon the cases that come in there's an hour number assigned to those cases, and then they come up with a percentage which shows how much over or under the target is for lawyers and work hours for the given caseload in an office.

Q. And do you see that the percentage for the Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4 is 263 percent?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree or do you think that's an accurate portrayal of how much capacity your office has to take on cases?

MR. MOORE: Also object to the foundation, but subject to that you can respond.

A. Yes.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) If we now move to -- is it Exhibit 37?

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. To Reynolds Exhibit 37. Is there a date for this document?
A. April 1, 2017 to June 30th, 2017.
Q. And would you agree that the columns that you described earlier are the same with respect to meaning for this document?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you see if we go to net new cases, which we discussed in the prior exhibit, that the number is 1,062?
A. Yes.
Q. And that the workload is 25,866?
A. Yes.
Q. So do you -- and also the percent of capacity is 240 -- 240.7 percent. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you have an understanding as to why the percent of capacity and the net new cases has decreased within just the six-month time period?
A. No.
Q. Do you still think that that's -- do these figures still strike you as -- as high in terms of workload capacity?

Page 46

A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that?
A. I think any reasonable and experienced attorney would not be able to handle the number of cases that came into our office during that period as divided among the staff that we have.
MS. ROSCA: Okay. And I'm going to introduce another -- actually, it's previously been introduced.
MR. MOORE: So that was Plaintiffs' 4 and Reynolds Exhibit 37, right?
MS. ROSCA: I'm going to introduce one more and then we can take a break. The court reporter is marking what is Reynolds Exhibit 38, and it starts with Bates number MSPD0038970.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 38, FY 2018 Supplemental legislative budget request, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Could you review the document and let me know when you've reviewed it? I'm going to really only ask you about the last page, so -- have you seen this document before?
A. No.
Q. If we turn to the last page, have you seen iterations of this spreadsheet before?

Page 47

A. Yes.
Q. In what ways have you seen it?
A. In the same way that I described for 37 and 4.
Q. Okay. You can look at page seven of this document or this exhibit. It says St. Louis County. Again, area 21.
A. Yes.
Q. Can you describe what you think this spreadsheet is providing in terms of information?
A. I take back my answer. I have seen this document for the fiscal year 2017.
Q. And in what instance have you seen it?
A. I saw it in anticipation of this deposition.
Q. Okay. And what -- what is this spreadsheet providing in terms of information?
A. It's the cumulative caseload metrics for fiscal year 2017.
Q. And do you see -- strike that.
Are the columns that are listed here similar to the columns that you were seeing in Exhibits 37 and Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4?
A. Yes.
Q. Would you agree that the columns have the same meaning as in those exhibits?

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So for net new cases it says 4,372.
A. Yes.
Q. Do you understand that to mean -- sorry for speaking over you. Do you understand that to mean that there's four hundred -- 4,372 cases for that fiscal year that were new?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And then it says that you still had 20 attorneys?
A. Yes.
Q. So just by dividing that total number by the 20 attorneys, that's about 218.6 cases per attorney?
A. I will accept that calculation.
Q. Would you -- does that strike you as high to have over 200 cases per one attorney in a given year?
A. Yes.
Q. And what's your basis for thinking that's a high number?
A. They're all felonies. Many of those felonies are violent felonies. And I think it's unusual for lawyers to have that many cases in one year, and then when you consider the number of violent felonies, I think it's extremely unusual. And I can't think of anybody in private practice who would handle that number of cases and particularly the seriousness of those cases.

Q. You said they're particularly violent cases. In your experience as a district defender and a public defender, do violent cases take up more time?

A. Yes.

Q. And why is that?

A. They're more complicated. The stakes are higher. There's more witnesses. There's more discovery. Often there's more issues with mental health. There's more client communication needed. There's more investigation needed. There's more depositions needed. There's more discovery review needed.

Q. So by that answer do you also think that violent cases require more resources?

A. Correct.

Q. At the moment right now at your office, is it your opinion that your office is getting the -- the sufficient amount of resources it needs to be able to litigate a case to the ethical standards that are required?

MR. MOORE: I'll just -- sorry. Just object to the form. I think it's vague. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. No.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) And why -- what is your basis for your opinion on that?

A. Our office needs five to ten more lawyers at least to ethically handle the cases that come into our office each year.

MS. ROSCA: Have you -- strike that. We have been going I think for over an hour. Would you like to take a break?

THE WITNESS: Sure.

MS. ROSCA: Okay. Off the record.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 2:46. We are off the record.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 2:51. We are back on the record.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Hi, Mr. Reynolds. Can we talk about case assignment? Can you walk through how your office gets a case?

A. We get cases in a variety of ways.

Would you like me to list them?

Q. Please.

A. We get cases through the associate division when people are first arrested on a case. We will get cases where clients in the Department of Correction mail in applications because there's outstanding warrants.

We get cases of what's called the circuit arraignment docket, which is where a case is transferred from associate to circuit court. We get walk-ins, people who have been released and are looking for a lawyer.

We get applications from the jail across the board, any type of case and wherever it is in the system. We get referrals from the court, meaning clients have shown up in court without a lawyer.

We get e-mails from family members looking to get a lawyer for a family member. We get telephone calls from potential clients or family members looking for a lawyer. That would be the basic overview. There may be other instances, but that pretty much covers it.

Q. So when a case comes to you through any of those avenues that you just listed, what happens next? Is there a determination as to whether you're going to take the case?

A. Once we get an application. And how we get an application is going to vary based upon all those different ways we take in cases.

Q. And so can we start with maybe through the associate division as an example when a defendant is just arrested you mentioned; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. So how -- can you walk me through essentially how that case that you received from the associate division then gets assigned to an attorney in your office?

A. So in the associate division there's what's called a confined docket each morning, and those are defendants who have been arrested anywhere 24 to 72 hours prior to that court date. The judge does a -- what's called an initial arraignment where he informs the defendant of the charges and inquires how the defendant is going to acquire an attorney.

If the defendant requests a public defender or indicates that they have no resources to hire a private attorney, an application is filled out in court and given to our legal assistants who review the application in court or after court and make an indigency determination.

Q. And then once this indigency determination is made, what happens next?

A. A case is created in our computer system and at the same time it's assigned to an attorney.

Q. And who makes the determination as to which attorney gets that assignment?

A. The legal assistant.

Q. Does the legal assistant have any information as to -- or strike that.

Does the legal assistant consider the attorney's caseload at all when it gives the assignment of a case?

A. Yes. So we have a spreadsheet that we use for assigning all cases in the office and assignments are largely made by scheduling availability so we can achieve vertical representation. So that's one major factor in the case assignments. The other major factor is the attorney's experience level.

Q. Okay. And the more experienced attorneys would get the more serious cases. Is that how it works?

A. Correct. And we make categorical determinations on the difficulty of the case and the lawyer's experience level so that the legal assistant can assign the case according to those parameters.

Q. Okay. Is there ever an instance where a case was assigned to an attorney in your office by a legal assistant after making an indigency determination where the attorney said he can't handle the case?

A. No.

Q. If there was a situation that that would occur, what would the attorney's recourse would be? Could he talk to someone about that?

A. Oh, it would be quite easy. If a lawyer cannot handle a particular case or certainly in this post-Hinkebein landscape if an attorney said there are too many cases, they would talk to me and we would figure out a resolution.

Q. And what would happen to that case if the resolution was this particular attorney cannot handle that case?

A. In what capacity?

Q. Like internally, would it go to another attorney?

Page 55

A. No. I meant is it because the case is too difficult for the lawyer or the lawyer's caseload is too high and the lawyer can't have a new case?

Q. The -- the latter.

A. We have not encountered that as an office, although all lawyers know that they're overloaded. And we are working with the courts to try to resolve that, but as of yet no lawyer has said no more cases.

Q. What about in the prior situation where they just don't have the experience to take on that particular case?

A. We'd reassign it.

Q. Can we talk a little bit about initial hearings? At what point -- can you describe what happens after the indigent defendant is arrested? Do they get an initial hearing? You mentioned before that they can request the PD after they get arrested, but after that point if they're not assigned a PD is there an initial hearing?

A. Initial hearing is not a term that's really used --

Q. Okay.

A. -- in our jurisdiction.

Q. What would you -- how would you describe the process? What terms would you use?

A. Can I describe the process?

Q. Sure.

A. So the confine docket is the arrested person's first appearance in court where charges are read. The case is then continued by the court for one or two weeks for entry of counsel.

If we enter on the case generally speaking, particularly for low-level felonies, the case is given two court dates. One for preliminary hearing and one for a bond hearing.

The bond hearing is generally within a week of that second appearance in court and then the preliminary hearing is scheduled by the court and is usually six weeks out.

Q. Has there been an instance where the PD has been unable to enter as counsel after those first two weeks after being arrested?

A. I'm not understanding the question.

Q. Let me rephrase. That was vague. You mentioned that after they are arrested and appear for the first time there's one to two weeks in which the -- your office may enter as counsel; is that correct?

Page 57

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Has there been a situation where your office was unable to have an attorney present to enter as counsel?
A. No.
Q. Okay. After you've entered as counsel for a particular case, you stated that there are two other court dates that are usually set, the preliminary hearing and the bond hearing?
A. Correct.
Q. Has there been a situation where an attorney in your office has been unable to attend either of those hearings?
A. No.
Q. Okay. Has the -- do the attorneys in your office typically meet with their client prior to these hearings?
A. As much as possible.
Q. And what does as much as possible mean?
A. Given the number of cases that come in, many attorneys find it difficult to have an initial visit within statewide public defender standards of seven days. Because of the number of cases and the -- the flow of those cases are so quick, we expanded our initial visit to ten business days for our office. As much as possible the lawyers try to achieve that, but it doesn't happen in every case.

Q. So -- go ahead.
A. And just to finish, before the preliminary hearing which is usually six weeks after we've entered, most lawyers have met with their confined clients, but there are exceptions given the caseload where that does not occur.
Q. So there's a possibility then that a client would be confined for at least six weeks and have not met with their counsel yet?
A. It has happened.
Q. And -- and what is the frequency of that happening in your office?
A. I don't have an exact percentage.
Q. Uh-huh.
A. The computer does not track that. It would have to be hand calculated. But when we do promotion reviews I hand calculate that, and notice that in a percentage of cases some lawyers have missed those marks.
Q. Would you say it was more than 30 percent?
A. Some lawyers more than 30 percent, other lawyers less than five percent.

Q. Okay. Do you -- is there a trend as to the lawyers missing it being less experienced attorneys?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So you're saying even the more experienced attorneys may be missing the six-week client contact?
A. In our office it would be counted as have you seen the client within the first ten days.
Q. Okay.
A. And then we've deviated from every 30 days, which is the statewide standard, to every 60 days just given the speed of cases and the number of cases, and there are lawyers who miss both of those marks. There are some lawyers who meet their clients within seven days and then every 30 days also.
Q. For the instances where they have missed the mark on the 30 days or the 60 days, in your opinion do you think that it -- that it impacts the relationship with the client?
A. Yes.
Q. And what is your basis for that conclusion?
A. The 60-day mark is usually being missed in the serious and violent felonies because as I've mentioned in this deposition, the focus is on the flow of cases, the C, D's, and E's which move quite quickly.

So what happens with some degree of frequency is the more serious clients are neglected because of caseload problems and rightfully become worried and anxious, and that contributes to deteriorating attorney-client relations.
Q. And to prepare for the preliminary hearings, what if anything does your attorneys do to prepare for these hearings?
A. In our jurisdiction generally speaking a case set for preliminary hearing discovery will be provided. However, the timing of that discovery when it's released varies because there are probably 12 prosecutors who are individually responsible for disclosing discovery, and some of them are more diligent than others.
So an attorney can meet with a client with the discovery and prepare for the preliminary hearing if the discovery is provided in time. If it's provided two or three days before the preliminary hearing, the attorney will have met with the client, but not necessarily with the discovery.

Q. Okay. We're talking about how the attorneys would meet with the client. Where does the client contact generally take place?

A. If the client is confined, in the jail. If the client is released, usually over the phone. Although office appointments are offered, I think a lot of released clients do not -- sometimes just don't take that opportunity.

Q. And when they meet in the jail, is it usually a confidential place?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there ways for the clients to call your office I think you mentioned?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's where the legal assistants take the calls, right, or the clerks?

A. We all -- the jail, all of the inmates in the jail can make free phone calls to our office several times a day. Our phone system is provided by the county. So it has to go through the operator.

Q. And then after the preliminary hearing and a case is set for -- or is going through the litigation, what is the percentage of client contact by your attorneys?

A. I'm not understanding the question.

Q. Does your attorneys have any difficulties meeting with clients after the preliminary hearing because --

A. Because of -- because of caseload problems?

Q. Yes.

MR. MOORE: Also object to the form of the question because it's vague, but you can respond.

A. Because of the caseload numbers, keeping up with visitation with the clients in the jail is difficult for every attorney in my office.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Is there a policy -- you mentioned that ten days after you've -- you've entered as counsel. Is there a policy after the preliminary hearing as to how many times the attorney should meet with their client?

A. The policy is meet with the client within ten days of assignment --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- and every 60 days thereafter.

Q. And has your attorneys been able to meet the every 60 days thereafter?

A. Our attorneys struggle with that and do not make that number a hundred percent.

Q. And in your opinion, do you attribute that to the caseload problems?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that they had -- they meet with the -- the client at the jail for the first meeting. Do they need to meet with their client at the jail for any subsequent meetings, those 60 days?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that -- does that have any impact on their time to travel to the jail?

A. No.

Q. The jail is fairly close?

A. The jail is in the same building as the courthouse.

Q. Okay. What about for clients that are in state prison or in federal prison?

A. That is a challenge.

Q. Can you explain why that's a challenge?

A. Phone calls are not readily set up. Each Missouri state prison seems to have a different policy for setting up phone calls, whether they're collect, who dials in, what hours can be used.

Each Missouri state prison also has varying hours when attorneys can set up in-person visits. For example, Potosi Correctional Center, it's Friday afternoon, Saturdays, and Sundays.

So you cannot see somebody in Potosi Correctional Center Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday morning. And that involves a huge amount of travel obviously.

Q. And what about clients that may face any immigration consequences, do your attorneys have a lot of clients with that issue?

A. Our jurisdiction does not have a very high percentage of clients with that issue.

Q. Okay.

A. Attorneys inquire of every client about nationality, place of birth, immigration status, and are very aware of the issue.

Q. Okay. Let's talk about the resources that your office has apart from just the staff that work there. Do you -- do you have any social workers working in your office? I don't think you mentioned.

A. No.

Q. Has that had any impact on how your attorneys defend their cases?

A. I would say that because -- and this is a national trend, and our office is part of this, is many cases are negotiated even through litigation. And that mitigation at sentencing is crucial, and the lack of social workers to create mitigation reports is I would say -- it's sort of unimaginable that Missouri State Public Defender has no social workers. It's just -- it seems like that's just what's done in criminal defense across the board.

Q. And have you tried to request any resources for social worker reports either to the central office?

A. What our lawyers tends to do is in certain cases we try to hire psychiatrists to create those reports, but it's very expensive and it's very selective.

Q. Would these psychiatrists be acting as experts then?

A. Yes.

Q. What resources are available to your attorneys to then -- to hire these experts? Can you go through the process of how they would obtain an expert for their case?

A. They would contact the expert, talk about the background of the case, get an estimate, and then submit an E request for money.

Q. Do they submit it to you?

A. Yes.

Q. And what do you consider in approving those requests?

A. Meaning?

Q. Meaning are there any factors you consider as to whether you should approve a request for an expert?

A. Usually it's self-explanatory in the request that the -- the attorney has done enough investigation that there's certain school records, medical records, health history, social histories that indicate that a social mitigation report would be helpful, and the state of negotiations, that that mitigation report could help with sentencing, either persuading the prosecutor or the court.

Q. Have you ever denied an expert request?

A. No.

Q. You said they were very expensive. Does it have an impact on your local office budget?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. What about taking depositions, what resources are available to your attorneys for taking depositions?

A. They can request to take a deposition in cases.

Q. Is that request made to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever denied taking a deposition?

A. No.

Q. Is there a certain point in -- in any case, and I understand there are very different cases so it would run differently, but generally is there a certain point where the attorneys are requesting these resources, is it usually, you know, prior -- like a month or two prior before trial or are they working to request these resources at the outset of the case?

A. I would say the trend is to request depositions closer to trial than probably is in the best interest of the client in the case.

Q. And why do you think the attorneys are delaying their requests for depositions to closer to trial?

A. I don't know --

MR. MOORE: Just object to -- go ahead. I'll object to the form of the question. I think it misstates prior testimony, but it sounds like you were kind of going there, so go ahead.

A. I don't think it's an intentional delay. I think what's happening is the request is not happening until that 60-day window because of the caseload numbers.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) In your opinion, if you had extra attorneys and extra staff, do you think that these resources, like experts, availability of deposition would occur earlier in the case?

A. Certain --

MR. MOORE: I'm sorry. Again, just calls for speculation, but you can go ahead.

A. Yes.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) How about translators, do you run into request -- do your attorneys generally need to request translators for their cases?

A. For certain percentage, yes.

Q. And what resources are available to them to request translators?

A. There are several agencies in St. Louis that provide translation services that we'll hire on an hourly basis.

Q. And does the request go to you to approve for obtaining a translator?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you ever denied providing a translator for any of the attorneys?

A. No.
Q. Is there any -- does the central office have any policy or guideline as to how much your office can spend on these resources?
A. To my knowledge, no.
Q. Okay.
A. I know there's a number in our office budget, but I don't think that number is ever actually ever used for depositions and experts. I think it's something like ten or $20,000, but it's always exceeded.
Q. So what about pretrial investigations, do your -- I assume your attorneys engage in pretrial investigations?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you -- in your opinion, do you think they're spending enough time conducting pretrial investigations?
A. I would say that they're not because attorneys have mentioned to me that they're not.
Q. And what is the reason for being unable to do so?
A. Caseload numbers.
Q. Would you say that's true specifically for interviewing witnesses?

A. Yes.
Q. How about visiting the crime scene?
A. Yes.
Q. How about investigating the police conduct?
A. Yes.
Q. Can you think of a situation where -- and you don't have to disclose or compromise any attorney-client privilege, but a time where either your representation or that of the attorneys in your office was hampered by the inability to investigate a case sufficiently?
MR. MOORE: Just object to the form of the question. It's vague. Subject to that, you can respond.
A. Yes.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Could you provide the details of that instance?
A. This is an instance that's currently being litigated in a PCR hearing, and it was litigated on appeal, so I don't think it affects much confidentiality. There was a lawyer in our office that was in this period of 2014 where they were -- the caseload was 200 cases.

It was an assault trial where he was unable to investigate witnesses that the client had asked him to investigate that the client said would be witnesses in his favor that he did not commit the assault.
Q. Is that an atypical case or does that typically happen for other attorneys in your office since 2014?
A. I'm sure it happens.
Q. And why do you say you're sure it happens? What's your basis for that conclusion?
A. Two reasons. The attorneys in my office are saying that people are pleading guilty because they've been in jail and they're waiting too long. And the attorneys are concerned that people are pleading guilty to get out of jail, not because they're actually guilty, and are unable -- and the attorneys are unable to work on those cases.
So attorneys have reported that problem to me. And then we will get complaint calls and complaint letters from clients and it goes to the diligence problem of these things have not been done on my case, these witnesses have not been contacted.
Q. Okay. Can we talk about motions for a moment? Just particularly discovery motions.

Attorneys in your office file discovery motions I assume?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you -- has any attorney in your office provided concern about not having enough time to prepare for these discovery motions?
A. Discovery motions in Missouri are pro forma, meaning they're filed. It's based upon a Supreme Court rule.
Q. Uh-huh.
A. So there's really not much time involved in filing the motion where the -- the time in discovery takes place is making sure that the prosecutor has disclosed everything that's discoverable.
Q. And how has the trend been with requesting discovery from the prosecutor's office in your district? Has it been difficult to get the discovery in a timely manner?
A. Generally not. There are some prosecutors that are more difficult to get the discovery from than others.
Q. Are the requests for the discovery from the prosecutor's office made at a later point in the case by your attorneys?

A. They're made in associate court.
Q. Okay.
A. When we had her on the case.
Q. So early on?
A. Yes.
Q. What about reviewing the discovery that you receive from the prosecutor's office, has attorneys in your office expressed concern that they've been unable to fully and sufficiently review the discovery they receive?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you have any examples of that happening?
A. Last month an attorney when we were discussing caseload numbers and how to approach the courts and reach a resolution for the Hinkebein problem mentioned that she was worried that she had plead clients to cases where she had not adequately reviewed the discovery, but the client just wanted to get out of jail and plead guilty.
Q. When you do the evaluations of the attorneys in your office, is that something that you consider? Is that -- whether or not they're reviewing discovery and in a timely manner?
A. That is not one of the -- the factors because I think that's very hard to measure unless you interview the lawyer.

Q. Do attorneys in your district regularly seek continuances?
A. Yes.
Q. And what do you think the reason for regularly seeking it is?
A. The case is not ready for disposition.
Q. And what typically are the reasons that it would not be ready for disposition?
A. More investigation for mitigation before a plea. More trial preparation if it's a case headed to trial.
Q. You've been mentioning the Hinkebein decision through your testimony today, so I'd like to sort of turn to that. The first question before getting there is you said that there hasn't been an instance where an attorney has refused an assignment; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And by that logic your office hasn't refused assignments?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. How has the Hinkebein decision impacted the attorneys in your district with respect to caseload concerns?

MR. MOORE: Just object to the form of the question. Calls for speculation. It's also vague. Subject to that, you can respond.
A. They are concerned -- previous to the Hinkebein they were concerned about the caseload and their ability to ethically represent clients. Post decision they're concerned that they on top of not being able to do a good job for their clients, that their law license may be jeopardized for something beyond their control.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) And knowing these concerns has -- has your office taken any formal action in response to the Hinkebein decision?
A. Our office sent a conditional letter to the judges saying that pretty much at any moment we could start that process, but before starting that process we wanted to engage in constructive dialogue with the courts for solutions.
And so for the past two months we have been meeting with the judges regularly to try to reach a resolution. So we -- that's how we approached it.
Q. When you say you're meeting with the judges regularly, what are -- what's being discussed at these meetings?

A. Wait lists, private appointments to the St. Louis County Bar. Judges rethinking how they do probation violations.
Q. Can we start with wait lists? Is there currently a wait list in your district?
A. No.
Q. And so what would be the proposal with respect to the wait list?
A. What is being considered is a wait list would be generated of clients who were released and then a number of what is an appropriate, reasonable amount of cases would be assigned per attorney, and unless the -- unless the attorney was below that number everybody on bond would be on a wait list.
Q. So those who are confined or in jail would not be on the wait list, they would still get a public defender?
A. That's what's being contemplated right now.
Q. Okay. You said private appointments. Can you explain a little bit about what that proposal is considering?
A. In order to get our numbers where each lawyer would be under a hundred cases -- and we're just using that number as an arbitrary number right now. We would have to shed 700 cases -- 500 to a thousand cases. That can only be achieved through private appointments.

Also, there's a concern if a wait list is generated that speedy trial rights would be violated from the defendants. So the court is thinking of private appointments. How to appoint that number of cases is exceedingly difficult and it's expected that the private bar will be resistant.

Q. Now, these private appointments, would they be mandatory I would assume?

A. To be decided.

MS. ROSCA: I'm going to introduce an exhibit. Are we on 39? The court reporter is going to mark this document as Exhibit 39, or Reynolds Exhibit 39. And the Bates number for this document is MSPD0039427.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 39, 10-12-17 Reynolds message to Judges Beach and Burton, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

MS. ROSCA: Could you review the document and let me know when you finish reviewing it? I'm going to introduce Exhibit 40 as well in conjunction.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 40, 10-12-17 Reynolds letter to Judges Beach and Burton, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) But just first the big -- Reynolds Exhibit 39, have you seen this document before?

A. Yes.

Q. How have you seen this document before?

A. I created it.

Q. And what is it?

A. It's an e-mail that I sent to Judge Beach and Judge Burton.

Q. And when did you send it?

A. October 12th, 2017.

Q. And what is the substance of the e-mail?

A. It's a request to meet with them to talk about our caseload and the Hinkebein decision.

Q. And if you look at the first sentence of the e-mail, it says I met with -- or I met informally with Judge Burton this week; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And what did you discuss with Judge

Page 79

Burton?

A. Our caseload and the Hinkebein decision.

Q. What about your caseload?

A. That it was ethically unmanageable due to its size.

Q. And what was his response?

A. He agreed.

Q. Is that all that he said?

A. He believes that the Hinkebein decision should be taken seriously and he wanted -- he was reaching out to us to meet and try to come up with solutions.

Q. So he reached out to you?

A. Yes. At the same time that I was going to reach out to the judges. I had heard that he wanted to reach out to us.

Q. And how did you hear that he wanted to reach out to you?

A. I forget.

Q. Okay. It says in the e-mail that -- so this e-mail also has Judge Beach copied on to it; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And it says (quote as read):

Page 80

I have attached a formal letter outlining our ethical dilemma in the wake of in re Hinkebein.

Can you describe what the ethical dilemma is?

A. It's outlined in the letter.

Q. Okay. So if you turn to Reynolds Exhibit 40, is this the letter that was attached to this e-mail?

A. Correct.

Q. And just for the record, this is MSPD0039433. Did you write this letter?

A. I did.

Q. And what is the substance of this letter?

MR. MOORE: Just object -- also object. I mean, it calls for a narrative and I think the document speaks for itself, but subject to that you can continue.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) What is this letter about?

A. The caseload numbers in our office and the ethical obligations under in re Hinkebein.

Q. If you see the first paragraph of your letter, it says (quote as read):

Hinkebein's discipline occurred within the context of a high caseload beyond his control, a reality familiar to all Missouri public defenders.

Is this reality also true for your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you write in the next line that (quote as read):

I am writing to you today about the caseload problems in our office and -- and the ethical dilemma we currently face with regard to our current and future clients.

Could you explain what you meant by that sentence?

A. Our lawyers want to provide ethical representation to all of the clients. Because of the caseload numbers, that's impossible to do. And there's no way for our office to control the caseload numbers.

Q. And did you reach that conclusion because you've spoken to the attorneys in your office about this?

A. Yes, and just the number of cases coming into the office.

Q. You also write that in the middle the second paragraph it says (quote of read):

I'm asking you to collaborate with us in solving not only the problem of high public defender caseloads but also the quality of justice in Missouri.

What do you mean by the quality of justice in Missouri?

A. Because public defenders handle like -- something like 80 percent of all criminal cases and do not have enough time to work on the cases I think that calls -- calls into question the quality of justice across the state.

Q. And then in the footnote on the bottom, footnote one, you cite to Missouri rules, ethic rules. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you -- what is your understanding of the rules that you're citing here? What do they require?

A. That an attorney be attentive to what issues the case presents and follow up on those issues as a reasonable lawyer would do.

Q. In your opinion based on how you evaluate the attorneys in your office, do you believe the attorneys in your office are meeting those standards?

A. Not in every case.

Q. And is that because of the high caseload issue for your office?

A. Yes.

Q. And footnote three you say that (quote as read):

Managers also have a duty to make sure that no attorney under their supervision violates the rules, Missouri Supreme Court Rule 4-5.1(c). Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. In your opinion, do you think this rule applies to you as the district defender?

A. Yes.

Q. And what have you been doing to ensure that the attorneys in your office don't violate the ethics rules?

A. Since Hinkebein I've been working with the judges to try to come up with a solution for caseload relief.

Q. Does that include just the

conversations with the judiciary?

A. To date that's largely been what we are doing.

Q. And what are your plans if that is unsuccessful?

A. That is still to be decided. The problem is if this is not successful then we end up in litigation. Litigation is -- I don't know if that would be any more successful.

Q. Litigation in terms of --

A. The procedure under Chapter 600.

Q. Okay. In the second page of your letter you said that (quote as read):

Many attorneys in my office carry a caseload of 100 to 175 pending felonies.

Is that an accurate statement?

A. Yes. That is based off of the live caseload at the time I created this letter.

Q. Has it increased since you've created this letter?

A. It has slightly decreased.

Q. What is the reason for the decrease do you think?

A. I do not know.

Q. You say that at the end of the sentence that (quote as read):

Within this caseload most attorneys have two to five murders, five to ten sex offenses, and five to 20 violent felonies. By any standard this is an ethically unmanageable caseload.

Do you see that statement?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by ethically unmanageable caseload?

A. I think and I believe that whenever that amount of serious violent felonies are concentrated in one lawyer, even the most experienced practitioner, whether they be public defender or in private practice, would struggle and not be able to achieve ethical representation.

Q. And then the paragraph after that you say (quote as read):

All public defenders in St. Louis County are one phone call or one letter away from a complaint to the disciplinary counsel, an investigation and a finding that clients were not communicated with for months and cases were left untouched for the same period or longer.

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you still believe that this statement is accurate?

A. It is accurate today.

Q. What do you mean by they're one phone call or one letter away from a complaint to the disciplinary counsel?

A. There are many clients in our office represented by lawyers who have not been seen in months and their cases have not been worked on in months. I receive those complaint calls. The Woodrail office receives those complaint calls.

We receive letters. If the letter was directed to disciplinary counsel, the -- the lack of diligence would still be there and we would be dealing with a disciplinary counsel rather than an internal complaint.

Q. When you receive these complaints from your clients, what do you -- do you have a conversation with the attorneys being complained of?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the response from the attorneys?

A. They do their best to resolve the problem.

Q. And what is the difficulty in not being able to see their clients according to them?

A. The number of cases, the speed of the cases, the number of court appearances required.

Q. You said that an investigation in finding the clients were not communicated with for months. Is that true that clients would not be communicated with for months?

A. That is true for clients represented in our office.

Q. Does that include clients that are detained?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of the -- the longest amount of time a client has been detained and has not communicated with their attorney, what length of period of time is the longest?

A. May I break that question into two?

Q. Absolutely. It's a compound question anyway.

A. There have been clients who have not been communicated with counsel in nine months to a year in my office.

Q. Are those clients detained or confined?

A. Detained.

Q. Okay. And then what about for others who are released?

A. Most clients who are released, they are part of the C, D's, and E's that move very quickly within -- disposed of within a hundred days or less. I'm sure that occurs, but we don't get complaints from those clients.

Q. Yes. Understandably.

A. So I don't know the numbers.

Q. So the one that's -- the clients that are detained or confined for you said nine months at least and not receiving client contact, what is happening to their cases? Are attorneys still -- go ahead.

A. One of two things. They tend to be the more serious cases where the trial -- because of the St. Louis County dockets are very busy, trial may have been set a year to 18 months out, and then the client became neglected.

It could be it's still a serious case and it's popping up on the docket every 30 to 60 days and the attorney because they're overloaded is substituting talking to the client in court rather than visiting the client.

Q. So for example, a client has been detained for nine months, there's -- there's a court appearance set and the attorney has not spoken to that client for those nine months and speaks to that client for the first time at that court appearance?

A. What would be more likely is that the -- the case has been continued three times within a nine-month period, but the only client contact has been between the attorney and the client when the client is appearing for those court dates in court. There hasn't been a confidential visit and along with the confidential visit there hasn't been work done on the case.

Q. How has that impacted the relationship with those clients?

A. The attorney-client relationship is highly damaged and it takes a lot of effort to repair it.

Q. And when you say that the attorney is not working on that -- on the case, why would they not be working on the case?

A. They have too many cases.

MR. MOORE: I'll also object, note my objection because it calls for speculation. But your answer is on the record, so --

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Just finally on this letter you also say -- you also say that this problem has been in existence for years. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. How -- how long would you say this has been going on?

A. When I came back to the public defender in 2007 caseload numbers were a priority for management in all offices.

Q. And you also say in this letter that (quote as read):

At some point in the near future at the request of an attorney under the ethical rules I will stop assigning cases to that attorney until their caseload issue is resolved.

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that an option you're willing to take if it comes to that situation?

A. That is what the whole office is going to do at some point if a resolution is not worked out with the court.

Q. And if you stop assigning cases, what will happen to those potential clients?

A. This letter was written before the most recent decision in the Hinkebein matter. So it has to be read in that context.

Q. Can you give some -- can you explain what you mean by the most recent decision in the Hinkebein matter?

A. I don't know the case style, but early on the public defender was under the assumption that because of the ethical rule we could stop assigning cases without going through the procedure in Chapter 600.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Shortly after this letter was written there was an appellate decision saying the public defender cannot stop assigning cases based upon the ethical rules. They have to go through the Chapter 600 procedure. So this letter was written before that appellate decision.

Q. Got it. These two -- this e-mail -- the e-mail and the letter, what has been the communication with the judiciary since you sent this letter?

Page 92

A. Judiciary has set up a subcommittee chaired by Judge Kerr, co-chaired by Judge Ribaudo, and I have met with both of them five or six times. There's also been meetings with the larger stakeholders in St. Louis County. There's been two of those meetings. And --

Q. What do you mean -- I'm sorry. What do you mean by the larger stakeholders?

A. Probation and parole, prosecutors office, clerks office, St. Louis County jail.

Q. Okay. Does the subcommittee have a goal as to when this would be resolved?

A. I've told the subcommittee that we need an answer sooner rather than later, and early on said I'd like an answer in January. Because St. Louis County is seriously considering private appointments that would be ongoing for potentially years, that may -- process to figure out how to do that may take longer than January.

Q. Is there any incentive for the judiciary or the stakeholders to promptly resolve this issue?

A. The stakeholders -- the judiciary that I've spoken to takes Hinkebein very seriously and wants to resolve it as quickly as possible. Their timeline perhaps differs than our timeline.

Q. Are you aware of how other judiciaries or other districts are reacting to Hinkebein?
A. Yes.
Q. Have they had the same response as the judiciary in your district?
A. No.
Q. Can you explain the difference?
A. My understanding is Kansas City, which is similarly situated, has been actively hostile. So the fact that we can actually talk to judges about solutions I think at this point is productive even though the remedy may not be forthcoming within 60 days.
Q. So is the solution to the caseload problem in your office dependent on whether the judiciary wants to cooperate or be hostile to the district defenders office?
A. I believe it is because I think the alternative to go into litigation is not going to solve any problems.
MS. ROSCA: We've been going for another hour. Would you like to take another five-minute break?
THE WITNESS: Sure.

Page 94

MS. ROSCA: Okay. Off the record.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 3:48. We are off the record.
(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 3:53. We are back on the record.
MS. ROSCA: Mr. Reynolds, I'm going to have the court reporter mark this document Exhibit 41.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 41, 10-14-17 Reynolds letter to Barrett, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Would you please review the document and let me know when you're finished?
A. I reviewed it.
Q. Have you seen this document before?
A. Yes.
Q. What is this document?
A. It's a letter I wrote to Michael Barrett.
Q. And just for the record, the Bates stamp on this is MSPD0039435. When did you write this letter?
A. October 14th.
Q. What was the purpose of writing this letter to Mr. Barrett?

Page 95

A. To inform him that under the ethical rules in the in re Hinkebein case that caseloads in our office were unethically high.
Q. You write (quote as read):
That caseloads for nearly all attorneys violate ethical standards.
Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you agree with that statement?
A. Yes.
Q. And what is the basis for that statement?
A. The caseload numbers and the seriousness of the cases in our office.
Q. In your -- in the second paragraph of the letter you say that you're requesting additional staff, about five to ten additional attorneys, for individual cases. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Is that statement still accurate?
A. Yes.
Q. Why do you think your office needs an additional five to ten attorneys?
A. I think that would give a live caseload per attorney of somewhere between 50 and 70 cases.

Q. You say in your letter that you've initiated dialogue with the St. Louis County judiciary. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Is the dialogue that you're referring to in this letter the same as we've been discussing in the prior exhibits?
A. Yes.
Q. You ask that -- you're requesting that Mr. Barrett be available to assist in these discussions if called upon. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Has Mr. Barrett been involved in -- in the discussions with regards to caseload issues?
A. Yes.
Q. And how has he been involved?
A. He appeared at one meeting with the St. Louis County judiciary, and he has spoken with Judge Kerr.
Q. Did he participate in the meeting?
A. Yes.
Q. And what -- what did he say at the meeting?
A. That he would like to work with

Page 97

St. Louis County and he would like St. Louis County to come up with solutions to this problem with the public defender.

Q. Did he express -- strike that.

The last part of the paragraph you said that you alerted the Office of Disciplinary Counsel that the ethical problems within my office are systemic. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by systemic?

A. That they're systemic, meaning that the number of cases that come in to our office exceed what our office can handle and it's not due -- those numbers aren't due to anything that the attorneys are doing.

Q. In your opinion, do you think the attorneys are doing all they can to sufficiently work on their cases?

MR. MOORE: Just object to the form of the question as vague. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. The attorneys are doing the best they can under the circumstances.

MS. ROSCA: I'm going to have the court reporter mark Exhibit 42.

Page 98

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 42, 10-14-17 Reynolds letter to Pratzel, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Can you please review that document and let me know when you finished reviewing it?

A. I've reviewed it.

Q. Have you seen this document before?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you prepare this letter?

A. I did.

Q. What is this document?

A. It's a letter to the chief disciplinary counsel.

Q. In Exhibit 41, which you also still have in front of you, you mention that you alerted the disciplinary counsel. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the letter that was referenced in the letter to Mr. Barrett?

A. Yes.

Q. And what -- what was the purpose of writing this letter to the disciplinary counsel?

A. Alerting him that the lawyers in our office have caseloads that are ethically unmanageable.

Q. Are the same issues that you raise in your letter to Mr. Barrett the same as the issues you are raising in this letter to Mr. Pratzel?

A. Yes.

Q. You also mention in this letter to Mr. Pratzel that you've notified your supervisor Michael Barrett in order to resolve this problem. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the letter from Exhibit 41 the letter that you're referencing in this letter to Mr. Pratzel?

A. Yes.

Q. You say at the end that (quote as read):

Since public defender caseloads in my office and throughout --

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) (Quote as read):

Since public defender caseloads in my office and throughout the state have been repeat -- repeatedly verified to exceed ethical bounds.

Do you see that?

Page 100

A. Yes.

Q. How have they been verified?

A. I think going back ten years -- I forget the names of all the studies, but there's been several studies by outside agencies. There's been the RubinBrown standards and the exhibits that you've been referencing. There's just been numerous instances of metrics and outside studies that have commented and said that the caseloads are too high.

Q. And these studies and metrics, what are -- what is the data that is provided to these studies and metrics to come up with this conclusion?

A. My understanding, that its been internal public defender statistics. One of these studies or two of these studies if I'm recalling correctly, it's been almost ten years ago, have visited at offices, observed and interviewed public defenders.

Q. Do you recall during the time you were either a district defender or working for the public defenders office these study -- or the people conducting the studies visiting your office?

A. Certainly when I was assistant district defender in the city of St. Louis.

Q. What about in St. Louis County?

Page 101

A. I don't know if there was an outside agency that visited us. I can't recall.

Q. You might have told me this, but do you input any statistics into a database for your internal office with respect to caseload?

A. The computer generates the information.

Q. Can you explain how it generates the information? Does the attorneys put in their amount of cases they have manually or --

A. It's programmed through Columbia to collect the information based upon whatever is entered into the computer.

Q. Into Lotus?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Do you ever review the statistics entered into the computer just to see how the attorneys in your office are doing with respect to caseload?

A. Occasionally.

Q. And have you reviewed it recently?

A. Yes.

Q. And what conclusions have you drawn from reviewing the -- the statistics from those spreadsheets I assume?

A. The most useful metric is the live caseload, what each lawyer is handling at the moment you look at the screen. So that would be what I've referred to attorneys in our office are handling a hundred to 200 cases, that's -- that's the most useful metric for day-to-day management of the office.

Q. And you testified previously that's a hundred to 200 felony cases, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Have you had any further conversations with Mr. Barrett regarding the issues you raised in your letter to him?

A. I've spoken to Mr. Barrett four or five times since that letter.

Q. And what has your discussions been about?

A. Updating him on what has been happening with my discussions with the St. Louis County judiciary.

Q. And what has been his response?

A. He wants a solution, as do I, sooner rather than later, but at the same time appreciates that the St. Louis County judiciary is talking about this issue and talking about actual solutions to the problem.

Q. With respect to Exhibit 42, the one with Mr. Pratzel; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you -- did you have a response from Mr. Pratzel after sending this letter?

A. No.

Q. Did you have a response from anyone at the chief disciplinary counsel with respect to the caseload issue post-Hinkebein?

A. No.

Q. I take it then that the chief disciplinary counsel's office is not part of the discussions you're having with the judiciary and the stakehold -- stakeholders in your district?

A. Correct.

MS. ROSCA: I'm going to hand the court reporter another document, and I'm going to ask that he mark it Reynolds Exhibit 43.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 43, 10-25-17 Reynolds message to various, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Could you please review document and let me know when you're finished reviewing it?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen this before?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It's an e-mail that I sent to judges who were part of this committee to address public defender caseload issues.

Q. Did you prepare this e-mail?

A. I did.

Q. Do you see the date on this e-mail?

A. Yes.

Q. What's the date?

A. October 25th, 2017.

Q. And for the record, this is Bates number MSPD0039430. You said that this was in regards to the committee that you testified about earlier?

A. Yes.

Q. It says here that Mary Fox, the district defender of the city of St. Louis, has reported that this measure significantly decreased her office caseload numbers. Are you -- are you familiar with Ms. Fox?

A. Yes.

Q. And how do you know her?

A. She's the district defender in the city of St. Louis.

Q. It appears from this e-mail that you are using some approaches she's used in her office as suggestions for your committee; is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And why -- why are you using -- what are the approaches in this -- in Mrs. Fox's district that you think would be helpful for your district?
A. The city of St. Louis several years ago, I don't know exactly when, adopted a screening tool for when public defenders would be required in probation cases, and it's my understanding that that screening tool, which is implemented by the judges, reduced the number of probation cases that her office handles.
(Exhibit 32, Previously marked exhibit.)
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) I'm going to present to you Exhibit Fox -- Exhibit 32, Fox Exhibit 32. This is the same from the prior. Is that the screening tool that you're referring to?
A. That is the order resulting from the screening tool, yes.
Q. And why do you think that this would be helpful for your district?
A. It would be helpful based upon the experience in the city of St. Louis that this order based upon the screening tool reduce the number of probation cases that the city of St. Louis handled.

Q. Currently how are probation cases handled in your district?
A. If the person qualifies for indigency we open a probation case.
Q. Is there a determination as to due process?
A. No.
Q. So do attorneys in your office have to appear for probation cases every time there's a probation revocation hearing?
A. If the client qualifies for services, yes.
Q. For indigency determinations?
A. Correct.
Q. Then there's no subsequent determination like this order discusses?
A. At this time, no.
Q. And how has -- has there been a response from the judiciary in your subcommittee meetings about this screening tool?
A. Yes.
Q. And what has the response been?

Page 107

A. The judges are considering implementing this tool along with other reforms of how probation hearings are handled.
Q. Can you go through this e-mail that you sent regarding this subcommittee meeting, could you just explain what the expanded pretrial release proposal would be?
A. Right now the St. Louis County jail has a very small pretrial release program, and that program involves a pretrial release officer supervising a defendant when they're released from custody with various conditions of -- of the release, but no money is required.
So if more clients were released from custody without public defender involvement, there's the possibility that the clients would be able to be reengaged with work and be able to hire private counsel.
Q. What was the response to this proposal by the judiciary?
A. I believe that coincident with the Hinkebein issue and the public defender crisis the St. Louis County judiciary was in the process of forming a committee to reevaluate bond and release. These instances happened to coincide.

Q. Right now is there a bond schedule for your district?
A. There is.
Q. The second proposal that you discuss in this e-mail is the wait list. Is this the same wait list you were testifying about earlier?
A. That -- the second paragraph under pending cases that begins one of the measures --
Q. Uh-huh.
A. -- that is technically not a wait list.
Q. What -- what is it then?
A. The city of St. Louis public defender at some point in the past seven to eight years stopped taking applications in associate circuit court upon a client's first appearance. And that action reduced caseloads.
Q. What do you mean that they stopped taking applications? What happens to those clients that want or need counsel?
A. Because I have not worked down there when this policy was implemented, I don't have direct knowledge. My understanding is unlike the county where we have legal assistants who will take applications from clients at that first appearance after they've been arrested, that does not happen in the city, and that applications travel to their office in a different manner.

And at some point during that process more people are hiring private counsel than applying to the public defender, and as a result caseloads have dropped. Now, how that actually works since I'm not down there, I don't know beyond what I've just described just from hearing the effects.

Q. Who at the subcommittee meeting proposed comparisons to the city of St. Louis approaches that are now reflected in this e-mail?

A. This e-mail was actually in response to concrete ideas, just throw everything possible on the table. And it might have been Judge Beach when I was meeting with him informally in the hallway just saying throw out ideas beyond private appointments. Not that private appointment wasn't being considered.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So this is a laundry list of various ideas, a brainstorming session.

Q. You do mention in your e-mail that given St. Louis's -- St. Louis County's fiscal need to reduce the jail population, what worked in the city may not necessarily work in St. Louis County.

What do you mean by that?

A. If the public defender does not take applications at that first appearance in associate court, it is likely and probable that more clients will remain confined. If more clients remain confined, the jail population increases.

In St. Louis County for the past ten years there's been a huge concern of the jail population and it exceeding somewhere around 1,200, and that goes into overtime costs for jail personnel, which impacts St. Louis County financially quite significantly.

Q. So the wait list then is being referred to in this third paragraph, correct? However, if more defendants, that one. In the alternative wait list --

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Is there a difference between a wait list and an appointment list?

A. At this point in the discussions with the court a -- a wait list was not a prominent option being discussed. So those terms are being used rather loosely in this e-mail.

Since then the idea of a wait list has -- because it's being contemplated in other jurisdictions in Missouri and judges are talking to one another, you know, this was almost two months ago, that the idea of a wait list as it exists now is perhaps different than what's trying to be articulated in this e-mail.

Q. Can you describe the proposal for the wait list now?

A. I think conceivably in this St. Louis County and other jurisdictions there's talk about people who were released out of custody being placed on a wait list until the public defender office has capacity to take them.

Q. The e-mail also talks about the private counsel appointment?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain what that proposal would be?

A. This e-mail in particular is not talking about a large scale appointment process across the bar. What it is referencing at the bottom of the page is there are cases in St. Louis County where a client will have multiple cases and will hire a private lawyer on one of those cases, and the public defender will end up having to represent the client on the other cases because the person can't afford the private counsel for all the cases.

Q. You mentioned that following that same thought onto the second page of the e-mail, quote (quote as read):

We also mentioned encouraging private counsel to resolve all pending matters for a particular defendant.

Do you see that?

A. That's -- that's just another way of saying what I just mentioned.

Q. Meaning they don't have the option of giving it back to the public defenders office once they are appointed the case. Is that what that means?

A. What it means is a client will have let's say three cases and will hire a private lawyer on one of the three. We would encourage the courts to consider encouraging that private counsel to resolve all three rather than just one out of three.

Q. I see. Okay. Does the court or the subcommittee discuss what the requirements would be for the private counsel taking on criminal cases?

A. It's a touchy matter because you're interfering with the financial relationship between private counsel and the client, so I don't know if there's a resolution to this, but it's -- it's being discussed.

Q. What do you mean by your interfering with the financial relationship?

A. The -- the attorney is saying I've only been paid for one case. You can't force me to work on these other two cases for free.

Q. So the private counsel are actually getting a fee for doing this?

A. Correct. This has nothing to do with appointment.

Q. Okay. So this is not a pro bono?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. This is the marketplace.

Q. Okay. Has there been talk of having a pro bono requirement for private counsel taking on criminal cases?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Just quickly on the wait list again, the proposal for having a wait list, even if the defendants would be released and then placed on a wait list, theoretically if this plan goes through what happens or how is their pretrial motions affected if they don't have representation?

A. There would be no pretrial motions while they're on the wait list.

Q. Has this been a concern or topic that's been discussed?

A. People are aware of that problem. I suppose there's a tradeoff.

Q. Okay. And even if they're released just again on the wait list, is there a talk of certain types of cases that would go on the wait list versus others?

A. Low-level felonies, largely simple possessions and child support.

Q. Okay. Thank you. Has there ever been a wait list in your district?

A. No.

MS. ROSCA: I'm going to have the court reporter mark a document. Exhibit 44. Reynolds Exhibit 44.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 44, 10-31-17 e-mail chain, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Would you please review the document and let me know when you've reviewed it? I'm also going to introduce Reynolds Exhibit 45 with that.

(Court reporter interruption.)

MS. SHIPMA: It's not privileged. This was -- I asked him to send me this so I could forward this.

MR. MOORE: Okay. I just wanted to find out that before we started.

MS. SHIPMA: Thank you.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 45, MSPD improved case flow plan, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Did you have a chance to review Reynolds Exhibit 44?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen this document before?

A. I have.

Q. And what is this document?

A. This is another e-mail sent to the judges who are on the committee for the public defender issues, prosecutor representative, the lawyer for the courts or the clerk of court, and somebody from probation and parole.

Q. Do you see that this e-mail has an attachment that says MSPD improved case flow plan?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you take a look at Reynolds Exhibit 45, which is over here, and tell me if that is the exhibit being referenced in this e-mail?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Could you talk a little bit about what this improved docketing proposal is?

A. At the same time Hinkebein appeared the court was meeting with representatives from the jail, probation and parole, and the prosecutor's office about improvements to court processes.

And so as part of the conversations in the beginning there was discussion about whether improved docketing and court processes would help the public defender caseload issue. So this e-mail addresses those concerns and questions and has some ideas.

Q. In your opinion, if these -- this improved docketing proposal was in effect but your attorneys are still assigned the same number of cases they are and you have not increased the number of attorneys in your office, would it have a significant effect in reducing the caseload in your office?

A. I don't think that it would affect the caseload. It could affect -- it could create more time for lawyers to address the caseload as it exists now.

Q. What do you mean that it could create more time to address the caseload as it exists now?

A. A scheduling in St. Louis County is extremely difficult. There are two associate divisions and 13 circuit divisions that handle criminal matters.

Vertical representation is administratively better and ethically better for the client. But to achieve that our lawyers are in court nearly every day of the week and sometimes both mornings and afternoons.

If there was a coordinated scheduling and docketing, that would reduce the amount of time that our attorneys are in court and therefore they could devote more time to client communication and case preparation.

Q. Based on your communications with the judiciary and your circuit court, how likely is this improved docketing system going to be put into effect?

A. It's not going to be put into effect.

Q. And what is your basis for that conclusion?

Page 118

A. The judges have said so.

Q. Okay. So they've decided on this already?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. What is the reason why they don't want to put it into effect, did they say?

A. I think there's -- it's too difficult of a task to achieve given the number of stakeholders. So efforts are addressed at the caseload issue as opposed to -- which I said this docketing issue came at the same time as Hinkebein. So that's docketing and court processes are just being pushed to the side.

Q. This e-mail also lists again the appointments to the private bar. I think it discusses it in a little bit more detail. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. You said before that the private bar would be paid a fee, but then it says here that this could be presented as a pro bono requirement. Is that a consideration now as well?

A. Did I -- I'm sorry, did I reference a fee?

Q. I thought you said that appointments to private counsel, there would be a financial issue because they would be paid a fee; is that correct or no?

A. If I said that or implied that, it would be incorrect. I don't know if I said that.

Q. Well, then let's start again. What -- what is the proposed plan for appointments to private counsel? Is it the same as this e-mail?

A. There is no concrete plan. This is an outline of a -- a rough outline of a plan.

Q. Okay. Can we discuss -- can you discuss what the plan would be?

A. Now or in the e-mail?

Q. What is the plan now?

A. The judges are considering how to approach the St. Louis County Bar and/or lawyers who live in St. Louis County to talk about the need for private appointments, and then what's under consideration is appointing child support and drug cases.

Q. And just to be clear, the private appointments would be pro bono on the part of the counsel?

A. Correct.

Q. Is there currently a pro bono requirement in the district?

A. No.

Q. Would the judiciary have to set one?

A. I do not know.

Q. What about training, has training been discussed for private counsel taking on criminal cases?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the training that will be involved?

A. Specific training would be devised for those types of cases and made available to people who are appointed to those types of cases.

Q. Is there a screening process as to how the private counsel would be appointed?

A. I -- nothing has reached that point.

Q. Okay. Currently is the private bar involved in your district to alleviate caseload issues?

A. I would say other than MCRC to the extent that they're involved, no.

Q. I would actually like to talk about that. I'm going to present you with an exhibit that was previously marked.

(Exhibit 6, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Mr. Reynolds, this is an exhibit, Exhibit 6 of the Petsch deposition, from the Petsch deposition. Have you seen this document before?

A. I've seen something similar to this. I think I've seen it, it's just not formatting as it appears on my computer screen.

Q. Do you see that on page six of this exhibit that your name is on the top, Stephen Reynolds? Page two.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Why are you listed on this -- well, strike that.

What is this exhibit?

A. This appears to be a copy of the electronic notification from the Missouri State Public Defender to an attorney participating in the MCRC program. And if a case is originating out of my office, I am listed as the contact person.

Q. And can you describe what the MCRC program provides?

A. It is a group of firms that have come together and volunteered to take cases that are likely to go to trial.

Q. So do they come in after the case has already been commenced or initiated?

A. To date that is how the program has worked in our office.

Q. And how do these private counsel receive training to handle those types of cases?

A. Yes. That's my understanding.

Q. And how -- how do they get the training?

A. I believe that there's been specialized training events, two to date, and interested volunteers are required to attend those trainings before taking cases is my understanding.

Q. And who runs the trainings, does the MSPD run them?

A. Yes. That's my understanding.

Q. Has your district office at all been involved in running the training programs?

A. A little bit.

Q. How have they been involved?

A. I gave an introductory presentation and I believe at the next training the deputy district defender is one of the scheduled trainers that's going to do in-depth training to whatever extent that is for that program.

Q. When did you give the introductory presentation?

A. Sometime over the summer.

Q. And when did this program begin?

A. Late spring, early summer.

Q. Of this year?

A. Yeah.

Q. And how many cases from your office have gone to the MCRC?

A. Five. Five to ten. I don't know the exact number. Somewhere in that range.

Q. How long are the trainings for the private counsel taking on these cases?

A. The training that was in St. Louis, my understanding was that it was two days. I believe there's been a training in Kansas City, but I wasn't part of that.

Q. Are the trials that the MCRC private counsel taking, are they for violent cases?

A. They are -- we have offered a variety of cases from low-level felonies to high-level felonies.

Q. Okay. So it's possible then for a high-level felony case, a violent high-level felony case to be assigned to the MCRC private counsel?

A. Yes.

Q. But they only receive two days of training to take on that trial; is that correct?

A. I don't know what training the lawyers have in addition to the public defender training.

Q. Do they have to be criminal attorneys to be participating in this program?

A. I don't know.

Q. Okay. You can put that aside. Just -- just going back to the e-mail with the various proposals and the appointments to the private bar, I think it's Exhibit 44, did the committee or the judges discuss sort of the list of private counsel that they would choose from to make these appointments?

A. I think that's one of the issues that they are trying to resolve is how to generate that list.

Q. Okay. And what about you said that it would be pro bono for the attorney. What about the expenses associated with handling a case like depositions or getting experts, did they discuss who would be funding that aspect of it?

A. My understanding is that the public defender would fund those --

Q. Okay.

A. -- costs, and that's based upon Michael Barrett telling the judges that during some point in the discussions.

Q. And is there a discussion about whether the attorneys can refuse the appointment?

A. The appointment process is not that far down.

Q. Okay.

A. It's in the generative stages. It's a serious intended commitment, but no details have been worked out.

Q. Okay. And I'm just going to keep asking questions about it --

A. Right.

Q. -- just to know the scope. Is there any discussion about the oversight of the private counsel on the part of the MSPD?

A. Not to date.

Q. Is that something that is being considered by the judiciary or by the MSPD?

A. I don't know.

Q. Are there -- are you aware of any other districts that are doing this, that are appointing private counsel to reduce caseload?

A. I'm aware that at one point the Columbia office, I don't know which county, there were appointments. I don't know if those are still continuing. I'm aware that the Harrisonville office at one point there were appointments, but I don't know if that's still continuing.

Q. And are you aware if -- for the offices that did participate in having appointments, was it successful in reducing their caseload?

A. I don't know.

Q. Okay. When is your next follow-up communication with the judiciary or the subcommittee?

A. It was to be today, but I'm taking a deposition.

Q. Understandable. Is it being rescheduled?

A. It will be.

Q. You said how frequently do you -- does this committee meet?

A. The committee itself is not meeting until January, but I am in frequent communication with judges on the committee. So work can be done -- you know, work doesn't necessarily have to be done at the meeting.

Q. What do you mean work doesn't have to be done at the meeting? What other work is involved in this process?

A. Talking to judges about formulating a plan and then being able to present it at a meeting for other judges to consider and then how to approach the private bar, talking about just the logistics and the administrative necessities of a wait list. You know, the details of these -- both proposals can be worked out without having an official meeting.

Q. You mentioned how to approach the private bar. Have you had any discussions from the private bar about this issue?

A. Judge Kerr met with MCRC.

Q. And do you know what the discussion involved in that meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. What did they talk about?

A. Judge Kerr was inquiring whether MCRC could be a vehicle for large-scale appointments.

Q. And what was the response by the private bar?

A. The representative of the MCRC said that that organization was not created to take large-scale appointments.

Page 128

MS. ROSCA: So I'm going to have the court reporter mark this Exhibit 46, Reynolds Exhibit 46. Can you please review this document and let me know when you have finished reviewing it?

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 46, 11-20-17 McCulloch letter to Reynolds, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)

A. I recognize it.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) What is this document?

A. It is a letter sent to me by Robert McCulloch of the St. Louis County Prosecuting Attorney.

Q. Just for the record, it is dated November 20th, 2017, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And why is the Office of Prosecuting Attorney sending you this letter?

A. You'd have to ask Mr. McCulloch.

Q. It says on the first line that this is a follow-up on our discussions with the circuit court. Was he present at those subcommittee meetings?

A. He was present I believe at the first one.

Q. Okay. And did he provide any statements at that first meeting?

A. He did.
Q. What did he say?
A. He suggested that the court appoint the private bar as the court back in 1980 did, which resulted in the creation of an improved public defender system.
Q. Do you agree with that alternative?
A. Under the circumstances I think that is a good suggestion because he also pointed out that the appointments to the private bar resulted in the private bar speaking directly with the legislature for improved funding of a public defender system.
Q. Just so I understand, you're saying that appointments to the private bar would prompt more discussions or -- yeah, would prompt more discussions with the legislature for funding for the MSPD?
A. That is what he suggested.
Q. Do you have any concerns about appointing private counsel to these criminal cases?
A. Meaning?
Q. Do you think that they would have the sufficient experience that your attorneys have at your office, do you think that there's any issues with the client relationship having private counsel appointed to them, just any concerns generally by having them represent the clients versus your office?

A. I mean --
MR. MOORE: Just real quick I'll object to the form. I feel like it's leading, also kind of vague. Go ahead.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Strike that. I'll rephrase.
Do you have any concerns that private -- or appointment of private counsel would be less effective than attorneys representing clients in these criminal cases?
A. If I'm trying to understand your question, and correct me if I'm wrong, you're asking me will the appointment of private counsel jeopardize the quality of representation for a given client.
Q. Yes. I'm specifically thinking of a situation where a civil attorney who doesn't handle criminal matters is now appointed a criminal case and how effective they would be in representation.
A. That could be an issue.
Q. Is that something that the judges are considering at all?

Page 131

A. You would have to ask them.
MR. MOORE: Okay.
A. But I'm sure it's an issue.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Can we go back to this exhibit with the letter from the prosecution -- prosecutor's office?
A. Yes.
Q. Since that first meeting where he was present, has he or anyone in his office been involved in these discussions with the judiciary and your office?
A. There was a meeting in the last week of November where two representatives of his office appeared.
Q. Based on your observations from the meeting and what if anything they have stated, have they been amenable to trying to help resolve the caseload issue for this district?
A. I can only interpret what I -- I can only interpret their actions. I can't -- I don't know exactly what their thoughts are, but they have expressed through Bob McCulloch and his idea for appointment of the private bar that they recognize that there is a caseload problem.

Q. So in particular in this letter he offers another proposal it seems like in addition to just the private bar. He says (quote as read):
You select one deputy defender and provide this office with a list of all pending cases assigned to that deputy and we will pull the files, make certain all discovery has been provided.
Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. What is your opinion of this suggestion by the prosecutor's office?
A. Operationally I don't think that this is going to help the caseload issue.
Q. And why not?
A. C, D, and E felonies already move through our office in less than a hundred days. The time to disposition does not solve the number of cases in our office.
Q. Just because you're receiving so many C, D, and E cases that it doesn't matter how quickly they're resolved. Is that why?
A. This letter suggests that moving cases more quickly will solve caseload problems. Our office already moves cases extremely quickly.

Q. But not quickly on the serious and violent felonies, correct?
A. Those aren't going to move quickly regardless.
Q. Okay.
A. This letter is referencing low-level easily resolved cases.
Q. Okay.
A. Those cases are already moving under a hundred days.
Q. So just so I'm clear, this suggestion would not reduce the caseload problem in your office?
A. Correct.
Q. Has the prosecutor's office provided any other suggestions to reduce the caseload issue aside from what has been suggested in this letter and the private appointment of counsel suggestion?
A. I believe those are the two suggestions that they've had.
Q. Are you aware of other districts that have been working with prosecutors' offices to reduce caseload issues in their offices?
A. No.

Page 134

MS. ROSCA: Can we take a ten-minute break? Thanks.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 4:47. We are off the record.
(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 4:54. We are back on the record.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Mr. Reynolds, just to tie up the questioning about the subcommittee and the judiciary meetings that you've had, just to be clear, even if the judiciary in your circuit went with private appointments, would that alone reduce the caseload issues in your office absent adding new attorneys to your office?
A. Highly unlikely.
Q. Why do you say that?
A. The amount of cases needed to be offloaded we estimate between 500 and a thousand just to get our lawyers below a hundred cases. To appoint that many cases would be exceedingly difficult even if you had a cooperative, willing private bar.
Q. So you testified earlier that the prosecutor's suggestion in the letter that was sent to you was not going to reduce the caseload issue on its own; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. And now you've just testified again and clarified that the private appointments plan being contemplated by the judiciary circuit will not reduce caseload issues on its own; is that correct?
A. It is highly unlikely to do so, yes.
Q. And so what would be the solution to reducing the caseload issue in your office?
A. The easiest and best solution is to hire more public defenders.
Q. Okay. Thank you. Can we just go back and talk about just the turnover rate in your office? How many attorneys have you hired this year?
A. I'm going to say five to seven.
Q. Out of the 20?
A. Yes.
Q. So does that mean that five to seven prior attorneys left last year?
A. Correct.
Q. Is that on average what the turnover rate is per year since you've been a district defender?
A. I would have to access those statistics, which are not -- in views that I have are not tabulated automatically. It's a hand count, but I would say turnover has increased in the past four years.

Q. And why do you think there is such a high turnover rate or why -- strike that.
Why do you think turnover rate has increased in the past four years?
A. My view would be high caseloads, low pay, an extremely difficult job that very few people are suited to do, have the qualifications and the aptitude to do. I would say that public defender jobs, the skill level is highly underestimated what it takes to be successful and also to be able to practice over the long term.
Q. Of the five to seven you've hired this year, what is their experience level with respect to representing indigent clients?
A. Three had no experience. Two -- one had ten years' experience, one had five to seven years' experience. The other hire that we had that puts us in this five to seven range was a transfer from a rural jurisdiction with two years' experience who only lasted in our office for six months.

Page 137

Q. She left already?
A. It was a man. He left.
Q. Oh, he left already?
A. He left within six months.
Q. Why did he leave?
A. You would have to ask him.
Q. Okay. You don't do like a post -- like a post discussion after they give their notice as to --
A. Human resources conducts --
Q. Okay.
A. -- that interview.
Q. Okay.
A. What I think is what I think.
Q. What do you think?
A. I don't think he could handle the caseload and I don't think he liked the job.
Q. Of the -- the ones that had, you know, ten years' experience, five to seven years' experience, is this experience with the public defenders office?
A. Those two, yes.
Q. Okay. And then the three that had no experience, what are their backgrounds?
A. One is a recent law grad from Fordham

University who really wanted to do trial work and did a national job search. One is a recent graduate of Suffolk University and was similarly positioned, wanted to do trial work, wanted to work for the public defender and did a national job search.
The other was working with a sole practitioner for maybe a year or so after graduation from law school. We considered based upon his interview that his experience, although we're fortunate that he had a job, was really not substantial in any way.
Q. Okay. Would you say -- you said that you don't know the specific, but generally would it be less than five that would leave per year or more than five?
A. I think the trend is towards the numbers I described for the past 12 months.
Q. Which is five to seven?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Thank you. Traveling, I just want to talk about how much time the attorneys in your office travel for their cases?
A. Currently, other than investigation, very little. All of our lawyers have cases in St. Louis County, but for one who is finishing up a conflicts assignment in the city of St. Louis and that's just left over from when conflicts have been contracted out. He still has a conflict caseload.

Q. Can you talk a little bit about conflict cases? When -- when did it get start -- when did it get contracted out?
A. The beginning of this fiscal year.
Q. And what were -- what was your office doing prior to that?
A. We were doing first-level conflicts in -- from St. Louis City, and I believe -- I don't know if it was first or second level from St. Charles.
Q. So could you explain, you know, how the attorney -- prior to it being contracted out, how the attorney was assigned a conflicts case?
A. We had one attorney assigned to do the conflicts cases in the city of St. Louis. Normally we would have two. Because we knew that the contract money was likely to be forthcoming in December of last year, that particular attorney volunteered to take all of the city conflict cases, which were lower in number than the St. Louis County cases per attorney, but required more work and more preparation for trial because St. Louis City is a trial-rich environment. And then the St. Charles County cases we would assign as they came in to the lawyer that was best suited to handle it.

Q. So just so I understand, there was one designated -- one attorney designated for conflict cases stemming out of the city of St. Louis; is that correct?
A. For the past year.
Q. For the past year. And then prior to that how were the conflict cases from St. Louis being apportioned?
A. There were two attorneys doing city of St. Louis conflict cases prior to then.
Q. And then the only other conflict cases you receive was from St. Charles; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay.
A. In the -- in the past two to three years.
Q. Past two to three. And then that would be apportioned out to everyone?
A. Those numbers were quite small. I think it was probably less than 20 cases a year. So we would find the person best suited to handle that case given their caseload.

Q. And then can you just describe what you mean by the conflict cases being contracted out in the beginning of this year?

A. The legislature apportioned money for all conflict cases to be contracted out through a centralized contracting office in Columbia, Missouri run by the public defender.

Q. Has that decision significantly impacted caseload issues for your office?

A. At some point in the next six months we will be able to reassign our one conflicts attorney to take a St. Louis County caseload.

Q. So it only really affected that one attorney?

A. We will gain the equivalent of one FTE to devote to the St. Louis County caseload. As soon as that attorney's caseload is reduced enough to make the transfer.

Q. And when -- prior to the contracting out of these cases, were the two designated St. Louis City attorneys also handling cases that were not conflict cases at all?

A. No. They were entirely dedicated to city of St. Louis conflict cases.

Q. But the ones that were handling the

Page 142

St. Charles cases also had additional nonconflict cases they were handling?

A. Other than one or two cases their caseload would be all St. Louis County cases.

Q. Oh, I mean the St. Charles?

A. Correct.

Q. Oh, okay. They would be -- they would do both?

A. So -- yes.

Q. Okay.

A. The St. Charles numbers, we only got ten to 20 of those cases a year. The numbers were quite low.

Q. Okay.

A. So somebody in St. Louis County would be handling 150 cases and then they would have one St. Charles case.

Q. Got it. Thank you. Just guilty pleas, do you -- do you guys have plea negotiations --

A. Yes.

Q. -- in your district? Okay. Can you just talk about how that works?

A. The prosecutor's office delegates a considerable amount of authority to the individual prosecutor to negotiate the case. So each case is negotiated with the individual prosecutor who has wide discretion.

Q. And how much time do the attorneys in your office spend negotiating plea deals?

A. Meaning?

Q. Meaning for one case, for example, what percentage of their time is spent negotiating a plea deal?

A. I mean, the reason I'm hesitating is you could count that as minutes spent on the phone, in court, and add it up, or you could count it as what work the lawyer is putting into the case to then present information to the prosecutor to achieve a better negotiated result. I don't know which measurement you're asking.

Q. Could you combine the two, just in general?

A. It would depend on the case then.

Q. What about for nonhomicide cases, like C, D felonies?

A. I mean, the reason I'm hesitating is if -- if the client in a particular case and there's not much negotiation to take place, there -- it can be very quick. If it's -- even if it's a low-level case and the lawyer has been working up the case and talking to the prosecutor over a period of months, it can be hours. I mean, it really varies on the case.

Q. So the ones that you testified earlier that were being completed in a hundred days, were those C, D felonies?

A. Those were C, D's and E's.

Q. Okay. Would those negotiations be much quicker then?

A. Some of them can be. Some of them can be extended also.

Q. Okay. And then I assume the ones that are the more serious violent offenses, they're longer times spent on negotiations?

A. Yes. Those negotiations often persist up until you're picking a jury.

Q. Now, you testified earlier that the reason why because of the flow of the C, D felony cases and how expedited the dispositions of those cases are, not a lot of time is spent on the serious violent cases; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Does that include time spent with negotiation of plea deals with the prosecutor's office?

Page 145

A. You could put that in there.
Q. Okay. And do you know of an instance where that has been the case for one of your attorneys?
A. Meaning?
Q. Meaning they did not have enough time to negotiate a plea deal with the prosecutor's office for a serious violent offense because they had too much on their plate?
A. I think the problem is the attorney has not investigated and litigated the serious case to have a better negotiating position. Not that they don't have time to negotiate. One can negotiate with a prosecutor quite easily, but if you're not bringing anything to the table, the negotiations are not maximized for the client.
Q. So just so I understand, the issue then is that the time it takes to research and work on the case in preparation for the negotiation of the prosecutor's office; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. And do you think that the clients would be benefited if the attorney had more time to research and investigate in preparation of these plea -- plea deal negotiations?

Page 146

A. Yes.
MR. MOORE: Object to form, calls for speculation, but it's on the record.
Q. (By Ms. Rosca) What is your basis for thinking that?
A. What is my basis for thinking that?
Q. Yes.
A. Concerns that the lawyers have expressed to me when I'm reviewing cases because of client complaints or promotions. You know, I notice that some cases need to be worked on more.
Q. Can we sort of quantify or qualify what the serious cases are that's not getting the attention in terms of time that your attorneys can provide to these cases? Does this include felony sex offenses?
A. Yes.
Q. And then homicides I assume?
A. Yes.
Q. And what other types of cases that I haven't mentioned would it include?
A. Robberies and assaults.
Q. Okay. How much -- you have to then communicate with a client prior to negotiating with a prosecutor over a plea deal?

Page 147

A. Negotiations have to originate with a client.
Q. Meaning that they would have to request it?
A. Meaning like in any attorney-client relationship the client makes the primary fundamental decisions, including whether or not the client wants to negotiate and what the parameters of the negotiation will be.
Q. And for -- you testified earlier that there are instances where there is no client communication for nine months for these serious cases. Would that affect whether they -- the client has enough information to make a decision about plea negotiations?
A. It can.
Q. What do you mean by it can? Do you know of an instance where this has occurred in your office?
A. Well, I would -- I would imagine if a client has not been met for that period that they are not fully knowledgeable about the case and it could affect their thoughts about how to proceed and they've not had enough time to meet with a lawyer, collaborate with a lawyer and figure out a case plan, whether it be trial or negotiation or preparation for trial to advance a better negotiating position. Obviously none of that has taken place.

Q. If a client has been detained or confined for a period of time and -- could they request a plea deal even before the attorney has had time to adequately investigate and prepare for a plea -- plea deal negotiations?
A. I'm not understanding the question.
Q. You said -- you testified earlier that the client has to be the one to initiate whether they want to engage in plea deal negotiations; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Is there an instance where they requested to accept a plea deal even before the attorney working on the case has had adequate time to -- to research and investigate whether that was a sufficient offer on the table by the prosecutor's office?
A. I think the way this actually works is clients who have not met with their lawyer have serious concerns and express, hey, I need to meet with my lawyer, nothing's been done on my case, and it's usually those expressions of concern which are legitimate are usually directed at investigating the case.

It is very rare for a client to say I just want to plead. My lawyer won't let me into court and plead. I mean, I just haven't encountered that unless somebody is seriously mentally ill.

Q. I guess my question is a little different. Has there been a situation where a client has been in custody and to get out of custody faster has just opted to take a plea deal even before the attorney has had adequate time to research and investigate whether that would be the best solution for that client?

A. Yes.

Q. And how often do you think that occurs in your office?

A. Lawyers have reported that it happens with enough frequency that they are personally concerned about that phenomena.

Q. Do you think that the lawyers' inability to attend to researching the scope of a plea deal or a negotiation impacts the time at which the client requests to just plead guilty to get out of custody?

Page 150

MR. MOORE: Object to the form. I think it's vague. Also I think it might be leading and calls for speculation, but you can go ahead.

A. Yes.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Do you have an instance in mind where this has occurred with one of your attorneys?

A. I think I mentioned it's probably the same example, but in the past month when we've been discussing caseload numbers and the Hinkebein problem, several lawyers have mentioned this to me as being a problem.

Q. Okay. Does the attorneys in your office attend lineups for their clients?

A. No.

Q. So your clients are in these lineups without representation?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that strike you as a concern?

A. I need to give a long answer to this.

Q. Please.

A. So certainly there are physical lineups conducted in the jail, and the police in many of these instances are following the Constitution, informing the client that they have a right to a lawyer to be present at those lineups. We have not been contacted to appear at those lineups. Were we contacted, we would appear at those lineups.

Q. If you are contacted to appear at those lineups, how would that affect the time that your attorneys spend on cases?

MR. MOORE: This calls for speculation. Go ahead.

A. Unknown because in eight years we have not received such a call.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Does your attorneys make any psychiatric evaluations when determining client's competency?

A. Yes.

Q. How does that process work?

A. When a attorney learns or suspects that there's a serious mental illness that affects competence, the policy, even though it's not written but it's clearly communicated to the lawyers, it's better to investigate competency even if you're in doubt, and the preference is to investigate it through a private evaluation. Not always. So they will contact a psychiatrist, make an E request, and I will approve it and submit it to Columbia.

Q. Do these competency determinations ever go to court?

A. Yes.

Q. Are the attorneys in your office present during these competency evaluations?

A. When I answered yes the competency evaluations go to court, meaning, you know, the result of the evaluation will be dealt with in court. Lawyers are generally not present during the competency evaluation.

Q. Is there a reason for that? Strike that.

Are the -- the competency evaluations are not done in court?

A. No, they're -- either the private evaluation, the evaluator will go to the jail and conduct the evaluation in the jail. If the client is released, the client will go to the office of the evaluator.

In some instances where we are going through the Department of Mental Health first, and those are carefully screened, the person is transported to the Department of Mental Health for the evaluation.

Q. Do your clients ever participate in interviews for presentence investigation reports?

A. In our jurisdiction we try to avoid what are called sentencing assessment reports, and that's -- that's what you're referring to because they're usually unhelpful for our clients. And if we're in a situation where a judge is requesting it, we try to do our own mitigation case to counteract the sentencing assessment report.

Q. Your attorneys attend voir dire, I assume?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of an instance where any attorney in your office has ever waived a voir dire?

A. No.

Q. Is there any instance where they've skipped a voir dire?

A. That would never happen.

Q. Why is that?

A. Because we monitor the trials, and every lawyer in the Missouri State Public Defender knows that in a jury trial voir dire is one of the most important parts. It would be inconceivable that anybody would do that. I don't think they'd be employed if they did.

Q. That's fair. At the moment given that we've discussed that you have an ethical duty under the rules as a manager to report -- or ensure that your attorneys are complying with the ethical standards, are there any attorneys in your office that are not complying with those standards?

A. I mean, I think given the caseload, all of our lawyers, their caseloads are unethical. We have decided rather than to litigate to try to work with the courts to resolve these issues. I think if we had just decided to litigate no productive discussions would have resulted.

Q. And by that answer have you filed any formal motion to the court with respect to withdrawing as -- as representation or not accepting any more representation?

A. Not to date because we're in the middle of discussions. We don't want to end up like some of the other jurisdictions. Now, if it gets to that we'll do it, but at this point we're not there.

Q. What do you mean by some of the other jurisdictions?

A. Kansas City.

Q. Can you explain what has happened there that you've been aware about?

A. It's been very hostile from the bench and I've -- my understanding is they've attempted to file the 600 motion and it's been rejected on trivialities.

Q. And you said that if it gets to that point your office is willing to do that as well?

A. Right. But we don't want it to be a dead end. We just don't want to file a motion, go through a needless hearing and have no relief. Why not talk to judges and even though the relief may be imperfect as you've pointed out in this deposition, it's better than anything to date.

Q. And just to be clear, the relief is dependent on how amenable the judges are in speaking with the public defenders office with respect to the caseload issue?

A. Well, the relief on the horizon is private appointments and a wait list, which has never happened before in Missouri. It's an imperfect solution, but it's -- it's a step in the right direction. And why shut down that possibility by filing a motion tomorrow.

Q. And you've testified that the private appointments and wait lists, even if they went forward, would not have a significant impact on reducing the caseload issue for your office if no other attorneys were added to your office?

MR. MOORE: Again, calls for speculation, but go ahead.

A. I mean conceivably, yeah. I mean, it's a lot of cases to offload.

Q. (By Ms. Rosca) Okay.

A. And it's as you've pointed out, the wait list is -- is an imperfect solution to people's rights under the Constitution, whether it's speedy trial or due process.

MS. ROSCA: Okay.

MR. MAUNE: That's it.

MS. ROSCA: That is it for me. I'm passing the witness.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:

Q. Very good. My name is Justin Moore. I'm with the Attorney General's Office. I'm here on behalf of the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens. I'd like to ask some follow-up questions. Okay. So just going to backfill a little bit here. Tell me a little bit about your educational background. Where did you go to school, starting with undergrad?

A. Bowdoin College.

Q. Where is that at?

Page 157

A. Brunswick, Maine.
Q. Okay. Are you from Maine?
A. No.
Q. Where are you from originally?
A. Colorado.
Q. Okay. So did you go to high school in Colorado, I guess?
A. I did.
Q. And how did you end up in St. Louis?
A. After I graduated from Bowdoin College I had a friend who worked for the public defender in Seattle. The job interested me and I found a job in St. Louis as an investigator.
Q. Okay. You started off as an investigator in St. Louis?
A. Yes.
Q. So take me through like the timeline, I guess. So you graduated from undergrad and then from there you start working as an investigator in the public defender in St. Louis?
A. Yes.
Q. Where did you go to law school?
A. UCLA.
Q. So how long did you work as an investigator prior to going to law school?

Page 158

A. One year.
Q. Okay. And when did you graduate from law school?
A. 1998. I also -- I went from -- just so you -- everything is clear, I was investigator for a year, and then I was a student at UCSC in the anthropology program, and then I went to law school at UCLA.
Q. Okay. So you were a student of anthropology initially at UCSC?
A. Yes.
Q. And did you ever complete that -- that would have been like a master's or something like that?
A. Master's.
Q. Did you ever complete that?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So were you doing that at the same time you were going to law school?
A. No, I went to UCSC, completed the master's, worked on a Ph.D., then decided to go to law school.
Q. Okay. Very good. How long was that master's program with UCSC?
A. I was there three years.

Page 159

Q. Okay. And you worked on a Ph.D. you said, right?
A. Yes.
Q. How many years did you work on that?
A. Three years altogether.
Q. Okay. But you never completed the Ph.D.?
A. No.
Q. And then you decided to go to law school after that?
A. Correct.
Q. Is there a reason you never did finish the Ph.D.?
A. I didn't want to be a professor.
Q. Ah. Now, you went to law school. And how did you end up back in St. Louis then after that?
A. My wife is from here.
Q. Okay. Is she an attorney as well?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. How is she employed?
A. Missouri Public Defender.
Q. Okay. And where is she employed at?
A. Eastern Capital.
Q. Okay. And in what capacity?

Page 160

A. She is the district defender for Eastern Capital.
Q. Okay. Very good. And any other degrees or institutions that you've attended since your undergraduate degree that we haven't discussed?
A. No.
Q. Have you noticed any recent trends in how your district is defending cases? And by that I mean an increase or decrease in like the number of depositions or experts you're utilizing, anything that you've noticed?
A. No.
Q. And you may have gone over this already, but can you just kind of walk me through how you oversee your defenders whenever they're working on these cases?
A. We have one-on-one meetings with lawyers periodically. Just go into their office, talk about their caseload. We have brainstorming sessions. We have a formal review process for promotion.
During the first six months the deputy district defender is in charge of training, which includes all aspects of training. We have newer lawyers second chair so they can understand how to do a trial.

We try to find cases that will go to trial so a lawyer will get a trial within the first six months if at all possible. Sometimes we succeed. Sometimes we don't.
Q. Okay. And anything else?
A. That's an overview.
Q. Okay. Do you have any kind of like computer system whereby you can monitor your defenders' cases, how they're progressing?
A. Yes. I've referenced that as the Lotus Notes case management system.
Q. And I understand Lotus Notes includes -- basically it's like the file stored digitally; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. So you can see like the pleadings and discovery and all that kind of thing on the system, right?
A. We scan discovery into nearly every case. The pleadings will not be a complete reflection of the court file because there's no interface between Case.net and our internal database.
Q. Okay. Anything else that it would not be included in the Lotus Notes?

A. Any handwritten notes that would be in a physical file.
Q. Okay. How about like e-mail correspondences or correspondence from your office to prosecutor's office or to your clients, are those on Lotus Notes?
A. Generally speaking, but because it's -- the system is manually intensive, so if you're sending an e-mail, if you want it preserved, you also have to manually enter it into Lotus Notes. That sort of administrative burden is not always met by the lawyers.
Q. Okay. It falls on the lawyers to retain their e-mails on the Lotus Notes system?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you ever had a situation where they would ask their administrative staff to assist in that task?
A. No.
Q. They just haven't asked them to do that you don't think?
A. There's no time for the administrative staff to do it.
Q. Okay.

Page 163

A. So there's no point in asking.
Q. So you're saying that they have not asked the administrative staff to attempt to to your knowledge?
A. Correct. I haven't either.
Q. Okay. Now, as far as when cases come into your office, is it you that decides how to divvy up the cases between your defenders?
A. Because the amount of cases and scheduling needs, I have created parameters for case assignments, but the case assignments are primarily done by our office manager and the legal assistant.
Q. Okay.
A. The two legal assistants.
Q. And how do they decide who gets what?
A. The legal assistants assign cases by the day that the case will appear in associate circuit. There are two associate circuits Monday through Thursday. Each day in each division there are two lawyers.
So the case if it's designated a Wednesday Division 41 case will go to one of two lawyers. There are parameters in place for the lawyers' experience, and also we assign cases evenly so that one lawyer does not receive more cases than another. With regard to sex and murder cases, those are specifically assigned by me or the deputy district defender.

Q. And they're assigned on the basis of what exactly?
A. Whether the lawyer is capable of handling that particular case in terms of experience and skill.
Q. Okay. And are there any local policies or procedures that are specific to your district that you've created that are not system wide?
A. A few.
Q. Okay. And what would those be?
A. Primarily our office emphasizes and requires that attorneys are very prompt and diligent in returning all phone calls and inquiries from family members more so than other offices.
We've also had to deviate from the statewide client contact standards given the case flow issues in our office combined with the caseload number issue in our office.
Q. Okay. Yeah, I did remember you talking about that earlier. So I think there was some standards promulgated where it was initial visit after seven days and then follow-ups every 30 days after that; is that correct?

A. That is the statewide standard.
Q. But you've changed that for your district to be initial visit within ten days and then follow-up every 60 days after that?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And what was the reason for that change?
A. It was impossible for the lawyers given the caseload flow and numbers to meet the statewide standard, and it was causing extreme morale problems where departures from our office would have increased beyond the numbers that I've mentioned.
Q. So people were telling you they were going to quit over those standards. Is that basically the gist of it?
A. Implying.
Q. They were implying they were going to quit?
A. Yes.
Q. And how did they imply that to you?
A. The caseload's too much. I can't take this job anymore.
Q. Okay. Did they specifically cite these standards whenever they were telling that to you or is that not something that they specifically identified?

A. This was the result of a very large office discussion that Michael Barrett initiated and that I assisted in where there were discussions with all the lawyers about caseloads, client complaints and visitation.
Q. Okay. And so I guess it was in that meeting where you felt that it was implied that the standards needed to be changed for your district; is that right?
A. That -- those conversations resulted in us changing the standards, and there may have been information in the exit interviews that I don't know about that Michael Barrett may have known about.
Q. Okay. So it seems like in your particular office that you have a lot of attorneys with kind of a good amount of experience. Would you say that's true?
A. I mean, there's -- there's a number, yes.
Q. Okay. I mean, earlier you were testifying I think that many of them had at least two years' experience and some of them had up to 25 years of experience?

Page 167

A. Yeah, I'm trying to give you a number.
Q. Okay.
A. If you wanted a number.
Q. Oh, no, sure. Yeah.
A. I think there's -- there's two lawyers with close to 25 or more than 25. There's two with 20. There's two with ten. There's two or three with five. And then everybody else is below that.
Q. And how many -- we already went over this, I apologize, but how many would the remaining below five be? How many attorneys are below five?
A. Seven to ten.
Q. Okay. Let me take a look at my notes because we did go over that already. I think you said there were only three that had less than one year. Does that sound right?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So do you know whether having attorneys with that level of experience is typical or atypical for other districts?
A. I don't know. I know there's high turnover in the public defender, but I don't know the numbers in other districts.
Q. Okay. So we talked to you earlier about like tasks that would be considered administrative tasks, right, that would be handled by assistants. Do you recall that conversation?

A. Yes.
Q. And you stated that you don't have any paralegals in your office, right?
A. Correct.
Q. I just kind of want to pin down, I guess, the type of tasks that would be considered administrative versus the ones that would be like attorney tasks. So if you could go ahead and tell me what tasks you consider to be administrative ones.
A. Copying, obtaining records some degree, presentation of discovery to some degree. I think that's a gray area. A lot of the computer entry. Printing and mailing letters. Things of that nature.
Q. And so nonadministrative tasks would include things like drafting pleadings; is that correct?
A. Anything that's not a -- an entry of appearance or a discovery which are really the only two form pleadings, those would be administrative tasks.
Q. Used the term earlier was it pro forma for certain pleadings that are pretty standard?

A. The only two are entry of appearance and a discovery motion. Everything else should be case specific.
Q. Okay. Now, to what extent are the attorneys performing these administrative tasks?
A. I think a lot of the computer entry, particularly of court dates, is done by the attorneys. Because of the number of cases there's some copying of discovery that needs to be done by attorneys, particularly as it comes in over a course of time.
Q. And do you know whether it's typical for other practice areas or other private firms to have attorneys, you know, manage their own calendars or make their own copies, do you know?
A. Depends on the firm.
Q. So you were in private practice for a period of time, right?
A. Correct.
Q. How long was that?
A. Three years.
Q. And where were you at during those three years?
A. Berg, Borgmann, Wilson, Wolk &

Page 170

Reynolds.
Q. And what kind of -- what area do they practice in?
A. It was a general practice.
Q. Okay. And during your years in private practice did you ever have to manage your own calendar or make your own copies?
A. Occasionally.
Q. I think there was some discussion about what would happen if there were more investigators or more administrative staff. Do you recall that conversation?
A. Correct.
Q. And then I think that you said something like things would be better if you had more, right?
A. Generally.
Q. But that's like speculation, correct? I mean, you're just kind of speculating that it would be better because there's no -- you didn't have any like studies or anything that you're basing this opinion on, correct?
A. In terms of investigation, I think statistically -- and I don't have the number at my fingertips, but in terms of investigations per case that number is available, and I believe it's pretty low. What it is for my office, I don't know.

So I think if you were to look at those numbers, that would be something number based, and then based upon lawyers saying I don't have time to investigate cases so I'm not assigning investigations, that would be another source of information.
And the fact that our investigators are limited to 40 hours and will come to me and say I can't work more this week, I'm capped at 40, so I don't think it's complete speculation. Those would be the three flows of information as to why more investigators would be helpful and beneficial.
Q. So some resources where we could determine whether it would have an impact of any kind, or positive or negative impact, but you've not performed any analysis of those sources or to your knowledge has anybody else performed analysis of those sources?
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. Okay. And so any impact it would have on the cases it would be speculative, right?
MS. SHIPMA: I object. These questions are argumentative. He's given his answer and if you want to argue that later, you can. Move on.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Fair enough. Just question is on the record. So you can provide a response.
A. I mean, I think the problem is nobody's seen a public defender system in Missouri or many other places where cases are adequately investigated and what results that would have.
Q. So you're saying that no cases are investigated adequately?
A. I did not say that.
Q. Okay.
A. I did not say that -- I don't think that study has been conducted, but I think there's enough concern out there that it's a problem.
Q. Can you think of a specific instance where, you know, an investigator would have had some kind of measurable impact on a case where there was no investigator?
A. I mentioned the case that was in litigation that was not investigated and witnesses at the scene were not located and it's subject of a PCR. The problem with the PCR as a remedy is it -- many witnesses need to be found within a short time period.

When the PCR hits the court five to ten years later, it's even more exceedingly difficult to find those witnesses, and that's reflected in a lot of case law that raises Sixth Amendment speedy trial concerns, loss of witnesses to the defense or even due process cases, which is a parallel track to argue that problem, the disappearance of witnesses over time.

Q. So is there a reason given in that case for why the investigation didn't take place?

A. The lawyer had over 200 cases and was struggling to keep his head above water. It's still in litigation.

Q. Is that what the lawyer said that's why or was -- what was the reason given, if any, for lack of investigation?

A. That was -- that was the reason the lawyer gave.

Q. He just cited that he had a lot of cases?

A. That's what he told me, that reflected in his caseload, which was over 200.

Q. Okay. But he could have had an investigator perform the investigation, right?

A. I think the problem that I've been describing is when you have that number of cases, any reasonable lawyer cannot stay on top of that caseload, which includes finding the time to send out that investigation request.

It may even include not being able to adequately visit with the client where the client can express, hey, you need to find these witnesses. You need to do it quickly.

Q. What is involved in the investigation request, is it like a form that they fill out or something?

A. It's an electronic message to an investigator to do a certain assignment on a case, usually to find witnesses.

Q. And what does that electronic message look like, it's just kind of like an e-mail or --

A. It's built into the system. It's called an action item.

Q. Okay. And so is it just like a one-page kind of form that people would fill out or what would be involved in filling out this action item?

A. You click on the scene that says action item. You assign it to an investigator. You describe the task to be done. You click on the button and it sends it to the investigator. That's also how we track how much work investigators are doing.

Q. Okay. And so this attorney claimed that there was no time to do that because of his caseload?

A. That was the condition at the time this case went to trial.

Q. Other than that one situation where we have, you know, this investigation that is claiming should have been performed, are you aware of any other instances specifically where an investigator would have had a measurable impact if only they had been assigned that you can point out with specificity?

A. Not at this deposition at this time.

Q. Take a look at some of these exhibits regarding the caseload metrics that we went over at the beginning of the deposition. So I'm looking at Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4, Reynolds 37, and then the fiscal year 2018 supplemental legislative budget request document.

MS. SHIPMA: It's Exhibit 21.

MR. MOORE: Thank you. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Can start with

Plaintiffs' 4.

A. I don't think it's in this stack, Plaintiffs' 4.

Q. How about Reynolds 37 or Exhibit 21, any of them are good really if you're able to find them.

MS. SHIPMA: Well, choose one that you want him to look at. Any of them are good. They're not all the same, right?

MR. MOORE: Probably going to go over all of them, so whatever he's able to pull up most expediently.

THE WITNESS: 37 and 4 must have been placed somewhere.

MR. MOORE: I only have copies.

MS. SHIPMA: Can we go off the record for a moment while we find those?

MR. MOORE: Yeah.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 5:48. We are off the record.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 5:49. We're back on the record.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Very good. So we've located some of the exhibits, and just to correct the record, we're looking at Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4, Reynolds 37, and Exhibit 38. So do you have those three exhibits in front of you?

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So we can just start with 37, which appears to be a pretty clear printout. Are you looking at 37?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And you know, just for the record, I mean, all these exhibits appear to be largely the same just with different years and figures. Is that accurate?
A. Two are quarters. One is a fiscal year.
Q. Okay. And they all purportedly deal with caseload metrics, would you agree?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So do you have any background in statistical analysis?
A. No.
Q. Sociological studies, psychological studies of any kind?
A. Yes.
Q. And that's in relation to your anthropology studies I believe, right?

Page 178

A. Yes.
Q. So to what extent have you had any experience with sociological or psychological studies?
A. I was in graduate school for anthropology, and those three fields are interrelated.
Q. Did you actually conduct such studies?
A. During my work I had classes in psychological anthropology. My particular research was historical.
Q. Okay. So any collection or analysis of datasets from a statistical standpoint on psychological or sociological topics in your educational background?
A. Yes.
Q. You actually collected data and analyzed data; is that correct?
A. I understood your question had I received training in it. I had taken coursework in it, but it was 20 years ago. I'm not claiming to be a statistical expert on these metrics.
Q. Okay. Yeah, we'll just go -- we'll just move along then. So in any event, for these studies in front of you, right, are you aware of the method they used to collect the data that was analyzed in these studies?

A. Just the general formula.
Q. Okay. And when you say the general formula, what do you mean specifically?
A. Well, there was a RubinBrown group that in order to create a workload metric organized a group of public defenders and private attorneys to figure out what is a reasonable workload for different types of cases, and then that metric was created and compiled by a national accounting firm using their standards, and then it was adopted into this formula to compare to the number of lawyers in an office, and the number of cases and a weighted case, homicide would be weighted differently than a possession case. And that's a general overview of what these are.
Q. Okay. But you would not be in a position to establish, you know, the veracity or the robustness of their methods of collecting the data or analyzing the data in the RubinBrown report, would you?
A. I'm not understanding your question.
Q. So I guess first question is you understand -- I think you stated earlier that these are based on numbers from the RubinBrown study; is that right?

A. Part of the numbers in here, my understanding, involve that metric created by the RubinBrown group.
Q. Okay. And so these numbers based on the RubinBrown group's report, however, you would not be in a position to analyze or testify as to the robustness or accuracy of the RubinBrown report and its methodology, would you?
A. I have not been asked to and -- yeah.
Q. You said that you would be able to or you --
A. I have not been asked to and I would not be able to.
Q. Okay.
A. Yeah.
Q. And so, you know, you're kind of taking these metrics at face value I guess given that they are based on this RubinBrown report; is that right?
A. I'm acknowledging that these exist.
Q. Okay. If you could look at Reynolds 37. Looking like five and six columns from the right, attorney court time and attorney travel time. Do you see those two columns?

Page 181

A. Yes.
Q. And underneath of that it says estimated. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you have any idea what that -- how they came to those estimates or by what methodology they determined those numbers would be accurate estimates?
A. There are two asterisks that refer to the bottom of the page which reads court time estimated using fiscal year 26 [sic] time log data, travel time estimated using fiscal year 2018 expense report data.
Q. I think that was 2016 expense report data, right, not 2018?
A. 2016, yes.
Q. And so -- so what would that mean specifically then for the numbers that are contained in those columns, do you know?
A. Whoever created this spreadsheet is referencing the source of the data.
Q. And do you know by what method they estimated the numbers specifically?
A. It indicates that there was a 2016 time log data.

Page 182

Q. Do you know what that time log data is?
A. I would imagine that it's a time log data that was created through the Lotus Notes system.
Q. But that would be speculation, right?
A. I didn't create this spreadsheet.
Q. Fair enough. And how about the next sentence? Travel time estimated using the fiscal year 2016 expense report data --
(Court reporter interruption.)
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I'll just go with how about the next sentence, do you know what that sentence really means?
A. I read it in plain English, but I think the answer to your question is I didn't create this spreadsheet.
Q. Okay. And so because you didn't create the spreadsheet and because you're not familiar with the RubinBrown methodology and analysis, it's possible that these numbers could be incorrect, right?
A. I don't know. It's speculation. I -- I didn't create this spreadsheet. I'm not -- I'm not the witness to comment on the veracity of this spreadsheet.

Q. Right. You'd be unable to do so, right? I mean, is that correct, you would be unable to testify as to the veracity of the data contained in these reports?
A. No.
Q. So you are able to testify as to the veracity of the data?
MS. SHIPMA: No. He said he is not the witness that would be able to testify as to the veracity of the information in the report. I believe he said it a couple of times now. This has been asked and answered.
MR. MOORE: Could you read my question to him back?
COURT REPORTER: Question: So you are able to testify as to the veracity of the data?
MR. MOORE: Did he give an answer to that one or -- okay, the one before that then.
COURT REPORTER: Question: You'd be unable to do so, right? I mean, is that correct, you would be unable to testify as to the veracity of the data contained in these reports?
Answer: No.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So then he's saying that he can testify as to the veracity of the data, right? I mean, if I'm misunderstanding the answer that's fine too. I'm just trying to clarify on the record.

MS. SHIPMA: Stephen, can you testify as to the veracity of the information in that report?
A. I can testify that the case numbers appear to reflect accurately what's in our system. I have no reason to disbelieve these numbers. I have no information to say that they're inaccurate, but I have no specialized knowledge of the formulas used to actually create the numbers.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) And so you said which information as to the cases appears to be accurate? Look at Reynolds 37 first. You can reference it by columns I suppose.
A. Cases initiated minus cases withdrawn, net new cases.
Q. And so those are numbers that you feel look correct, right?
A. Those are numbers that I have access to in the Lotus Notes system and they appear to be the same numbers that's in my system. The calculations, they appear to be correct, but I'm not the one who did the calculations.

Q. So as to the cases initiated, withdrawn, and net new cases, are those numbers that you reviewed just prior to this deposition, is that how you verified those numbers?

A. I did look at our fiscal year numbers for 2017 and 28 [sic] prior to this deposition that as exist in the computer system at my office.

Q. And so you feel that those three appear to be accurate, right?

A. Right.

Q. But as to the remainder, you would not be the person to testify about whether those calculations were performed correctly or whether those are accurate, right?

A. Correct. I have no reason to disbelieve them, but talk to the person who created the spreadsheet.

Q. All right. And as to what's going on in these other offices, divisions, you wouldn't be able to give testimony about whether those numbers are accurate or inaccurate; is that right?

A. I can't testify about anything going on in another office.

Q. Okay. I think earlier there was a discussion about problems involving getting discovery from prosecutors. Do you remember that conversation?

A. I remember discussions about discovery.

Q. And specifically about the length of time it could take to get certain discovery from prosecutors, right? Or do you not recall that? That's fine too.

A. I don't recall the discussion in those terms.

Q. Okay. I think maybe it was in the context of problems with discovery, and you said some prosecutors are better than others about getting you what you need prior to trial. Does that sound more in line with our discussions?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. But I mean, your -- the financial status of public defender and the number of attorneys, you know, the number of administrative staff, none of that would change what the prosecutor is doing with the discovery, would it?

A. Incorrect.

Q. Okay. So explain.

A. The best practice for discovery is for an attorney to keep a detailed discovery log or for a paralegal or a legal assistant to keep a detailed discovery log to review the discovery, to discern what has been disclosed, what is probably out there and has yet to be disclosed, and to communicate on a regular basis about the outstanding discovery.

And then when the outstanding discovery is not delivered to promptly litigate that similar to what civil lawyers would do with interrogatories and production of documents. That is certainly not taking place in our office at this time.

Q. So you just described what you would consider to be the best possible practice, right, with regards to the discovery issue?

A. That is the best practice and it's also the reasonable practice for any lawyer conducting criminal work. Just as it would be the same for a civil lawyer to stay on top of interrogatories and request for documents.

Q. But it would be up to the prosecutor to comply with your requests, right?

A. And if they don't, you need to litigate it just as in civil litigation in a diligent manner.

Q. And so you're saying that this issue has not been litigated in a diligent manner by your office?

A. Not across the caseload because of the caseload numbers.

Q. And you say because of the caseload numbers. Do you have any specific instances that you can cite or evidence where that's the case?

A. You can go into the database and you can see that the -- the letters of the discovery inventory and outstanding discovery and motions to compel are not being filed. It's quite easy to discern, and if -- you can also go into Case.net and that happens when you're reviewing caseloads and attorney performance.

Q. Sorry. So you can see that it's not getting filed, but is there anything showing that it's not getting filed because of caseloads?

A. If it's not getting filed across a large section of cases, what else would it be? And if there's last minute discovery, what else would it be? And if attorneys are complaining about it, what else would it be?

Q. But you're saying that, you know, you can't think of anything specifically showing that, you know, these issues are caused by caseloads, right?

A. I'm telling you they're caused by caseloads.

ALARIS LITIGATION SERVICES

Page 189

Q. And as far as evidence goes, do you have any sort of evidence that would back that claim up?

MS. SHIPMA: Again, I object. It's argumentative.

MR. MOORE: Just asked if -- what evidence he had in support of his description.

MS. SHIPMA: And he's told you.

A. What I've described is the answer to your question.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) So I don't think that quite answers the question because, I mean, we see what you would consider to be a result the lack of these motions getting filed, and you have identified what you believe to be a cause, which is caseloads. I'm looking for something that would connect those two, some objective evidence. Do you have anything like that, like -- like a study or something, some kind of data or anything that would connect those two issues?

A. I'm referring you to what exists in our Lotus information system that that type of activity is not taking place.

Q. So would there be like correspondence in there, stuff saying like we can't get what we need because of caseloads or anything of that nature?

A. I'm saying there's an absence of those requests, and that's standard practice.

Q. Okay. So there's been some discussion about various investigative techniques and things that could be done. For example, visiting a crime scene, filing motions regarding police conduct, etc. Do you recall those conversations earlier in this deposition?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, it's true, though, that, you know, these aren't going to be required in every single case that comes before you, correct?

A. Not every single case.

Q. For example, you know, visiting crime scene, not going to be required in every single case, right?

A. I just said that.

Q. Right. And filing anything regarding police conduct, not going to be required in every single case. For example, cases where there is no police misconduct, right?

A. The question is has the case been reviewed enough to make that determination.

Page 191

Q. But as to my question it would be correct that, you know, not every case requires the same list of, you know, investigative things to be done to it, cases just don't require the same things, right?

MS. SHIPMA: Asked and answered.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) You can respond.

A. Each case requires an analysis as to what that case requires. The problem is that analysis as to what each case requires is not taking place because of the caseload numbers.

Q. And so again, what evidence do you have that, you know, it's not taking place because of caseload?

A. Attorney reports and attorney reviews.

Q. And so what kind of reports are we talking about, are these written reports where they're saying that it's due to caseloads that they're not able to engage in investigative techniques?

A. It's what I mentioned in the first part of the deposition where attorneys are telling me that they are unable to do things and that they've worried that they've plead people too quickly and they're also worried that clients are pleading to get out of jail because the lawyer has not had enough time to work on the case and it's dragging and they just want to get out of jail rather than address the merits of the case.

Q. And so these would just be conversations that you've had with your defenders, right?

A. It's part of my management. It's my job to talk to my lawyers about their work on their cases.

Q. Okay. But there wouldn't be anything in writing where they're discussing their inability to visit a crime scene because of their caseloads or anything, right?

A. We talk about it. I've not required that they put it in an e-mail also.

Q. So we discussed also that this issue of defendants being in jail and then I think you said that some of them feel a greater pressure to plea -- to plead so they can get out of jail, right?

A. Yes.

Q. So do you have or maintain any kind of a system whereby you can track how long somebody has been in jail on these cases?

A. Those numbers are easily obtained.

ALARIS LITIGATION SERVICES
www.alaris.us Phone: 1.800.280.3376 Fax: 314.644.1334

Page 193

Q. And so what do you mean? Does your office track those numbers or are they located somewhere else?
A. Jail keeps a list of days confined.
Q. Okay.
A. And that's e-mailed to us on a daily basis.
Q. Okay. So then your office would be aware of how long these people have been in jail; is that accurate?
A. Yes.
Q. So is there any system in place whereby, you know, you're -- what you do on a case is -- would be dictated in any way by how long they've been in jail?
A. No.
Q. So why is that?
A. Each case is being worked on to the best of the lawyer's ability. Some cases even if they're worked on as they should be are going to take a while, longer than others. The phenomena I described is happening. It could be tracked if we were asked to track it.
Q. Do you think it would be helpful to, you know, track that so you could avoid the outcomes that you discussed earlier?

A. No.
Q. Why is that?
A. Given the resources -- and as I described in one of my letters to the court, lawyers are concentrating their efforts on representing clients, not collecting statistics for a problem that is relatively obvious and has been heavily studied by outside agencies for the past ten years.
Q. I think you mentioned earlier that some of the less serious felonies will kind of go through the system faster than the more serious ones, right?
A. Yes.
Q. So don't you think some kind of a tracking system for how long somebody has been in jail could help the attorneys prioritize the cases that they're working on as opposed to just working on the less serious ones first?
A. No.
Q. Why is that?
A. The flow of cases is immense. The number of complaints are immense. And attorneys are spreading themselves thin across a very high caseload in trying to do the best they can. The clients that are neglected are neglected because the clients don't have -- you know, the attorneys don't have time for those clients.

Q. So you're saying that even if the attorneys were apprised of how long their client had been in jail at your office, that wouldn't affect how they litigate the files at all?
A. No. They already know the problem.
Q. Okay. So you don't think it would be important to work on the bigger stuff and try to get the clients out of jail or dispose of those matters quicker than the smaller matters?
A. They're both important.
Q. But it sounds kind of like the smaller ones go first; is that right?
A. That's the way the flow is occurring.
Q. Tell me again why that takes place.
A. The flow of the lower-level felonies is at a higher volume. They move through the case, the system more quickly. The lawyers are overwhelmed with that flow of the cases and they devote their attention to get people out of jail.
Q. Are any metrics kept about the number of cases attorneys have closed in a year?
A. Yes.
Q. Are there any like rewards based on how many cases they close in a year?

Page 196

A. No.
Q. Or any incentives -- I'm sorry, I talked over you there. Your answer was no?
A. No.
Q. Is it considered whenever they're up for a promotion or for raises of any kind?
A. No.
Q. So to what extent is it utilized if you're keeping track of it?
A. I don't keep track of it. I don't -- I don't know if there's much value to that particular metric.
Q. Oh, okay. So who does track it then?
A. It's tracked in the computer.
Q. But it doesn't have any relevance in the hiring or retention or promotion process you're saying?
A. I'll tell you why. One of the largest complaints is that somebody is coerced into a plea. I don't think you want to incentivize coerced pleas, and coerced pleas would be if you incentivize closing cases quickly, the by-product of that could be coercing pleas, and you'll create more 24.035 problems, more client complaint problems, more request for change of counsel.

It's not how you counsel a client. The fact is most of the cases are being disposed of within a hundred days anyways. There's no need to speed up the process.
Q. That's fair enough. I'm trying to understand why, you know, there would be this incentive to -- or why the attorneys would turn over these low-level felonies constantly and why that would affect the bigger felonies, why -- why does that take place exactly? I know you've talked about the flow, but I mean, is there any other reason, is there --
A. Yeah.
Q. -- psychological or --
A. If you have 150 cases and a hundred of them are calling you to get out of jail and a hundred of them are working towards a probation recommendation, and if those cases are the majority of cases that are constantly flowing to the office, that's just where most of the attention gets directed. I've answered the question that way several times. I don't think there's anything else I can tell you.
Q. Do you think like a first-in, first-out type system would be of use?

A. No.
Q. Why is that?
A. It's unethical.
Q. And why is that?
A. You're supposed to represent a client based upon the client's needs and the dynamics of the case.
Q. And so just kind of flesh that out, I guess. Why would that be unethical if you're, you know, trying to get the oldest cases out before the newer cases?
A. So you have five cases. Five people come in and want a bond reduction. You work on the other five cases and ignore those five cases for three months. How is that not -- not unethical?
Q. You're saying the current practice of just kind of dealing with the low-level felonies is more ethical than leaving the more serious felonies to I guess kind of sit in the background?
A. I think the whole point of this litigation is the caseload is unethical.
Q. More -- my question is more about the way the cases are prioritized. It seems like for some reason lower-level ones are prioritized over the bigger ones. I'm trying to figure out why that would be.

A. I've given you the answer.
Q. So in these cases, in these felonies, I think you testified earlier that there can be some discovery that needs to be reviewed that your attorneys don't have time to review; is that right?
A. Yes.
Q. So what kind of discovery are we talking about for these cases? What would be contained in that file?
A. As I mentioned, many cases involve electronic discovery, which can involve crime scene videos, witness videos, interrogation videos, surveillance videos, phone calls from the jail, cell phone records.
Q. And anything else that, you know, would typically be in these files?
A. Including police reports, the other thing that comes to mind is electronic analysis of cell phones and computers.
Q. And so are we talking like will there ever be a situation where you have like thousands and thousands of pages of medical records or anything of that nature in the files?

Page 200

A. Yes.
Q. And when would that be?
A. Many of the mental health cases.
Q. And other than mental health cases, you know, any kind of voluminous documentation like that?
A. Victims with serious injuries.
Q. And other than those, anything else?
A. Mitigation.
Q. Mitigation? What do you mean specifically?
A. Most cases are resolved through a plea, but those pleas involve presentation of mitigation evidence, either to the prosecutor or to the court. Mitigation evidence is often documentary reaching back to the client's childhood. It could be school records, medical records, work records.
Q. So earlier on you also made a statement that it was expected that the private bar would be resistant to these cases being appointed. Do you recall making that statement?
A. Yes.
Q. And what's your basis for that?
A. My basis for that is that that is the expected result. Now, if the private bar is appointed and is not resistant, no problems. But I think to go into a large-scale appointment process thinking that the private bar is going to be pleased, I think most people would find that to be a bad strategy and some communication strategy needs to be implemented if that program is to be successful.

Q. So had you talked to private attorneys who said they would be resistant to it?

A. The head of the MCRC.

Q. That's the Missouri Coalition for -- what was the rest of it?

A. Right to Counsel.

Q. So he said he would be resistant to receiving these cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Even though he started the MCRC?

A. The goal of that organization is to find cases for trial for the participants, not to engage in a very large appointment process.

Q. And anyone else tell you that they would be resistant to the appointment process?

A. Everybody else on the MCRC board when it was being created.

Q. They all told you the same thing?

Page 202

A. Yes. That was part of the reason why they wanted to focus on trial cases rather than widespread appointments.

Q. Okay. And can you just list for me who was on that board at the time?

A. I don't know the names, but representatives from Bryan Cave and Thompson Coburn and other large firms in St. Louis.

Q. Okay. And so earlier I think you pretty much headed this question off, but you can only really speak to the goings on in your district, right, not the other districts in Missouri?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. So you stated multiple times in this deposition that you believe the caseload in your district for your attorneys is too high, right?

A. Correct.

Q. What would be an acceptable caseload for each attorney?

A. The federal public defenders cap their caseload at 40. This area has a large area of debate, but I think that's one metric that is in use and is approved by a court system.

Q. Do you personally have a number in mind?

A. Somewhere between 50 and 80.

Q. And so then how did you come to that range?

A. Federal public defender numbers, American Bar Association numbers, experience of the difficulty through personal experience of when a case becomes unmanageable, whether as a public defender or in private practice. What I know of the RubinBrown study and the metrics used there.

Q. And so these numbers are just kind of an amalgamation of this kind of like zeitgeist of information out there that includes all the studies and your own experience, right?

A. Yes.

Q. It's not based on any study that you've personally conducted, right?

A. Correct.

Q. So there's a situation earlier where you discuss that there was like a nine to 12-month period of time where a defendant had not had any contact from the attorney, right?

A. Correct.

Q. I think you noted that one of the reasons for that was because a trial had been set like 18 months out, right, by the court?

Page 204

A. What I said is that situation occurs and sometimes it occurs when a trial date has been set out that far. It can also occur on a serious case even though there's regular court appearances over that same period where the attorney is meeting with the clients in court very briefly, but never having any substantive conversation with that client in the jail or doing any substantive work on the case.

Q. So they'd still be seeing the client at like court appearances, though, throughout that period of time?

A. They would visually see the client. They would not consult with the client about the case. They would make a court announcement. They would not consult with the client about the case.

Q. But if, you know, you have -- you have the client and the attorney in the same room, right? That's the way the dockets are set up?

A. Yes, and there are usually 12 attorneys and 20 defendants in the courtroom and six other defendants in the jury box who are confined. So it's impossible to do anything.

Q. And how often do those case management conferences take place?

Page 205

A. It depends on the case and the -- and the courtroom.
Q. Just generally speaking.
A. Every 30 to 60 days.
Q. Okay. So it seems like every 30 to 60 days you have attorney and client in the same room, right, for most cases you would say?
A. In the courtroom with other people.
Q. Fair. But the client could, you know, wave the attorney down and say, hey, I need to talk to you at some point, right? That's possible?
A. I'm sure that happens.
Q. Okay. And they could even, you know, whisper something in their attorney's ear or have a brief conversation with their attorney at those case management conferences, right?
A. I would disagree.
Q. Why is that?
A. If you're talking about a substantive conversation, what your question implies, the answer is no. If you're talking about a client making a simple request, hey, can you visit me, the answer is yes.
Q. And the attorney can give them a status update of those case management conferences, right, about just whatever was going on, hey, we're --

Page 206

A. No.
Q. -- looking into this, we're looking into that?
A. No.
Q. Why is that?
A. There's no confidentiality.
Q. Even if they're like whispering to each other like right next to each other?
A. No.
Q. And that's I guess because you think that some third party would be able to hear them, right?
A. Confined client is seated next to other confined clients closer than the people in this deposition room. If that client is charged with a sex offense, everybody else in the jail who's confined and within a four-foot radius of that client is going to hear your conversation. I doubt that's appropriate.
Q. So this particular instance you said within nine to 12 months of no contact, was there other case management conferences going on in that instance, if you know?
A. That is not the only instance.

Page 207

Q. Just for that one, though, for right now?
A. I don't know. I'd have to check the record.
Q. Okay. And in any event, you know, if the court sets a case for trial 18 months out, your client's not going to be getting out in that interim period of time no matter what kind of contact you're having with them, right?
A. Highly unlikely.
Q. Okay. And your clients are able to make phone calls to your office, right?
A. Yes.
Q. You don't have any system in place whereby they have no access to you guys from jail, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And you guys can still send letters back and forth, right?
A. Yes.
Q. Are there any other ways you can communicate with your clients while they're in jail other than, you know, telephone and in-person meetings and regular mail?
A. Those are the three methods.

Page 208

Q. There's no like e-mail or, I don't know, text messaging, anything like that?
A. No.
Q. So you're familiar -- are you familiar with Chapter 600, the safety valve statute? Does that sound familiar, 600.063?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And what's your understanding of that statute?
A. That statute is a procedure where you can address the court about caseload issues.
Q. Okay. And I think you stated earlier that you've not utilized that, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And you gave some reasons for not utilizing that, correct?
A. Correct.
Q. And can you tell me what those reasons were specifically?
A. The judges are willing to engage in productive dialogue and not requiring it, and the remedies being discussed are serious and on the table and would be the same as if we had gone through that procedure and that procedure allows for a hearing on the record, but to solve these problems is going to take extensive discussions and so it's form over substance. We're doing the same thing. We're being collaborative.

Q. So why wouldn't you proceed via both methods then, the informal and the formal with, you know, the rule 600 requirements?

A. Because it was initiated before that was required by the court of appeals and we're deep into the discussions, and at some point we may do that, but it's not going to make a difference if we're already productively discussing things. It's form over substance.

Q. I think you also mentioned some other disincentives and you reference something that happened in Kansas City; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. So I guess Kansas City had attempted to use the section 600 remedy?

A. That's my understanding.

Q. So what's your understanding of what took place I guess specifically in Kansas City?

A. It's acrimonious and the judges are not engaging with the public defender about the caseload issue and the Hinkebein decision.

Q. And so specifically what kind of acrimony are we talking about?

MS. SHIPMA: I object. His testimony on this is just based on his understanding. We had a whole deposition of Ruth Patch, the public -- the district defender in Kansas City who talked at length for hours and was questioned for hours by your colleague Stephen Ramsey about this issue.

I would just refer you to her deposition to get your answers on that. They're going to be much more valuable than Stephen's recollection or understanding of what may or may not have happened there.

MR. MOORE: Right. No, I do understand that, and I appreciate that. But his understanding of what's happened in Kansas City has affected his --

MS. SHIPMA: I don't understand what his understanding of what happened in Kansas City is adding to this deposition other than time.

MR. MOORE: Well, we're going to get there.

MS. SHIPMA: Are you going to ask a specific -- well, get there quickly.

MR. MOORE: Okay. I appreciate your patience.

Page 211

Q. (By Mr. Moore) So what is your understanding of specifically what took place in Kansas City? Because my understanding is that has affected your opinion of approaching this in your district; is that accurate?

A. Which question do you want me to answer?

Q. Both. You can start with your understanding of what happened in Kansas City first.

MS. SHIPMA: And he has answered that for you already.

MR. MOORE: Well, I don't think specifically he's had a --

A. What I've -- what I've said is -- is the extent of my understanding.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. So that's all that you've heard about the Kansas City issue, right? Just that there was acrimonious -- you don't have any more specifics than that; is that right?

A. What I said is what I know.

Q. Okay. And sir, are you saying that that knowledge disincentivized you in your district from pursuing section 600?

A. No, I just -- I've -- what I stated previously is why we're not using 600, and I've also stated that if these discussions don't lead anywhere that we will do 600, but the result is going to be determined by these discussions. And once again, it's form over substance and it's pretty much my answer.

Q. You still think the proceeding pursuant to the statute is necessary because of these informal negotiations?

MS. SHIPMA: Asked and answered.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Is that right?

A. I've -- I've answered your question as best as I can. I mean, I know you keep rephrasing it, but if these discussions don't work we'll do the statute, but these discussions are the substantive equivalent of the statute.

Q. So my question was just why not do both at the same time? Why not? Why not proceed through both avenues concurrently now that they're both available so that in case the informal one doesn't work out you have done what is required by statute?

A. And I've said we may do that.

Q. Why not at the same time, though? Why not concurrently?

A. I've just -- I've answered your question.

Page 213

Q. I don't know that there has been an answer to that question specifically.
A. Just the discussions that we are having are substantive solutions, which would be the same remedies as filing under the statute.
Q. So you feel like it's a waste of time then or I'm trying to -- why not do like both is the question? You say you're already doing the informal ones, which I understand. The question really is so why not also the formal section 600?
A. I know. I've answered your question. I mean, I just -- I don't have anything else to add.
Q. So there are no other reasons then other than what you've already discussed?
A. Correct.
Q. Have you ever given any other interviews with newspapers on these issues or any other news media other than the ones we've gone over today?
MS. SHIPMA: Objection. The question is vague, time frame.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Time frame is unlimited. Regarding the issues that are at issue in this lawsuit, have you ever given any other interviews or, you know, written articles regarding these issues for any other media outlets other than the ones that we've discussed here today?

MS. SHIPMA: And I would object that the question is overbroad. He's been working with the public defender system for I don't remember how long, but -- but more than ten years. You're asking him to recall every instance he's talked with a news outlet regarding caseload issues in the past ten years, 20 years, what time frame?
MR. MOORE: I mean, if it's been that voluminous, I guess we'll need to go through and determine, but my question was just --
MS. SHIPMA: I object. It's overbroad. Stephen, you can answer if you can.
A. So in terms of caseload, I believe those two articles are the only two.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. Are there other issues in this lawsuit not unrelated to caseload that you would have given other interviews or, you know, prepare articles or participated in articles outside the ones we've talked about today?
MS. SHIPMA: Objection, vague. What other issues?
MR. MOORE: That's what I'm trying to determine. He cited caseloads specifically.

Page 215

MS. SHIPMA: Because --
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So are there other noncaseload issues that you feel are related to this suit that you've previously given news interviews or participated in news articles in the past that we've not discussed?
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. Okay. Have you ever been interviewed or had discussions with anyone at the ACLU regarding this lawsuit?
A. No.
Q. How about anyone else beside from of course your counsel?
A. Meaning?
Q. So attorney-client privilege, don't want to hear about those conversations. You said nothing with plaintiffs' counsel at the ACLU. Have there been any other, you know, conversations or interviews that you've had regarding this lawsuit that we've not discussed today?
A. No.
Q. So it sounds like from our prior conversations that you have hopes that this informal collaborative process with the judges and other organizations is going to bear fruit; is that right?

Page 216

A. I would like to see these conversations produce a temporary measure of relief to the problem that might lead to a more lasting relief of the problem.
Q. So my question was more are you optimistic that those talks are going to be successful?
A. I would like for them to be successful, and I believe they can be successful.
Q. Do you believe that they will be?
A. I have no idea. We'll find out.
Q. So you have no indication whether those talks are going to be successful one way or the other?
MS. SHIPMA: I object, asked and answered.
A. I mean, that's -- we'll find out. All of us will find out in the future. I mean, they're being done in good faith and ideas are on the table and concrete ideas are being discussed. Let's see what happens.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I understand --
A. What else do you want?
Q. I understand nothing is certain, but as party to those talks, I mean, you might have some kind of indication whether you feel they're going to be successful or not, right?

A. I've just given you my evaluation of the situation. I'm not in control of the situation.

Q. That's a very lawyerly answer.

A. It's the answer.

Q. So -- so there's just -- you have no indication either way --

MS. SHIPMA: I object.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) -- whether you feel they're going to be successful? It's just a simple question. I mean --

MS. SHIPMA: It is a simple question and you've asked it probably about five times now and he's answered you. Let's move to another productive, more productive topic. One that you haven't asked him about five times.

MR. MOORE: Could you please read back his answer to my last question then?

COURT REPORTER: Answer: I've just given you my evaluation of the situation. I'm not in control of the situation.

MR. MOORE: I guess we've got to go back to the one prior to that then.

COURT REPORTER: Answer: I mean, that's -- we'll find out. All of us will find out in the future. I mean, they're being done in good faith and ideas are on the table and concrete ideas are being discussed. Let's see what happens.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) That didn't sound like an answer to me. That sounds like a not answer. My question was --

MS. SHIPMA: What was the one before that?

Q. (By Mr. Moore) The question specifically was do you feel that they're going to be successful, and you can say that you're not sure, you don't know, or I guess no.

MS. SHIPMA: I object for you suggesting answers to him.

MR. MOORE: That's fine too. I'm just -- very simple --

(Court reporter interruption.)

MS. ROSCA: There's an answer before that if you'd like that read back.

MR. MOORE: Well --

MS. ROSCA: Can you read back the question -- the answer before the one you --

MR. MOORE: You know what, let's just stop. We have enough on that one. We'll just move on.

MS. SHIPMA: I agree.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) I think you were asked earlier about essentially the competence of the private attorneys being assigned these criminal matters. Do you recall that conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you said something along the lines of it could be a concern, right?

A. Yes.

Q. So I want to discuss a little bit about what would be concerning about assigning these matters to members of the private bar. Are you saying generally that any amount of assigning these out is a questionable and could potentially raise issues or are you saying there's specific instances where it could become an issue?

A. I was understanding the question to mean if these cases are assigned to private counsel who are disinterested in taking the case and/or do not have adequate training that the solution of assigning cases to private bar may be equal to the problem that exists in the public defender, the case is not receiving attention, or even potentially worse because some of these appointees may not even -- if they have the training, may not want to do the case and work on the case as it should be.

Q. Okay. Fair enough. But if the private counsel was interested and had adequate training, do you feel that there would be anything to be concerned about?

A. Under -- if those are true in the immediate term, no, they would not be something that would be concerned about if those two things are true.

Q. Okay. So I think you said earlier that turnover has increased over the last four years. Does that sound accurate?

A. Yes.

Q. I think as a cause of that you cited high caseload, low pay, and -- and being a hard job generally; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. So have -- has the caseload or pay or nature of the job changed some way -- in some way in the last four years?

A. No.

Q. Okay. So could there be some other reason for the turnover that you are aware of?

A. I don't know.

Page 221

Q. But it might not strictly be related to caseload, right?
A. I think it's -- I've mentioned that it's those three factors are my best estimates of what's causing the caseload. I mean, the turnover of attorneys.
Q. Okay. There's a lot of discussion about the negotiations that would be engaged in as part of the plea process. Do you recall that conversation?
A. Yes.
Q. And I think that, you know, in the end your conclusion was that the negotiations could potentially be hindered by the level of workup the case receives; is that right? Not so much by the time that they have to negotiate with the prosecutor, correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And so can you cite any specific instances where, you know, a specific attorney has told you like I was not able to negotiate as well because I didn't work this case up good enough?
A. Yes. Cases that are set for trial in our office tend to result in not guilty verdicts or reduced plea offers or nolles. Those statistics are -- particularly with the jury results are kept and they're beginning to be kept with the nolles. So that is the basis for applying that analysis across the rest of the caseload.

Q. So was there like a specific instance you're thinking of where somebody told this to you or is it more like just the general trend that you're seeing?
A. Like I said, the jury trial result statistics are kept. The nolle statistics are in place to start being kept as far as my understanding is.
Q. But --
A. This happens -- once again, part of my job is to talk to lawyers about their caseload and when they're doing their review to learn about their successes.
(Phone interruption.)
MS. SHIPMA: So sorry.
MR. MOORE: She's ready to take off.
A. And so I know when lawyers are litigating and getting better results.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So you're saying this more from like a bird's eye's view I guess based on results and cases; is that accurate?

Page 223

A. It's on my day-to-day management duties. It's not a bird's eye view. It's my -- my job is to know what's going on in my attorneys' caseload.
Q. So I guess in other words, in bird's eye view --
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. It's my day-to-day job to know what's going on in my attorneys' caseload.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So just ask you this like negotiation because of workup link, okay. Has anybody specifically told you that they were not able to negotiate as successfully because of the workup in the case that they performed? Anyone specifically ever said that to you?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay.
A. And I've mentioned that in my deposition that lawyers have told me that they felt uncomfortable with guilty pleas because the client wanted to get out of jail and the case had not been worked up according to the attorney's estimation of their work input into the case, and those conversations are frequent.
Q. And when you say frequent, what kind of frequency are we talking?

A. Several times a month per attorney.
Q. The same conversation about the -- the plea deals and all that kind of thing.
A. In reference to different cases.
Q. And there is also discussion about attending lineups. Do you recall that conversation?
A. Yes.
Q. I think you said that the reason that there had been no attendance is because you guys are not contacted, right?
A. That is probably the number one and predominant and sole reason.
Q. Okay. Just give me a second here. Do you have any defenders that are on call 24/7?
A. In what capacity?
Q. Any capacity.
A. Formally, no. Attorneys do work on weekends, but there's no in-call system for notifying lawyers.
Q. Okay. Has there ever been a situation where an attorney requested some discovery be performed and you said no for financial reasons?
A. No.
Q. Is there any situation where an attorney had requested an expert and you said no for financial reasons?

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And did an expert end up -- did an expert of some kind end up getting retained or utilized in that case?
A. Yes.
Q. And tell me a little bit about how that process went to the best of your recollection.
A. We wanted to do mitigation on a mental health case. We wanted to hire a local psychiatrist to prepare a mitigation report and treatment alternatives and community placement.
That request was denied. We were asked to use a social worker. There are no social workers who perform this function in the market in St. Louis. We were referred to a social worker based out of Springfield.
She did a remote report. It was inadequate and was essentially a waste of money, and we should have hired the psychiatrist in the first place.
Q. Ah. In that situation it wasn't that no expert was retained, it simply you just had to go with a different expert, right?

A. We were told to use a social worker because it was less expensive than the expert that we requested.
Q. And so to answer my question, you just -- you got a different expert than the one that you initially requested, but you did get an expert, correct?
A. Different type of expert, correct.
Q. Was there ever a situation where you requested an expert and it was flat denied, no expert ended up being appointed in a case?
A. No.
Q. Are there any other kind of like financial requests that you would make for the office, for example, like office supplies or things of that nature, or is that done by some other officer of the public defender?
A. I'm not understanding the question.
Q. So with like supplying your office, you know, with office supplies and things like that, is that something that you do or is that something that somebody else does?
A. There's a budget for office supplies for the fiscal year and that's largely managed by our office management specialist.

Q. Okay. And do you have any knowledge about that -- the state of that budget or is it mostly just handled by the office manager?
A. The amount of money is determined by Woodrail and then we order supplies within that budget.
Q. Okay. But that's not something that you like oversee really. I mean, you're in charge but office manager kind of takes care of staying within budget?
A. I'm responsible for staying in budget. The task of management of that budget is delegated to the office management specialist. I have to sign off on every expenditure.
Q. Okay. And have you stayed within budget for the years that you've been the district defender?
A. For office supplies, yes.
Q. And just general like office equipment and maintenance of the office, you know, outside of the number of defenders, printers and office supplies and just whatever other expenses, have you ever exceeded your budget for those things while you've been the district defender?
A. The hardware is not determined by the local office.

Q. Okay. So that's a budget item that would be dealt with at the state level?
A. Correct.
Q. But for everything else you've been within budget; is that right?
A. There is a number assigned to deposition and expert witnesses. Where that number comes from, I don't know, but it is usually exceeded very -- within two or three months.
Q. Okay.
A. So you'd have to ask the state office about that number and the actual resources --
Q. Okay.
A. -- available for depositions and experts.
Q. And so for -- as far as who sets that budget for your office, is that done at the state level?
A. Yes.
MR. MOORE: Okay. I think that's all I've got.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay. I have a few questions.
EXAMINATION

Page 229

QUESTIONS BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. Stephen, in your opinion are lower-level cases more easily resolved?
A. In -- I don't understand the question.
Q. Does it take less work to bring a lower-level case to completion than a higher-level case?
A. Yes.
Q. And the stakes are less for a client typically in a lower-level felony than a higher-level felony?
A. In terms of imprisonment, yes. I think impact on a client's life is something that needs to be taken into consideration and can be significant in a low-level felony.
Q. Do you require your attorneys to document the things that they haven't been able to do in a case?
A. No.
Q. Why not?
A. They don't have enough time to take care of the cases and to do things on cases. That would be an administrative burden that does not address immediate client needs in the office.
Q. In your opinion, are there times when attorneys may not even realize what they failed to do on a case?

MR. MOORE: I'll object to the form. That calls for speculation. Also object to foundation. You can respond.
A. Yes. And I -- I have an example. I was on a case in a murder case and I'm being PCR'd for not obtaining AT&T cell phone records, and that may have been something in the course of that case that at the time I was not aware of, and I -- the other case that's being PCR'd that I mentioned is witnesses.
I think you may not be aware of witnesses and lawyers learn too late because they're not meeting with the client and the client is saying, hey, I need this witness contacted. By the time that conversation is taking place, the witness has disappeared.
And it can also go with surveillance video, text messages are very hard to recover. A lot of these things that we're talking about it's very hard for lawyers to perceive what is important to the case unless they have enough time to really delve into it quickly and at the beginning of the case.

Q. (By Ms. Shipma) You testified earlier about when an attorney wants an investigator to do something they -- they simply do an action item to the investigator; is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And that action item I believe you've stated is something that is a function in Lotus Notes; is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. How would an attorney know that there needed to be some investigation done in order to do the action item?
A. Consultation with a client and review of discovery.
Q. So it's not simply just pushing a button on Lotus Note and filling out a form for an action item?
A. Correct. There's work that takes place before the investigation request is assigned to -- to an investigator.
Q. Do you think that client contact every 60 days meets ethical standards?
A. No.
Q. And I just want to clear up something I think that a question was asked and you answered it without maybe listening to the way the question was asked.

MR. MOORE: I'll object to the form. That seems leading, but go ahead.
Q. (By Ms. Shipma) I believe that the question was asked do the attorneys make psychiatric evaluations. Now, if I ask you that question do your attorneys make psychiatric evaluations, what's your answer?
A. No. My understanding of the question was do they investigate and hire appropriate people and collect records to conduct those investigations.
Q. Okay. Just wanted to make sure we weren't having attorneys out there practicing psychiatry.
And I believe you stated earlier that you've had about -- that you've hired or replaced about five to seven attorneys this year?
A. Yes.
Q. Is that calendar year?
A. I am speaking roughly from November, December last year to now.
MS. SHIPMA: That's all I have.
MR. MOORE: Couple, but do you want to circle back around first?

Page 233

MS. ROSCA: No, I don't have any.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Okay. Just tying up loose ends here. Did you when you were in private practice bill your time?
A. It depended on the case.
Q. Okay. And when you did bill your time on those cases, would it be tenths of an hour if you recall?
A. Yeah, it was -- it was either five or ten-minute increments.
Q. Okay. Do you know whether it's typical for attorneys to bill their time in private practice?
A. The state of private practice right now may be considerably different than the state of private practice before 2007 and the recession, and business models may have changed.
Q. Fair enough. At the time to your knowledge whenever you were in private practice was it typical for attorneys to bill their time?
A. In our practice we were a general practice. We had a diverse practice. And some cases we would bill. Other cases we would do flat fees.

Q. Okay.
A. In other cases we would do retainers, meaning a percentage at the end of the conclusion of the case depending upon the -- the award, whatever was determined.
Q. Okay. Fair enough. Have you ever been adjudicated to have rendered an ineffective assistance of counsel?
A. Yes.
Q. You have been?
A. Yes.
Q. When was that?
A. Last year.
Q. Was there a case number associated with that?
A. It's a Eastern District of Missouri federal court case. It's a death penalty case. It's Carman Deck versus whoever is the superintendent of the Department of Corrections.
Q. Okay. And you don't recall like a case number or anything, do you?
A. No. No.
Q. Okay. Other than that instance, any other instances?

Page 235

A. No.
Q. We discussed a few times how attorneys that you've referenced have failed to investigate or made other mistakes in the course of working up their cases, right?
A. Right.
Q. And you have mostly attributed those mistakes or omissions to the caseload they're working under, right?
A. Yes.
Q. But isn't it true that attorneys and people generally, they make mistakes, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And so it can be kind of difficult to determine or distinguish between a mistake an attorney makes that's just a regular mistake or a mistake that's made because of caseload. Would you agree?
A. Not necessarily.
Q. Okay. And so how would you be able to distinguish just a normal omission versus an omission caused by -- caused by caseload?
A. I mean, I think both occur.
Q. So how could you distinguish?
A. You look into the circumstances and you make decisions and judgment calls.

Page 236

Q. So it would be kind of just a judgment call as far as teasing out whether it was caused by caseload or caused by just general human error, right?
A. There would be an analysis, yes.
Q. Okay. But in the cases you reference, you believe that it was caused by caseload, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And in your mind is it possible that any of those could have been caused by just normal human error?
A. It's always possible.
MR. MOORE: That is all that I have.
MS. ROSCA: That's all I have.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 7:03. We are off the record. This concludes the deposition of Stephen Reynolds.

DISCIPLINARY HEARING PANEL DECISION

Introduction

A hearing was held in this matter on July 26, 2016 in Jefferson City, Missouri before Thomas M. Dunlap, Presiding Officer, Donna M. White, Attorney Member, and Dale A. Siebeneck, Public Member. Informant is the Chief Disciplinary Counsel. Informant was present through Melody Nashan, Staff Counsel, Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel. Respondent was present in person and through counsel, Sara Rittman. After considering the evidence presented, the Disciplinary Hearing Panel finds, concludes, and recommends as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Informant is the Chief Disciplinary Counsel appointed by the Court pursuant to Rule 5.06.

2. On or about March 31, 2016, Informant determined, pursuant to Rule 5.11, that probable cause existed to believe that Respondent Karl Hinkebein is guilty of professional misconduct and on March 31, 2016, Informant filed an Information charging Respondent with violation of specified Rules of Professional Conduct.

3. Respondent Karl Hinkebein was licensed to practice law in Missouri on October 1, 1993. (Information (hereafter "Inf.") ¶ 3; Answer (hereafter "Ans.") ¶ 3.)

4. The address Respondent registered with The Missouri Bar is Woodrail Centre, 1000 W. Nifong, Bldg. 7, Ste. 100, Columbia, Missouri 65203. (Inf. ¶ 4; Ans. ¶ 4.). As reflected by the caption hereto, Respondent's bar number is 41666.

5. Respondent is a public defender with the Missouri Public Defender System ("MPDS"). (Inf. ¶ 5; Ans. ¶ 5.)

6. Respondent's license is in good standing. (Inf. ¶ 6; Ans. ¶ 6.)

7. Respondent has received three admonitions in the past:

   a. By letter dated December 8, 2003, Respondent was admonished for violating Rule 4-1.3 (diligence);

   b. By letter dated July 16, 2008, Respondent was admonished for violating Rule 4-1.3 (diligence); and

   c. By letter dated February 26, 2010, Respondent was admonished for violating Rules 4-1.3 (diligence) and 4-1.4 (communication).

(Inf. ¶ 7; Ans. ¶ 7; Ex. 9.)

8. Respondent works for the MPDS in Area 67, the Central Appellate PCR divison. (Tr. 18 – 19 (testimony of Respondent).)

9. Respondent's primary work is representing indigent clients who have moved, pro se, for post-conviction relief under either Rule 29.15 or Rule 24.035. (Tr. 19 (testimony of Respondent).)

10. The movants who are the subject of this disciplinary proceeding sought relief under Rule 29.15. (Tr. 21 (testimony of Respondent).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

11. Appointed counsel, per Rule 29.15, may file an amended motion for post-conviction relief, or a statement in lieu of an amended motion for post-conviction relief. (Tr. 143 (testimony of Steve Harris, District Defender Area 67 MPDS).)

12. Determination regarding whether to file an amended motion or a statement in lieu of an amended motion is made after the records have been reviewed, after communication with the client, and after any necessary investigation. (Tr. 144 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

COUNT I – Robinson

13. Respondent Hinkebein served as counsel for the movant Darin Robinson in Darin Robinson v. State of Missouri, Case No. 1031-CV18129, in the Circuit Court of Greene County, Missouri, a post-conviction relief proceeding. (Inf. ¶ 9; Ans. ¶ 9; Ex. 5.)

14. Respondent entered his appearance as counsel for Movant Robinson on or about February 14, 2011. (Inf. ¶ 10; Ans. ¶ 10; Ex. 5.)

15. Respondent filed a motion for extension of time in which to file an amended Rule 29.15 motion on behalf of Movant Robinson. (Inf. ¶ 11; Ans. ¶ 11; Ex. 5.)

16. The Court granted the motion for extension of time to March 13, 2011. (Inf. ¶ 12; Ans. ¶ 12; Ex. 5.)

17. Respondent wrote the prison to arrange telephone calls with Movant Robinson on March 10, March 11, and March 14, 2011. (Inf. ¶ 13; Ans. ¶ 13.)

18. Respondent sent letters to potential witnesses for Mr. Robinson on March 9 and 10, 2011. (Inf. ¶ 14; Ans. ¶ 14.)

19. The letters to potential witnesses from Mr. Robinson were sent too late for any information forwarded by those potential witnesses to be included in a timely filed amended motion. (Tr. 32 (testimony of Respondent).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

20. At the time the amended motion was due, Respondent had not yet decided whether to file an amended motion or a statement in lieu of an amended motion of behalf of Movant Robinson. (Tr. 33 - 34 (testimony of Respondent).)

21. In a statement in lieu of an amended motion, counsel must include, inter alia, a statement that the pro se motion contains all claims known to the movant after counsel has examined the file. (Tr. 24-25, 33 (testimony of Respondent); Tr. 143 – 144 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

22. After the statement in lieu is filed, the movant has 10 days to respond as to whether movant disagrees with the filing of the statement in lieu. (Tr. 25, 33 (testimony of Respondent).)

23. Respondent did not prepare a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion regarding Mr. Robinson's post-conviction relief motion. (Inf. ¶ 15; Ans. ¶ 15.)

24. Respondent did not file an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on behalf of Mr. Robinson on or before March 13, 2011. (Inf. ¶ 16; Ans. ¶ 16; Ex. 5.)

25. Respondent failed to communicate with Mr. Robinson after March 2011. (Inf. ¶ 17; Ans. ¶ 17.)

26. Respondent intended to file a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion on behalf of Movant Robinson. (Tr. 34 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 18.)

27. Respondent did not send Mr. Robinson a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion for his review. (Inf. ¶ 18; Ans. ¶ 18.)

28. Respondent Hinkebein never filed an amended Rule 29.15 motion or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion on behalf of Movant Robinson. (Inf. ¶ 19; Ans. ¶ 19.)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

29. Respondent remained Movant Robinson's attorney until he withdrew as counsel of record for Movant Robinson on September 5, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 20; Ans. ¶ 20; Ex. 5; Tr. 34 (testimony of Respondent).)

30. Respondent withdrew as Movant Robinson's counsel because Movant Robinson's case was reassigned to another public defender. (Tr. 35 (testimony of Respondent).)

31. Movant Robinson's new counsel filed a Motion for Finding of Abandonment and for Leave to File an Amended Motion. (Inf. ¶ 21; Ans. ¶ 21; Ex. 5.)

32. The trial court entered an Order finding that Respondent had abandoned Movant Robinson on his post-conviction relief action. (Inf. ¶ 22; Ans. ¶ 22; Ex. 5.)

COUNT II – Hines

33. Respondent Hinkebein served as counsel for the Movant Christopher Hines in Christopher J. Hines v. State of Missouri, Case No. 1231-CV16886, in the Circuit Court of Greene County, Missouri, a post-conviction relief proceeding. (Inf. ¶ 25; Ans. ¶ 25; Ex. 4.)

34. Respondent entered his appearance as counsel for Movant Hines on or about December 21, 2012. (Inf. ¶ 26; Ans. ¶ 26; Ex. 4.)

35. Respondent filed a motion for extension of time in which to file an amended Rule 29.15 motion on behalf of Movant Hines. (Inf. ¶ 27; Ans. ¶ 27; Ex. 4.)

36. The Court granted the motion for extension of time to March 5, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 28; Ans. ¶ 28; Ex. 4.)

37. Respondent received Movant Hines' trial file on or about December 26, 2012. (Inf. ¶ 29; Ans. ¶ 29; Tr. 37 (testimony of Respondent).)

38. Respondent received Movant Hines' direct appeal file on or about December 11, 2012. (Inf. ¶ 30; Ans. ¶ 30; Tr. 37 (testimony of Respondent.)

79. Respondent did not file an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on or before April 16, 2012 on behalf of Movant Watson. (Inf. ¶ 63; Ans. ¶ 63; Ex. 7; Tr. 48 (testimony of Respondent).)

80. Respondent did not communicate with Mr. Watson after July 2012. (Inf. ¶ 64; Ans. ¶ 64; Tr. 48 (testimony of Respondent).)

81. Respondent intended to file an amended motion on behalf of Mr. Watson. (Tr. 41 – 42, 48 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 20.)

82. Respondent Hinkebein never filed an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on behalf of Movant Watson. (Inf. ¶ 65; Ans. ¶ 65; Ex. 7.)

83. Mr. Watson's case was reassigned to another public defender and Respondent withdrew as counsel of record for Movant Watson on September 5, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 66; Ans. ¶ 66; Ex. 7; Tr. 48 (testimony of Respondent).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

84. Movant Watson's new counsel filed a Motion for Finding of Abandonment and for Leave to File an Amended Motion. (Inf. ¶ 67; Ans. ¶ 67; Ex. 7; Tr. 48 – 49 (testimony of Respondent).)

85. The trial court entered an Order finding that Respondent had abandoned Movant Watson on his post-conviction relief action. (Inf. ¶ 68; Ans. ¶ 68; Ex. 7; Tr. 49 (testimony of Respondent).)

COUNT V – Austin

Dismissed with prejudice by Informant on September 9, 2016.

COUNT VI – Giles

86. Respondent Hinkebein served as counsel for the Movant Allen Giles in Allen D. Giles v. State of Missouri, Case No. 1231-CV17820, in the Circuit Court of Greene County, Missouri, a post-conviction relief proceeding. (Inf. ¶ 85; Ans. ¶ 85; Ex. 3.)

87. Respondent entered his appearance as counsel for Movant Giles on or about January 24, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 86; Ans. ¶ 86; Ex. 3; Tr. 51 (testimony of Respondent).)

88. Respondent filed a motion for extension of time in which to file an amended Rule 29.15 motion on behalf of Movant Giles. (Inf. ¶ 87; Ans. ¶ 87; Ex. 3; Tr. 51 (testimony of Respondent).)

89. The Court granted the motion for extension of time to April 15, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 88; Ans. ¶ 88; Ex. 3; Tr. 51 (testimony of Respondent).)

90. Respondent spoke by telephone with Movant Giles on April 25, 2013 and March 24, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 89; Ans. ¶ 89; Tr. 51 (testimony of Respondent).)

91. Respondent first spoke to Mr. Giles after any amended motion was due. (Tr. 51 – 52 (testimony of Respondent).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

92. Respondent did not begin reviewing Mr. Giles case until April 1, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 90; Ans. ¶ 90.)

93. Respondent last reviewed Mr. Giles transcript on March 24, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 91; Ans. ¶ 91.)

94. Respondent intended to file a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion in Mr. Giles' case. (Tr. 52 (testimony of Respondent).)

95. Respondent told Mr. Giles that he intended to file a Statement in Lieu on April 25, 2013. (Tr. 52 (testimony of Respondent).)

96. Respondent spoke to Mr. Giles eleven (11) months later on March 24, 2014, and again told him he intended to file a Statement in Lieu. (Tr. 53 (testimony of Respondent).)

97. Respondent did not prepare a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion regarding Mr. Giles' post-conviction relief motion. (Inf. ¶ 92; Ans. ¶ 92; Ex. 3.)

98. Respondent did not file an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on or before April 15, 2013 on behalf of Movant Giles. (Inf. ¶ 93; Ans. ¶ 93; Ex. 3; Tr. 52 (testimony of Respondent).)

99. Respondent failed to communicate with Mr. Giles after March 24, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 94; Ans. ¶ 94; Tr. 53 (testimony of Respondent).)

100. Respondent did not send Mr. Giles a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion for his review. (Inf. ¶ 95; Ans. ¶ 95.)

101. Respondent Hinkebein never filed an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on behalf of Movant Giles. (Inf. ¶ 96; Ans. ¶ 96; Ex. 3.)

COUNT VII – Arata

105. Respondent Hinkebein served as counsel for the Movant Jeremy Arata in Jeremy W. Arata v. State of Missouri, Case No. 1331-CC00971, in the Circuit Court of Greene County, Missouri, a post-conviction relief proceeding. (Inf. ¶ 102; Ans. ¶ 102; Ex. 1.)

106. Respondent entered his appearance as counsel for Movant Arata on or about August 6, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 103; Ans. ¶ 103; Ex. 1; Tr. 54 (testimony of Respondent).)

107. Respondent filed a motion for extension of time in which to file an amended Rule 29.15 motion on behalf of Movant Arata. (Inf. ¶ 104; Ans. ¶ 104; Ex. 1; Tr. 54 - 55 (testimony of Respondent).)

108. The Court granted the motion for extension of time to October 22, 2013. (Inf. ¶ 105; Ans. ¶ 105; Ex. 1; Tr. 55 (testimony of Respondent).)

109. Respondent wrote the prison to arrange a telephone call with Movant Arata on January 6, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 106; Ans. ¶ 106; Ex. 1; Tr. 55 (testimony of Respondent).)

110. Respondent did not speak to Mr. Arata until over two (2) months after any amended motion was due. (Tr. 55 (testimony of Respondent).)

111. Respondent intended to file a Statement in Lieu in Mr. Arata's case. (Tr. 55 (testimony of Respondent).)

112. On January 6, 2014, Respondent told Mr. Arata that he intended to file a Statement in Lieu. (Tr. 55, 56 - 57 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 29.)

113. Respondent did not prepare a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion regarding Mr. Arata's post-conviction relief motion. (Inf. ¶ 107; Ans. ¶ 107; Ex. 1.)

114. Respondent did not send Mr. Arata a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion for his review. (Inf. ¶ 108; Ans. ¶ 108.)

115. Respondent did not file an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on or before October 22, 2013 on behalf of Mr. Arata. (Inf. ¶ 109; Ans. ¶ 109; Ex. 1.)

116. Respondent failed to communicate with Mr. Arata after January 2014. (Inf. ¶ 110; Ans. ¶ 110.)

117. Respondent Hinkebein never filed an amended Rule 29.15 motion, or a Statement in Lieu of an Amended Motion, on behalf of Movant Arata. (Inf. ¶ 111; Ans. ¶ 111; Ex. 1.)

118. Mr. Arata's case was reassigned to another public defender in August 2014. (Tr. 59 (testimony of Respondent).)

119. Respondent withdrew as counsel of record for Movant Arata on September 5, 2014. (Inf. ¶ 112; Ans. ¶ 112; Ex. 1; Tr. 59 (testimony of Respondent).)

120. Movant Arata's new counsel filed a Motion for Finding of Abandonment and for Leave to File an Amended Motion. (Inf. ¶ 113; Ans. ¶ 113; Ex. 1; Tr. 59 (testimony of Respondent).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

121. The trial court entered its Order finding that Respondent had abandoned Movant Arata on his post-conviction relief action. (Inf. ¶ 114; Ans. ¶ 114; Ex. 1.)

Potential Injury

122. If any of these movants, Robinson, Hines, Williams, Watson, Giles, and/or Arata, had gained actual relief from their Rule 29.15 motion for post-conviction relief, the delay in processing those motions could have resulted in them being incarcerated for a longer period of time. (Tr. 60 (testimony of Respondent).)

123. Respondent did not intentionally delay any of the cases that are the subject of this case in hopes that the passage of time would result in the prosecutor agreeing to a better outcome for the movant. (Tr. 125 (testimony of Respondent).)

124. Respondent did not ask any of the movants who are the subjects of this case to agree to a delay in hopes that the passage of time would result in the prosecutor agreeing to a better outcome for the movant. (Tr. 125 (testimony of Respondent).)

Respondent's Employee Improvement Plan

125. Missouri Public Defender System Attorney Greg Mermelstein, who receives complaints from the client base for the MPDS, received a letter from Movant Hines, Respondent's client, asking about the progress of his case. (Tr. 215 (testimony of Greg Mermelstein, Deputy Director of Specialty Practice and Resources for the MPDS ("Mermelstein"); (Tr. 26 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 21.)

126. Mr. Mermelstein asked Mr. Harris, Respondent's immediate supervisor, the District Defender, to look into Mr. Hines complaint, and he looked through Respondent's cases and found a number of cases where amended motions had not been timely filed. (Tr. 215 - 216 (testimony of Mermelstein); Tr. 26 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 28.)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

127. Mr. Mermelstein determined that the cases where amended motions had not been timely filed should be reassigned to another MPDS office. (Tr. 216 – 217 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

128. In August 2014, Respondent gathered up the files to be reassigned and gave them to Mr. Harris. (Tr. 29 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 28.)

129. The cases reassigned were the subject of the Information: Movants Arata, Austin, Giles, Hines, Robinson, Watson, and Williams. (Tr. 28 – 29, 30 (testimony of Respondent).)

130. Those cases were reassigned to other public defenders in August 2014. (Tr. 28 (testimony of Respondent).)

131. Mr. Harris and Mr. Mermelstein determined that it would be best for the cases to be transferred out of their Area so that they could be examined anew and so there would be no appearance of any conflict. (Tr. 155 – 156 (testimony of Steve Harris, District Defender Area 67 of the MPDS ("Harris")); Tr. 216 – 218 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

132. Respondent withdrew from the reassigned cases in September 2014. (Tr. 29 (testimony of Respondent).)

133. On September 4, 2014, Respondent was issued an Employee Improvement Plan by Harris. (Tr. 60 - 61 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 10.)

134. Respondent met with Mr. Harris and Mr. Mermelstein, Divison Director, about the Employee Improvement Plan. (Tr. 61 - 62 (testimony of Respondent).)

135. The Employee Improvement Plan recites that Respondent had "failed to file timely amended motions or statements in lieu of amended motions in the following cases: Dustin Watson, Christopher Hines, Allen Giles, William Austin, Jeremy Arata, William Williams, Darin Robinson…." (Ex. 10.)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

136. The Employee Improvement Plan recites that Respondent's failures "jeopardizes the clients' rights to pursue state postconviction relief." (Ex. 10.)

137. Mr. Harris, via the Employee Improvement Plan, gave Respondent directives to improve his performance. (Tr. 62 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 10.)

138. Respondent signed the Employee Improvement Plan on September 4, 2014. (Ex. 10.)

139. The Employee Improvement Plan issued to Respondent provides: "You cannot miss filing deadlines for amended motions, statements in lieu of amended motions, or notices of appeal." (Ex. 10.)

140. Mr. Harris directed Respondent to notify him if there was a time when he would not be able to file a timely amended motion, statement in lieu of an amended motion, or voluntary dismissal before the due dates. (Tr. 64 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 10.)

141. Mr. Harris directed Respondent to implement a calendaring system that could be monitored by Respondent's secretary and by Mr. Harris. (Tr. 65 (testimony of Respondent); Ex. 10.)

142. Respondent's secretary now generates a report for Respondent showing all due dates in the upcoming month. (Tr. 65 - 66 (testimony of Respondent); Tr. 166 – 167 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

143. Respondent now generates a report for Mr. Harris that includes his deadlines for the month past and the upcoming month. (Tr. 66 (testimony of Respondent); Tr. 166 – 167 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

144. Mr. Harris also provided in the Employee Improvement Plan that he would meet with Respondent periodically to review and discuss Respondent's performance. (Ex. 10.)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

145. The calendaring and system established in September 2014 has been mostly successful. Respondent has had issues with electronic filing where the filing was not completed before midnight. He also missed a deadline in another case where he thought he had filed the amended motion, but somehow had not. (Tr. 65, 69 – 70, 110 - 111 (testimony of Respondent); Tr. 167 – 168 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

146. Mr. Harris believes Respondent has had a marked improvement in his performance. (Tr. 171 (testimony of Steve Harris)

Respondent's Health

147. Respondent believes his health issues affected his performance between 2010 and 2014. (Tr. 85, 102, 114 (testimony of Respondent).)

148. Respondent believes his health condition was a physical disability between 2010 and 2014. (Tr. 114 - 115 (testimony of Respondent).)

149. Respondent's health has been fairly stable since he last was hospitalized in 2013. (Tr. 118 – 119 (testimony of Respondent).)

150. Respondent believes he is functioning better now than he was in 2011 through 2013. (Tr. 130 (testimony of Respondent).)

Respondent's Workload

151. Respondent believes his workload includes an unreasonable number of cases. (Tr. 111 (testimony of Respondent).)

152. Respondent has approximately 110 cases. (Tr. 122, 126 (testimony of Respondent).)

153. Steve Harris believes he was assigning too much work to Respondent before the issues in this case were revealed. (Tr. 172 – 174 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

154. Historically, Respondent filed more amended motions and had more court hearings than anyone else in his office. (Tr. 189 – 190 (testimony of Steve Harris); Tr. 212 – 213 (testimony of Greg Mermelstein, Deputy Director of Specialty Practice and Resources for the MPDS ("Mermelstein")); Ex. D.)

155. Steve Harris believes Respondent's dedication to his clients is beyond reproach. (Tr. 191 – 192 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

156. Steve Harris testified that Respondent has a strong work ethic and even when he was very ill, he did not ask for help. (Tr. 181 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

157. Since August 2014 when the cases which are the subject of this hearing were reassigned, Respondent's supervisor has assigned him more Rule 24.035 motions than he used to, resulting in a slightly lighter workload because Rule 24.035 motions generally have much shorter records and aren't as time-consuming. (Tr. 123 – 124 (testimony of Respondent); Tr. 172 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

158. Since August 2014, Mr. Harris has reduced Respondent's case number assignments as well as the seriousness of the cases he is assigned. (Tr. 172 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

159. Steve Harris believes Respondent is an absolute asset to the office. (Tr. 193 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

160. Steve Harris has no flexibility with regard to the attorneys' heavy workload in Area 67. They actually have lost an attorney position since 2007. (Tr. 195 – 196 (testimony of Steve Harris).)

161. According to senior staff with the MPDS, a Missouri Bar task force, a Missouri Senate Interim Committee, and the American Bar Association have studied the MPDS and found that the System has more cases than it can ethically, reasonably, or effectively handle. (Tr. 205 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

162. Public defenders cannot decline cases based on case load. (Tr. 207 – 208 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

163. The Public Defender Commission Caseload Crisis Protocol suggests that the MPDS needs 269 additional attorneys. The System currently has approximately 370 attorneys statewide. (Tr. 204 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

164. Greg Mermelstein believes Respondent's work product is of very high quality, that he is hard-working, and that he is very good at untangling complex legal issues such as jail time credit issues. (Tr. 212 – 214 (testimony of Mermelstein).)

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

COUNT I – Robinson

165. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.3 provides that "[a] lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client."

166. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.3 by not attempting to speak to his client Robinson until two (2) days before the deadline to file an amended motion, by not contacting potential witnesses for Mr. Robinson until he sent them letters three and two days before the deadline to file an amended motion, by not filing any motion, whether an amended motion or a statement in lieu, by the March 13, 2011 due date for an amended motion or by the time Mr. Robinson's case was reassigned in August 2014.

167. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.4(a) requires a lawyer to (1) "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;" and (2) "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information."

Electronically Filed - SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI - April 28, 2017 - 03:28 PM

168. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.4(a) by failing to keep Mr. Robinson adequately informed in that he did not speak to Mr. Robinson until two (2) days before any amended motion was due, and he did not communicate at all with Mr. Robinson between March 2011 and when Mr. Robinson's case was reassigned in August 2014.

COUNT II – Hines

communicating with all of the witnesses identified by Mr. Williams, by not timely filing the amended motion by November 10, 2013, and by not acting to cause an amended motion to be filed by the time Mr. Williams' case was reassigned in August 2014.

175. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.4(a) requires a lawyer to (1) "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;" and (2) "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information."

176. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.4(a) by failing to keep Mr. Williams adequately informed in that he did not speak to Mr. Hines until eleven (11) days after his amended motion was due, and he did not communicate at all with Mr. Williams between November 21, 2013 and August 2014 when Mr. Williams' case was reassigned.

COUNT IV – Watson

177. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.3 provides that "[a] lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client."

178. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.3 by not speaking to his client Watson until three (3) months after the April 16, 2012 due date to file an amended motion, by not requesting his appellate file until after the due date to file an amended motion, by not timely filing the amended motion by the April 16, 2012 due date, and by not acting to cause an amended motion to be filed by the time Mr. Watson's case was reassigned in August 2014.

179. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.4(a) requires a lawyer to (1) "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;" and (2) "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information."

180. Respondent violated Rule 4-4.1(a) by failing to keep Mr. Watson adequately informed in that he did not speak to Mr. Watson until three (3) months after his amended motion was due, and he did not communicate at all with Mr. Watson between July 2013 and August 2014 when Mr. Watson's case was reassigned.

COUNT VI – Giles

181. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.3 provides that "[a] lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client."

182. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.3 by not speaking to his client Giles until ten (10) days after the April 15, 2013 due date to file an amended motion, by not filing the statement in lieu after telling Mr. Giles he intended to do so on April 25, 2013 and on March 24, 2014, by not beginning to review Mr. Giles case until April 1, 2013, by not filing any motion, whether an amended motion or a statement in lieu, by the April 15, 2013 due date for an amended motion or by the time Mr. Giles' case was reassigned in August 2014.

183. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.4(a) requires a lawyer to (1) "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;" and (2) "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information."

184. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.4(a) by failing to keep Mr. Giles adequately informed in that he did not speak to Mr. Giles until ten (10) days after any amended motion was due, and he did not communicate at all with Mr. Giles between April 25, 2013 and March 24, 2014, or between March 24, 2014 and when Mr. Giles' case was reassigned in August 2014.

COUNT VII – Arata

185. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.3 provides that "[a] lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client."

186. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.3 by not speaking to his client Arata until eleven (11) weeks after the October 22, 2013 due date to file an amended motion, by not filing any motion, whether an amended motion or a statement in lieu, by the October 22, 2013 due date for an amended motion or by the time Mr. Giles' case was reassigned in August 2014.

187. Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.4(a) requires a lawyer to (1) "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;" and (2) "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information."

188. Respondent violated Rule 4-1.4(a) by failing to keep Mr. Arata adequately informed in that he only spoke to Mr. Arata one time and that was not until eleven (11) weeks after any amended motion was due, and he did not communicate at all with Mr. Arata between January 2014 and when Mr. Arata's case was reassigned in August 2014.

RECOMMENDATION OF SANCTION

Respondent failed to communicate with his clients (Robinson, Hines, Williams, Watson, Giles, Arata), and he failed to diligently represent his clients (Robinson, Hines, Williams, Watson, Giles, Arata). Thus, Respondent is guilty of professional misconduct as a result of violating Rule 4-1.3 and 4-1.4(a) of the Missouri Rules of Professional Conduct. When determining an appropriate sanction, Missouri case law is always the first source for analysis. The Supreme Court also often looks to the ABA Standards for Imposing Lawyer Sanctions for guidance when imposing discipline, but considers the Standards advisory. See In Re: Ehler, 319 S.W.3d 442, 451 (Mo. banc 2010).

The ABA Standards for Imposing Lawyer Sanctions (1991 Ed.) (hereinafter "ABA Standards") provide a standard for the violation of a particular rule. Section II of the ABA Standards states in part:

> The Standards do not account for multiple charges of misconduct. The ultimate sanction imposed should at least be consistent with the sanction for the most serious instance of misconduct among a number of violations; it may well be and generally should be greater than the sanction for the most serious violation.

In this case, the evidence shows that the Respondent has violated two (2) Rules six (6) times each.

ABA Sanctions Standard 3.0 provides:

> In imposing a sanction after a finding of lawyer misconduct, a court should consider the following factors:
> (a) the duty violated;
> (b) the lawyer's mental state; and
>
> (c) the actual or potential injury caused by the lawyer's misconduct; and
> (d) the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors.

Under Section II, The Theoretical Framework, the ABA Standards provide that the most important ethical duties are those obligations that an attorney owes the client. Respondent's violations were of obligations he owed his clients.

ABA Standard 4.43 regarding "Lack of Diligence" provides: "Reprimand is generally appropriate when a lawyer is negligent and does not act with reasonable diligence in representing a client, and causes injury or potential injury to a client." In In re Frank, 885 S.W.2d 328, 333 - 34 (Mo. banc 1994), the court found that the respondent had committed multiple violations of his diligence and communication obligations, and that he had failed to cooperate with bar counsel. The court found 39 violations. "Absent aggravating or mitigating circumstances, reprimand is generally appropriate when a lawyer has received an admonition for the same or similar conduct and engages in further similar acts of misconduct that cause injury or potential injury to a client, the public, the legal system, or the profession." Id. at 333, citing ABA Standard 8.3(b). The court suspended respondent Frank's license, however, noting his failure to respond to disciplinary authorities and the "pattern of neglect, [and] the volume and repeated nature of respondent's ethical violations." Id. at 334.

All of Respondent's clients who are the subject of this case were allowed to file amended motions for post-conviction relief. Thus far, none have been granted relief based on those amended motions. Respondent's clients were, however, at risk of injury from his violations. If the clients' post-conviction motions had been meritorious, their relief was, at the most, in jeopardy, and, at the least, delayed.

Certain aggravating and mitigating factors are applicable in this case. "Aggravation or aggravating circumstances are any considerations, or factors that may justify an increase in the degree of discipline to be imposed." ABA Sanction Standard 9.21. In the case at bar, aggravating factors are: Respondent's prior disciplinary offenses (ABA Sanction Standard 9.22(a)); a pattern of misconduct (ABA Sanction Standard 9.22(c)); multiple offenses (ABA Sanction Standard 9.22(d)); and the vulnerability of the victims (ABA Sanction Standard 9.22(h)).

"Mitigation or mitigating circumstances are any consideration or factors that may justify a reduction in the degree of discipline to be imposed." ABA Sanction Standard 9.31. Mitigating factors include Respondent's full and free disclosure to disciplinary counsel and cooperative attitude toward these proceedings (ABA Sanction Standard 9.32(e)), physical disability (ABA Sanction Standard 9.32(h)), and expressed remorse (ABA Sanction Standard 9.32(l)).

Having considered the nature and extent of Respondent's misconduct and the aggravating and mitigating factors, the Disciplinary Hearing Panel recommends that, pursuant to Rule 5.16, Respondent be placed on probation for one (1) year with the conditions that he not violate the

1. Any address change;

2. Any change of employment;

3. Any arrests of Respondent;

4. Any criminal charges brought against Respondent;

5. Any criminal conviction of Respondent;

6. Any civil lawsuit filed against Respondent;

7. Any civil judgment entered against Respondent;

8. A description of any disputes with clients;

9. Written confirmation from Respondent's supervisor Steve Harris (or his successor) that Respondent has complied with the Employee Improvement Plan (Exhibit 10);

10. A written statement under penalty of perjury regarding whether Respondent has complied with the rules of Professional Conduct and all conditions of probation during the preceding calendar quarter;

11. Notification to the OCDC of any investigation of the Respondent which would raise a question as to Respondent's fitness to practice law;

12. In addition to all quarterly reports, a final report containing the same information, is due no earlier than thirty (30) days or less than fifteen (15) days prior to the last day of the probation period. With the final report, Respondent may file an application with the Court for an order of successful completion of probation as set forth in Rule 5.225(g). The application shall be accompanied by an affidavit that Respondent has complied with all terms

All concur.

Section I. Background

Overview of the Missouri Public Defender System: Clients & Cases

The Missouri Public Defender System (—MSPD ‖) is responsible for providing legal representation to all indigent citizens accused of or convicted of crimes in Missouri, as required by the Missouri Constitution as well as the United States Constitution.[1]

Pursuant to sections 600.086 and 600.042 of the Missouri Revised Statutes, public defenders provide legal services to individuals:[2] (1) detained or charged with a felony, including appeals from felony convictions; (2) detained or charged with a misdemeanor which —will probably result in confinement ‖upon conviction, including appeals from conviction in such cases; (3) detained or charged with violations of probation or parole; (4) who have been taken into custody pursuant to section 632.489, a statute authorizing civil commitment of sex offenders, including appeals from determinations pursuant to that statute; (5) for whom the federal or state constitution requires appointment of counsel; and (6) for whom, in a case in which he or she faces a loss or deprivation of liberty, any state law requires appointment of counsel.[3]

The agency structure is divided into three parts: the Trial Division, the Capital Division, and the Appellate/Post-Conviction Division. Attorneys in district offices within each division

[1] Contract attorneys may be utilized in cases where there is a conflict of interest between a defendant and the MSPD, or to address overload or staff shortages in particular offices to the extent possible.

[2] The statutes do not distinguish between juveniles and adults. As discussed in Section IIIC of this report, we are deeply concerned about the few juveniles represented by the MSPD. We have been unable to determine why this is the case, and we strongly urge that the issue receive further inquiry and attention.

[3] Section 600.042 specifically excludes representation by the Public Defender of individuals charged with violations of county or municipal ordinances.

provide direct representation to MSPD clients. Consistent with Chapter 600's representation requirements, a typical trial caseload of non-entry-level public defenders includes: homicides; A-B felonies; C-D felonies; misdemeanors; traffic cases; juvenile delinquency cases; and probation/parole violations.

The MSPD Mission Statement is unambiguous in its objectives:

> The mission of the Missouri State Public Defender System is to provide high quality, zealous advocacy for indigent people who are accused of crime in the State of Missouri.
> The lawyers, administrative staff, and support staff of the Public Defender System will ensure that this advocacy is not compromised.
> To provide this uncompromised advocacy, the Defender System will supply each client with a high-quality, competent, ardent defense team at every stage of the process in which public defenders are necessary.

Given that MSPD reports handling more than 85,000 cases each year, funding and staffing are critical to achieving these objectives. MSPD has roughly 560 employees, 350 of whom were attorneys. In addition to attorneys, MSPD employs paralegals, investigators and support staff. While there was no increase in staffing from 2003 to 2008, MSPD was provided with 12 new attorneys in 2009.

Though MSPD has endeavored to obtain additional funding to increase its staff for eight consecutive years, except for the attorney positions added in 2009, MSPD has had no additions to its staff, despite the fact that during the previous years (when there was no staff increase) the MSPD caseload increased by as many as 12,000 cases.

The Evolution of the Missouri Public Defender System: The Early Years

In 1963, the Supreme Court of the United States decided the landmark case of Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963), establishing that the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees the assistance of counsel to those unable to hire their own attorneys. In 1972, Missouri enacted Chapter 600, which established a Public Defender Commission, responsible for the operation of a hybrid system of local public defender offices and appointed counsel programs. Five years later, in 1977, while eighteen of Missouri's 43 judicial circuits were serviced by public defender offices, the remaining twenty-five circuits were still forced to rely on an appointed counsel system, with judges assigning cases to members of the private bar. In 1982, the Office of the Missouri State Public Defender was established as an independent department within the judicial branch. At that time, some of the appointed counsel program was replaced by contract counsel; contract counsel were private attorneys who, rather than being assigned cases by a judge, agreed to take on all indigent clients in a particular area for a set fee. The contract counsel system proved remarkably problematic, not only because of rising costs, but also because private counsel were unwilling to take on a large number of cases for a set fee, in addition to (and in competition with) their paying cases.

In 1989, the contract counsel system was eliminated altogether and replaced with public defender offices, staffed with full-time public defenders, covering all counties in the state. A major structural reorganization of MSPD, designed to maximize both effectiveness and efficiency through specialization, resulted in the three legal services divisions identified above: Trial, Appellate/Post-Conviction, and Capital. The Trial Division was subdivided into thirty-six district offices, while the Appellate/Post-Conviction and Capital Division were each provided offices in Kansas City, St. Louis, and Columbia.

The Public Defender System in Missouri: 1989-2005

Approximately four years after the 1989 elimination of the contract system and establishment of a statewide system of full-time defenders, the Spangenberg Group (hereinafter —TSG‖) was asked to conduct a study, under the auspices of the ABA Bar Information Program

[4] Historically, The Spangenberg Group has been a nationally and internationally recognized criminal justice research and consulting firm that specializes in indigent defense services. TSG has conducted research in all 50 states and provided consultative services to developing and developed countries that are reforming their legal aid delivery programs. TSG has conducted comprehensive statewide studies of (hereinafter "ABA/BIP") of the State Public Defender System for the Missouri State Public Defender and its Commission. The 1993 study focused on the operation of the Public Defender System, the internal allocation of resources, and the overall budgeting and staffing situation, in addition to providing information about Missouri's relative position with other states in terms of caseload and funding of statewide programs. During the course of the study, TSG conducted site work in Columbia, Jefferson City, St. Louis, Clayton, and Kansas City. As far back as 1993, it was clear that MSPD was experiencing great difficulty, which resulted in the following conclusions:

> [T]he increased caseload and the low salaries have led to a high turnover of staff over the last two years and several additional experienced attorneys indicated that they may also leave. The effect of the workload, the low salary and the turnover has not surprisingly resulted in morale problems in some offices. Many attorneys feel that without additional resources, they will not be able to provide competent representation to all of their clients. We echo this sentiment in very strong terms.

1993 Report at 5.

In March of 2005, over a decade after the completion of the initial study, TSG was informed that the Director of the Office of the Missouri State Public Defender, J. Marty Robinson, had contacted the Missouri Bar concerning what he perceived to be a crisis situation within the program. The ensuing discussions resulted in an effort by the Missouri Bar to urge its members across the state to sign up to accept public defender appointments on a pro bono basis because of a serious case overload within the Public Defender System.

The incoming president of the Missouri Bar, Douglas A. Copeland, subsequently agreed to appoint a Public Defender Task Force charged with working with the Public Defender Commission, the bench, and the bar to identify and solve short and long-term needs related to the indigent defense systems in more than half of the states, and has worked with many jurisdictions in evaluating public defender systems. In February of 2009, TSG joined George Mason University to form the Spangenberg Project (hereinafter "TSP"). Although George Mason researchers assisted with the interim report and this report, TSG is listed as the author since its researchers conducted much of the preliminary analysis.

defense of indigent criminal defendants. The Public Defender Task Force was appointed by Mr. Copeland and met in St. Louis for the first time in July of 2005. Robert Spangenberg also met with the Task Force at this time. One of the initial determinations of the Task Force was to contract with TSG to conduct a limited assessment of the Missouri Public Defender System and to report to the Task Force prior to October 15, 2005.

The focus of the 2005 study was the operation of the Public Defender System, overall budgeting, staffing, allocation of resources, caseloads and Missouri's standing relative to other comparable states. During the week of August 29, 2005, Robert Spangenberg, along with a senior research associate, visited nine Public Defender Districts across the state: District 19 (Jefferson City, Administrative Office); District 13 (Columbia); District 7 (Liberty); District 6 (Kansas City Juvenile); District 16 (Kansas City Trial); District 21 (St. Louis County); District 22 (St. Louis City); District 24 (Farmington); and District 25 (Rolla). During the visits, District Defenders, Assistant Public Defenders, staff investigators, paralegals, clerical staff, judges, prosecutors, private attorneys, and other individuals responsible for participating in the state's criminal justice system were interviewed. Two Public Defender Commission members, the State Public Defender, the Trial Division Director, the Deputy Trial Director, the Appellate Division Director and the Capital Division Director were also interviewed. Court observation was conducted as well.

TSG also reviewed an extensive amount of cost and caseload data provided by the Public Defender, along with other written material including memoranda, Missouri case law, Missouri Supreme Court Rules of Professional Conduct, Public Defender Guidelines, pleadings and exhibits filed by the Public Defender in St. Louis City litigation, and other documents provided during the site visits. In light of this work, TSG's prior experience in Missouri (and further informed by TSG's work in a number of other states), as well as the initial meeting with the Missouri Bar Public Defender Task Force in July, TSG provided the Task Force with initial findings on September 27, 2005.

TSG's 2005 findings were dire, concluding that the Missouri Public Defender System was struggling to survive. Areas of particular concern included continuous turnover of staff, loss of experienced attorneys, extremely low salaries (with little hope of increase or advancement after several years), low morale, and a real perception of case overload. More broadly, TSG concluded that there was reason to believe that some public defender attorneys were not complying with either the Public Defender Guidelines for Representation or the Missouri Supreme Court Rules of Professional Conduct. Of even greater concern were indicators that the performance of some public defenders was falling below the constitutional minimum, signaling that attorneys were failing to provide the effective assistance of counsel to their clients and violating Missouri's Rules of Professional Conduct.

We should note that, in 2005, we were very impressed with the quality and commitment of most of the staff. Despite working under severe conditions, MSPD staff demonstrated a continuing commitment to clients, making great efforts to do the very best with the resources available.

TSG's 2005 study resulted in a number of conclusions, including, inter alia, the following abbreviated findings:

Staffing

An extremely high level of turnover among staff attorneys created serious problems at the Public Defender. With many experienced attorneys leaving, cases were being distributed among either a small number of remaining experienced attorneys or to new attorneys who were not yet ready for either a significant caseload or serious felony cases. The turnover problem was causing the remaining staff to shoulder the burden, contributing to a sense of overload and burnout. In addition, the turnover problem was creating a serious risk that newly-assigned attorneys would be unprepared or inexperienced. Judges in some areas expressed a real concern over the experience of the public defenders handling serious cases. Some judges also noted that attorneys were not getting needed trial experience as few cases were being tried. Recruitment and retention proved especially challenging in the rural offices where few attorneys wished to be placed. In the Farmington office, at least three attorneys were commuting from St. Louis, a distance of approximately 70 miles. Between FY 2001 and FY 2005, the Public Defender experienced a cumulative attorney turnover rate of approximately 100%. High turnover also resulted in limited supervision, since most supervisors and district defenders were consumed with the burdens of their own ever-increasing caseloads.

The turnover problem was made worse by the fact that there appeared to be little hands-on supervision of the staff attorneys, particularly the new attorneys. Supervision was very limited because most supervisors were carrying their own heavy caseloads.

Public Defender salaries were far too low and were a major cause of the high turnover, low morale, and recruitment difficulties of the Public Defender System. There were no raises in FY 2002 or FY 2003. In FY 2004, staff earning less than $40,000 received a raise of $600. In FY 2005, all staff except the State Public Defender received a raise of $1,200. Salaries started at $33,792 and were capped at $52,452 for all trial attorneys so that attorneys had no financial incentive to stay long-term. The salary of $52,452 for the most experienced trial attorneys (APD IV‘s) was the lowest that TSG had encountered in the country. Some staff, including attorneys, had second jobs, which was both demoralizing and an additional source of stress. Recent law school graduates, moreover, were entering the practice with increasing amounts of law school debt (e.g., $50,000 - $100,000), making the low salaries an even greater hindrance to attorney recruitment and an even greater cause of stress and frustration for new public defenders. Because of the low public defender salaries, some offices were losing public defenders to the prosecutor‘s office.

Quality of Representation

The combination of oppressive caseloads and turnover led some public defenders to describe their practice as —triage. ‖ Public defenders were forced to choose between providing adequate assistance to some clients and neglecting others. Work on some cases would not begin until the trial date was near. The Public Defender Deputy Director went so far as to describe the system as follows: —The present M.A.S.H. style operating procedure requires public defenders to divvy effective legal assistance to a narrowing group of clients. ‖[5] He expressed his concern that, —[f]or individual public defenders to be forced to choose among clients as to who will receive effective legal assistance undermines professionalism and commitment. ‖[6] Similarly, a District Defender stated that the volume of cases was so high that some public defenders could not provide effective assistance of counsel to many clients. TSG's 2005 findings reported serious problems with client contact, including lack of communication as well as communication in situations which jeopardized the attorney-client privilege, and continuity of representation.

Funding

In 2005, the Missouri State Public Defender had gone through several budget cycles without an increase in full-time equivalent (hereinafter —FTE) positions. The state had provided a total of 563 FTE Public Defender positions which broke down as follows: 342.5 attorneys; 73 paralegal investigators; 81.25 clerks or secretaries; and 62.75 legal assistants and other non-lawyer positions.[7] There was also a substantial lack of non-attorney support staff.

[7] While this was the authorized staffing level, due to the substantial turnover rate and other personnel reasons, the positions were never completely filled at any given time. Staffing data source: Public Defender, Staffing of Local Offices - June 23, 2003.

Indigency Determinations

In 2005, TSG concluded that there were substantial problems with indigency determinations, noting in particular the —presumption ‖that a defendant was ineligible for MSPD services if the defendant had been released on a bail of $5,000 or more.[8] TSG observed that some public defenders would find a defendant ineligible if such a bond had been made, without regard to other factors, such as whether a small percentage of the bail was paid to a bondsmen or whether a friend or family member posted the bond but could not also afford to hire counsel. TSG found this practice to be problematic, as well as unsupported by the statute or the guidelines. TSG reasoned that using public defenders to make indigency determinations regarding prospective clients created at the very least an appearance of a conflict of interest, given that public defenders had an incentive to not find a person indigent, since their caseloads were already too high. In line with that analysis, TSG found that many public defenders were quick to find a defendant ineligible for counsel if, for example, they had posted a bond. In addition, valuable attorney time had to be spent interviewing potential clients regarding indigency and making eligibility determinations.

Representation in Conflict Cases

In 2005, TSG was concerned about the handling of conflict cases by the Public Defender, a concern which echoed its initial concern in 1993. There was no written policy setting forth the definition of a conflict or the policies and procedures for assigning conflict cases out to the private bar. Each attorney was told only to be guided by the Rules of Professional Conduct, and there appeared to be no review of the staff attorneys‘ determinations of conflict.

Many conflict cases were referred within the Public Defender program to other regional offices. TSG noted that it knew of only one other public defender program in the country that did not use the private bar for conflict cases. TSG concluded that public defender handling of conflict cases, including co-defendants, created an appearance of a conflict in the same manner that attorneys from the same law firm handling conflict cases would create such an appearance.

[8] 18 CSR 10-3.010(2)(B)(2) (2005).

TSG also noted that conflict cases were taking too long to transfer from the originating office to the conflict office. In 2003, conflict cases took an average of 55 days from initial assignment to "disposition" or transfer from the originating office. In 2005, while the average time for a conflict transfer to another MSPD office was down to 43 days, it was still too long for a case to reach a conflict attorney.[9] Cases were also taking too long to transfer for assignment to private counsel out of the office. In 2003, it took an average of 70 days to transfer a case for assignment to private counsel; in 2005, it took 101 days.[10]

Comparison with Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System

In 2002, the American Bar Association issued "The Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System" (hereinafter "Ten Principles"). These principles have been generally accepted and used as guidelines to assess indigent defense systems across the country. TSG's 2005 study concluded that the Missouri State Public Defender system failed to meet a majority of those requirements. Specifically, as of 2005, the system failed to meet the following seven principles:

- Principle 2 – Where caseload is sufficiently high, the public defense delivery system consists of both a defender office and the active participation of the private bar.
- Principle 4 – Defense counsel is provided sufficient time and a confidential space with which to meet with the client.
- Principle 5 – Defense counsel's workload is controlled to permit the rendering of quality representation.

---

[9] TSG also noted that the transfer of conflict cases to other Public Defender regional offices reduced the amount of time that a staff attorney could devote to his/her clients in their primary office. He/she might need a half-day or longer to attend a distant court or visit the conflict client in a distant jail. Further, TSG observed that conflict attorneys had no office in the conflict county and might not be familiar with the judges and practice there.

[10] Our understanding is that, as of 2009, the situation regarding representation in conflict cases has not changed substantially.

- Principle 6 – Defense counsel's ability, training, and experience match the complexity of the case.

- Principle 7 – The same attorney continuously represents the client until completion of the case.

- Principle 8 – There is parity between defense counsel and the prosecution with respect to resources and defense counsel is included as an equal partner in the justice system.

- Principle 10 – Defense counsel is supervised and systematically reviewed for quality and efficiency according to nationally and locally adopted standards.

TSG further concluded that under 2005 conditions, some public defender attorneys were faced with violating both the Missouri Rules of Professional Conduct and Public Defender Guidelines for Representation each day.

Comparison with Other States

In 2005, TSG concluded that Missouri's indigent defense expenditures compared poorly in comparison to other southern states and the country as a whole. No other statewide indigent defense program had failed to receive any additional appropriations in the previous five fiscal years. In addition, TSG concluded that: (1) Missouri had the lowest per-capita annual indigent defense expenditure of all the southern states (except Mississippi, where data were not available); (2) Missouri had the lowest per capita expenditure of all statewide public defender systems; (3) Missouri had the lowest Attorney Unit Cost[11] of any jurisdiction in TSG's recent experience; (4) in order to reach the average per capita expenditure for all southern states, Missouri would need an additional appropriation of almost $16 million;[12] and (5) between 1993

[11] Attorney Unit Cost is the total cost of supporting a single FTE attorney, including salary, benefits, support staff, administration and other overhead.

[12] Based on preliminary data from 2008, that figure would now be $25 million, nearly $9 million more than that in 2005.

and 2005, Missouri appeared to have fallen from 42nd to 47th in the nation in per capita expenditure.[13]

As of 2008, based upon preliminary data from the 50 states, Missouri now has the lowest per-capita expenditures of all states, except for Mississippi.

ABA Guidelines for Assessing & Addressing Excessive Caseloads

In August 2009 the ABA issued for the first time —Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads ‖(hereinafter —Eight Guidelines ‖).[14] This landmark document was created in recognition of the fact that quality of defense services for persons charged in criminal and juvenile delinquency matters —is not achievable ‖when the lawyers providing the defense representation have too many cases. In establishing these Guidelines, the ABA relied on a 2006 ethics opinion issued by the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility. That opinion, —its first ever ethics opinion concerning the obligations of lawyers, burdened with excessive caseloads, who provide indigent defense representation, ‖made clear that all lawyers have a duty to furnish competent and diligent service, with no exceptions. Eight Guidelines at 2 (citing ABA Committee On Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Opinion 06-441 (2006)).

The Eight Guidelines recognized that, while the ethics opinion had set forth some steps to be taken when faced with excessive caseloads, neither that opinion nor the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice contained a —detailed action plan ‖as to how to proceed. The Eight Guidelines then, did just that. The First Guideline identifies certain fundamental obligations that defense lawyers have to their clients, irrespective of indigency, and notes that when lawyers fail to comply with these obligations —it is frequently because they have excessive caseloads. ‖ Eight Guidelines at 6. In other words, the First Guideline identifies the symptoms of a system [13] Based on preliminary data, Missouri's per capita expenditure in 2008 was $5.85. This compares to expenditures of $9.02 in Kentucky, $9.19 in Arkansas, and $10.29 in Louisiana.

[14] http://www.abanet.org/legalservices/sclaid/defender/downloads/eight_guidelines_of_public_defense.pdf

overburdened by excessive caseloads, urging the management of public defense programs to assess whether excessive workloads are preventing their lawyers from fulfilling performance obligations. Guidelines 2, 3, and 4 relate to the need for continuous supervision and monitoring of workloads, as well as the concurrent need for management to determine if excessive workloads exist. Guidelines 5 through 8 address a range of options that public defense providers and their lawyers should consider when excessive workloads are present. In sum, Guidelines 1 through 4 explain the steps that may be pursued in order to assess the problem while Guidelines 5 through 8 propose ways to address the problem and effect change.

In addition to the structural deficiencies identified in the 2005 Findings (including, inter alia, appropriations and staffing), this Report considers both the indicators of a caseload crisis, in terms of failures to meet fundamental obligations consistent with Guideline 1, as well as MSPD's decade-long struggle for change, consistent with Guidelines 2-8. In Missouri, the Eight Guidelines point to a growing crisis of constitutional magnitude, which despite MSPD's longstanding, systematic efforts, has been permitted to worsen, placing indigents persons accused of crimes, victims of crime, and the larger system of criminal justice in great peril.

Section II. Major Findings (2009)

In 2008, TSG was retained by the Missouri Bar Association to evaluate the Missouri state public defender system. That analysis had two parts – an interim report produced in March of 2009 that reviewed the MSPD's procedures and data collected from its internal case weighting study, and this final report.

As part of the entire project, TSG conducted site visits of MSPD offices throughout the state; performed focus groups of MSPD attorneys; met with MSPD and bar leaders; interviewed prosecutors; and considered relevant findings from other states. In this respect, TSG employed a systematic research methodology, ensuring that those interviewed represented an appropriate cross-section of MSPD offices and levels of experience. For example, the focus groups were attended by 24 attorneys from 16 MSPD offices. Upon the completion of its research, TSG shared its findings with the MSPD and solicited feedback to correct any known errors in the results. The conclusions in this report, however, are entirely those of TSG.

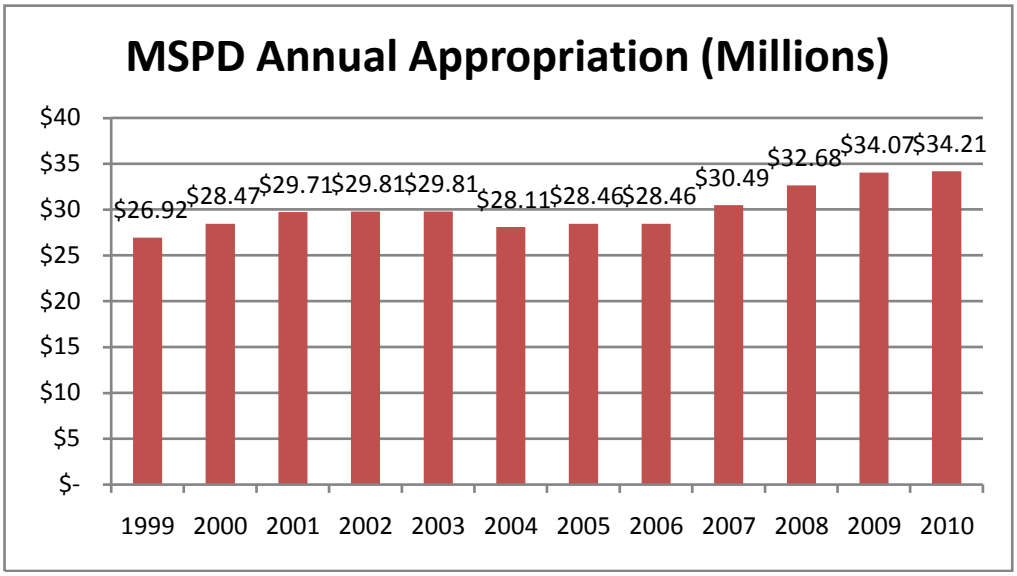
A. STATE OF MSPD'S OPERATIONS

MSPD's Resource Crisis: A Decade of Underfunding

- Appropriations

Over the past decade, increases to MSPD appropriations have averaged 2.7 percent per year. This includes a $1.15 million dollar increase in 2007 to help pay for contract counsel.



- Attorney Turnover & Salaries

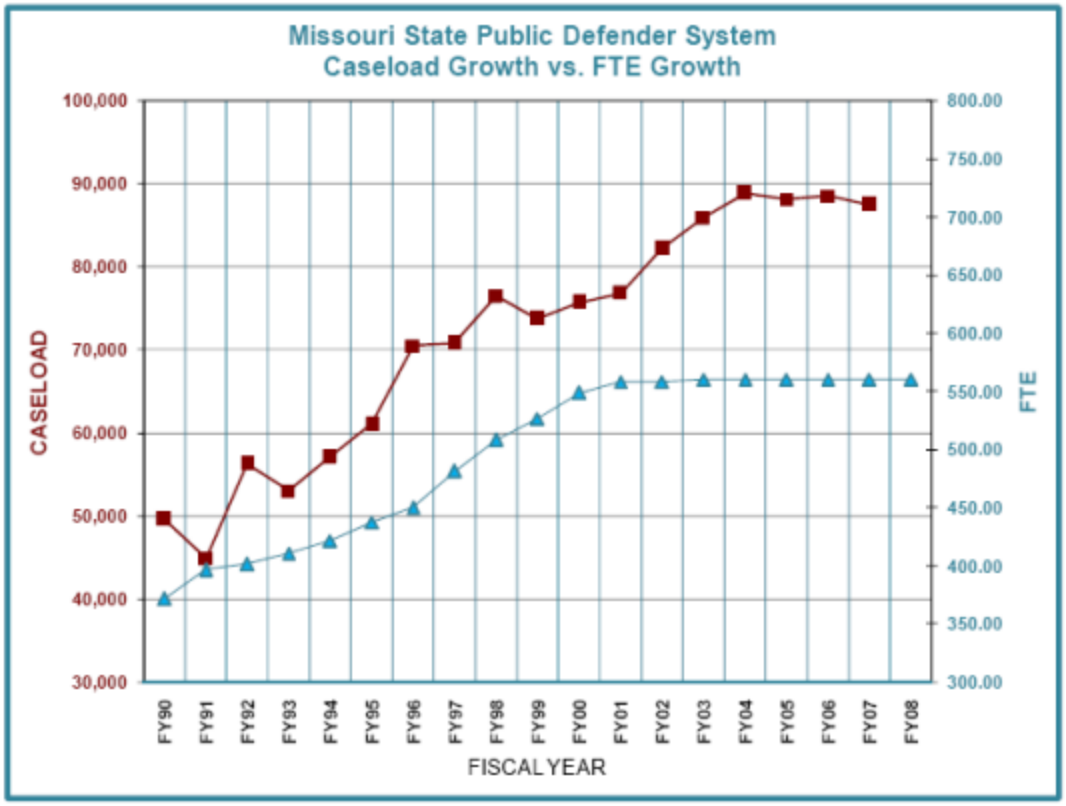
For approximately seven years (2000-2007), annual attorney turnover averaged over 18%, with some positions having turned over time after time after time. We were repeatedly advised that turnover has improved significantly, if temporarily, because of the dismal state of the economy and the lack of a meaningful job market. However, this information was almost always accompanied by the caveat that if people could leave for better pay, they would—and quickly.

Our June 2009 site visits confirmed that, particularly for attorneys at the lower and mid-levels of the pay scale, who also face staggering law school debt, present salaries simply are not high enough to cover all expenses. In addition to the pizza delivery, retail, bartending and truck driving that the Public Defender has previously reported, the site visit revealed other jobs maintained by these full-time attorneys. One attorney, who expressed a great deal of dedication to her clients, explained that she nevertheless maintains two other positions which she works at night: babysitter and pizza parlor waitress. Another attorney explained that he lives in his grandmother‘s basement because he cannot afford to rent an apartment. Nor was the perceived need for additional sources of income limited to attorneys; support staff also reported supplemental employment, for example, selling beer at sporting events.

- Analysis of the Number of Full-Time Equivalent Staff at All Levels

Before the staff attorney additions in July of 2009, there had been no increase in the number of FTE‘s for six years, though MSPD‘s caseload had risen by over 12,000 cases. 2008 Fiscal Report at 7.

MSPD - 0018378



As of 2009, the staff to attorney ratio is as follows:

- 1 investigator to every 6.7 attorneys
- 1 secretary to every 5 attorneys
- 1 legal assistant to every 10.84 attorneys
- 1 paralegal to every 67 attorneys

MSPD's Caseload Crisis: Fundamental Obligations & Excessive Workloads

Perhaps the most significant findings come under the category of excessive workloads, where it appeared that far from improving since 2005, the situation has become more severe. Interviews with public defenders revealed a growing sense of frustration, at times desperation, at the sheer volume of cases they are asked to handle. One arguable improvement from 2005, a decrease in the astonishing attorney turnover rate (due to present economic conditions), appeared to have a negative side effect. It was reported to us that many disgruntled lawyers stayed on essentially against their will. Several attorneys conveyed a sense that, in this economy, some attorneys feel that they have no alternative but to stay, and that they are effectively trapped. Rather than leaving, many attorneys are effectively biding their time until another opportunity presents itself.

Across the board attorneys explained, often with some measure of embarrassment and shame, that they were failing to discharge the kinds of fundamental obligations described by the ABA in its Eight Guidelines. Without exception, attorneys attributed these failures to an impossible volume of cases.

> When defense lawyers fail to discharge the kinds of fundamental obligations contained in this Guideline, it is frequently because they have excessive workloads. For example, the failure of lawyers to interview clients thoroughly soon after representation begins and in advance of court proceedings, as necessary, is often due to excessive workloads. When Public Defense Providers rely upon ―horizontal‖ systems of representation, in which multiple lawyers represent the client at different stages of the case, and lawyers often stand in for one another at court proceedings, it is usually because there are too many cases for which the Provider is responsible. If written motions are not filed, legal research not conducted, and legal memoranda not filed with the court, the lawyers most likely have an excessive workload. Similarly, excessive workloads may be the reason that crime scenes are not visited in cases where it might be useful to do so. [T]here are other indicia of excessive workloads[.]

Eight Guidelines at 6. These attorneys painted the picture of a system in mounting crisis, where attorneys simply do not know how to manage.

At the outset of these findings we begin where the ABA began, examining sample fundamental obligations laid out in its first Guideline:

- Whether sufficient time is devoted to interviewing and counseling clients;
- Whether prompt interviews are conducted of detained clients and of those who are released from custody;
- Whether pre-trial release of incarcerated clients is sought;
- Whether representation is continuously provided by the same lawyer from initial court appearance through trial, sentencing or dismissal;
- Whether necessary investigations are conducted;

- Whether formal and informal discovery from the prosecution is pursued;
- Whether sufficient legal research is under taken;
- Whether sufficient preparations are made for pre-trial hearings and trials; and
- Whether sufficient preparations are made for hearings at which clients are sentenced.

The findings as to excessive workloads, however, do not end there. In Missouri, in 2009, we found that attorneys were not only failing to comply with these obligations, but also fundamental obligations beyond those listed in the Eight Guidelines.

- Sufficiency of Time to Interview and Counsel Clients

Attorneys from across the state reported that the inability to adequately communicate with and counsel one's clients may be the single most problematic consequence of excessive caseloads. One lawyer explained that her time is so incredibly limited that she finds it hard to get to see her clients, even though the jail is in the same building as her office. Other attorneys communicated their sense that they are so busy trying to do the bare minimum when it comes to legal work—retrieving discovery, filing motions, and the like—that meeting with clients tends to get pushed to the bottom of the list.

This only leads to more problems, because when attorneys finally make it out to see their clients, clients express frustration that they have been ignored, skepticism that the lawyer has been doing anything with the time, and a general lack of trust in the attorney. As one attorney put it, what it would take to improve that trust relationship is more time spent counseling, but of course, the lack of sufficient time is what led to this situation in the first place, so the relationship is unlikely to be healed.

- Prompt Interviews of Detained & Released Clients

Lawyers repeatedly told us that the PD Guidelines and Recommendations are simply not followed. As one lawyer put it, there simply is not enough time in the day or enough staff to think about the Guidelines. In terms of prompt interviews with detained and released clients, as mentioned above, lawyers expressed grave concerns about their inability to meet with clients. We were told of a case where an attorney mistakenly believed a client had been released from jail, and did not find out until trying to reach that client at home (weeks, perhaps even months, later), that the client had been detained all along; the client's mother had to inform the lawyer that the client had never been home but had called several times from jail asking whether a lawyer was ever going to make it out to visit. The attorney said that, despite —feel[ing] miserable about this, ‖the most concerning part of the story was that it could happen again, —given the workload ‖and how little ti me attorneys have to keep track of their clients and the infrequency with which they are able to speak with clients, whether detained or released.

- Efforts to Secure Pretrial Release

Bond and detention were described to us by several lawyers as predetermined by the nature of the case and the resources of the client. Misdemeanants are typically released while individuals charged with felonies, particularly serious felonies, are detained. Several attorneys estimated that the initial client interview takes less than five minutes, thus making it impossible to gather the kind of information critical to any meaningful release determination.

- Consistency of Representation by Same Counsel

Most performance standards, including those adopted by the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, call for vertical representation, namely that one public defender handle the case of an indigent defendant from first appearance to the final disposition. There is legitimate discussion surrounding the question of whether or not horizontal representation can be provided at first appearance assuming there are a large number of defendants in the court. Many public defenders have vertical representation after the first appearance in order to take advantage of the number of cases that can be handled by one public defender, for example, the duty attorney.

It was reported that some MSPD offices engage in primarily vertical representation, while others utilize horizontal or partially horizontal representation. Some attorneys for instance, indicated that vertical representation ―is present in the major felony cases, otherwise not.‖ Another attorney reported that, except in homicides, they ―do not have vertical representation and not doing so creates so many issues such as client trust, and the quality of work involved.‖ Still another noted that ―a lack of vertical representation is a big problem because it hurts the representation.‖ In some smaller offices, there is vertical representation in virtually every case because, as one attorney explained, ―with 7 attorneys, it wouldn't work any other way here.‖

Attorneys in St. Louis County explained that they have a partially horizontal system, where one attorney handles the initial client interview and arraignment, after which another attorney is assigned for the merits phase of the case. One attorney expressed concern with this system, noting that ―there are cases where it would be better to be there from beginning to end for trust‖ and that ―overall it would be better to be there from day one to spot issues with the client.‖ Another attorney explained that when clients pass from one attorney to the next, ―clients get angry because they think they are getting passed through the system so then the attorney has to spend a lot of time getting the trust of the client.‖ Substantively speaking, the lawyer reported that, ―If attorneys represented clients from beginning to end some discoverable issues would have come to light. Because you can't spend a lot of time on facts and substance, some of the information is gone and witnesses have disappeared.‖

Due in large part to MSPD's staggering rates of attorney turnover, it has been reported that one of the great dilemmas of the system is how to maintain consistent representation. In fact, we learned in our June 2009 visit that thanks to a court decision resulting from a pro se filing by an inmate represented by MSPD—whose trial had been continued multiple times due to each of his lawyers leaving the office—inmates represented by MSPD now routinely file such pro se motions in order to ensure that their speedy trial rights are not jeopardized by the complete lack of consistency in their representation.

In State ex rel. McKee v. Riley, 240 S.W. 3d 720 (Mo. 2007), a defendant charged with several counts of tampering with motor vehicles was detained for approximately a year and a half, with his case continued five times. Though he was represented by the public defender, he repeatedly filed speedy trial motions, pro se, as his case was continued again and again. The Supreme Court, sitting en banc, in an opinion authored by Chief Justice Stith, directed the trial court to immediately convene a hearing to determine whether the defendant's speedy trial rights had been violated, and if so, to dismiss the charges. It noted, moreover, that:

> In considering how to weigh any delay caused by crowded dockets, this Court and Respondents must take into consideration that the delay in this case is not unique. Numerous other petitions for writs have been filed in this Court by persons incarcerated while awaiting disposition of their charges in this and on some occasions in other jurisdictions, similarly alleging lengthy delays. The right to a speedy trial is an important right that the courts of this state are duty-bound to honor, even in the face of heavy trial dockets and competing demands for trial. Protracted and unreasonable delays in criminal cases due to crowded dockets cannot become routine. Neither is it acceptable for the prosecuting attorney and defense counsel to accept or request such routine continuances without objection. The defendant's right to a speedy trial and the public's interest in timely resolution of criminal cases demands that this and other similar cases receive more expeditious treatment, even in the face of competing demands on counsels' and the court's time.
> This Court does not mean to suggest that any party to this proceeding has intended to violate any defendant's speedy trial rights, but —unreasonable delay in run-of-the-mill criminal cases cannot be justified by simply asserting that the public resources provided by the State's criminal-justice system are limited and that each case must await its turn. ‖[The defendant] is entitled to a prompt hearing on his claim that his constitutional rights have been violated and, if they have not yet been, then he is entitled to a prompt trial on the merits of these charges.

- Completion of Necessary Investigation

Attorneys reported that investigation, oftentimes the most critical piece of effective criminal defense representation, has suffered tremendously as a result of the case overload. An investigator explained that misdemeanors, except in truly unusual circumstances, simply are not investigated. In fact, he explained that most of his investigation is devoted to —serious ‖felonies, particularly aggravated sex offenses, which take a substantial amount of time. Lesser felonies, like misdemeanors, are put at the bottom of the list and only investigated if the serious investigations are completed. The investigator reported that he is forced to spend two days out of the week doing bond interviews, which —is probably a waste of [his] time. ‖ Rather than going to interview witnesses in person, investigators tend to conduct phone interviews and do not typically take written statements.

It was reported to us that MSPD investigators lack formal training that they at one time routinely received. For instance, one investigator explained that previously MSPD investigators were members of a national investigation society. They would also attend a national convention with formal training. He reported that these professional training opportunities were cut five years ago. Now, according to the staff investigator, training is —just individual, ‖in other words, when a more senior investigator can find time to explain an investigative technique to a junior investigator. Salaries for investigators, moreover, cannot be said to compensate for the lack of training and professional development. Despite working for MSPD since 1995, we were told that one senior investigator still earns less than forty thousand dollars a year.

Another investigator reported that attorneys almost never participate in investigation. Like the attorneys, however, the sheer volume of cases he is asked to handle makes it impossible for him to do what he needs to do, particularly in terms of locating essential witnesses, which can be time-consuming. Lawyers themselves also reported that the MSPD fails to complete satisfactory investigation in many cases. Explanations for the failure to investigate, by lawyers from around the state, mirrored discussions of client counseling, where as they saw it, they were forced to spend the precious hours available to them doing the legal work that only a lawyer could, which for the most part amounted to court appearances and the drafting of pleadings. Lawyers recognize, however, that investigators are —just as overloaded as the attorneys are‖ and —are often too busy ‖to accomplish what is necessary.

A rush to accept guilty pleas was also reported as a reason for cutting short investigation. Several lawyers explained that when a client wishes to plead guilty, attorneys often jump at the chance, and investigation—to the extent that it has begun at all—ceases. As one lawyer put it, if a client indicates a desire to plead guilty, —we don‘t fight it because we have too much work to do, ‖and so —we don‘t look into the case as we should ‖and instead the plea goes forward. This is particularly true in misdemeanor cases, where we were told there is the highest rate of —meet and plead, ‖making any kind of independent investigation impossible. Some attorneys noted that, as with legal research that is not completed, were there more time for investigation, there are many cases where one would discover compelling reasons to go to trial. Due to the crushing caseload, however, neither the research nor the investigation gets done, and clients likely plead guilty in cases where, provided adequate representation, they might well have prevailed.

- Pursuit of Formal and Informal Discovery

According to the prosecutors we interviewed, they provide open file discovery at arraignment pursuant to Supreme Court rules. This, according to them, obviates the need for further discovery requests in Missouri, though they indicated that public defenders nevertheless routinely submit ―boilerplate ‖ discovery requests. MSPD attorneys expressed their strenuous disagreement with this position. According to MSPD attorneys, unless they formally request discovery, it will not be provided. One senior MSPD supervisor reported that ―Brady, as such, ‖ has been turned over only a handful of times in her experience. But given the competing demands on attorneys‘ time, it appears from discussions with both prosecutors and public defenders that the pursuit of discovery is often limited to a one-time, formal request, rather than more extensive motions practice (e.g., motions to compel) and hearings on questions of discovery.

- Completion of Legal Research

Attorneys reported that legal research may be the area that suffers most as a result of the caseload crisis. One lawyer—touted by her office as a star, and who explained that she works round the clock, doing most of her case preparation in the evenings at home—said that she simply does not have time to do legal research. Earlier in her career she did have time, and so she has developed expertise in certain types of cases where she feels comfortable with the law, and appreciates the significance of being well-versed in the relevant authority. However, now that she has become more senior, she lacks the time to do research, despite the fact that her cases are growing increasingly serious, and involve increasingly complicated legal questions. Recognizing that motions practice based on solid research can be essential in complicated, high-level cases, she explained that she spends most of her days in court, with clients, and often actively trying cases, so research feels more like a luxury.

In Saint Louis City, moreover, attorneys' ability to adequately research issues pre-trial is constrained by a system where one can receive a phone call mid-morning announcing that trial will begin hours later.[15] This manner of trial call means that important investigation and research projects are often cut short by sudden trial calls.

Attorneys from all over the state, not just St. Louis City, however, made clear that legal research suffers dramatically as a result of the caseload crisis. In one office, the paralegal does all the research. In fact, the paralegal is responsible for drafting any new motions (that are not in the existing motions bank) and even briefs to the court of appeals—to which attorneys, we were told, —very rarely make a change. ‖ Another lawyer explained that lawyers —do not have time to do the research they need to do ‖because they are in court all day, even though the paralegals themselves are overwhelmed with cases.

[15] On July 14, 2009, Bob Spangenberg and David Newhouse interviewed St. Louis City prosecutors. Those prosecutors indicated that significant efforts to change this peculiar docketing system have led to substantial improvements, with more changes anticipated. They concurred that it is untenable to begin a trial—irrespective of whether one is a prosecutor or a defense lawyer—on a day's notice.

One attorney explained that she believed that there were cases where if she completed the legal research, she would likely find issues worth pursuing, particularly in the context of suppression motions. We were also told that lawyers do not frequently research the collateral consequences of pleas, and so often they either fail to inform clients regarding those consequences altogether, or they provide far less information than required. One attorney expressed the feeling that —attorneys simply cannot provide effective representation in all cases ‖ emphasizing that there —are situations where the attorneys do not know the ramifications of the pleas they are entering ‖and —may be too quick to plead when the client says they want to plead and get it over with. ‖

- Pre-hearing/Pre-trial Preparation

We were told that attorneys make a bona fide effort to prepare for trial. The trouble is, according to many lawyers, they have too many cases headed for trial at the same time. Inevitably, then, there is triage among trial cases. One attorney explained that his experience of trial triage led to less preparation in those types of cases where he felt more familiar. For instance, he said that by the time he grew comfortable handling robbery cases, he was stepping up to more serious cases, including homicides. So he found that he would do fewer depositions in robbery cases, saving time for the more serious cases with which he had less experience. He sacrificed the robbery depositions even though he knew that in a robbery case, where issues like identification often make or break the case, depositions are critical. But because he felt —more comfortable with robbery cases ‖but —extremely nervous about sex cases, ‖he made the decision to put more time into the latter.

MSPD - 0018388

Trial preparation, moreover, is inextricably intertwined with investigation and legal research, two areas where attorneys report they are consistently failing. In other words, while one can write out a cross-examination of a critical witness, if one has neither deposed the witness nor visited the crime scene, the bulk of the cross-examination will be dangerously blind. Similarly, a lawyer may file a motion to suppress, but without an opportunity to research the relevant and changing Fourth Amendment authority, it cannot be said that he or she is prepared for a substantive hearing.

- Pre-Sentence Preparation

Attorneys reported that, even though the vast majority of cases are disposed of by way of guilty plea, very little preparation goes into sentencing. Given the infrequency of contact with clients, it is also difficult for attorneys to conduct a thorough sentencing investigation tailored to the background and personal characteristics of the client, one which goes beyond the criminal history and terms of the plea agreement. Attorneys reported that one perceived tragedy of the caseload crisis was the elimination of the 15-year-old alternative sentencing programs. These programs were shut down in order to convert the 8.5 FTE's to attorney positions.

In addition to those fundamental obligations identified in the ABA's First Guideline, 2009 site visits in Missouri revealed a host of other fundamental obligations that were not being fulfilled adequately, signaling a growing crisis in excessive lawyer workloads.

- Filing Appropriate/Essential Pleadings

Several attorneys reported that the —triage ‖approach has become so dramatic that at times essential pleadings simply are not filed. As one lawyer put it: —Lawyers in [this] office are struggling and are about to implode. A good chunk of the lawyers in the office are on the verge of imploding. The system of triage is pretty scary. [Attorneys are] forgetting to file alibi notices, no investigation is going out, and [lawyers are] losing track of clients in the jails. You have to have the ability to focus on your work in the midst of chaos. ‖ Another public defender reported that a person would go crazy if he tried to meet the performance standards that are set out for all public defenders. There simply are not enough hours in the day. Many days she works until 9:30 or 10 p.m. Yet, according to her:

> There are times where I would like to file motions to suppress but there is simply not enough time to do that. There is not enough time to raise important issues. We all have taken the position that you just have to do what you can and deal with the consequences later. There is an expectation that you will be called on a PCR [post-conviction relief] hearing at some point because of the ineffective assistance of counsel on a given case or on many cases. We are constantly being forced into being ineffective; it affects morale and how the lawyers view the adversarial system. Everything becomes eroded. Many people plead to things that they probably didn't do because they cannot keep coming back to court or they just get sick of it.

Likewise, another public defender in St. Louis stated, —the caseload makes me forget to do important tasks, like one instance when I forgot to file a motion for a new trial. ‖ He added that —there is an unwritten policy in the office that depositions are not done on C or D felony cases. ‖ We are convinced that lawyers are effectively forced to choose which cases they will actively pursue and rush the rest of the cases through the system.

- Zeal Vitiated by Morale

While recognizing and placing great value on the duty of zealous advocacy on behalf of clients, attorneys interviewed expressed their concern that when morale drops to a certain point, it becomes difficult for attorneys to muster the energy to continue fighting, particularly when they are almost always defeated.

The theme of many of our conversations with attorneys and staff was a desire to do one's best undermined by the reality of overwhelming caseloads and unsustainable salaries. A support staff member in one office reported that —morale is horrible. ‖ An attorney reported that even though attorneys —want to get in there and fight for the client, the caseload is ridiculous and the pay is bad, ‖noting that —if the economy was better, people would be jumping ship. ‖ Another experienced attorney reported that, because of the caseload, ―the constitutional rights and protections that make us who we are, are just being eroded ‖and that the bad economy has created a ―ticking time bomb ‖before ―a massive flight from the system for better jobs. ‖ Still another attorney explained that he can barely feed his family and confessed that ―the sheer number of cases makes it impossible to do good work. ‖

One attorney explained that sometimes she goes home and ―feelsso tired of losing ‖ ― particularly when it feels as if she has lost because of ―a lack of resources or time. ‖ She explained that ―it can crush the spirit ‖and make it ―hard to keep the fire day to day. ‖ A supervisor explained that morale is affected by the stress level. An office manager explained that morale has gotten ―increasingly worse ‖and that there have been ―more complaints about attorneys being overworked. ‖Another lawyer told us that she is able to do just enough not to get sued; she wakes up in the middle of the night with a feeling of suffocation.

It is worth noting that, frequently, we have found public defenders unwilling to admit that they have failed to do all that is necessary, for fear of being charged with ineffective assistance of counsel. Despite their ―understandable reluctance ‖to report that ―they either are not, or may not, be providing services consistent with their ethical duties and performance standards, ‖[16] MSPD attorneys demonstrated remarkable candor and bravery in their 2009 interviews, revealing concerns that clients were, in many cases, failing to receive the effective assistance of counsel because attorneys were simply unable to handle the devastating caseloads for which they were responsible. These lawyers should be commended for their efforts to expose the problem rather than simply shielding themselves. Their remarkable candor is a testament to their sincere dedication to the clients they serve.

- Lack of Essential Supervision

The ABA has concluded that adequate supervision normally requires:

[16] Eight Guidelines at 9.

> (1) that meetings be held between an experienced lawyer supervisor and the lawyer being supervised; (2) that the work on cases represented by the supervisee be thoroughly reviewed through case reviews, mock presentations or other reviews; (3) that the lawyer supervisor reviews selected files of the supervisee; (4) that selected court documents prepared by the supervisee be reviewed; (5) that periodic court observations of the supervisee's representation of clients be conducted; and (6) that the number of cases represented by the supervisee, as well as their complexity and likely time commitments, be carefully assessed. In overseeing the work of those providing public defense services, it is important that supervisors have access to data through a management information system, which shows the lawyer's current caseload, the status of cases represented by the lawyer, and other important relevant data.

Eight Principles at 8.

The June 2009 site visits provided significant insight into the challenges of training, oversight, and evaluation at MSPD. The conversations with attorneys—particularly outside of Kansas City and St. Louis—painted a picture of a situation where supervisors lack the time to even discuss supervisees' cases, much less conduct mock presentations or review draft pleadings. Supervisors simply cannot do the job they are tasked with doing; it is just too much. It was reported to us that most public defenders around the state, including supervisors, carry full caseloads. Nor is this a new situation. In Fixing Missouri's Broken Public Defender System: Pay Up Front or Pay the Consequences (2008), it was observed that:

> almost all of the District Defenders, those attorneys in supervisor positions, carry full caseloads. With the demands of such cases, the result is inadequate training, monitoring, and supervising of personnel. The Director stated that this issue increases the risk of liability of the state, leads to a high turnover rate for attorneys, and decreases the quality of representation for clients.

Id. at 9. As described in the article, as well as to us in our 2009 interviews, the demand of supervisors' own caseloads—particularly the homicides, sex crimes, and other serious felonies—inevitably results in inadequate mentoring, training and supervision of personnel.

Several attorneys expressed concern that even when supervisors carry a reduced caseload, they lack sufficient time to dedicate to the development of more junior attorneys. One attorney explained the dilemma of a reduced supervisory caseload as follows:

> [A supervisor's caseload] is not higher than the recommended caseload. But, [supervisors] are still working just as much. The half-load that you get consists of the worst cases that come into the office. They are the most difficult and the most complicated. They are emotionally difficult. You also become the therapist for the staff. On paper, it may look like a lower caseload but it is not. You are still working the same amount of time as those who have more of a caseload. Even if you take away half of those cases, the rest of the time would be spent on the remaining cases because there is so much more that needs to be done.

This attorney explained that he was sure, at the end of each case, that he had not done enough.

Another supervisor explained that she knew she needed to be supervising certain attorneys and cases more closely, but that "it's hard to keep track of people." She said that there are attorneys who "need extra help" but that oftentimes those are the attorneys who do not seek out supervision. Her conclusion was that she needed to "reach out" to them but, unfortunately, that rarely happened because she simply had too many things to do and her attention was often focused on those attorneys diligent enough to seek out her guidance.

Supervisees conveyed a sense of near-panic at the lack of supervision provided in the face of overwhelming caseloads. One entry-level attorney told us that she had only been in the office for six weeks and had already accumulated seventy cases, a mix of felonies and misdemeanors. She explained that she does not know what to do, has had very little supervision, and is "scared to death" of going to court. A senior PD explained that with high turnover, there are always many new attorneys, but due to caseloads, they get next to no supervision; what results is a crop of attorneys faced with crushing caseloads who "do not know what effective representation is" due to a crippling lack of experience and supervision

These observations with respect to training represent a significant change from the 2005 report, which gave high grades to the MSPD's training program, and are a symptom of a system that is in decline.

- Client Complaints & Lack of Trust

—Client complaints may also be an indication that representation is inadequate due to excessive workloads.‖ Eight Guidelines at 10 n.24. One public defender stated that many clients get angry because they think they are just getting passed through the system. As a consequence, the attorney has to spend a lot of additional time working to earn the trust of skeptical clients. Many clients feel that the public defender simply pushes pleas because they want to get rid of the case and have fewer to deal with.

One experienced lawyer in the St. Louis City office stated that more and more clients are saying, —I feel sorry for you because you have such a high caseload.‖ She added that, —if you had more time to talk to them that would be different. You don't even realize how much more you could do for the clients. There are a lot of reasons why. Sitting down in an office and having an hour-long meeting with every client is simply impossible. Being able to sit at the jail as long as you need because you've got to gain their trust is impossible. Here you just feel like you have to go through the basics—try to establish your rapport with them, a trust level with them—and every time I go to the jail I have to see five people. That takes me half a day.‖

One lawyer reported that if her clients trusted her, they would get better results in their cases. For instance, she would be able to persuade a client that it was worth turning down a plea offer to fight a good suppression issue, or in the opposite scenario, convince a client to believe her when explaining that his suppression issue was frivolous but that the plea offer was a good one. She explained, however, that she simply lacks the time to build the attorney-client relationship she would need to achieve these objectives. Faced with so much cynicism and skepticism on the part of clients, several attorneys reported that client contact at times seems counter-productive.

This evidence strongly supports the conclusion that MSPD attorneys are regularly unable to comply with their fundamental obligations to clients, examples of which are provided by the ABA's First Guideline. It appears, moreover, that the situation has only grown worse over time.

B. MSPD's Fifteen-Year Effort at Reform

1993: Signs of "Near-Crisis"

As previously discussed, in June 1993, the Spangenberg Group released its first study in connection with Missouri's Public Defender System. That study noted that while there had been a substantial increase in funding in connection with the creation of a state-wide public defender system in 1989, the bulk of that funding went to overhead connected with opening several new offices. Two essential problems, dating as far back as 1993, were simply neglected: "staff salaries [and] staff caseload." 1993 Report at 4. Remarkably, the findings from the 1993 Report closely mirror our present findings, although the problems appear to have grown far worse over time:

> [T]he increased caseload and the low salaries have led to a high turnover of staff over the last two years and several additional experienced attorneys indicated that they may also leave. The effect of the workload, the low salary and the turnover has not surprisingly resulted in morale problems in some offices. Many attorneys feel that without additional resources, they will not be able to provide competent representation to all of their clients. We echo this sentiment in very strong terms.

1993 Report at 5. The 1993 Report concluded that the MSPD lacked "the necessary resources to provide competent representation," that "[t]he legal staff need[ed] to be increased," and that an emphasis needed to be placed on "salary increases and increas[ing] support staff." Id. at 6. As far back as 1993, "all staff members [were] underpaid [and] overworked." Id. at 7. The 1993 Report found that there were "serious problems requiring immediate attention and that MSPD was facing a —near crisis‖ situation, id. at 2, 8, and that, —[i]n a word, the Missouri State Public Defender system is the most poorly funded of all the state public defender systems in the country,‖ id. at 20. Following the issuance of the 1993 report, the MSPD began the long process of seeking additional funding and personnel from the Legislature.

2002-2006: Efforts to Expose the Crisis Succeed as Efforts at Change Fail

Close to a decade later, in February 2002, the American Bar Association published its Ten Principles of a Public Defender Delivery System, discussed supra at 10.

Despite requests for more funding year after year, MSPD was consistently denied the substantial additional resources it required. As Douglas Copeland, former President of the Missouri Bar, explained, —I guess I was kind of easy and more understanding of the legislators when we had those very difficult budget years back pre-2005.‖ He noted, however, that this excuse could not explain why the legislature had failed to act in the years following 2005, when it had a budget surplus.

Copeland explained that it was not until appropriations hearings at the beginning of the 2005 legislative session that there began to develop an —awareness that had been lacking prior to that time . . . as to the magnitude of the problem and the potential for a collapse of the public defender system, and what would obviously then be the collapse of the criminal justice system.‖ In 2005, after it became clear that disaster was imminent, the Board of Governors of the Missouri Bar created a Public Defender Task Force to explore the contours of the crisis. On June 10, 2005, the Public Defender Commission made its findings explicit, announcing that —with increasing caseloads and without increased staffing, there is no effective control over the Missouri State Public Defender caseloads. The Commission further finds that the situation is already at a crisis level with trends pointing to an impending disaster in Missouri‘s criminal justice system.‖

In July 2005, the Task Force contracted with TSG, as discussed above, to analyze, review and prepare a report on the state of the MSPD. The 2005 study concluded that:

> [W]e remain convinced that the Missouri State Public Defender System is operating in a crisis mode and cannot ensure that clients are being provided with adequate and meaningful representation day to day . . . [W]e are able to determine that the program is severely under-funded, the salaries are pathetic, and that the appropriation for the Missouri State Public Defender is the lowest of all state public defenders in the country.

TSG found that MSPD had failed to meet seven of the ABA's Ten Principles. TSG further concluded that "in order to reach the average per capita expenditure for all southern states, Missouri would need an additional appropriation of $16 million." At that time, MSPD Director J. Marty Robinson announced that MSPD would have to hire 100 more attorneys to bring the current system up to the caseload standard of 235 cases per attorney per year, a standard that had been established by Governor John Ashcroft in 1989.

Armed with this information, the Public Defender Task Force endeavored to attract the attention of government decision-makers as well as the general public.[17] While its efforts at publicity were successful, and led to some improvements,[18] they failed to effect major change. The Missouri Bar, in Douglas Copeland's view, "spent a lot of time bringing [the situation] to the attention of the legislators and to the governor's office to the point where they can no longer say, 'We didn't understand that there's a problem.'" Shortly thereafter, in 2006, the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility issued its ethics opinion,[19] discussed above, which made clear that there are no exceptions for public defenders, as the rules of professional conduct require all lawyers to furnish competent and diligent service to their clients, irrespective of their means. While the Legislature did provide $2 million for pay raises in 2006, in an effort to slow a record turnover rate, Copeland made clear:

> I know [the legislature] gave [MSPD] two million bucks, . . . but it still left us at 49th among 50 states. It's a hard nut to crack, to understand how the legislature works as a body and doesn't get problems like this resolved.

Notice to Legislature of Imminent Constitutional Crisis

As more and more indicators pointed to the fact that MSPD was confronting a crisis of great magnitude, the Missouri Senate established an Interim Committee on the Missouri State Public Defender System. The committee was tasked with reviewing the then-current effectiveness of the MSPD. Copeland reported that the three main concerns of the Bar were as follows:

- A "fear that the public defender members of the Bar are currently required to violate the ethical code of attorneys because their caseload is so great;"
- A concern "that indigent criminal defendants might not be adequately represented;" and
- A concern that "the criminal justice system is not working for all people."

The Missouri Senate took testimony on these questions, including the testimony of Norman Lefstein, professor of law and long-time expert in indigent defense services, before the Missouri Senate Appropriations Committee. Professor Lefstein explained that he had been familiar with MSPD since the late 1980's. Even then, he testified, experts were "shocked by [its] intolerably overburdened condition" demonstrating "that the problems of the Missouri Defender are of long duration." Statement of Norman Lefstein on the Missouri State Public Defender System at 3 (Jan. 29, 2007). In its 2007 corrected report, the Interim Committee settled upon four issues, designated as —crises, ‖ which it found the —most severe and concerning, ‖ namely the: 1. Caseload Crisis; 2. Retention Crisis; 3. Management Crisis; and 4. Office Space Crisis.[20]

The Public Defender Commission's 2007 annual report echoed these concerns, and made clear that the severity of the crisis left open only one viable option: —Only by refusing cases, a move that would precipitate a constitutional crisis in Missouri's courts, can Missouri's Public Defenders meet the ethical considerations they are bound by. A solution must come from outside the Public Defender System and it must come soon. ‖ The Chief Justice of the Missouri Supreme Court, Laura Denvir Stith, in her 2008 State of the Judiciary Address, took the following position:

> Few [of the state's needs] could be more critical than in the criminal justice system, where we are on the verge of risking release of some prisoners for failure to give them a speedy trial because there simply is no public defender available to advocate on their behalf. I cannot emphasize enough the urgency of this crisis[.]

Senate Bill 37, sponsored by Republican Senator Jack Goodman, which proposed to set caseload maximums and contract with private attorneys to handle cases exceeding those maximums, was held out as one possible solution. Senate Bill 37 proposed to establish maximum caseload standards to ensure that the system was adequately fulfilling the state's constitutional obligations to provide effective assistance of counsel and was complying with the rules of ethical and professional conduct applicable to attorneys licensed to practice law in Missouri. According to Senator Goodman, —Because of a growing shortage in personnel in the public defender system, some attorneys have a larger caseload than they are ethically really able to handle, ‖adding that, —[w]hen you have a caseload that is too large, you don't have time to devote to each case like you should. ‖

The office space crisis must be addressed before the caseload crisis may be resolved. As it stands, pursuant to Section 600.040.1, the burden and expense of office space and utility services for local public defender offices rests with the county served by each office. County governments are often reluctant to shoulder this burden, perceived as an unfunded mandate, with serious consequences. Public defenders —have endured the indignities of insect infestation, lack of privacy, leaky roofs, and cramped quarters, to name a few. ‖ 2008 Fiscal Report at 82. Even more important, there simply is not enough space. If the desperate need for more attorneys is fulfilled, there will be no space to put them, and MSPD will be at the mercy of the counties—counties who have let the lights go out and the rent go unpaid (leading to eviction notices).

A change in the legislation, specifically the repeal of Section 600.040.1, is necessary if meaningful change is to be effected.

Despite unanimous passage in the Senate and a substantial majority in the House, on July 13, 2009, Governor Nixon vetoed the bill, reasoning as follows:

> Senate Committee Substitute for Senate Bill No. 37 reflects a well-intentioned effort by the General Assembly to address the challenges being experienced by the Missouri Public Defender System. However, while I acknowledge that the public defender system is operating under significant stresses, I disagree that the solution is to allow the Public Defender Commission to establish maximum caseload standards and create waiting lists for criminal defendants.
> . . .
> While I commend the General Assembly for its effort in addressing this issue, after considerable thought and consideration, I have concluded that this approach vests too much unfettered discretion with the Public Defender System to set maximum caseload limits that will result in significant responsibilities shifting to other participants in the criminal justice system to the detriment of all parties, including crime victims, without appreciable benefits being realized.

The governor's veto led the St. Louis Dispatch to conclude, in an editorial, that —Missouri public defenders should ready the doomsday option. ‖ The editorial board set forth the history as follows:

> Caseloads have been climbing for years while state spending remained flat. Public defenders began pleading for better funding nearly a decade ago but were told by lawmakers to explore other solutions. So they set out to develop standards for maximum caseloads, but were told that they lacked the legislative authority. SB 37 would have given it to them. With his veto, Mr. Nixon has returned public defenders to square one—agreeing that they have been correct from the start: They need more resources, which means more people, which means more money.

July 17, 2009 Editorial, at A16. It concluded that if MSPD is pushed to handle caseloads so large that clients cannot be provided with adequate representation, it will be left with only one option, to "turn down cases," because "[t]hey have no alternative." Their "duty is to say no" if they can't meet their professional obligations."

Notice to Courts of Inability to Accept Additional Appointments

The MSPD did not limit its efforts to the legislature, however. It sought relief in the courts as well. In November 2007, the State Public Defender Commission voted without dissent to adopt a procedure by which it could refuse new cases. The procedure authorized the director of the MSPD to declare an office "of limited availability" when its caseload became excessive. The MSPD Deputy Director of Litigation's assessment was that most offices were already "at a crisis point and could qualify."

Its efforts to implement the procedure, however, were cut short by the courts. In August 2008, Director of the MSPD, J. Mary Robinson, determined that the District 13 Public Defender Office had exceeded the maximum caseload standard for a period of three consecutive calendar months. Pursuant to the 18 CSR 10-4.010(2)(b), on August 27, 2008, the Director notified the presiding Judge of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit that the District 13 Office was at risk of being certified for limited availability.

On October 1, 2008, the Director certified the District 13 Office to be in limited availability status. The Director accompanied the certification with statistical verification showing that the District 13 Office had exceeded its maximum allowable caseload under the Public Defender Commission's Caseload Crisis Protocol for at least three consecutive months. On October 6, 2008, the District Public Defender notified the presiding judge of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit that the District 13 Office had been certified as being of limited availability. The District Defender informed the court that the District 13 Office would not accept probation violation proceedings pursuant to a suspended execution of sentence until the District 13 Office was reinstated to full availability.

When a public defender attempted to put this policy into practice, however, filing a written notice with the court that the public defender was unavailable to represent a defendant in a probation revocation matter, the judge refused, appointing the public defender to the case, despite the regulation and the notice.

On November 20, 2008, the Missouri Public Defender Commission, the Director of the Public Defender System, and the individual public defender subsequently filed a petition for a writ of prohibition with the Court of Appeals for the Western District, seeking to restrain the trial judge from appointing the public defender to the indigent probationer's case. The Court of Appeals granted a stay of the probation violation hearing and initially issued a preliminary order in prohibition restraining the judge from proceeding further in the case.[21]

The Court of Appeals for the Western District, relying on Section 600.042.4 of the Missouri Revised Statutes, concluded that—contrary to the MSPD's claim that the judge lacked jurisdiction, had exceeded his authority, and had abused his discretion in appointing the public defender—the judge did not err. To the contrary, the Court of Appeals concluded that an agency regulation is void if it is beyond the scope of authority conferred upon the state agency or if it attempts to expand or modify statutes. In its view, the "Public Defender Commission's regulation to not accept assignments on probation violation cases where the defendant had previously received a suspended execution of sentence conflict[ed] with section 600.042(3) [which] requires the Public Defender to represent those indigent defendants facing a violation of probation or parole." The Court of Appeals rejected the argument that the language of chapter 600.042.3 permitted such regulations. According to the Court, section 600.042.3 "does not give the director and the defenders discretion to refuse to accept cases they are mandated to accept under section 600.042.4. ‖

At the close of the opinion, the Court included a significant, final footnote:

> As an intermediate appellate court, this court is bound to follow the law established by the Missouri Supreme Court. As this court is a court of error and not a policy making court, we are bound to follow the Supreme Court's decisions . . . [which have] held that the Director cannot refuse to represent the persons who are entitled to representation under section 600.042.4.[22]

The Caseload Crisis Time Study

As part of its efforts to develop caseload standards for determining when an office's caseload became excessive, the MSPD conducted the Caseload Crisis Time Study from September 20, 2006 through November 14, 2006. Using a computerized time-keeping system, the study collected data on the amount of time attorneys and support staff spent on different types of case activities and involved all public defenders. Attorneys were asked to record the number of hours, in fifteen minute increments, spent on general case-related activities, case specific activities, and non-case related activities. The total time per day was then compared to the organization's payroll timesheets to ensure that time was being entered for all activities. Prior to the data collection period, training materials were developed and staff members were required to participate in training sessions.

Table I displays the results of the MSPD case weighting study as analyzed by TSG. These are the raw results, and represent the actual time spent per disposition in the various case type categories.

While TSG researchers are satisfied that the methodology used during the time keeping period accurately captured the amount of time spent on these case types, the results only provide an accurate description of a system in crisis. Any reliance on these numbers, even as a baseline from which to develop appropriate caseload standards, would only serve to institutionalize an already crippled system.

The conclusion that MSPD attorneys are faced with such obstacles to the provision of effective representation is further supported by their responses to the Time Sufficiency survey, which was conducted in conjunction with the case weighting study.

[23] Assuming a 40-hour work week, a full-time attorney is paid for 2,080 hours per year. Subtracting 216 average holiday and annual leave hours, and an additional 51.5 hours in attorney sick leave taken during 2006, the average attorney had 1812.5 available work hours per year.

For each of the separate tasks, MSPD asked attorneys and support staff to evaluate the statement, "I have enough time to complete the activity in a reasonable and satisfactory way." The response index ranged from "Almost Never" below 20% through "Often" above 80%. A response "NA not my job" was included for tasks or functions that attorneys or support staff did not regularly perform or did not apply to their specific job.

For each task, average response scores were constructed. As these tasks were determined to be essential by MSPD, items with average response scores below 3 represent items where attorneys feel they "almost never" or "infrequently" or "sometimes" have enough time to complete the activity in a reasonable and satisfactory way. Table II presents the average attorney response scores by functional area (MSPD functional area divisions used). Most areas fall below the average 3 score. Indeed, attorneys report only two functional areas – client contact and pre-trial investigation – in which, on average, they sometimes have enough time to complete the activity satisfactorily. In all other activities, especially for preliminary hearings, the attorneys infrequently have sufficient time.

One of the most evident failures of the current system, and one echoed in virtually every interview conducted with attorneys and support staff at the MSPD during our site visits, is that there is a tremendous lack of support staff resources available. As Table III demonstrates, TSG found that only about one-third of the total time spent on cases comes from support staff. Put another way, for every hour of attorney work, there are only enough support staff resources to provide 30 minutes of support, a level that is woefully inadequate when compared to other jurisdictions. Our site visits confirmed that, due to the remarkable lack of support staff, public defenders are required to spend a great deal of time on what is properly support staff work; the time lost is time that could be spent doing legal work which support personnel are not equipped to perform.

Staffing Ratios

This alarming inadequacy is further supported by MSPD staffing records from the last six years, which show there is roughly one-half an FTE support staff person for each attorney. This is the lowest staff-to-attorney level of any jurisdiction recently studied by TSG. As Table IV indicates below, Missouri‘s staff ratio – especially in felony cases – is almost twice as low as that found in Maricopa County (Phoenix), Arizona. It is just 70 percent the size of other jurisdictions in a national study conducted by the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics, and as TSG strongly concludes, it rests at a level that is woefully insufficient to provide effective and adequate representation to MSPD's clients.

As discussed above, during our 2009 site visits, members of TSP held meetings in Kansas City and St. Louis with a number of District Defenders and other experienced attorneys from across the state. The participants' feedback supported and amplified the findings noted above and reinforced our conclusions from other interviews performed during our site work. Put plainly, there is a tremendous lack of support staff available to assist attorneys in their daily practice. Attorneys are spending time on activities that should be performed by support staff, and largely as a result, the MPSD's lawyers are so overloaded with cases that they are unable to provide effective representation in all of their cases.

Comparative Caseload Standards

When TSG began this project, it fully expected to provide caseload standards specific to the MSPD system; indeed, a robust, well-functioning system of defense can benefit from caseload standards that help to ensure that public defenders are not overburdened in the provision of defense services. However, the current state of affairs in Missouri is so dire, the resources so limited, and the participants so accustomed to a system that is fundamentally broken that caseload standards are not only inappropriate at this point but would serve only to institutionalize bad practices.

The findings above on staffing indicate how much of the attorneys' time in Missouri is taken up with tasks that ought to be—and in other jurisdictions are—the responsibility of support staff members. To incorporate these activities into a caseload standard would only endorse the division of time in Missouri between public defenders and their staff, a situation that is fundamentally flawed. Before determining the maximum number of cases that Missouri public defenders should be handling, state leaders must first provide sufficient staff resources so that attorneys are truly doing the work of legal advocates and not serving also as investigators, paralegals, and secretaries.

TSG also has concerns about whether public defenders are truly representing the full panoply of eligible defendants, or if they are systematically missing or turning away particular categories of defendants. Given TSG's serious concerns about the latter, See infra at 53-60, we fear that the universe of dispositions upon which the time study was based does not represent an adequate sampling of cases which public defenders should be handling. Whether this situation reflects a deliberate decision of the MSPD to turn away clients or instead represents a system in which potential clients do not seek the services of a public defender even when they are eligible, the results are the same: an already overburdened MSPD is not serving potential clients, and any ensuing caseload standard would institutionalize present practices by condoning the status quo.

Finally, TSG notes the conclusion of the attorneys who participated in the caseload adjustment meetings that the environment within which attorneys are currently working makes it impossible to estimate the average amount of time a case should take in order to provide effective representation. Although well intentioned, it is as if public defenders have been forced to practice so long in a broken system of representation that they do not know and cannot even imagine what an acceptable system of defense would permit. To be sure, they can estimate their current workload, but when asked to estimate the resources and caseloads necessary to provide an effective and acceptable level of representation, participants could not provide a collective answer. Missouri's system of public defense is so underfunded, and the staffing so inadequate, that MSPD will require substantially more resources before most of its lawyers can fully comprehend all the requirements that an adequate system necessarily entails.

A comparison to caseload standards in other jurisdictions may help Missouri officials to understand just how underfunded and inadequate their system of public defense has been. Note that the following discussion and presentation of comparative caseload standards are not specific recommendations for MSPD, but instead are presented to provide a context in which to view the current caseloads handled by the system. As already argued, any attempt to develop appropriate attorney caseloads for the MSPD must be accompanied both by a substantial increase in resources and intensive efforts to ensure that the MSPD is representing the full range of eligible clients.

Moreover, it should be emphasized that caseload standards are not appropriate for measuring the quality of representation provided to clients in any individual case. Nor, without additional data, is it appropriate to apply these standards to any individual attorney, small group of attorneys, or even a small office. Individual attorney workload must always take into consideration the experience of the attorney, the difficulty of their current cases and the amount of support available to the attorney in terms of clerical, investigative and administrative resources.

In 1971, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, a federal agency within the United States Department of Justice, commissioned the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals (hereinafter "NAC"). One of six reports issued by the NAC, the Report on Courts, published in 1973, has had substantial impact because it is the only national source that has attempted to quantify a maximum annual public defender caseload. During the preparation of the Report on Courts, the NAC relied mostly on qualitative and anecdotal information to formulate its standards.[24] Although the NAC Standards have not been formally adopted by the American Bar Association, the standards have been cited by the ABA and referred to by some practitioners and researchers in the criminal justice field, if only for the lack of other readily available numerical national standards. The Ten Principles, supra at 10, state that "National caseload standards should in no event be exceeded," and references the NAC standards as an example of existing national caseload standards.

The NAC Report on Courts articulated express standards for indigent defense services with the goals of expanding resources for professional and support staff; increasing the amount of state versus county funding of indigent defense services; and representing all eligible defendants during all stages of criminal proceedings. The NAC standards also called for specific criteria for initial client contact, parity of pay with attorney associates at local law firms, and numerical caseload levels.

With regard to the caseload levels of public defenders, the NAC established these numerical standards based on estimates by seasoned defense attorneys that public defenders should not handle more than 150 felonies per year, 400 misdemeanors per year, 200 juvenile court cases per year, 200 Mental Health Act cases per year, or 25 appeals per year when that attorney is handling only one type of case.[25] These standards were adopted based entirely upon estimates obtained from a number of advisory committee members.

The NAC standards certainly have their weaknesses, not accounting for local variations in practice, differences in case complexity, or ever-evolving laws and policies in the various states. Moreover, when the NAC standards were promulgated in 1973 the national landscape was much different than it is today or even a decade ago: capital punishment was not a sentencing possibility in any state; behaviors and crimes that did not exist in 1973, such as Internet-based crimes, have since become more prevalent; most jurisdictions around the country have instituted "tough on crime" policies, such as habitual offender statutes and "mandatory minimum" sentencing requirements; mental health institutions have been de-institutionalized and closed, and many people with mental health disorders find themselves facing criminal charges and jail time in lieu of treatment. In addition to traditional penalties, many convictions now carry collateral consequences, such as the loss of government benefits, fewer employment opportunities, and deportation. The changes listed above, among several others, illustrate the increased complexity of providing adequate representation.

As much as TSG has concerns about the NAC standards – and about the process of using national caseload standards to draw conclusions about specific jurisdictions – it is nonetheless instructive to consider the NAC process when contemplating an "outer marker" for attorney

[25] National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals: Courts, Washington, D.C., Standard 13.12 (Jan. 1973). caseloads. No responsible public defense system with which TSG is familiar would set its attorneys' caseloads any higher than the NAC standards, and by the same token, a caseload above the NAC level should be considered presumptively unreasonable. In this respect, TSG agrees with the "Statement on Caseloads and Workloads[26]" issued by the American Council of Chief Defenders (ACCD)[27] in August 2007, which recommends "that public defender and assigned counsel caseloads not exceed the NAC recommended levels…" The resolution goes on to state that, in many jurisdictions, maximum caseloads should be lower than those recommended by the NAC. The statement also discusses many of the reasons that representation of indigent defendants has become even more complicated since the NAC standards were developed, including, among other factors, increases in collateral consequences of convictions, an increase in the number of jurisdictions enacting persistent offender statutes and an increase in the severity of those penalties, a dramatic increase in penalties for people charged with sex offenses, and an increase in the number of juveniles charged as adults. No matter how those standards are defined, the caseload of the MSPD vastly exceeds acceptable levels, especially considering that the system has a woefully inadequate number of support staff.

The Washington (State) Defender Association has adopted caseload standards limiting the caseload of a full-time public defense attorney per year to 150 felonies; 300 misdemeanors; 250 juvenile offender cases; 60 juvenile dependency cases; 250 civil commitment cases; or 25 appeals cases with the case heard on the record. Those standards are careful to point out that additional consideration should be given to particularly complex cases, and set forth a case credit system for those more complicated case types.[28] It should be noted that these caseload standards are not binding upon the defenders.

Previous case weighting studies performed by TSG have yielded the caseload standards appearing on the following page. Since the case type categories studied were developed independently in each jurisdiction, the specific categories differ somewhat from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. King County, Washington; Maricopa County and Pima County, Arizona; and the State of Colorado are presented here.

Table V provides a summary of the caseload standards from those jurisdictions by equivalent case type, where possible. Please note that, as discussed throughout, direct comparisons between jurisdictions cannot take into account all of the different factors that influence the complexity of any particular case type. In some cases, the case type equivalents between jurisdictions are not exact. The existence of diversion and drug treatment courts, early disposition courts, and the severity of potential sentences and charging practices are unique to each jurisdiction and can substantially contribute to the differences between jurisdictions. Nonetheless, it is important to note that all of these caseload standards are significantly lower than the current situation in Missouri.

The caseload standards established in these other studies were conducted under circumstances where the offices had far more support staff resources than is the case in Missouri. In one jurisdiction, Pima County, the table presents standards that have been adjusted upward to ensure that the public defender is being utilized to their full potential.

They are only presented to provide a rough comparison between jurisdictions, and will change as the ratio between more serious and less serious case types fluctuate.

The MSPD has been struggling with the development of an adequate caseload standard for many years. The Public Defender Commission found in 2005 that —excessive caseloads can and do prevent Missouri State Public Defenders from fulfilling the statutory requirements [for representation] and their ethical obligations and responsibilities as lawyers. ‖[29]

[29] Missouri State Public Defender Commission‘s Findings and Directive on Caseload Standards in Accordance With Professional and Statutory Obligations, Finding 9 (adopted June 10, 2005) (draft copy).

Adding to the burden on the Public Defender system is the method by which conflicts are handled. Conflict cases are often transferred to an attorney in another MSPD office. This often involves a significant amount of travel time, and would further decrease the number of cases an office is able to handle.

Before any caseload standards can be established to provide a reasonable formula for projecting adequate attorney staffing needs, or to provide a maximum caseload number above which public defender offices should start to decline representation, a substantial increase in support staff resources must be in place. While the internal case weighting study performed by the MSPD may provide some insight to the relative complexity of different case types, the final results of the study and the subsequent time sufficiency survey, combined with our efforts to adjust those results to provide workable caseload standards, lead to some inescapable conclusions:

A. MSPD requires an increase in the number of support staff and investigative resources of at least 50 percent before a case weighting study would be able to provide a measure of attorney representation in a functioning indigent defense system.

B. MSPD attorneys, even if they had sufficient support staff and investigative resources, are disposing of cases at a rate far greater than the NAC recommended maximum caseload standards and well in excess of any jurisdiction in which TSG case weighting studies have established caseload standards. This has been the case for many years, with virtually no increase in attorney positions and an ever-increasing number of cases being appointed.

C. MSPD, in its efforts to control workload and to provide effective representation, has been turning away cases by performing triage, and turning away defendants who have managed to raise enough capital to post bond. See infra at 53-60. This results in the case weighting study having measured the amount of time it takes to provide representation only in those cases selected by the public defender, and not in the universe of cases in which representation should be provided.

D. The failure of the legislature to provide relief to MSPD and the failure of the judiciary to question the practices which allow defendants to be refused representation for so many years have exacerbated the crisis. While MSPD has continued to press for funding increases, it has been forced to take steps to reduce the burden on its own attorneys, effectively denying representation to those who are constitutionally eligible.

C. INDIGENCY DETERMINATIONS

The June 2009 site visits provided significant new information, particularly in the context of indigency determinations. This information appears to support a hypothesis first developed in 2005, namely that MSPD was declining to represent individuals who were deemed ―not indigent enough‖ based on an informal, arguably expanded definition of indigency. What we did not anticipate in 2005, but was reported to us in 2009—and subsequently validated with data from updated MSPD figures—was the breadth of the problem, at least as it presently stands.[30] It now appears that, as each and every effort made to stem the tide of the caseload crisis failed, indigency determinations became a backdoor method of case disposal.

This situation is reflective of the larger principle that ―lawyers have as their primary obligation the responsibility to represent the interest of current clients.‖ Eight Guidelines at 16 (emphasis added). To avoid being forced to choose between existing clients and new clients, it makes sense that public defenders and their staff, when determining indigency, would tend to err on the side of exclusion in indigency determinations. We argued this very point in 2005, stating that indigency determinations by MSPD, rather than an independent, disinterested agency, create a conflict of interest or at the very least an appearance of conflict. In 2009, it seems clear that there is more than an appearance of conflict, but indeed an actual conflict, which has had significant ramifications in terms of indigent defendants' right to counsel in Missouri.

Statutes, Rules & Guidelines Relating to Indigency Determinations by MSPD

Section 600.086 of the Missouri Revised Statutes states that "[a] person shall be considered eligible for representation under sections 600.011 to 600.048 and 600.086 to 600.096 when it appears from all the circumstances of the case including his ability to make bond, his income and the number of persons dependent on him for support that the person does not have the means at his disposal or available to him to obtain counsel in his behalf and is indigent as hereafter defined."[31] Pursuant to the statute, the MSPD is responsible for making indigency determinations. 600.082, RSMo. The statute also permits "the commission [to] establish and enforce such further rules for courts and defenders in determining indigency as may be necessary."

The statute regarding eligibility for representation states that the ability of a defendant to make a bond is a circumstance to be considered in making the determination, but not a bright-line rule.[32] Prior to 2006, however, pursuant to its statutory authority, the Public Defender Commission had established Guidelines for Determination of Indigence (hereinafter "GDI") which included an explicit "presumption" that a defendant was ineligible for the appointment of a public defender if released on a bail of $5,000 or more.[33] In our 2005 study, we concluded that

[31] We have previously noted the peculiar and problematic nature of the statutory scheme. See 2005 study at 18-19 & n.28 ("Unlike most states, Missouri judges do not have the inherent authority to appoint counsel in the interests of justice unless a defendant has completed and signed an application and the Public Defender has determined the defendant to be indigent. This has created some tension between the Public Defender, who is concerned about high caseloads and limited resources, and the judges who are concerned about the efficiency of the courts.").

[32] Missouri Revised Statute 600.086.1.

[33] 18 C.S.R. 10-3.010(2)(B)(2) (2005).

both the —indigency presumption ‖and the role of MSPD in determining indigency appeared, at the outset, problematic.

Following that report, in 2006, the Commission changed the language—striking the following language creating a presumption of ineligibility based on the ability to make bond:

> Bond-If the defendant has been released on bail on any case in the amount of five thousand dollars ($5,000) or more, a presumption is created that the defendant is not indigent and the ability of the defendant to meet the bail must be given consideration[.]

The post-2006 Guidelines likewise changed the language regarding mortgages and assets, striking the mortgage subheading altogether, and modifying the language regarding assets so that no specific amounts are included. The following language was not included in the 2006 (present) version:

> Mortgage-If the defendant owns or is buying a home, the defendant‘s equity must be determined. If defendant‘s equity exceeds ten thousand dollars ($10,000), the defendant would not qualify for a public defender; and
> Assets-Unless the defendant is charged with a Class A felony, cash in excess of one thousand dollars ($1,000) creates a presumption of non-indigency. Bank accounts, stocks, bonds, jewelry, equity in insurance and any other financial assets must be considered. All vehicles are assets and must also be considered. If the total value of the asset(s) is more than two thousand dollars ($2,000), the defendant is presumed not to be indigent.[34]

The language on assets was substantially simplified and generalized, subsuming the discussion of equity in a home, such that now the standard is as follows: —If the person owns or is buying a home, the equity must be determined and considered on the question of indigence. Bank accounts, stocks, bonds, jewelry, equity in insurance and any other financial assets must be considered. ‖18 CSR 10-3.010 (2009).

The 2006 revisions to the GDI served to increase discretion while decreasing transparency in indigency determinations, by eliminating the presumptions that attached to particular sums, leaving the MSPD free "to consider" these factors in making its determinations.[35]

MSPD Indigency Determinations in Practice

As discussed above, the June 2009 site visits provided valuable information about the reality of indigency standards and determinations, as they exist at present in Missouri. These data supported the conclusion that MSPD's role in making indigency determinations is not only inherently problematic, but leads to deeply troubling consequences, including what appear to be repeated denials of counsel to indigent criminal defendants.

Our 2005 hypothesis that many defendants should have been found indigent but were not was met with ample support from the individuals we interviewed in 2009. In fact, we were told that MSPD is "turning a lot more people away today than we ever did," so much so that "probably 4-5 people are turned away every day whereas before it was 2 or so people." Nor are the defendants being turned away exclusively misdemeanants; interviewees noted that MSPD was "turning away more people in felonies and misdemeanors." The explanation provided for the dramatic increase in indigent defendants being turned away by the public defender was simple: "The caseloads are such that we are turning a bunch of people away."

Of particular concern was the repeated reporting that the old "presumptions" (which were removed from the Guidelines three years ago) are not only still being applied, but are being enforced more strictly than ever. The Guidelines were explained to us as follows: "If you can afford a $500 bond, you don't get a PD—that's in the Guidelines. It's the amount you actually post, if it's a 10% bond, and you only pay $50 then you can still get a PD, but if you have a [35] Language added in 2008 established an absolute bar to representation by MSPD if private counsel has been retained "at any time during the pendency of a case," such that "[t]he public defender shall not be available to assume representation" where private counsel withdraws. 18 C.S.R. 10-2.010(2) (2009).

$5000 bond, and you pay $500, you don't qualify. ‖ It was also reported that it is not uncommon for individuals to collect as much money as possible from family and friends in order to make bail, for example gathering together $500. What those individuals do not realize, we were told, is that once they use that money to make bail, they will then be deprived the services of the public defender, even if (as is often the case) there is no well left to tap. One investigator charged with conducting bond interviews two days each week, reported that —any [income] over $100 a week can kick [out] a person ‖ sharing his view that, —the guidelines are ridiculous. You can make minimum wage and not get a PD. ‖ MSPD staff reported that —We've had 18 year olds who work at Taco Bell (even if they make $150) [who] need to hire a private attorney. ‖

These reports strongly suggest that there is an entire category of indigent defendants who collect all the assets they will be able to amass for their defense at the outset of their cases, in order to get out of jail, and who—because they have done that—are deemed ineligible for the public defender. This catch-22 (in which indigents are essentially told to choose between custody and counsel), moreover, is said to be the direct result of MSPD's overwhelming caseloads. In the words of one MSPD reporter, —It's sad that we have to turn people away, but we have to pick and choose. ‖ Nor does this appear to be a new phenomenon, given the relatively longstanding application of presumptions against indigency, with special emphasis on the ability to make bond.

Data indicate that, on average, public defenders are finding between 8 and 9 percent of applicants ineligible. But these numbers belie tremendous variation in the various districts, where the reported refusal rate is as high as 48 percent. Indeed, the refusal rates in the districts of St. Charles, Fulton, Sedalia, Union, and Hillsboro all exceed 20 percent. TSG's analysis shows that between 2005 and 2008, MSPD represented between 55% and 59% of defendants charged with felonies in the state of Missouri, a number far lower than the 75%-85% that we have seen in most other jurisdictions. More surprising still is that the MSPD represented only 35% of the juvenile delinquency and status offense cases filed in Missouri courts in 2007, down from 40% in 2004, 38% in 2005, and 37% in 2006. Juvenile cases make up just about 4% of the appointments accepted by the MSPD, a number far lower that what would be expected. Whether these low rates reflect a deliberate decision of the MSPD or instead are representative of a system in which potential clients do not seek the services of a public defender even when they are eligible, the results are the same: an already overburdened MSPD is not serving potential clients. This is particularly troubling in the case of juveniles, who must rely upon others to obtain their counsel. Indeed, we are deeply concerned by the few juvenile cases being handled by the MSPD, which appears remarkably low and for which we have been unable to determine an immediate cause. This question merits further investigation and serious scrutiny.

The MSPD's pattern and practice or representation in 2009 bears out TSG's 2005 prediction, namely that using the public defenders to make indigency determinations creates at the very least an appearance of a conflict of interest. Public defenders, particularly when faced with crushing caseloads, have an incentive (however dedicated and well-meaning they may be) not to find defendants indigent. Reports from the site visit provide significant support for this conclusion, painting the picture of guidelines which, as implemented, amount to a presumption against indigency wherever possible. Despite the statutory requirements, we would restate our position that the Public Defender should not be responsible for indigency determinations. Few statewide public defender programs remain responsible for that task. The role creates, at the least, an appearance of a conflict if not an actual conflict.

It now appears clear that MSPD's indigency determinations have resulted in the wrongful denial of counsel to a substantial class of indigent persons. This suggests that, in addition to Missouri's obvious indigent defense crisis, there exists another quiet constitutional crisis that has never been addressed.

It is, of course, the caseload crisis that is driving the sweeping determinations of non-indigency we discovered in 2009. As we understand it, those determinations are often made by investigators and administrative staff rather than by attorneys. It seems fairly clear, then, that those on the ground are taking their marching orders from those at the top. Members of management conveyed to us, explicitly, that faced with a choice between clients to whom they have immediate duties and responsibilities, and indigent persons in the community who are entitled to a lawyer, there really is no choice; one's duty is to one's existing client. The rationale was explained as follows: Given the magnitude of the caseload crisis, resources are so scarce and attorneys so overworked that the addition of new clients must, of necessity, jeopardize the quality of representation that existing clients receive.

What results is a system wherein prospective clients are "kicked out" based on strictly enforced guidelines (including guidelines that are no longer in effect). In this system, a defendant may, for instance, cobble together what funds he can from friends and family in order to make bail, not knowing that he is actually facing a Hobson's choice between custody and counsel. The fact that he has made bail will almost certainly be used against him later, even though his friends and family may have nothing more to contribute. Once turned away by the Public Defender, he may wish he had just stayed in jail.

It seems clear that at the heart of both the MSPD Rule and SB 37, however well-meaning, was the same "case-dumping" impulse. In some ways resigned to the fact that they would never be properly resourced, management's goal was to rid the office of cases, through legislation which would create caseload caps, in the hope that it would be better able to put MSPD's limited resources toward the cases of existing clients, rather than spreading the agency more and more thinly.

The Governor is due credit for his recognition, in the face of legislation that passed by overwhelming majorities of both chambers of the Legislature, that this kind of solution, which aimed to solve the problem by pushing cases out of the public system and onto the private bar, was no solution at all. What the Governor recognized is that ―getting rid of ‖MSPD cases does not mean that those cases go away. The cases of poor people turned away by the Public Defender—whether by a caseload cap ceiling or an indigency determination floor—do not vanish into thin air. Throughout the years some have responded that the private bar is the solution, that they can, in effect, pick up the slack. But that approach is both impractical and incompatible with the requirement that the State provide representation to indigent persons facing criminal charges; the State may not wash its hands of its obligations by seeking to transfer those obligations to the private bar.[36]

Section III. Assessment of Findings in Light of the Eight Guidelines

Our findings regarding the systemic inability to comply with fundamental obligations, explored above, fully comport with the governing principle contained in the first guideline of the ABA's Eight Guidelines, namely that when ―defense lawyers fail to discharge the kinds of fundamental obligations contained [herein], it is frequently because they have excessive workloads. ‖ The conclusion that MSPD's workloads are excessive is supported, moreover, by the data. The Eight Guidelines also provide us with substantial guidance in assessing not only the crisis situation that Missouri is confronting (and has long confronted), but also give us a metric by which to measure their response to that crisis.

Of course, it must be noted at the outset that the MSPD did not have the benefit of these guidelines during the first roughly fifteen years of its campaign for reform. Rather, the MSPD was left on its own to try and conceive an approach to a problem of remarkable breadth and depth. MSPD did just that, developing a unified strategy that was state-wide, one which sought to address, inter alia, the legislature, the executive, the judiciary, and the public.

[36] See ―Justice Denied, ‖Report of the National Right to Counsel Committee, 31 n.67 (Apr. 2009); see also ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, R. 6.1 (2007). Additionally, transferring a large volume of cases to the private bar is problematic for the following reasons: (1) Members of the private bar may lack the specialized training required to effectively handle a criminal case; and (2) it is probably more expensive.

Considering their efforts in light of the Eight Guidelines, an evaluation that is retrospective by necessity, the MSPD has more than satisfied the steps proposed by the Eight Guidelines. Management was remarkably quick to recognize that the goals of the first four guidelines were not being satisfied. Although supervisors do not have the time to closely manage each case, by all accounts the situation was so dire that it did not require detailed case-by-case consideration; the sheer volume of cases combined with the generally overwhelmed response of attorneys and staff made it clear that neither reasonable workloads nor quality representation were likely to be achieved.

To the extent that it could, MSPD satisfied Guideline 5, which proposes examples of initial steps that can be taken when confronted with a caseload crisis. Guideline 5 recommends that > Public Defense Providers consider taking prompt actions such as the following to avoid workloads that either are or are about to become excessive:

> - Providing additional resources to assist the affected lawyers;
> - Curtailing new case assignments to the affected lawyers;
> - Reassigning cases to different lawyers within the defense program, with court approval, if necessary;
> - Arranging for some cases to be assigned to private lawyers in return for reasonable compensation for their services;
> - Urging prosecutors not to initiate criminal prosecutions when civil remedies are adequate to address conduct and public safety does not require prosecution;
> - Seeking emergency resources to deal with excessive workloads or exemptions from funding reductions;
> - Negotiating formal and informal arrangements with courts or other appointing authorities respecting case assignments; and
> - Notifying courts or other appointing authorities that the Provider is unavailable to accept additional appointments.

Eight Guidelines at 12. The challenge that the MSPD faced, of course, particularly in light of the first three recommendations under this Guideline, had to do with the fact that it had no —additional resources ‖to spread around; nor could it simply refuse assignments for certain lawyers or reassign cases to other lawyers—because as it repeatedly indicated, all of its lawyers were carrying excessive caseloads.

Though MSPD lacked additional resources to redistribute, what it did instead was to repeatedly institute internal cost-cutting measures to ensure that it was operating in the most cost-effective manner possible. These measures included, inter alia:

- Salary and promotion freezes (even as attorneys and staff were delivering pizzas and selling beer at sporting events to make ends meet);
- Hiring freezes;
- Closure of juvenile offices in St. Louis and Kansas City;
- Closure of the Alternative Sentencing Office in order to convert 8.5 FTE's to attorney positions;
- Encouraging attorneys to perform administrative tasks such as filing and answering telephones due to the lack of support staff;
- Cutting overtime for non-attorney staff;
- Continuing to use outdated technology, including aging copy machines and inadequate voicemail; and
- Cutting back on training (where training funds were diverted to pay for bar dues and computer lines, leading to the elimination of secretarial training, new employee orientation, and —specialty ‖training, such as juvenile, capital and appellate training).

In 2007, the legislature provided $1.15 million specifically for contract cases in an effort to provide lawyers relief. But as Director Robinson explained, in Missouri, —It's actually a step backward, ‖because the MSPD is far more cost-effective at handling cases, and it received nothing, even though it needed approximately ten times more than that which was allotted to contract cases.

We were not able to obtain much information in our 2009 visit about potential efforts to reclassify minor misdemeanors, though this was a recommendation in our 2005 report. We agree with the ABA that this option is worth pursuing. However, the scope of the problem in Missouri is such that this approach could in no way be considered a total —fix. ‖

MSPD has pursued resources as consistently and aggressively as any other public defender we have seen, and yet it remains 49th in the nation among statewide systems. It has attempted to notify courts that it is unavailable, in many cases, to take appointments. The lower courts appear to have deferred to the Supreme Court (as a court with some power over policy), and the Legislature. In sum, Guideline 5, which represents the public defender's efforts to make internal changes as well as seeking relief externally, has been more than satisfied by MSPD's efforts over the years.

Guidelines 6, 7, and 8 have likewise been satisfied by MSPD's efforts to declare particular offices —unavailable ‖for the assignment of cases. MSPD decided to seek relief from appointment in lieu of withdrawal consistent with the ethical obligations to existing clients, and the principle recognized by the Eight Guidelines that it is generally better to prevent appointment than to seek withdrawal.[37] Nor did MSPD rest when the trial court refused to cease appointing particular cases. As proposed by Guideline 8, the MSPD appealed the decision, while —continu[ing] to provide representation. ‖ Eight Guidelines at 20. One step not yet taken by MSPD, but urged by the Guidelines —[w]hen alternative options . . . are exhausted, insufficient, or unavailable, ‖is to enlist the help of a private law firm to pursue civil litigation on a pro bono basis. Eight Guidelines at 17.

In sum, although the ABA's Guidelines are just that, guidelines, MSPD has gone above and beyond the suggestions they provide—mounting a unified, organized, long-term campaign on all fronts, including a substantial legislative effort cut short by executive veto—a campaign that has resulted in next to nothing. MSPD, to its great credit, has placed itself, for the good of its clients, —in an extremely awkward situation since on the one hand those in charge of the defense program have made clear that, in their professional judgment, caseloads are excessive and the lawyers providing direct client services are being forced to violate their ethical responsibilities, yet relief is unavailable. ‖ Eight Guidelines at 20. At this stage, there seems no room to doubt that as a consequence of a caseload crisis that has been essentially ignored for well over a decade,

[37] See Eight Guidelines at 16 (—Because lawyers have as their primary obligation the responsibility to represent the interests of current clients, withdrawals from representation [are] less preferable than seeking to halt the assignment of new appointments. ‖).

> Defense lawyers are constantly forced to violate their oath as attorneys because their caseloads make it impossible for them to practice law as they are required to do according to the profession‘s rules. They cannot interview their clients properly, effectively seek their pre-trial release, file appropriate motions, adequately prepare for hearings and perform countless other tasks that normally would be undertaken by a lawyer with sufficient time and resources. Yes, the clients have lawyers, but lawyers with crushing caseloads who, through no fault of their own, provide second rate legal services simply because it is not humanly possible for them to do otherwise.

Eight Guidelines at 23.

Section IV. Conclusion

Caseload Crisis

Our findings lead to the inescapable conclusion that MSPD is confronting an overwhelming caseload crisis, one of the worst of its kind in the nation—a crisis so serious that it has pushed the entire criminal justice system in Missouri to the brink of collapse. The severity of this crisis has been forecasted for years, by those closest to it, but next to nothing has been done. And now the situation is as urgent as it is dire.

Haunting reports from attorneys and staff tell of lawyers whose greatest achievement at times is just showing up; when they arrive, however, they are grossly unprepared, lacking the research, the investigation, and the client contact necessary to separate mere presence from effective representation. In addition to their lack of preparation—a deficiency that at this point is structural—these lawyers are often weary, both physically and, as some have described, spiritually. They work so hard for so little, and yet they are often embarrassed by the work they manage to do, particularly when they must confront, time and again, the panic, frustration and disappointment of their clients. As the astonishing turnover rates over the years have demonstrated, most attorneys placed in this untenable position burn out—reaching a point where they can take it no longer.

We feel compelled to recognize, however, the courage displayed by those MSPD attorneys who forge ahead, out of a deep commitment to the well-being of their clients, as well as a strong belief that an adversarial legal system requires meaningful lawyering on both sides to be just. These lawyers work, to their great credit, in conditions that would drive (indeed, have driven) many of the most dedicated away. Director Robinson may have put it best when he said that the public defenders are —doing the best they can in their absolutely heroic efforts in what they're doing. The fact is they do good work, but they have too much work to do. ‖ The stories these defenders shared with us, which reflected a remarkable combination of candor, humility, and genuine personal concern for the poor people they serve on a daily basis, speak volumes about the caliber of people MSPD is lucky enough to employ. They, in so many ways, reflect the very best of the bar.

But bravery will not buy groceries for an attorney's family, and a dedication to justice cannot create more hours in the day for a Lexis search. The caseload crisis—which has spiraled out of control even with the use of inappropriate and overbroad determinations of non-indigency—has placed MSPD's attorneys in the cruelest of positions, one in which they are virtually guaranteed to fail, despite efforts that could fairly be described as heroic.

Earlier this year, the tragic crash of a commuter plane in Buffalo, New York sent chills across the country. The investigation that followed revealed that the pilots were underpaid, overworked, and that a combination of fatigue and poor training likely contributed to the accident. People across the country expressed their outrage that commuter pilots were paid so much less than pilots for major carriers, noting that one of the co-pilots had been forced to live at home with her parents because she could not afford to live on her own. Many concluded that the great tragedy of this event was that it was entirely predictable, and therefore preventable.

For close to a decade, MSPD has received no substantial increase in appropriations, despite the fact that year-by-year, MSPD has submitted budgets demonstrating that it is seriously under-funded and overloaded with cases. All three branches of government are on notice that Missouri has been operating a constitutionally inadequate system for some time now. MSPD has gone to the trial courts, to the courts of appeal, to the legislature, and to the governor. Yet the situation remains the same.

And so each day in Missouri, the State places the lives of poor citizens into the hands of attorneys who are underpaid, overworked, and badly supervised. We are not the first to say that Missouri‘s criminal justice system is heading for disaster, one which is both predictable and preventable. Missouri‘s public defender system stands at the bottom of its sister states in terms of resources, and the results are alarming. Missouri‘s public defender system has reached a point where what it provides is often nothing more than the illusion of a lawyer. There is nothing more dangerous in the criminal justice system than the illusion of a lawyer.

MOTION TO WITHDRAW DUE TO EXCESSIVE CASELOAD

COMES NOW Ellen H. Flottman, District Defender, and moves to withdraw as counsel in this case because counsel is unable to provide ethical, effective and competent representation to appellant because of counsel's excessive caseload. In support, counsel submits:

1. Counsel is the District Defender of the Central Appellate Office of the Missouri State Public Defender System.

2. The Supreme Court of Missouri has held that the rules of professional conduct impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of their clients, and that attorneys violate these rules if they "accept[] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 607 (Mo. banc 2012) (citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3 and 4-1.4).

3. The Court has held that these duties apply not just to new clients, but to existing clients, "so that an attorney's acceptance of a new case violates Rule 4-1.7 if it compromises [his or] her ability to continue to provide effective assistance to [his or] her other clients." Id. "[A] lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest, which exists if there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client." Id. at 607-08 (citing Rule 4-1.7(a)(2); internal quotation marks omitted). "[A] conflict of interest is inevitably created when a public defender is compelled by his or her excessive caseload to choose between the rights of the various indigent defendants he or she is representing." Id. at 608 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

4. Rule 4-1.16(a) provides, in relevant part, that "a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if: (1) the representation will result in violation of the rules of professional conduct or other law[.]"

5. Furthermore, Rule 4-5.1 provides that a supervisor in a law firm "shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct." This duty requires the supervisor to "monitor the workloads of subordinate lawyers to ensure that the workload of each lawyer is appropriate. This involves consideration of the type and complexity of cases being handled by each lawyer; the experience and ability of each lawyer; the resources available to support [the lawyer]; and any non-representational responsibilities assigned to the subordinate lawyers." ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 at 7 (E76).

6. Undersigned counsel supervises nine attorneys – two of whom handle capital postconviction appeals and one of whom handles sexually violent predator appeals. Six of the ten attorneys have been in the office for less than two years, and three of them are in their very first non-clerkship law job.

7. Comment 2 to Rule 4-1.3 mandates that "[a] lawyer's work load must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently."

8. The ABA itself does not endorse a specific numerical caseload standard, but requires that "[n]ational caseload standards should in no event be exceeded." ABA Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads (August 2009) at 8-9 (copy attached); ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 at 4 n. 10. The referenced national caseload standard calls for counsel to be assigned no more than 25 appeals per year. ABA Eight Guidelines at 9 n. 30.

9. The attorneys in this office are carrying the following caseloads:

Ellen Flottman (28 years experience): 71 open cases

William Swift (28 years experience, handles capital): 8 open cases

Amy Bartholow (20 years experience, handles capital): 16 open cases

Chelsea Mitchell (7 years experience, handles SVP): 25 open cases

Sam Buffaloe (6 years experience): 73 open cases

Casey Taylor (6 years experience): 45 open cases

Jedd Schneider (1.5 years experience):	50 open cases
Christian Lehmberg (1.5 years experience):	45 open cases
Carol Jansen (6 months experience):	36 open cases
Katie Curry (4 months experience):	31 open cases[1]

Undersigned counsel cannot ethically assign an attorney to Mr. Woodham's case.

10. Undersigned counsel, the individual attorneys in her office, and other Public Defender System attorneys are unable to accept representation of Mr. Woodham while also providing ethical, effective and competent representation to existing clients. Accepting new cases at this time would force her, the attorneys in her office, and other Public Defender System attorneys to choose amongst their clients as to whom to provide ethical, effective and competent representation. Doing so would force them to violate or risk violating Rules 4-1.1 (competence), 4-1.3 (diligence), 4-1.4 (communication), and 4-1.7 (conflict of interest), as well as the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel.

11. Undersigned counsel is currently attorney of record. If counsel must represent appellant, counsel will be unable to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct, and will be unable to fulfill counsel's constitutional obligations to provide effective assistance of counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution and Article I, Sections 10 and 18(a) of the Missouri Constitution. Appellant will be denied his rights to ethical and competent counsel, effective assistance of counsel, conflict-free counsel, right to a speedy appeal, and due process under the Rules of Professional Conduct and these federal and state constitutional provisions.

WHEREFORE, counsel respectfully requests that this Court grant her motion to withdraw.

12. Further affiant sayeth naught.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Ellen H. Flottman

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am the District Defender in the Area 19 Public Defender Office in Jefferson City, Missouri. I am aware of my obligations under the rules of professional conduct. I am writing to report that my excessive caseload prevents me from fulfilling each of my obligations set out in the rules of professional conduct.

I have discussed this matter with my supervisor, who advised that the agency has no additional lawyers that can be assigned to Area 19 and that every public defender office is overloaded with cases.

I have attempted to control my caseload by: requesting additional resources from my supervisor; speaking with my judges; by filing motions to decline representation; and by filing motions to withdraw from representation. I even sent some cases to my supervisor stating that I already had too many cases and could not take the cases I sent (the cases were returned to me). My attempts to control my caseload have not yet reduced my caseload to a manageable level. I will continue to make efforts to control my caseload until such time as I am in compliance with the rules.

If you need additional information, I am happy to try to provide it.

Sincerely,

Justin Carver #52759

- U = Unsatisfactory (Performance at this level fails to meet the requirements of the position.)

COMPONENT	EXPECTATIONS	COMMENTS	O	HS	S	IE	U COUNSELOR
CLIENT COUNSELING	Treats clients with respect, recognizing their issues and goals. Acquires client's trust and cooperation. Maintains timely and consistent contact so client is fully informed. (Interviewing Techniques, Client Interaction)	In reviewing her files, it appeared that for the first six months or so, Dawn did quite well at staying close to guidelines for client contact with her incarcerated clients. During that time she was being assigned misdemeanors and PVs only in Greene County. Once she was added to the C-D felony rotation and her caseload began to rise as well as her number of incarcerated clients, she encountered more difficulty in keeping up with client contact. The worst instance of this I saw was a case where initial contact at the jail did not occur until 102 days. There were short visits before court appearances at court. Also, it was noted in that file that she attempted a jail visit 30 days in but client had been sent to another facility due to overcrowding; regardless, further attempts should have been made to visit client sooner. When I met with Dawn to discuss this, she agreed this is an area that she needs to improve on. She brought with her a list of her incarcerated clients she had created				X that she was now using to keep track of their last visit and when another was needed. She currently has 34 clients in custody. We also talked about maintaining control during client meetings. She usually lets the client talk as long as they want at every meeting which means most of her jail visits are 45 minutes or longer each which makes it difficult to get more people seen. For out of custody clients, she briefly meets with them at their first court date and asks them to call and schedule an office visit. For the half or so that do, Dawn lets the clerks know when she is available and they schedule those appointments. For the half or so that don't call, Dawn tries to reach out to them by phone. There were notes in several of her files detailing contact with clients' family members.

LEGAL SKILLS	Legal advice is accurate and complete. Identifies and effectively uses legal issues. (Legal Research and Continuing Legal Education, Recognizing Legal Issues, Written Motion Practice, Investigation, File Maintenance)	Dawn is good at spotting legal issues in her cases. In each file I reviewed there was a copy of relevant statutes and any legal research that had been done. Great notes in her files detailing what had been done so far regarding jail visits, negotiations, investigation, family contact, etc. Different parts of her files were tabbed making it easy to locate what you need. Examples of written motion: [redacted].pdf			X
DISPOSITION ADVOCACY	Uses legal skills, experience and factual knowledge to achieve best poss ble outcome for client. (Negotiation Skills, Sentencing, Willingness To Try Cases)	Dawn is good at negotiating. As stated above, there were notes in many of her files showing counter offers and reasons backing those counter offers. She has had success in convincing the state to reduce some felonies to misdemeanors. Recently, having heard the PA's office wanted to move property crimes, she took 10 of her files over there and spent 3 1/2 hours negotiating good deals for her clients. She is a good sentencing advocate as well. In the three bench trials she lost, she still convinced the judge to give her clients probation and one of		X them received an SIS. She recently had her first client get sent to DOC after a contested sentencing and it upset her.

TRIAL ADVOCATE
TRIAL SKILLS	Persuasively presents effective theory of defense. (Preparation of Witnesses, Use of Experts, Courtroom Skills, Courtroom Presence)	Dawn has not had a jury trial yet. She has had 9 misdemeanor bench trials and 6 of those resulted in not guilty verdicts. A couple of our APD IVs who have seen her in action during a few of those misdemeanor trials, have commented to me about how well she did and that she was obviously prepared. She has a misdemeanor set for jury trial that is likely to go next month. I went over that case with her and it is discussed below at the bottom of the file review section.			X
RECORD PRESERVATION	Effectively preserves legal issues for post-trial litigation. (Post-trial Proceedings)	Although I did not have the opportunity to observe her bench trials, I have seen her representation during a preliminary hearing. She did raise objections appropriately. She did tell me that one of our senior attorneys informed her of an objection she missed after one of her bench trials. Even if she had objected and it was sustained it would not have affected the outcome, but nonetheless, it has made her realize this is an area she wants to learn and improve.			X
COLLEAGUE
PROFESSIONAL RELATIONS	Professional interactions are characterized by integrity and respect for others. (Ethics and Integrity, Working Independently, Interaction with Others, Public Defender Staff, Calendar and Case Management, Punctuality and Attendance)	Even when I know she is feeling overwhelmed from her high caseload, she maintains a professional attitude both in the office and in court. Keeps up her calendar, making sure not to let any court appearances slip through the cracks which is not easy to do with the high volume she is handling. Keeps core office hours and asks for time off in accordance with office policy.		X
INSIGHT	Acts with awareness of the larger picture. (Administrative Tasks)	For the most part completes administrative tasks in a timely manner. If we were still time logging I might have marked this section as "improvement expected" as she regularly waited until time logs were due to get them completed.			X

Attached is a breakdown of Dawn's open caseload. She admits it is a bit inflated as there are several recently disposed of cases that need to be closed.

Dawn open caseload.pdf

Goals & Objectives for next Appraisal period:

Goals Dawn and I discussed are:

1. First chair a jury trial.

2. Make jail visits more of a priority. Get closer to the guidelines on initial and ongoing client contact.

3. Become more familiar with potential evidentiary issues and be prepared to object and make the proper objection at trial.

All 10 of the files I reviewed had an indigency application, and 7 of them had a filled out and easily locatable initial client interview form.

Client contact in each file:

[redacted] - jail - closed file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 12 days court - qualifying initial contact (met privately/sign language interpreter needed), 14 - jail, 2 - court, 28 - court, 6 - letter - qualifies, 13 - jail, 9 - court

[redacted] - jail - closed file: 4 days court - not qualifying (hereafter for this and other clients summarized in this section, a court contact is a non-qualifying contact unless stated otherwise), 5 days initial contact at jail, 5 - jail, 2 - jail, 1 - jail - client ROR 4 days after this jail visit, 7 - phone - qualifies, 1 - court, 28 - court, 32 - phone - qualifies, 2 - court, 41 - phone - qualifies, 2 - court

[redacted] - out of custody - closed file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 6 days initial contact by phone - qualifies, 1 - court, 49 - court, 34 - email - qualifies, 17 - office visit, 12 - phone/court - qualifies, 6 - phone - qualifies

[redacted] - jail - closed file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 5 days initial contact at the jail, 2 - court, 2 - jail, 3 - court, 28 - court

[redacted] - jail - closed file: 1 day initial contact at jail, 2 - jail, 3 - jail, 1 - letter, 14 - court, 32 - jail, 4 - jail, 6 - court

[redacted] - jail - open file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 32 - court, 11 - court, 59 - jail (4 days after the file review)

[redacted] - jail - open file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 36 - court, 13 - court (ROR), 82 - court

[redacted] - jail - open file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 29 days initial contact at jail (3 days after file review but still prior to first court date)

[redacted] - jail - open file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 30 days initial contact at jail/court, 15 - court, 46 - jail, file review 11 days after last contact

[redacted] [redacted] - jail - closed file: 0 day letter - not qualifying, 15 days initial contact at jail, 5 - jail/court - qualifies, 4 - court

Summary of contact for clients in custody:

Initial contact occurred within 7 days in 2 of the files. The "misses" were 12 days, 9 days, 102 days (seen in court twice before that but no private meeting), 49 days, 29 days, 30 days, and 15 days. Ongoing contact within 31 days occurred 10 times. The "misses" were 36 days, 47 days, and 61 days.

I conducted one case review with Dawn on State v. [redacted] It is a misdemeanor harassment (2 counts) set for jury trial in about a month. She has a good grasp of the facts and has developed a theory of defense. She has been to the scene with our investigator and taken pictures. She has done some witness interviews and will be requesting funds to do a deposition of the two alleged victims. She has identified a few case specific issues to address in voir dire. Still needs to prep client for potentially testifying.

Comments and Follow-up:

Dawn demonstrates a strong backbone in court. It's obvious she cares abvout her clients and our mission. She maintains an upbeat attitude even under the pressure and stress of an overly burdensome caseload. I recommend she be promoted to APD II.

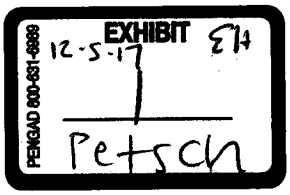
Subject: client contact documentation in the Lotus Notes e-file



As you know, you are to have contact with trial caseload clients within 7 days of assignment and thereafter at least every 30 days.

As you also know, all client contact or attempted contact is to be documented.

Effective immediately, I am requiring that, regarding trial caseload clients, all client contact or attempted contact be documented in the e-file in Lotus Notes, either by Memo to Case File or by use of the Client Appointment Form.

A case is considered to be part of your trial caseload if it is your case because I have assigned it to you directly, rather than simply because it appears on your preliminary hearing or arraignment docket. Such cases are noted by my typing of the phrase "trial caseload" in the District Defender Comments field in the Case Information Form.

As you should know, the substance of client contact is also to be documented. This substance does not have to be documented in the e-file; it can be documented either in the physical file or the e-file.

Documentation in the e-file is to include type of contact or attempted contact (e.g., "jail visit," "office visit," "telephone conversation" ("tc")). Attempts should be so designated (e.g., "def FTA for office meeting," "att. tc - left machine message"). This documentation should be in the subject line of the Memo to Case File or in the subject line of the Client Appointment Form. Any e-file documentation of the substance of the contact should be in the comments fields of those forms.

I will assume letters in the e-file were mailed to the client. Therefore, they do not need to be additionally documented in a Memo to Case File.

Regarding meeting the 7 days and 30 day rules, please remember:

-- Initial 7-day contact: If the client is in jail, this 7-day contact is to be a jail visit. If the client is on bond, the 7-day rule is met by a telephone call or a letter to the client in which the client is asked to immediately schedule an office meeting; if a telephone call is attempted but you are not able to talk to the defendant personally, the call is to be followed up by a letter in that first 7 days.

--Ongoing 30-day contact: If the client is in jail, this on-going contact is to be a jail visit. If the client is on bond, the contact is to be in the office if the client so desires; otherwise telephone or letter contact will be satisfactory, except that an initial office meeting must occur ASAP (if the client refuses, document such refusal) and except that ongoing office meetings are required as necessary to properly prepare the case for trial. Please remember that you are to be proactive in contacting bonded clients who fail to respond to your attempted contacts; you are to continue to make attempts to contact them and ultimately go into the field to look for them if they don't respond. Also, please remember you are to notify clients of all court dates, all warrants, and all continuance requests and other pleadings.

Regarding substance of client contact, please document all conveyance of plea offers, whether defendant wants the offer or not (and why), and what the client does want.

Many attorneys are already documenting client contact in the computer. I do not believe it is asking too much. In fact, after reviewing a lot of files this year, conducting many evaluations, and reassigning may caseloads, I am convinced that the best client contact and best representation is being provided by the attorneys that are doing this.

I also am convinced that in many cases we are not having proper contact with our clients and that this new requirement will allow me to better ensure that we do.

If I am able to ensure that we are having the required contact, not only do our clients benefit but I can promote attorneys, which I want to do. I cannot promote an attorney who is not having the required contact. Documenting client contact in the e-file will help make sure the contact is being had and will help make sure that it is there for me to see when it comes time for evaluation or promotion.

In my Memos to Case File assigning the case to your trial caseloads, I am now indicating whether the client is in custody or on bond. This will allow me to evaluate whether the type of contact you are having (e.g., jail vs. telephone) is sufficient. Therefore, if the custody status of your client changes subsequent to me assigning the case to you, please document it in a Memo to Case File of your own.

I'll be happy to discuss this with you if you have concerns.

Thanks.

Please beware of our below policy. For juvenile cases, once a case is post-arraignment, I expect the client contact to be documented in Lotus Notes. Pre-arraignment, it may be documented in the physical file.

As you know, you are to have contact with trial caseload clients within 7 days of assignment and thereafter at least every 30 days.

As you also know, all client contact or attempted contact is to be documented.

Effective immediately, I am requiring that, regarding trial caseload clients, all client contact or attempted contact be documented in the e-file in Lotus Notes, either by Memo to Case File or by use of the Client Appointment Form.

A case is considered to be part of your trial caseload if it is your case because I have assigned it to you directly, rather than simply because it appears on your preliminary hearing or arraignment docket. Such cases are noted by my typing of the phrase "trial caseload" in the District Defender Comments field in the Case Information Form.

As you should know, the substance of client contact is also to be documented. This substance does not have to be documented in the e-file; it can be documented either in the physical file or the e-file.

Documentation in the e-file is to include type of contact or attempted contact (e.g., "jail visit," "office visit," "telephone conversation" ("tc")). Attempts should be so designated (e.g., "def FTA for office meeting," "att. tc - left machine message"). This documentation should be in the subject line of the Memo to Case File or in the subject line of the Client Appointment Form. Any e-file documentation of the substance of the contact should be in the comments fields of those forms.

I will assume letters in the e-file were mailed to the client. Therefore, they do not need to be additionally documented in a Memo to Case File.

Regarding meeting the 7 days and 30 day rules, please remember:

-- Initial 7-day contact: If the client is in jail, this 7-day contact is to be a jail visit. If the client is on bond, the 7-day rule is met by a telephone call or a letter to the client in which the client is asked to immediately schedule an office meeting; if a telephone call is attempted but you are not able to talk to the defendant personally, the call is to be followed up by a letter in that first 7 days.

--Ongoing 30-day contact: If the client is in jail, this on-going contact is to be a jail visit. If the client is on bond, the contact is to be in the office if the client so desires; otherwise telephone or letter contact will be satisfactory, except that an initial office meeting must occur ASAP (if the client refuses, document such refusal) and except that ongoing office meetings are required as necessary to properly prepare the case for trial. Please remember that you are to be proactive in contacting bonded clients who fail to respond to your attempted contacts; you are to continue to make attempts to contact them and ultimately go into the field to look for them if they don't respond. Also, please remember you are to notify clients of all court dates, all warrants, and all continuance requests and other pleadings.

Regarding substance of client contact, please document all conveyance of plea offers, whether defendant wants the offer or not (and why), and what the client does want.

Many attorneys are already documenting client contact in the computer. I do not believe it is asking too much. In fact, after reviewing a lot of files this year, conducting many evaluations, and reassigning may caseloads, I am convinced that the best client contact and best representation is being provided by the attorneys that are doing this.

I also am convinced that in many cases we are not having proper contact with our clients and that this new requirement will allow me to better ensure that we do.

If I am able to ensure that we are having the required contact, not only do our clients benefit but I can promote attorneys, which I want to do. I cannot promote an attorney who is not having the required contact. Documenting client contact in the e-file will help make sure the contact is being had and will help make sure that it is there for me to see when it comes time for evaluation or promotion.

In my Memos to Case File assigning the case to your trial caseloads, I am now indicating whether the client is in custody or on bond. This will allow me to evaluate whether the type of contact you are having (e.g., jail vs. telephone) is sufficient. Therefore, if the custody status of your client changes subsequent to me assigning the case to you, please document it in a Memo to Case File of your own.

I'll be happy to discuss this with you if you have concerns.

Thanks.

We are conducting performance reviews of all the APD IVs in our office starting with those who have been in that position the longest. Paul is one of our longest tenured fours. Our predominant concern in conducting these reviews are client contact (unless we have noticed performance related issues in other areas).

Client Counseling

In the file reviews I did there were gaps of 3 months, 3 months, 5 months, 6 months, 6 months, 8 months, and even 13 months between qualifying contacts. I discussed with David that this method simply is not working and is in opposition to our guidelines for representation. I also told him that, given the huge caseloads, we understood that every 30 days may not be attainable. I asked him what he felt with his experience was attainable, and he replied that every 60 days could likely be done. I told him I agreed with that and asked him to devise a method to ensure he was seeing his clients at the jail, and contacting those in DOC, every 60 days regardless of whether there had been new developments in the case. He agreed. We get almost never get a client complaint about lack of contact concerning Paul which tells me he is keeping good contact with his clients and that he has a good relationship with them. The files I reviewed contained notes for each jail visit, although some were brief.

Christian County is a bit odd when it comes to client contact. The jail is an absolute hell hole and they do everything they can to discourage attorney/client meetings. However, the judges and bailiffs have always been willing to bring inmates up from the jail and allow our attorneys to have confidential client meetings in the jury rooms off the courtrooms. This is how Paul (and the other CC attorneys conduct "jail" visits". For the most part, it appears that he is either visiting with clients within 7 days of receiving the file or, at the very least, visiting with them prior to the first court date. David said he does try hard to make sure those initial contacts are done right away not just because of our guideline but also because it helps set a positive tone for the future attorney/client relationship.

Initial client interview forms weren't always filled out in the files I reviewed; however, as stated above, Paul does take good notes during his client visits and all the information that would be on that form can usually be found elsewhere in the file. In general, the files I reviewed were well documented.

Paul rarely conducts office visits with clients as most clients in Christian County either cannot make it up to our office or aren't willing to do so. Most client visits for out of custody clients are done by phone or in the meeting rooms at the courthouse.

Legal Skills

Paul is very good at spotting legal issues and demonstrates great instincts for the job. He brings interesting topics for discussion and assists in figuring out other issues that are brought up in our brainstorming sessions.

David wishes he had more time available for creative motion practice. His caseload and busy court schedule usually only allow for the doctoring of our boilerplate motions. He also only has time to prepare and submit suggestions in support when specifically requested by the judge. I noticed while doing the file reviews that the request for discovery was either filed late or not at all in several cases. David said he has improved on making sure that those are filed timely.

Paul makes good use of his assigned investigator. Files are well organized.

Disposition Advocacy

Paul is perhaps the best negotiator in the office. This is both a blessing and a curse. Paul routinely gets great results for his clients (even on serious charges) but rarely has trials of any sort. It is hard to take away anything definitive from this as for the past 12 years or so, Paul has been assigned to Christian County. Cases there almost always get worked out given the favorable offers made by the State.

Trial Skills and Record Preservation

See above.

Professional Relations and Insight

No concerns at all with Paul in these areas. Time sheets and expense forms are always submitted in a timely manner. Includes all the required information when submitting E-requests. Makes appropriate use of his assigned investigator and legal assistant. He maintains proper office hours. Keeps proper track of his court dates and is punctual to court. Well-like and respectful of others. Willing to help out coworkers when needed.

Call from Client 9/26/12 @ 3:11 - 3:23 PM
Can I have a different attorney? Says her current attorney does not want to talk to anyone she wants him to. Shoal Creek Detective (Aaron Benson) wants her attorney to call him as she has several cases from all over coming in. KCK Detective (Steven Brown) said 2 people ID her there and the DA wants to press charges. She talked to these detectives two weeks ago. She is wanting to know what charges they are going to file and the Detectives told her to have her attorney call them to find out. Basically she is wanting to know what new charges are coming. She has a receipt for the mouth swap she gave him, case number 09112-6B.
Aaron Benson, Shoal Creek Patrol Division Property Division 816-413-3425
I told her we cannot do anything for her in Kansas and some may find just our calling to find out charges from the detective as representing her. We can however see what is going on in MO / Jackson County.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Attorneys should modify this motion to make the most compelling argument on their behalf why withdrawal should be granted. This is not a one-size-fits all form motion. Paragraphs may be added or deleted to fit your situation.

It is more important to focus on what you cannot do in pending cases due to your excessive caseload than some overall statistic about caseload (such as a national standard statistic or a Rubin-Brown standard statistic.) You need to explain and demonstrate why your caseload is excessive and withdrawal should be granted. You need to show that you've had an overwhelming caseload in the recent past – which shows why you haven't been able to work up pending cases – and that your pending cases are overwhelming, as well. A single overall statistic does not capture this as well as showing your actual caseload does, and a single statistic is more subject to debate by judges and prosecutors. Because of this, Paragraphs 14 and/or 15 should be used cautiously and only if you understand how the national standard and Rubin-Brown standard operate and apply to you.

MOTION TO WITHDRAW DUE TO EXCESSIVE CASELOAD

COMES NOW _____, Assistant Public Defender, and moves to withdraw as counsel in this case because counsel is unable to provide ethical, effective and competent representation to Defendant because of counsel's excessive caseload. In support, counsel submits:

MSPD - 0039212

PENGAD 800-631-6989 EXHIBIT 54 12.20.17

1. Counsel is an Assistant Public Defender in the Area _____ Public Defender Office.

2. The Missouri Supreme Court has held that the rules of professional conduct impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of their clients, and that attorneys violate these rules if they "accept[] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 607 (Mo. banc 2012)(citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3 and 4-1.4).

3. The Court has held that these duties apply not just to new clients, but to existing clients, "so that an attorney's acceptance of a new case violates Rule 4-1.7 if it compromises [his or] her ability to continue to provide effective assistance to [his or] her other clients." Id. "[A] lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest, which exists if there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client." Id. at 607-08 (citing Rule 4-1.7(a)(2); internal quotation marks omitted). "[A] conflict of interest is inevitably created when a public defender is compelled by his or her excessive caseload to choose between the rights of the various indigent defendants he or she is representing." Id. at 608 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

4. Rule 4-1.16(a) provides, in relevant part, that "a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if: (1) the representation will result in violation of the rules of professional conduct or other law[.]"

5. During the past three months [or other chosen time period], counsel has been assigned the following new clients' cases: (list and describe, e.g., State v. Jones, Case No. XXX-XXXXX – first degree murder). EDITOR'S NOTE: NOTES CAN GENERATE A LOT OF THE STATISTICAL DATA FOR YOU; YOU CAN ALSO ATTACH LISTS OF CASES TO YOUR MOTION AS EXHIBITS INSTEAD OF LISTING THEM WITHIN THE MOTION.

6. In addition to the above new cases, counsel currently has open the following clients' cases which remain pending from prior months (list and describe as above):

7. During the past three months [or other chosen time period], counsel has also concluded representation in the following clients' cases: (list and describe disposition, e.g., State v. Smith, Case No. XXX-XXXX – felony stealing, guilty plea May 15, 2017; State v. Doe, Case No. XXX-XXXX – possession of controlled substance, jury trial May 17-18, 2017). Counsel's work in concluding these cases reduced the time available to work on counsel's other pending cases and newly assigned cases.

8. Counsel currently has the following cases set for trial: (list and describe, e.g., State v. Barnes, Case No. XXX-XXXX – first degree robbery, trial set November 15-16, 2017).

9. The Area _____ Public Defender Office has a shortage of support staff to assist counsel in preparation of cases. For example, the Office has only _____ investigators to serve _____ attorneys.

10. Counsel does not have adequate time or resources to ethically, effectively and competently represent Defendant, in addition to counsel's other clients. If counsel must represent Defendant, counsel will be forced to choose amongst counsel's clients as to whom to provide ethical, effective and competent representation. Counsel will be forced to violate or risk violating Rules 4-1.1 (competence), 4-1.3 (diligence), 4-1.4 (communication), and 4-1.7 (conflict of interest), as well as the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel.

11. Due to excessive caseload counsel is unable to [describe in as great detail as possible what you are unable to do in cases].

12. Comment 2 to Rule 4-1.3 mandates that "[a] lawyer's work load must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently."

13. ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 requires that "[i]f a lawyer believes that [his or] her workload is such that [he or] she is unable to meet the basic ethical obligations required of [him or] her in the representation of a client, [he or] she must not continue the representation of that client or, if representation has not yet begun, [he or] she must decline the representation." ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 at 4 (copy attached).

14. The ABA itself does not endorse a specific numerical caseload standard, but requires that "[n]ational caseload standards should in no event be exceeded." ABA Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads (August 2009) at 8-9

(copy attached); ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 at 4 n. 10. The referenced national caseload standard calls for counsel to be assigned no more than 150 felonies, 400 misdemeanors, 200 juvenile court cases and/or 25 appeals per year. ABA Eight Guidelines at 9 n. 30. Undersigned counsel exceeds this standard because undersigned counsel had _____ newly assigned cases during the proceeding twelve months, many of which remain pending. During the past twelve months, counsel has been assigned the following cases: (list and describe as above). The cases which remain pending are listed in Paragraph 6, supra.

15. The Rubin-Brown accounting firm, in conjunction with the ABA, developed empirically-based caseload standards specifically for the Missouri Public Defender. See The Missouri Project: A Study of the Missouri Public Defender System and Attorney Workload Standards (June 2014)(copy attached). Undersigned counsel exceeds those standards because (explain how).

16. If counsel must represent Defendant, counsel will be unable to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct, and will be unable to fulfill counsel's constitutional obligations to provide effective assistance of counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution and Article I, Sections 10 and 18(a) of the Missouri Constitution. Defendant will be denied his rights to ethical and competent counsel, effective assistance of counsel, conflict-free counsel and due process under the Rules of Professional Conduct and these federal and state constitutional provisions.

WHEREFORE, counsel respectfully requests that counsel be granted an evidentiary hearing in this case [IF YOU NEED ONE TO PROVE UP YOUR CASELOAD ALLEGATIONS; IF NOT, DELETE], and thereafter, that counsel be permitted to withdraw from representation of Defendant herein.

Respectfully submitted,

KATHLEEN LEAR,

of lawful age, having been produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of the part of Defendants, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION BY MR. MOORE:

Q. Good morning. Could you please state your full name for the record.

A. It's Kathleen Lear.

Q. Very good. And I believe you've already been deposed in this case once before; isn't that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. So you're familiar with how depositions go and the general ground rules, things of that nature; correct?

A. I am.

Q. Very good. So I'll just go over them real quick. Once again, for the sake of the court reporter and for the record, we have to take turns, question and answers, so we're not cutting in on one another. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. And your answers do have to be audible, a yes or a no, instead of a nodding or shaking your head. Do you understand that?

Page 7

A. Yes.

Q. Very good. Now, I believe that your educational background was already discussed at the prior deposition; is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Maybe we could just go through that real quickly once again, just as a refresher. Could you please just go through your educational background, beginning at the undergraduate level going forward.

A. I graduated from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 1974 with a degree in accounting.

Q. And any further education?

A. No.

Q. Now, you understand that you're here today to discuss the State of Missouri Public Defender Commission Fiscal Year 2016 Annual Report?

A. Yes.

Q. And I believe you've been identified to give testimony about certain items on our notice of deposition. Is that your understanding?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe that you have been identified to give testimony on the following topics: One, the identity of the contributors and authors of the report; is that right?

Page 8

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And also the formal and informal policies governing the preparation of the report?

A. Yes.

Q. And also the identity of the person or persons in charge of the data used to prepare the report?

A. Yes.

Q. And as well as other uses of the data that was used to prepare this report?

A. Yes.

Q. And, finally, the identity of the person or persons responsible for approving the contents of the report?

A. Yes.

MR. MOORE: Okay. And I don't believe that she was identified for the methodology; right? That's just Joe Anthony Johnson?

MS. SHIPMA: That's correct.

BY MR. MOORE:

Q. Okay. Okay. Very good. So we'll start at the top then. Are you familiar with the 2016 report?

A. Yes.

Q. Who are the contributors and authors of the report?

A. Well, I imagine I'm the author of the report.

Page 9

The contributor is every single local public defenders office, plus our IT department, the directors.

Q. So if you can just kind of go through and tell me what each of these entities or persons do or did for this particular report.

A. The IT department provides the information, the raw data for me to basically make into a pretty publication. It dates back many years. The directors review the report before it's submitted to the Commission.

Q. And so they'll make edits and things like that?

A. Occasionally, yes.

Q. How about the public defender offices, what do they do?

A. They provide the day-to-day information to the IT department.

Q. When you say day-to-day information, what kind of information are you referring to?

A. When cases are opened by the Public Defender System, they're entered into a database by the local public defender's office. That data is swept by the IT department and consolidated and put together for me.

Q. So the individual offices are providing the raw data --

Page 10

A. That's --

Q. -- is that --

A. -- correct.

Q. -- correct? Do they assist in actually drafting the report in any way?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And you said that you're the author of this report; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Any coauthors or persons who help actually draft it up?

A. No.

MR. MOORE: Okay. Okay. So I have a copy of the report here. We should probably mark this as an exhibit.

(Exhibit 1 marked for identification.)

BY MR. MOORE:

Q. You've been handed what's been marked Exhibit 1, and I believe that is the 2016 State of Missouri Public Defender Commission Fiscal Year Annual Report; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And this is a report that we've been discussing so far in the deposition?

A. True.

Page 11

Q. So I guess before we dig into the actual report itself, let's continue down the line. Are there any formal or informal policies that govern the preparation of this report?

A. No.

Q. Are there -- so there's no rules or anything that say we have to do this on a yearly basis or anything like that or...

A. There's a statute that requires us to do so.

Q. Okay. And what statute is that?

A. 600.042.

Q. And what's your understanding of what that statute requires?

A. Just exactly what it says. Submit to the Commission between August 15th and September 15th of each year a report, including pertinent data regarding the Public Defender System.

Q. Okay. Any other formal or informal policies or rules?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. Okay. So as far as the persons that would be in charge of the raw data that goes into this report, I think you've identified the individual offices, public defender offices; is that right?

A. And the IT staff, yes.

Page 12

Q. And the IT staff. Anyone else that, you know, manages -- manages the data or helps process it?

A. No.

Q. Is the data all stored locally or is it in any kind of a cloud-based format somewhere else?

A. It's -- we don't have a cloud. It is stored locally and replicated centrally.

Q. And it would be replicated, I guess, by the IT department?

A. Yes.

Q. So as far as analyzing the data is concerned, is that something that you do totally on your own or do you have people that analyze parts of it and report back to you?

A. I do it.

Q. Okay. So this is all you, as far as the analysis goes?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Whenever the data comes to you, you know, what does it look like? Just like an Excel spreadsheet or...

A. Generally it's a multitabbed Excel spreadsheet. It has evolved to that, being able to have the information in the Excel spreadsheet.

Q. Okay. And you said it evolved to that. So did it start off in some other kind of format or...

Page 13

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Tell me about that.
A. Well, prior to having -- you know, it's been years. I've done this since 19 -- a long time. '84 I think was the first one I did. So it's evolved over the years, is all I meant by that. We used to count by tick marks. We don't count by tick marks anymore on the number of cases we -- we represent. It's much more sophisticated now.
Q. It's kind of progressed, I guess, as technology progressed?
A. Definitely.
Q. Okay. And as far as the person or persons responsible for approving the content of the report, I think you identified the directors; is that right?
A. The director, yes.
Q. Oh, the director. And then the Commission; is that right?
A. The Commission accepts the report.
Q. Okay. So they don't really, I guess, review it; they just kind of accept or reject. Is that basically --
A. They just --
Q. -- how it goes?

Page 14

A. -- accept.
Q. Okay. Have they ever rejected a report?
A. No.
Q. Okay. And who was the director at the time of this?
A. This was Michael Barrett.
Q. Okay. So if I understand the process right, it would be basically just you personally create this report, based on the data that you get from the offices, and then --
A. Through IT.
Q. Through IT. And then you submit the report to at this time Mr. Barrett?
A. Correct.
Q. And Mr. Barrett will make changes, if he feels like making changes?
A. Correct.
Q. And then the report will go to the Commission, who then accepts the report?
A. Correct.
Q. Any other layers or review in there that weren't discussed?
A. No.
Q. And so you draft this all by yourself? There's no help in like the typing or --

Page 15

A. No.
Q. -- anything? Okay. Not even like the word processing or creating --
A. No.
Q. -- Excel sheets or anything?
A. No.
Q. And you anticipated my question. But, again, for the record, you just have to wait for the full question to get out. Okay. Very good.
Are you aware of other uses of the data that was utilized in this report?
A. I'm not sure I understand your question.
Q. So you are tendered as someone who could identify any other uses of the data in this report. So are you aware of other uses for this data by a public defender's office or, I guess, anyone else?
A. We utilize some of the data to generate our legislative budget request.
Q. Okay. Any other uses?
A. Not that I'm aware of.
Q. Okay. Okay. So please look at Exhibit 1, and we'll just kind of start going through it. Will you please turn to page 8. Very good. If you could just kind of review page 8; and whenever you're ready, we can discuss it. Let me know.

Page 16

A. Okay.
Q. Okay. So looking at the first paragraph at the top, there's some assertions in the text. And I wanted to ask you about the basis for those assertions. My understanding is that you are the one who drafted all of the -- this entire report, you said; right?
A. That's correct.
Q. Okay. So first paragraph, it looks like it's a sentence -- sentence, says, However, excessive caseloads and low salaries lead to a high turnover rate among attorney staff. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. So is there -- is there data in this report or some other data on which you're basing this assertion?
A. This information is derived from exit interviews with employees as they're leaving, as to the reason they leave our system, and -- and tallied by the human resources department.
Q. Tell me a little bit more about that, I guess. So there's another source of data, exit interviews, that you use to prepare the report; is that right?
A. This page, yes.
Q. And are you the one that conducts those exit interviews?

Page 17

A. No, I am not.
Q. So who does?
A. It would be our HR staff.
Q. Okay. And so as far as this particular assertion goes, what did the HR department, I guess, tell you that led you to include this in the report?
A. There's a report that tells the reason for separation.
Q. And what were those reports showing, I guess, in 2016?
A. I don't have that information.
Q. So are those reports just generated by the people leaving the office? Is there self-reported?
A. No.
Q. So tell me, I guess, a little bit what your understanding of those HR reports then is. You said there's the report whenever people leave; right?
A. They do an exit interview --
Q. Yeah, I understand.
A. -- with the person.
Q. And there's some report that says the reason for the separation; right?
A. It's one of the questions that's asked.
Q. To the person that's leaving; right?
A. Correct.

Page 18

Q. So then the people leaving would be self-reporting their reason for leaving the office; right?
A. That I don't know. I believe that the HR staff is doing an interview and recording the information.
Q. Okay. So you're not really sure what's in the report, the HR report; is that right?
A. I am not.
Q. Okay. But the statement here is based off the HR reports --
A. Yes.
Q. -- right? So who, I guess, would know more about what's in the reports and how those reports are generated?
A. Our HR staff.
Q. And I guess just real quick. I asked you your education. We had discussed this in your prior deposition. But you don't have any background or training in statistical analysis in a sociological context, do you?
A. No.
Q. You're not familiar with the methodology that might be utilized for studies of that nature?
A. What nature?

Page 19

Q. The one we just discussed, the sociological studies.
A. No.
Q. As far as your accounting background, were you -- did you receive any kind of training in school to, you know, analyze data sets and draw conclusions about what might be causing those changes in the data sets?
A. I had a statistical analysis class.
Q. Okay. And that would be mostly to just determine like the numbers of data set, correct, like, you know, how to calculate confidence intervals or things of that nature --
A. Sure.
Q. -- right? But as far as drawing conclusions about what the data means, you know, you never received any training on that, did you?
A. No.
Q. But this report kind of looks at the data, and then it draws conclusions about what the data means; would you agree?
A. No.
Q. So let's look at a couple of sentences forward that starts with, The fact that these small changes. Do you see that?
A. Yes.

Page 20

MS. SHIPMA: I don't. Where are you talking about?
MR. MOORE: Still the first paragraph on page 8.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. We'll rewind one more sentence. It says, After MSPD began hitting turnover rates of 20 to 22 percent in the mid-2000's, repositioning salary adjustments were enacted to bring salaries to the levels shown above. Do you see that sentence?
A. Yes.
Q. And the next sentence says, The fact that these small changes were enough to make MSPD's attorney turnover drop several significant percentage points, blah, blah, blah, is proof that most public defenders do want to remain in public service if at that all possible. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. Now, that would be a conclusion about the data that is just drawn from statistics about turnover; would you agree?
A. It's a conclusion.
Q. Conclusion. Right. But that's not something you were trained to do in your -- in your accounting background, is it?

Page 21

A. No.
Q. So where did you -- how did you come to that conclusion then, based on the data set that is --
A. I have no idea.
Q. Okay. But you're -- still you're the one who drafted the report; right? It wouldn't come from any other source?
A. This information probably did come from another source.
Q. Would you happen to know where that one came from?
A. The HR department.
Q. And so you think that there would be some -- would it be the same reports that we discussed earlier, the exit interviews --
A. Yes.
Q. -- would that be what you're referring to? But you're not certain, for sure; that's just what you think it might have been, right?
A. That's where they came from.
Q. Okay. Do you know if those HR reports are included anywhere in this --
A. They are not.
Q. Okay. Now for the next sentence. It says, However, staggering student debt loans, 60- to 200,000, make it extremely difficult for even those who are passionate about public interest work to continue with MSPD if they want to also make loan payments and provide for families. Do you see that sentence?

A. I do.
Q. Where did the data come from for that assertion, if there is any data?
A. There is none.
Q. So where did that -- where did the basis for that assertion come from then?
A. It's, again, from our HR staff.
Q. Okay. And do you know at this time was there any particular HR person or staff person that would have been the source of this data?
A. There are multiple people who do exit interviews.
Q. Okay. So this is all just based on exit interviews, you're saying; all the assertions in the first paragraph mostly, right?
A. Correct.
Q. Okay. So jumping down past the graph there in the middle, the first sentence says, The recession that hit in 2008 was actually much more effective in reducing attorney turnover. Do you see that sentence?
A. Yes.

Page 23

Q. Okay. So here, you know, it's commentary about the state of the economy, I guess, and the effect it had on the office; right?
A. Yes.
Q. So where did the -- where did the basis for this assertion come from?
A. I have no idea.
Q. Okay. And the next sentence says, Private law firms stopped hiring and senior attorneys on the verge of setting up their own private practice put plans on hold, given the state of the economy. Any source for that assertion?
A. Opinion.
Q. Okay. And so the next sentence as well, This combination gave MSPD a temporary reprieve from the revolving door, dropping turnover as low as 7.5, but the reprieve was only temporary. Any source for that information?
A. The source is that the turnover went back up after that point.
Q. So you looked at data that said -- that you believe that said the turnover went back up after a certain period of time; right?
A. Correct.
Q. And then you drew a conclusion about what that -- what may have caused that increase; right?

Page 24

A. Correct.
Q. Do you have any objective proof or statistical backing that that is the cause of that trend?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So what did you base that assertion off of?
A. That the trend went back up.
Q. It's just a conclusion that you just drew yourself?
A. True.
Q. And then to the next sentence, Missouri public defenders still struggle with staggering student loan debt and much lower salaries than what other government lawyers receive. Do you see that sentence?
A. Yes.
Q. And what's the basis of that one?
A. Again, exit interviews and looking at other state employee salaries.
Q. And so when you were looking at other state employee salaries, how did that process go exactly?
A. The information's available through SAM II. You just find the attorneys and you look up their salaries.
Q. And what is SAM II?

Page 25

A. Statewide automated accounting management system.
Q. Okay. And so is that what you did in this case, you looked up salaries for other government employees and just compared them to public defenders office?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you recall what kind of -- what that search looked like exactly, how many and what kind of other government employee salaries you pulled?
A. We pulled attorney salaries.
Q. Okay. And attorneys from which branch of government?
A. All three.
Q. And which ones would those be?
A. Executive, legislative, and judicial.
Q. And so when you say that, what kind of roles are we talking here? Is it just attorneys that work at these places or is it like legislator salaries and like judge salaries who --
A. It was mainly staff people.
Q. Staff persons?
A. Yes.
Q. And the staff persons would then be compared to like assistant public defenders?

Page 26

A. Yes.
Q. Is there a place in this report that compares the findings of your research to the actual --
A. No.
Q. -- public defender salary? Is that contained somewhere outside of this report, that comparison?
A. I don't know.
Q. Do you believe that it was ever submitted in any kind of other report or was it more just kind of work that you had done on your own and then included in this 2016 report?
A. I'm sure the information was used in other ways.
Q. But you just can't recall like where -- if it's out there somewhere, you don't know where it might be at?
A. I'd say it was work product.
Q. Okay. So this is -- like is this something you worked on like on your own computer and you did the comparison and you kept the spreadsheet or whatever on your computer; it never went out in some other form to anyone else? I'm trying to figure out if it's out there somewhere we can take a look at it is all.
A. I don't know that answer.
Q. Okay. Do you recall how many -- how many government employees you pulled up their salaries to compare or what kind of data set you were looking at for that?

Page 27

A. It would be hundreds.
Q. So you pulled hundreds of other employee salaries and then compared them to public defender salaries?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know how many hundreds it might have been?
A. No.
Q. You think it was less than a thousand or more than a thousand?
A. Less.
Q. Okay. Do you know how much lower, I guess, the salaries you were seeing were than public defender salary -- or vice versa?
A. I do. I don't have that information with me.
Q. Okay. So how much lower was it then, if you know?
A. I don't know.
Q. Oh.
A. I have that information. I don't have it with me.
Q. Ah. Okay. So the next sentence says,

Page 28

Caseloads are still overwhelming and lawyers still enjoy no immunity from either civil liability or disciplinary action for their failures to handle that caseload effectively, no matter how impossible that task might be. Do you see that sentence?
A. Yes.
Q. So where did the -- I guess the backing for this statement come from?
A. I don't have that answer. That's not my question.
Q. You say it's not your question. What do you mean?
A. That's a question for management, not me.
Q. Okay. So is this something that somebody else put in the report then? Would that be like a Barrett add-on or something? Or where did this come from, I guess?
A. I wrote it. He edited it. If he wanted to edit it, he edited it. I just don't have an answer for that question.
Q. Okay. And are you aware of any data or statistical set that analyzes whether other lawyers have any kind of civil liability or any kind of immunity from civil liability or disciplinary action? Is that based on any kind of data?

Page 29

A. I don't have that information.
Q. You're just not sure at this time whether there's any data that would back up this claim?
A. No, I do not.
Q. So looking down at the last paragraph on the page, we'll start with the third-to-last sentence. It says, Missouri's full-time elected. Do you see that sentence?
A. Yes.
Q. Missouri's full-time elected prosecuting attorneys are required by state statute to be paid the same as an associate circuit judge, 136,402. By comparison, their public defender counterparts are paid an average of a mere 79,601. This level of pay and inequity between the defense and prosecution sides of the criminal justice system is neither equitable nor sustainable. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. So as to the last sentence where you say that it's neither equitable nor sustainable, is there any kind of data that would back up the claim that it's not sustainable?
A. Again, it's a turnover question. You see people leaving because they're not making salaries.
Q. So this is -- it pretty much just compares the amount that the defense side and the prosecution --

Page 30

A. Correct.
Q. -- side makes; right?
A. Correct.
Q. So why would that difference be unsustainable?
A. Because you can't keep people.
(Witness' phone buzzing.)
THE WITNESS: That's mine.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. So you're just referencing a -- it's just in reference to the turnover, I guess?
A. Right.
Q. Okay. Could you turn to page 11 of the report? You see the Fiscal Year 2016 Total State of Missouri General Revenue Appropriations graph?
A. Correct.
Q. So it looks like this is comparing the amount the public defender got versus all other state departments; right?
A. General revenue money.
Q. General revenue money; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. So what would be included in that all other state departments category?

Page 31

A. Every other state department other than the public defender.
Q. And are there a lot of those?
A. There are 13 departments in the executive branch.
Q. Are there more in other branches?
A. Yes.
Q. I'm just asking how many there are?
A. Yes. I don't know. Yes, there are. From corrections, conservation, revenue, mental health, social health, Department of Education, you know, they're in the statute.
Q. Okay. And so it looks like, comparing what the public defender got to what all the other departments got, this graph concludes that it's .41 percent of the total general revenue appropriations; is that right?
A. That's correct.
Q. But this isn't compared to other departments within the state individually; right?
A. I don't know what you mean.
Q. So when you're looking at the little sliver for the public defender, that .41 percent; right?
A. (Moved head affirmatively.)
Q. We don't know what the other state departments are getting of the general revenue appropriations; right?

Page 32

A. It's the rest of the picture.
Q. But like you said, for example, Department of Corrections, right, you wouldn't be able to tell from this graph how much the Department of Corrections is getting from the general revenue appropriations; right?
A. No, you could not.
Q. Or you wouldn't be able to tell what any other particular state department would be getting from the general revenue appropriations based on this graph?
A. That's true.
Q. Right?
A. Not the purpose of the report.
Q. Right. When you're looking at this particular graph, you wouldn't be able to tell whether the public defender was receiving more or less or the same as all the other state departments; is that right?
A. Not from this graph, no.
Q. And are there other graphs that compare what each department gets in this report?
A. No. This a report about the public defender, not the other departments.
Q. Okay.
VIDEOGRAPHER: Excuse me, ma'am, you're leaning on the mic.

Page 33

THE WITNESS: Sorry.
VIDEOGRAPHER: Thank you.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Is that something that you looked into as part of your preparation of this report or is that not something that you looked into?
A. This information is pulled from the Office of Administration's website.
Q. No, that's fair enough. I'm just talking about what the other departments are getting. Is that something that you looked into as part of preparing this report or no?
A. No, it is not.
Q. Okay. So let's talk just a little bit -- back up a little bit and talk a little bit more about the general preparation of the report. You said it has to be done on an annual basis; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. So when does preparation of this report begin each year?
A. It generally starts around first of August.
Q. Okay. And approximately how long does it take to prepare the report?
A. 120 hours.
Q. Okay. And is that just the amount of time that you spend on it or is that the time that all the IT and yourself and the other people put into the report?

A. That's my time.
Q. Your time. Any idea what it takes for the other people, what they put into it?
A. No, I do not.
Q. And if you could just kind of take me step by step through the process of preparing the report start to finish.
A. Generally speaking, it's a -- it's a -- I get the information from the information technology department in August. That gives ample time for the fiscal year to close, for bills to be paid, for cases to be closed that were in the process of being closed as of June 30th. So that gives that full four weeks.
I get the information generally now in an Excel spreadsheet, with multiple tabs of information regarding different sorts of the data. And I take that information and generally make it pretty for the report. I do look at the information to be sure that it's consistent with prior years. If something sticks out or there's some variance that I'm not comfortable with, we work through things like that. We being the information technology staff and myself.
Basically it's the same information in multiple formats throughout this whole book. You start with the cases assigned. You sort that information in any different way you can think of. What types of cases were assigned? Where were they assigned? What county were they assigned? What was their original venue? What office opened the case? So there's multiple sorts with regard to opened cases. The same thing happens with closed cases.

The rest of the book is providing information by office as to the types of cases opened, how many cases did that office close. Generally it's the same information sorted, you know, 30 times.
Q. Okay. Very good. And so continue on. So keep walking through how the report gets generated, if there's any further steps.
A. Well, once the information is gathered, it is put into -- it's actually different formats, but a lot of publisher documents, a lot of PDFs, a lot of snipping goes on so that you can pull reports from an Excel spreadsheet and drop it into a publisher document so that it looks very nice.
It gives you information with regard to, you know, what happened this year. Gives you information about what counties are provided representation by what office, how are the counties grouped. Gives you information with regard to who's in charge of that office. Gives you some history of how many cases did they open this year compared to the prior years. So there's a lot of good history document. It's a good historical documentation is what it is.

Q. And continue on. Is there any further steps it takes to put the report together?
A. Other than proofing and printing --
Q. Okay.
A. -- and distributing.
Q. And as I understand correctly, you said that you pretty much do all the proofing and everything yourself; right?
A. Correct.
Q. You and Mr. Barrett. Okay. So jumping back into the report, if you look at page -- there's no actual page number, but it's the third page, the message from the director.
A. Um-hum.
Q. And you see the page that I'm referring to?
A. Yes.
Q. If you look at the exhibit, there's no page number at the bottom right, but it says page 58 out of 150 --
A. Correct.

Page 37

Q. -- for the printing; right? Okay. So did you assist in the preparation of this page, the message from the director?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So you did the rest of the report; but this, I'm assuming, comes from Mr. Barrett himself?
A. Correct.
Q. So you wouldn't have any knowledge as to what he bases his assertions on in this statement, in this page?
A. No.
Q. You didn't help him write this in any way, did you?
A. No.
Q. So you wouldn't be able to say whether the stuff he's saying is accurate or inaccurate; right?
A. No.
Q. So as far as the data that is contained in this report, you receive that directly from the offices of public defenders; is that right?
A. No.
Q. Oh.
A. I get it through the IT.
Q. Through IT. Okay.
A. Correct.

Page 38

Q. I'll just rephrase that then. So --
A. Okay.
Q. -- the public defender offices are the ones who are generating this data; right?
A. Correct.
Q. And they pass it along to you through the IT department; right?
A. That's correct.
Q. Do you have any knowledge about how the data is actually produced in the first place by the public defender offices?
A. It's entered into a database.
Q. Okay. Tell me about that process.
A. That's not my question.
Q. So you don't have any knowledge about how that --
A. I don't do that.
Q. Okay. Do you have any knowledge, though, about how that process takes place, as far as, you know, acquiring the data and putting it into the system?
A. No, I don't do that.
Q. Okay. You just kind of take whatever data is given to you and then you process it; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. Now, if you could look at page 9 of your report. Now, you see it says Public Defender Appropriations at the top there?
A. Correct.
Q. And you have a number of categories and then like a definition of categories on this page; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. And is this contained in statute somewhere or is this just something that you created, as far as the categories and the descriptions, the same are concerned?
A. It's not part of the statute, by any stretch of the means.
Q. Okay.
A. But, also, I did not create these categories. These are categories created by the Office of Administration.
Q. Okay.
A. And I did provide the definitions of the categories.
Q. And as far as the description of the categories, are those things you just kind of made up on your own or do they have some kind of a basis somewhere?
A. Well, I didn't make them up.
Q. Okay.
A. Put it that way. I don't know what your question is.
Q. Like are these definitions you took from like a dictionary or something or is it something that you kind of just drafted up yourself?
A. It's the purpose of the appropriations.
Q. Okay. But as far as like describing each of these categories, that's something that you just created on your own --
A. It's --
Q. -- it didn't come from any particular source; right?
A. No, it's mine.
Q. Could you turn to page 16 of the report. And you see the page I'm referring to?
A. Yes.
Q. It says fiscal year -- well, it says FY16 Time-Keeping in a little graph at the top left --
A. Yes.
Q. -- right? This page discusses, it looks like, MSPD's history of time keeping and their methods of time keeping; would you agree?
A. Correct.
Q. The first -- well, actually, the second sentence says, While public defender time-keeping. Do you see that sentence?

Page 41

A. Yes.
Q. It says, While public defender time-keeping had been instituted once before, in 2006, as part of a 12-week workload study, this new time-keeping approach is not a one-time study but a permanent change in MSPD's way of doing business. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. Do you know why the public defender had kept their time in 2006?
A. It was part of a caseload study.
Q. Is that the RubinBrown --
A. No.
Q. -- report?
A. Not in 2006.
Q. Okay. Do you recall...
A. It's probably Spangenberg.
Q. Okay. In any event, it goes on to say that this is now a permanent change in the way that the MSPD does business; is that right?
A. That's what it says.
Q. So then it's your understanding that public defenders are continuing to keep their time, or has this policy since been abandoned?
A. Policy's been abandoned.
Q. Okay. How long did the time keeping go on then?

Page 42

A. I don't know that answer. A year, approximately.
Q. Okay.
A. Maybe more.
Q. Okay. So did it start in 2016 and then end like a year later or what -- what time period are we talking for the --
A. It started on March 1st, 2013, as it says in this report.
Q. Um-hum. And then it kind of went forward in time --
A. Um-hum.
Q. -- you said for like a year?
A. I don't know how long it went.
Q. Okay. It says, Employee time logs are kept in five-minute increments and are completed by MSPD attorneys, investigators, and mitigation specialists; right?
A. Correct.
Q. If you look down at the graph on the same page, FY16 Attorneys-All Divisions, you see that; right?
A. Yes.
Q. As far as the data used to prepare this graph, would that have been the time logs that are referenced earlier in this same page?

A. Yes.
Q. And as far as this particular graph, does this include time spent by public defender attorneys, investigators, and mitigation specialists or --
A. This is attorneys.
Q. Just attorneys?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know if there's another graph in this --
A. No.
Q. -- report that -- oh, like I said before, the -- for the court reporter.
Is there another graph in here that discusses or shows in the same manner as this graph the time spent by investigators or mitigation specialists?
A. No.
Q. Is there any reason that wasn't included in the report?
A. No.
Q. But that would be time being spent on the cases, right, just not by attorneys?
A. No. That's correct.
Q. That is correct. So, actuality, even though, you know, there's a report about the amount of time attorneys are spending on these particular tasks, there's actually probably, would you say, a lot more time also being spent on these cases by other staff in the public defender department; right?

A. Yes.
Q. Is there any record of how much time these other employees of MSPD are spending on the cases?
A. That's -- I don't have that knowledge.
Q. Okay. Turn to page 17 of the report. And are you looking at page 17?
A. Yes.
Q. So this first paragraph discusses a report done by RubinBrown, and it also comes to various conclusions about the way the RubinBrown study was conducted and its methodology; would you agree?
A. Correct.
Q. So, for example, it looks like it's the second sentence: In arriving at its workload standards, the -- RubinBrown used MSPD's time-keeping data, as well as surveys of both MSPD practitioners and private criminal defense attorneys in Missouri to identify case-related tasks that MSPD attorneys had sufficient or insufficient time to perform, based on current practices and staffing levels. Do you see that?
A. Yes.

Page 45

Q. Where is the basis for that assertion?
A. I don't know.
Q. Is it just based on whatever the RubinBrown study said essentially or is there some other basis for that assertion?
A. It would be the RubinBrown study.
Q. Okay. And how about the next sentence, With that time-keeping data and survey results in hand, the Missouri Project then utilized a Delphi -- or Delphi -- method, a business forecasting tool, to estimate the amount of time that should be allotted for those tasks with reasonable effectiveness. Do you have any basis for that particular assertion?
A. That's part of the RubinBrown report.
Q. Okay. Do you have any knowledge of the Delphi method?
A. Delphi method. No, I don't.
Q. Okay. Now, the next sentence, The workload standards developed provide empirical evidence that there are not enough public defenders in Missouri to meet its constitutional mandate of providing effective assistance of counsel to indigent persons charged with criminal offenses. Any particular backing for that assertion?
A. It's -- it's -- it's a product of the multiplication.

Q. What do you mean when you say that?
A. If you know how many cases we had and what type of hours are required for those types of cases, then you know how many hours you need to provide representation in those cases. So it is a product of the multiplication.
Q. As far as coming to the number of hours needed, where did that data come from?
A. Again, from everything you just read; the RubinBrown report and the workload standards and the Delphi method applied to those.
Q. Other than the RubinBrown report and their methodology, is there any other basis for the math, as you put it, or is it --
A. Not in this instance, no.
Q. Okay. I know we went over this in your other deposition. But, again, you are not familiar with the methodology of the RubinBrown report and whether that methodology was scientifically valid; right?
A. That's not my call.
Q. You just kind of take what the RubinBrown report said at face value; is that fair?
A. No, it's not fair.
Q. Okay.
A. It's not fair, because you take it at face value after you do your own analysis of the information too. You don't just take something at face value. I'm going to argue with you if I don't believe it.

Q. Okay. So is there anything you disagree with --
A. No.
Q. -- with the RubinBrown study?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So even though you don't have any particular knowledge about -- knowledge about the scientific or sociological or statistical methodology of that report, you still agree with its conclusions and with the way they did things?
A. I do.
Q. Okay. And what is that agreement based off of specifically?
A. It's based off of 45 years of experience of working with the system and knowing the struggles that have -- that have lasted this entire time. So it's based on a lot of history and a lot of knowledge of the system as it operates.
Q. So you would say it's personal experience?
A. Definitely.
Q. How about, you know, objective empirical or scientific evidence, is there any of that that goes into it as well or is it mostly the personal experience?

Page 48

A. Well, it's personal and objective.
Q. Okay. And so as to the objective side of things, what objective evidence did you have that would, you know...
A. I've been to every office. I've seen their struggles. I've seen how hard folks work. It's not an easy struggle.
Q. So it's just kind of your personal knowledge, based on what you have personally seen at the offices when you visited them and in your experience as an employee of the MSPD; right?
A. For 45 years.
Q. Right. And based on those -- those personal experiences, that's what makes you agree with the RubinBrown report; right?
A. True.
Q. But you don't have any -- a study that you have done yourself or anything that would lend credence to the RubinBrown findings; right?
A. No, that's not right. There have been multiple, multiple studies of the public defender workloads over the years, some of which I was involved in heavily. There's been many different standards applied to the public defender workloads, whether it be the National Advisory Council on Criminal Justice or whether it be Governor Ashcroft's standards to be applied to the public defender workloads. I've been involved in a lot of them. And for all of those years the results have been consistently the same, not enough public defenders. So it's not just this one study. It's been years and years and years of telling people where we are and finally getting to this place.

Q. And as far as -- other than those studies, though, performed by other entities, right, you yourself have never done any statistical analysis or conducted a study that you were then using to assess the RubinBrown study; right?

A. Not to assess the RubinBrown study, no.

Q. Okay. And the next sentence says, Since its release, the Missouri Project has served as a model for other attorney workload standards in the indigent defense community across our nation. Do you see that sentence?

A. I do.

Q. And what's the backing for that particular assertion?

A. There are other states using the same project, the same calculations.

Q. And what -- are those cited in this report, the other states?

Page 50

A. Not that I know of. I don't think so.

Q. Okay. Do you know what states those are?

A. I don't.

Q. How did you come to the conclusion that this was the case whenever you were drafting this report?

A. I just know there are other states that are using it.

Q. So just based on personal knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. But today you can't tell me what those other states are?

A. No.

Q. So looking down, I guess, at the first -- not paragraph, but it's like a little box, right, it says, The workload standards developed by RubinBrown are below?

A. Um-hum.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. It says murder/homicide. And then it kind of goes across, and I assume these are supposed to be hours that are to be spent on various tasks. Does that seem accurate?

A. Correct.

Q. Is this taken directly from the RubinBrown report?

Page 51

A. Yes.

Q. So then you don't have any idea how they came to these particular hour totals; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And then I guess the box below that, client -- let's see, it says, Comparing the above standards to the below table of average case-related hours. Is that another table that came from the RubinBrown report or did you draft that table?

A. I did not draft that table.

Q. So that's also from the RubinBrown report?

A. I don't know that answer.

Q. Okay. But you know that you didn't draft it; right?

A. I did not draft it.

Q. Okay. Do you recall how it came to be in the report?

A. It's showing a comparison of what RubinBrown said needed to be done versus what had been done, based on the calculation from the time-keeping logs.

Q. Okay. I guess I'm just asking do you know -- actually, you don't know where this table came from, though; right?

A. It's from the RubinBrown report.

Q. Okay. So the last paragraph, it says, The stark discrepancy between what work must be done in the proper defense of constitutional liberty and what is being done with the limited resources at hand reveals that MSPD is in need of 169-and-a-half additional attorneys to meet constitutional requirements. Do you see that?

Page 52

A. I do.

Q. How do you -- any idea how that particular number, that 169.5, was calculated?

A. It's the same thing. It's what we talked about before. It's a product of the multiplication. If you know the types of cases and the hours that that type of case is required, then you can determine how many attorneys you need. It's -- it's a formula.

Q. And as I understand it, that formula was derived entirely from the RubinBrown numbers, is that right, the math formula?

A. No.

Q. Tell me, I guess, what is the -- what is the formula then?

A. If you know what you need and you know what you have, you subtract what you need from what you have; and, therefore, which -- whatever is left over is what you got to get.

Q. Fair enough. As far as the what you need part, though --

Page 53

A. Yes.
Q. -- right? Isn't it fair to say that you're basing that off of what RubinBrown says is needed?
A. It's based on that number of hours required by type of case, yes.
Q. Is it based on anything other than the RubinBrown numbers?
A. We used the RubinBrown numbers.
Q. Okay. So the RubinBrown report is your source for what is needed from a mathematical standpoint --
A. Correct.
Q. -- right?
A. That is correct.
Q. Okay. And so then you do the math, and it gets you this number 169.5; right?
A. Attorneys needed.
Q. Okay.
COURT REPORTER: Attorneys what?
THE WITNESS: Needed.
COURT REPORTER: Okay. Thank you.
THE WITNESS: Um-hum.
MR. MOORE: Yeah, the elevator's pretty loud. Sorry about that. I guess it's not my fault, but...

Page 54

BY MR. MOORE:
Q. How can you have half of an attorney? Would that be like a contract attorney or...
A. We actually do have part-time attorneys.
Q. So for the 169.5, that would be like 169 full attorneys and then a what, like a part-time attorney?
A. Halftime attorney, yeah.
Q. Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: Could we take a break?
MR. MOORE: Oh, sure. Yeah. How long have we been going? We can go off the record.
VIDEOGRAPHER: We are off the record. The time is 2:03 p.m.
(Off the record.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: We are back on the record. The time is 2:23 p.m.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Very good. So we are back on the record, and we're just going to continue going through your 2016 report.
A. Okay.
Q. If you turn to page 23. Okay. And you see the --
A. They don't look the same.
Q. The table? It says Fiscal Year 2016-Trial Division-Case By Case Type?

Page 55

A. Check. Okay.
Q. Okay. So you're the one that included this in the report; right?
A. That's correct.
Q. Does this table come from any other study, like the RubinBrown report, or is this something that you created?
A. This comes from the information I assembled by the information technology department and presented to me through the Excel spreadsheet that we talked about.
Q. Okay.
A. Um-hum.
Q. And so you're the one who -- you created it, though; right?
A. I built the chart.
Q. Okay. Very good. Now, looking at this chart, it kind of breaks down the type of case, it describes the case, and then it says the number of cases that were opened and closed; right?
A. Correct.
Q. So when you're looking at the data set, does it look exactly pretty much like this and you just kind of count them up and put them in the -- put the tallies or are you -- do you spend some time kind of separating out what type of case it is?

Page 56

A. It comes tallied to me.
Q. Comes tallied to you?
A. Um-hum. From the information technology group.
Q. Okay. Do you have any idea how -- if any of these categories would overlap or if any of the cases would overlap?
A. They do not overlap.
Q. Okay. So if one person was charged in the same case for like a murder and then some kind of felony drug charge, do you know, would that be tallied as two separate cases or would it be part of one case?
A. It's -- this is not my ex-- area of expertise. But it depends on the charging practices of the local prosecutor. In many instances the prosecutor will have one case with multiple charges; and in other instances the prosecutor could have multiple cases, each charged separate. We follow the practice of the local prosecutor. So if there's two cases, we have two cases. If there's one case, we have one case.
Q. Okay. So each prosecutor has his own practices as to how the number of cases are determined for the charges; right?
A. That's my opinion, yes.

Page 57

Q. Opinion or is that your understanding of the way that it works?
A. It's my understanding, but it's also my opinion.
Q. Okay. And so, you know, the word cases, when it says open cases, it might actually only be like one case with multiple different charges; is that accurate?
A. No. We are not in control of the number of cases. The prosecutor is in control of the number of cases, not the Public Defender System. So if one case is filed, we have one case. So in this instance, these are unique cases filed by the -- by the prosecuting attorney's office.
MS. SHIPMA: And if I could just object here. This is really going to number 3 on your attachment, Procedures employed to identify and track cases assigned to the Missouri State Public Defender's Trial Division. Joel Elmer has been named as the person who would be able to provide the answers to that. I think that asking Kathy on it, although she may have an understanding based on what she's heard, is just based on what she understands of what she's heard. And if you want to get the real information, you should ask Joel those questions.
MR. MOORE: Okay. Yeah, very good. Thank you.

Page 58

THE WITNESS: Um-hum. You're welcome.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Let's turn to the next page, 24. And on the graph it says, Cases carried over from fiscal year 2015 and total cases assigned in fiscal year 2016. This is just based on the data that you received from the IT -- IT department?
A. Correct.
Q. And so would this also, as far as the breakdown, kind of go with Mr. Elmer's knowledge of how these cases are tracked?
A. He'd be a great person to answer those questions for you.
Q. Okay. And then turning to page 28.
A. Got it.
Q. Cases assigned and disposed. As far as you know, what would qualify as a case that is assigned and whether it's the same and the practices of the prosecutor, that would be something for Mr. Elmer, I guess, as well?
A. If you'll notice that the number of cases is consistent. So this is the same number, you're right.
Q. Okay.
A. You are correct.

Page 59

Q. And so as far as you know, these opened and closed statistics are concerned, you're just taking the data that is given to you by IT and you're just pretty much copy and pasting it into a graph or a chart of some kind; right?
A. I'm making it pretty.
Q. Okay. But whenever you receive the data, it already gives you a number for opened or closed; there's no interpretation that is required on your end?
A. No.
Q. So as far as determining, you know, what goes into this report, is that determined by statute or does someone tell you what all to include or how did that particular decision-making process go?
A. I think I decide what's going to go in the report, based on the number of charts and graphs and things like that. It's grown, like we talked about previously, over the years as the data's become more available and easily to interpret and to put into a -- into a chart. Not interpret, but to put into a chart. I think it gives good history. It's a good historical document as to the number of cases in a given county or in a given office over a 10- to 15-year period. You can see any anomalies relatively easily.
Q. And so, for example, if you turn to, you know, page 41.

A. Okay.
Q. It looks like it's a 15-year comparison of the trial division caseload of closed cases by county?
A. Correct.
Q. And that's just something that you had decided to put in there?
A. Yes.
Q. That's not something that anybody asked you to put in this report; right?
A. It's beneficial when you're talking to county -- county folks.
Q. Sorry?
A. It's beneficial when you're talking to particular county commissioners that you can say, hey, here's your Adair County caseload over the last 15 years. So you have that information available when you go talk to different county people. So they -- they like to know their individual county. They don't care about the other counties in particular.
Q. Okay. Do the individual counties have some kind of input as to what they want in the report or is it pretty much just --
A. Oh, no. Absolutely not.
Q. Okay.

Page 61

A. No input.
Q. Just kind of what you think would be helpful?
A. Yes. Good historical information.
MR. MOORE: Okay. I'm just looking at my notes; but I can pass it over to one of you guys, if you'd like.
CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. All right. Kathy, I've got just a few follow-up questions --
A. Okay.
Q. -- I want to ask you. Okay?
A. Sure.
Q. When you were testifying earlier about the process for creating the report, you had mentioned at one point in time that it is reviewed by the directors. Who are the directors that review the report?
A. I would say it's mainly the director, Michael Barrett.
Q. Are there any others that look at it and provide input regarding changes that they want to see or additions or any kind of review?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So it's just the director?
A. Just the director.
Q. Okay. And with respect to this Exhibit 1, the twenty-six-- the Fiscal Year 2016 Annual Report, when you were ready to create this document, when you were ready to start the process of producing the annual report, did you create it from whole cloth?

Page 62

A. I did not.
Q. So tell me a little bit about what your process is with respect to each year's new fiscal report -- or fiscal year annual report.
A. Basically when I get the information from the information technology group, I start from a prior year's report and change the numbers to make it into this year's report, change the words to make it into this year's report. In fact, I will literally take a prior year's report, and that's my starting point for beginning my numbers for my current year's report.
Q. Okay. So just -- I'm just going to take the first page that we looked at kind of in some detail, page 8.
A. Okay.
Q. In preparing this Fiscal Year 2016 Annual Report, did you create this -- did you create anew the text that's on page 8?
A. I did not create it anew. It was dusted off from prior years.
Q. And so what you changed was what?

Page 63

A. I would change to the current salary level. I would change to the current turnover level. I would add the new block for percentage of attorneys leaving the system. I would update it with regard to any information I had that was more current than the previous year.
Q. Okay. So then just staying on this page 8 as an example --
A. Okay.
Q. -- do you recall when this page 8 text first made its appearance in an annual report?
A. I do not. But it's been in many annual reports, because salaries for public defenders have been an issue for many, many years.
Q. So, again, just using page 8 as an example -- I could choose another page, but I'm just going to stick with page 8 -- when it first made its appearance, whenever that was, do you believe you wrote the words that are in the text on page 8 or was that provided to you by someone else?
A. I imagine I was involved in selecting the words. The HR staff probably gave me the initial information and, you know, I dusted it off to be my style.
Q. So when you testified that you are the author of this annual report --

Page 64

A. I'm more the editor.
Q. Okay.
A. Excuse me.
Q. That's all right. I was going to ask you could you describe to me what you meant by being the author --
A. Um-hum.
Q. -- of that. I -- you also talked about, with respect to this page 8 specifically, that you get the information from an HR report; and you also testify -- testified about getting information from exit interviews.
A. Correct.
Q. Would you distinguish for me between exit interviews and the HR report you were talking about?
A. I am not involved in the exit interviews, although our HR staff is; and they do an awesome job of -- of -- what's the words I want -- consolidating the information that they receive and providing that information to the director level. That's where I get that information.
The second part of the question?
Q. I guess I'm trying to distinguish is there something -- are those two separate --
A. Yes.
Q. -- documents?

Page 65

A. Yes.
Q. The exit interview and the HR report, are those two separate things?
A. Yes, it is two separate things. The -- the information that's available regarding turnover is a view in a database that you can just basically click on it and see what the exact turnover is at any given time.
Q. And is that what you're referring to as the HR report --
A. Yes.
Q. -- in your prior testimony?
A. Yes. It's a view in a database, which is a report and it's a view.
Q. Turn to page 16, please --
A. Okay.
Q. -- of Exhibit 1.
A. Okay.
Q. With respect to that pie chart down at the bottom, the attorneys percentage of time per task.
A. Yes.
Q. You could do a report like this for other classifications of employees who did time logs; is that correct?
A. That is correct.
Q. And I believe you said earlier those were investigators and mitigation specialists?

Page 66

A. Those are the other persons who were involved in the time log -- the time-keeping logs.
MS. SHIPMA: That's all I have.
MS. STEFFAN: I have nothing to ask.
THE WITNESS: Thank you.
MR. MOORE: I'll just follow up then on a couple of things.
REDIRECT EXAMINATION BY MR. MOORE:
Q. So I think you said that you were more the editor of the report?
A. I am -- I am the editor.
Q. Okay. It sounds like a lot of the accounting is copy and pasted from the prior years and then edited according to the new data that you have. Is that an accurate --
A. That's very accurate.
Q. So who originally wrote this report then?
A. It would have been me --
Q. Okay.
A. -- you know, 40 years ago.
Q. Okay. How long have you been with the Public Defender's Office?
A. 45.
Q. Wow. So even if you didn't prepare this -- well, I'll strike that. You are the creator of this report, whether it was 45 years ago or 40 years ago or in 2016; is that accurate?

Page 67

A. I'm the one who does it, yes.
Q. Is there anybody else who would have, you know, written these things or prepared this report initially if --
A. Certainly.
Q. Okay.
A. I mean, I've had input from every director that we've had. I've had input from division directors. There's input that I take, and I do edit it, and I put it in a format that's acceptable for publication.
Q. Right. But as far as like -- so page 8 --
A. Yes.
Q. -- of the report; right?
A. Back to 8.
Q. It's not like there was somebody who was before you that drafted this whole thing up and then just like gave it to you and you've been editing it since then --
A. No.
Q. -- is that right?
A. No.
Q. It would have been you who created it in the first place, and then over time it kind of gets changed by you and others. But you believe that you are the one who drafted this; right?

A. At some point in time, yes.
Q. Okay. So as to this HR reporting -- right. So if we're looking at page 8, you know, we had talked about there were some conclusions being drawn about why people were leaving the office, why there was turnover. And I think you had cited these exit interviews and the HR reports as your source for making these assertions; right?
A. I quoted the HR exit interviews, not the reports. That would be different.
Q. Okay. So the exit interviews; right?
A. Yes.
Q. So what is your knowledge of these interviews then? Does HR talk to you about the interviews or do they provide you some kind of a data set or something? What is -- how did you get -- come by this information?
A. The HR group provides information at -- to the director level of why folks leave or separated from our system.
Q. So the HR department just kind of gives a conclusion to, you said, the director level?
A. Um-hum.

Page 69

Q. So that would have been Michael Barrett at this time, I guess?
A. The director and the division director.
Q. Okay. But -- so HR didn't tell you directly?
A. I'm part of that group.
Q. Okay. So HR just said, yes, we have turnover and it's because of this reason; right?
A. They'll say, yes, we had 18 people leave; 6 of them left because of this, 5 left because of this, and 4 left because of this, and the other we don't know.
Q. Okay. And so HR gives you the amount of turnover and their -- the reasons they believe the turnover is taking place, and then you take what they told you and you put that in your report; right?
A. That's fair.
Q. It's not based on any kind of data set that they hand to you; they just kind of give you their conclusions about the data they have, right?
A. I guess. I don't know what they're giving me.
Q. Okay. And so as far as your understanding, the -- do you have any understanding as to how the exit interviews are conducted or what's included in that process?
A. No, I don't. That's not -- that's not mine.

Page 70

Q. Okay. So even though it seems like the conclusions in this report are based off of those exit interviews, there's no real understanding of what is contained in those exit interviews by you, the author of the report; is that right?
A. That's not fair, no.
Q. Okay. So tell me then what is --
A. It's not fair. I just said that the HR department provides information to the director level as to the reasons for persons separating from the State.
Q. Um-hum.
A. So that's the information I use. So it's not I pull it out of the air and put something in a report. The information is provided by the HR staff as to why the people are telling them they're leaving.
Q. Right. But you -- it sounds to me like, you know, you don't do any independent verification of what HR is telling you --
A. No.
Q. -- right? You don't look at any kind of data set that they keep themselves; right?
A. No.
Q. You don't yourself talk to the people leaving the office --
A. No.

Page 71

Q. -- to determine why they're leaving or anything; right?
A. No. Not my job.
Q. Right. Just depending on what HR tells you --
A. Right.
Q. -- correct? So you wouldn't be able to say if -- whether the HR department is telling you things that are true or false or inaccurate or accurate; right? It's just whatever they tell you that you believe, and it goes into the report; right?
A. I know those people no longer work for us.
Q. The HR --
A. So there some -- there is some verification that they're not still there. So it's not like they're just making things up.
Q. Right. But as far as the process, you know, somebody's going to leave the office, they might give reasons for why they're leaving to HR that could be inaccurate; right?
A. Could be.
Q. I mean, sometimes people don't want to hurt people's feelings, so they'll just, you know, give you some kind of reason like the salary or something? It's possible; right?

Page 72

A. Right.
Q. You have no way of verifying whether these people that are leaving are telling the truth or whether it's being accurately reported to you as --
A. I have no way of knowing.
Q. Okay. Just a couple more things in the report. If you would turn to page 18. You see at the top it says Missouri Public Defenders: Trial Division?
A. Um-hum.
Q. And just looking down like the middle of the page, it says, A MSPD trial division attorney's practice will generally include. And there's like a big list of, I guess, tasks. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. How was this list of tasks generated?
A. I don't know. I really don't know. It's a list of things that the attorneys do when they're preparing their case for representation.
Q. Okay. Is that something that was provided to you by an attorney or something that you had come up with or how --
A. I think it's something that was provided by a prior director.
Q. Okay. But you can't say for certain as we sit here today where specifically this comes from?

Page 73

A. No.
Q. How about the first paragraph following that bullet list? It's on page 19. It's kind of a summary and conclusion. It says, As the above list indicates, an attorney's appearance in court on behalf of a defendant is a very small portion of the work they must do on a case. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know where the basis for that assertion comes from?
A. Just on the -- just based on the number of tasks that have to be done. The small amount of time they spend in court is very small.
Q. Okay. But just because there's a lot of things that need to be done on a case doesn't mean that, you know -- that doesn't indicate how much time would be spent on any of these tasks; right?
A. No.
Q. So even though going to court is just one item out of many, it might take up a smaller or a larger portion of the actual work on the file; there's just no way to tell just from looking at the list, right?
A. There's no way.
Q. The next sentence says, When they have too many cases, some of these steps are skipped or fall by the wayside. Do you see that?

Page 74

A. I do.
Q. And what is the basis for that --
A. It's --
Q. -- assertion?
A. Assertion. It is -- if you can't do it all, you don't do it all. That's what -- that's what people do.
Q. And I'm just -- as far as putting in the report and the basis for it, is there some kind of --
A. No, there's --
Q. -- data set or --
A. No.
Q. There is no basis for it?
A. No. Seems to be common sense.
Q. How about the next sentence, The State's evidence is taken at face value, assumed by all to be accurate, and mistakes fall through the cracks uncaught and uncorrected, is that something that you had personal knowledge --
A. I have personal knowledge of things that happen.
Q. Okay. And is that what this sentence is based off of, your personal knowledge?
A. Yes.

Page 75

Q. Is there any kind of a data set or anything --
A. No.
Q. -- that this is based off of?
A. No.
Q. What kind of personal knowledge are you referring to then for support of this sentence?
A. Just over the years I have knowledge of things that should have been done that weren't done that hurt the individual client's case.
Q. Okay. How about the assertion that the State's evidence is taken at face value, assumed by all to be accurate, is it personal knowledge --
A. Same.
Q. -- as well?
A. Yes.
Q. Just based on, I guess, cases you've seen in the past?
A. Yes.
Q. Looking at the same page, it says, Types of cases handled by the trial division. That's page 19.
A. I'm with you.
Q. Okay. Looks like in this section you have different types of cases and then like a definition of what those cases would be?

Page 76

A. Yes.
Q. So you have felony cases -- felony offenses, sorry, misdemeanor offenses, juvenile cases, and probation violation cases; right?
A. Correct.
Q. Why are the probation violation cases separated from the offenses for which they are on probation?
A. They're filed as a separate case.
Q. Filed by the court as a separate case --
A. Yes.
Q. -- or...
A. That would be a Joel Elmer question also.
Q. Okay. As far as coming up with these definitions, is that something that you had done though?
A. I had help with it, I'm sure.
Q. Okay. Turn to the next page, page 20. It says, Cases assigned by case type. There's a little graph in the middle. Do you see that?
A. Um-hum.
Q. There's a --
A. Yes, I do.
Q. Sorry for interrupting you there. There's a piece of the pie, and it says probation violations and it's about 25 percent. It's like 23.94. Do you see that?

A. Correct.
Q. So is this saying that any time there's a probation violation, it's assigned as a new case to a different attorney?
MS. SHIPMA: Again, that would be a Joel Elmer question.
MR. MOORE: Okay.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Do you have any knowledge of that?
A. I'm sorry, what was the question?
Q. Oh, if you're saying it's a Joel Elmer question, I'll just strike it.
A. Okay.
Q. I'll just go over that tomorrow. Turn to page 23, if you would, please. We had looked at this a little earlier.
A. Yes.
Q. I'm just interested now in this final category in description, the bottom where it says unknown. Any idea what -- what that means?
A. I can give you a list of the types. But there were a very, very small percentage of cases that didn't have an accurate case type associated with it. So somebody made a data entry error probably.

Page 78

MS. SHIPMA: And as she's looking that up, I'd just like to emphasize again that would be a Joel Elmer question or a --
MR. MOORE: Oh.
MS. SHIPMA: -- Jay Anthony Johnson question. Because, again, she just takes the information that they give her for this and puts it in this. How they come up with the classifications, the descriptions, that's -- that's their process. She's not involved in that.
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. I wasn't sure whether it was as a result of the data entry, something that was --
A. It is.
Q. -- or if it was like a classification?
MS. SHIPMA: I think it could be either/or. That's why I'm --
MR. MOORE: Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: That's why I'm hesitating to have her try to give an answer on that, because I think that Joel or Jay Anthony could tell you with certainty, whereas she's getting it secondhand or what she understands it to be. She didn't classify them as unknown.
MR. MOORE: That, I guess, was my question.
BY MR. MOORE:

Page 79

Q. So is that true?
A. I did not classify them as unknown. They came back with an unknown case type.
Q. So you get -- my understanding is you get this data set from IT, right, and in that data set there are just cases that are already labeled unknown?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So it's not like a bucket where you just kind of take misfiled cases and put them in for data stuff?
A. No.
Q. Okay. Okay. I think we're just about done here. I'm just going to take one more quick look through.
Just take a quick look at page 5 of the report. If you look at the graph at the top left, it says Fiscal Year 2016 Trial Division Cases Assigned By Case Type. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. This is a chart that you have put together, right, based on the data that you received from IT; right?
A. Yes.
Q. I'm looking at that category that says Other .11 percent. Is that just a category you get that says other or are there cases that you then classify as other in the data?

A. Because it's such a small percentage, certain things were lumped -- were put together --
Q. Okay.
A. -- for the other category. Otherwise your chart would be unreadable.
Q. Understandable. But you're saying that when the data comes to you, these are kind of broken out, this other --
A. Yes.
Q. -- category? What kind of cases would those be?
A. Writs, appeals, things that the trial division don't typically do -- trial division doesn't typically do.
Q. Okay.
A. Petition for releases. Very small numbers.
Q. Okay. And you're referring to a document of some kind to --
A. I'm referring to my rough draft stuff.
Q. Okay. Rough draft of the 2016 report or some other report?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Turn to page 7, if you would. It says

Page 81

Missouri Public Defender Caseload Relief Efforts Timeline. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. Is this something that you put together?
A. Yes, it is.
Q. Okay. Had you put it together with input from attorneys or you've just kind of done your own research to put together?
A. This is my life.
Q. Okay. So that's -- you're saying you put it together; right?
A. I did.
Q. Okay. And so this is -- you said this is your life. That means it's basically based on your personal experience primarily; is that accurate?
A. Correct.
Q. Is there any kind of research that went into creating this --
A. It's --
Q. -- table?
A. It's a historical timeline of what we've asked for in the past.
Q. Okay. So like the 2005 -- the first entry in 2005, Mo Bar task force on the public defender was created in response to years of increasing caseload and turnover rates with no corresponding increase in staffing. Do you see that?

A. I do.
Q. Was that assertion, especially in response to increasing caseload and turnover rates with no corresponding increase this staffing, is that based on data somewhere?
A. It's the truth.
Q. Fair enough. But based on like data set that you have that you used to create this report or...
A. There's a data set, yes.
Q. And did you consult that data set or use it when you were entering this into the 2016 report?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Do you know if that data set is analyzed or included in this report?
A. It is not.
Q. Okay.
A. I'm starting to get a headache.
Q. Sorry about that. We'll be done soon. As to the assertion that the MO Bar task force on the public defender was created as a result of this -- these factors, what's the basis for asserting that as the case?
A. It's -- it's the fact. I mean, it was created for that purpose.

Page 83

Q. And that's based on just your personal knowledge of what you believe the factors were in creating the --
A. I think --
Q. -- task force?
A. -- if you looked at the purpose of the task force from the Missouri Bar, then they would tell you the same thing. I didn't create the task force, nor give it its goal, but that's the purpose of it.
Q. Okay.
A. I think it's actually the name of it, of the task force.
Q. And in the 2006 there's like three boxes. The last one says, MO Personnel Advisory Board report shows MO PD salaries approximately 35 percent lower than comparable positions in surrounding states. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. Again, did you consult any kind of data set whenever you --
A. It's from that report. It's from the Missouri Personnel Advisory Board's report that was provided to the Public Defender System. It was taken directly from their report.
Q. Okay. And did you have any role in preparing that other --

Page 84

A. No.
Q. -- report? Did you have any -- did you take any steps to verify that that report was accurate or adequately researched or --
A. No. It's their report.
Q. Okay. How about the 2007, Exploration of Court Operating Rule to limit public defender employment; do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. What does that mean exactly, exploration?
A. It's what the legislature did that year. This is a summary of what happened over a timeline. It's nothing other than a summary of what happened during that year.
Q. No, that's fair enough. I'm just trying to figure out, determine the accuracy and the basis for the assertions in the timeline, you know. When it says there was exploration in 2007, what does that mean and what's the basis for that?
A. The exploration was done by the legislature, trying to see, if they would give the public defender $1.15 million for contract money, how would that affect the caseload crisis on a daily basis in the local office.
Q. And is this some -- just something that you had taken from memory and put it in the report, this --

Page 85

A. It's what happened that year.
Q. No, that's fair enough. But it's --
A. It's what happened.
Q. Fair. But it's just based on your personal knowledge of what took place that year; right?
A. It's what happened that year. Yes, personal knowledge of what happened that year.
Q. Okay. I mean, you didn't interview people with the court to determine whether they were exploring this thing or --
A. It wasn't the court. It was the legislature.
Q. Oh, so you -- did you -- but you didn't interview anybody with the legislature to determine whether they were exploring this?
A. They did that. That's exactly what they did. They, the legislature, explored that. Not me. Not the court. The legislature.
Q. Do you know how you came by that knowledge as to what the legislature was exploring?
A. I was sitting in hearings.
Q. So you were involved in some hearings that were taking place at that time?
A. Yes.
Q. How about in 2009, Missouri legislature adopts and governor vetoes caseload limit legislation; do you see that?

Page 86

A. I do.
Q. Do you recall what that legislation was exactly, like the --
A. That would be a Joel Elmer question. I don't know the answer to that.
Q. Okay. And so are these items just, you know, items that you personally chose to include in the history? This isn't anything that, you know, some other person told you to include in this report --
A. No.
Q. -- right?
A. This is my caseload relief efforts timeline.
Q. Okay. And it's based on your personal knowledge. And, I guess, did you do any research to complete this timeline?
A. It's based on my personal knowledge and history --
Q. Okay.
A. -- of what actually happened.
Q. So, like, for 2010 when it says, First public defender offices, and then it's got the word refused there, new cases, litigation ensues, do you recall like what case number or anything that would have been?

Page 87

A. No, I don't.
Q. You just remember there was some kind of litigation?
A. Yes.
Q. If you could turn to page 10, it says, State Public Defender general revenue appropriations. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. And it says fiscal year and the total amount and then total FTE?
A. True.
Q. What does FTE stand for?
A. Full-time equivalent.
Q. What does that mean exactly?
A. How much of a real person. How much of one person. Full-time equivalent, one FTE, full-time equivalent. I'm an FTE. You're an FTE. She's not an FTE. Full-time equivalent. So you could have two halftime people. It would be equivalent of one FTE. So two halftime equal one full-time equivalent. Four quarter-time people equal one FTE. It's based on number of hours worked.
Q. So this is showing the amount that was appropriated and then how many, like, employees? You know, maybe you could explain it to me better than that.

Page 88

A. It's close.
Q. Okay. Where am I missing out?
A. It's not number of employees. It's the number of full-time equivalent of employees. So you could have 50 employees; and if they only all worked halftime, then you would only have 20 FTEs -- 25 FTEs, I'm sorry. 25 FTEs.
Q. Okay. And so it looks like -- as we go through from 1994 to 2016, it looks like the numbers are all going up; is that right?
A. They go up slowly, yes.
Q. If you look at page 11, the Fiscal Year 2016 Public Defender Expenditures chart.
A. Yes.
Q. Is this based on the data set that you would get directly from IT?
A. No.
Q. What is this based off of?
A. This is the way the money is budgeted. For instance, in 2016 we had $27 million budgeted for personal service, or 73.19 percent of the money; we had 4.8 million budgeted for expense and equipment; 3.721 million budgeted for legal -- for litigation expenses and conflicts; and 1.282 budgeted for training and one-time payments. They're budgeted.

Page 89

Q. Okay. So this says Public Defender Expenditures; right?
A. Um-hum.
Q. So -- but this is actually what was budgeted for these categories?
A. I believe so. I'd have to double-check that.
Q. So this is not actually what ended up getting expended for the --
A. You wouldn't --
Q. -- categories?
A. -- know at the beginning of -- this is what was spent in '16, yes, spent in '16.
Q. So this is actually how the money was spent in 2016?
A. True.
Q. Okay. Now, you said this is not a data set that you got from the IT department; right?
A. No.
Q. Where did this -- the information for this graph come from?
A. It's from, again, the SAM II accounting system for the State.
Q. Okay. How does the information get into that SAM II system for this -- for this --
A. That's a really complicated thing. So I don't mean to make faces, but...

Page 90

Q. No, no. That's fine.
A. Every time you pay a bill, every time you pay a person, every time you do anything with regard to the State's funds, it goes through this SAM II database. It's an Office of Administration-run system. They manage it. They maintain it. They give us the reports out of it. They give us the screens that we can look at; what screens you can't look at, I don't even know about. But they tell you a lot of information with regard to how the money was expended.

Every time I pay a bill -- like if I was going to pay the court reporter today, it would be coded appropriately so that I could tell who I paid, what budget I paid it out of, how much I paid her, did she get a 1099. All of that information is part of that bill that I pay.

We pay a lot of bills every year. And when they're -- once they're paid, then you can start doing summary data and extracting reports from that. So this information on this page 11 is representative of all of those payments that were made during that year.
Q. Okay. So are these categories the ones that you would see if you were looking at the data?
A. They are --

Page 91

Q. Are they --
A. They're the way I could collapse them, yes.
Q. So this is actually not the way the data set is organized; this is you looking at the data and then using your experience to put it in these categories, right?
A. That's not really true, no. You could get it this way if you'd want it this way.
Q. So, I mean, earlier --
A. It's a screen. You look at a screen; you get a number.
Q. Right. What I'm saying is like earlier you talked about you got information about the cases from IT --
A. Correct.
Q. -- right? And it would just tell you like this is the amount of closed, this is the amount of open --
A. Yes.
Q. -- done deal?
A. Yes.
Q. For these expenses in this fiscal year 2016 expenditures chart, not the same way; right? You have like buckets where you would put various expenses; right? And then you are classifying where -- which bucket they go into; is that accurate?

Page 92

A. With some caveats, yes.
Q. I mean, it's not like you have freedom to do whatever you want. I'm just saying --
A. No, I can't.
Q. -- you're the one who chooses --
A. Right. I can't pay Sally if --
Q. Right.
A. -- Sally is Cindy.
Q. Right. But you're the one who just -- you take these different things that you're seeing and you put them in the proper place, for the purposes of this graph; right?
A. I guess, yes.
Q. Okay.
A. It's confusing. It's a screen you look at that says the Missouri State Public Defender paid this much money in personal service this year, and you write down the number, and you put it in a chart. The screen then says how much expense and equipment did you pay? There's the number. You write it down; you put it in a graph.

So I'm not deciding what bucket to put it in. The buckets are decided for me. The buckets are decided by the Office of Administration after the appropriations are determined by the legislature and signed off on by the governor.

Q. So these are the categories that would appear on this screen --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you're saying; right?

A. Yes.

Q. As far as putting that information into that data set, you take this -- various expenses for your office or for the offices, and you're the one that puts them into the categories; right? No.

A. I'm not sure where you're going.

Q. Let's move on.

A. Okay.

Q. My question is, when you look at this category, it says personal service, does not include any fringe benefits?

A. That's true.

Q. What does that mean exactly?

A. Fringe benefits are appropriated separately by the legislature to the Office of Administration and not to the individual departments. So same thing with -- the Attorney General and the Public Defender's office are exactly the same in this instance. Those moneys are appropriated -- for your salary and my salary are appropriated to our respective agencies, our departments.

Q. Um-hum.

A. But the fringe benefits are appropriated to the Office of Administration. So when they pay FICA and your -- your -- your -- all of your benefits, including -- words aren't coming to me -- but including everything, long-term disability, your healthcare and all of that things, those come out of a different appropriation than your salary --

Q. Okay.

A. -- and my salary.

Q. Oh, I see now. So a couple of pages earlier, personal service is defined differently than it is in the legal context?

A. True.

Q. It's not like you're serving people, like witnesses and stuff, and that's the budget for that?

A. No.

Q. It's actually defined earlier as --

A. People.

Q. -- salaries and things like that?

A. FTE.

Q. Okay. FTE, which I --

A. Now you know.

Q. -- learned about. Yeah. Okay. Go to page 12 for me, about collections.

Page 95

A. I'm there.

Q. Okay. Where does the data for this chart come from?

A. Again, from the accounting SAM II system.

Q. Okay. And so these are just numbers that you get from SAM II, and then you just put them into this chart --

A. Correct.

Q. -- right? And when it says in the second sentence, Approximately 40 percent of collections comes through the state income tax refund intercepts by the Department of Revenue and the remainder is collected by the courts, that's just based on -- does the data break that up whenever you see it?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Has a different code associated with each type of payment.

Q. Okay. Could you turn to page 14? Trial Division Average Cost Per Case graph. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. So what is the source of the data for this chart?

A. Again, it's the SAM II report.

Page 96

Q. Okay.

A. That's sorted in a different manner so that I can tell which office had which expenditures. So I know that you work in the St. Louis office, and I work in the Jeff City office. So it's sorted that way so that I can post it to the appropriate office.

Q. Okay. And so this is -- this is data that the individual public defenders offices will put in and give to IT, and then IT will give it to you?

A. Not at all.

Q. Oh.

A. This has nothing to do with caseload. This has all to do with payments.

Q. Okay.

A. Okay. The caseload on here is correct, you're right. On the assigned cases and the closed cases --

Q. Right.

A. -- you are 100 percent correct on that.

Q. Okay.

A. That comes from IT. That comes from the local offices.

Q. Okay.

A. The dollar portions of it come from SAM II. Okay? And what I'm doing is taking our data from IT and -- and applying that toward the cost portions of it.

Q. Okay. So what are you seeing in SAM II specifically as it pertains to like costs? Does it just assign -- is it per-case cost --
A. No, no, no.
Q. -- or is it total?
A. It's total. It's -- I can sort it by office. And that's what this is --
Q. Okay.
A. -- it's sorted by office. So I can sort it by office so I know how much that office cost during that fiscal year. That's all that is.
Q. Okay. So whenever you look at SAM II, you'll see a category that just says like costs, and it will be for the Kirksville office, let's say?
A. It can be.
Q. But it will just say costs for -- like in one big bucket?
A. No. It will be all the individual payments to the court reporters, to the individual people, to the -- to buy toilet paper or to whatever. It's all of the costs associated with Kirksville.
Q. Okay.
A. Whether it be a court reporter, an expert witness, a travel voucher for an employee, postage, copy machines, all of those costs are associated with Kirksville.

Q. Okay.
A. And then I took the information from IT and divided it.
Q. Okay.
A. Okay?
Q. So the cost per assignment and cost per disposition, what is the difference between those two?
A. Because the number of cases assigned and the number of cases disposed are different. So, therefore, the cost per disposition and cost per assignment is different.
Q. Can you describe for me, I guess, the formula that is utilized whenever you're looking at costs versus cases assigned and cases disposed of? What is the math like when you're looking at --
A. You take the total cost of Kirksville --
Q. Um-hum.
A. -- and you divide it by the total number of cases assigned, and you get the cost per assignment. Take the total cost for Kirksville, divide it by the total number of dispositions, and you get the cost per disposition. So if you -- if we're looking at Kirksville again --

Page 99

Q. Um-hum.
A. -- and you look at that 280,000 --
Q. Right.
A. -- approximately, divide it by 636, you're going to get $440 per assignment. They closed 612, so they're going to get 457 on disposed costs.
Q. So why wouldn't it be the total cost divided by all cases that are assigned and disposed of in the same year? Why wouldn't it be done that way instead of breaking it out per assignment and disposed of?
A. I don't have any idea why you would want to do that.
MS. SHIPMA: And can I just jump in here and say I don't think you're understanding cases assigned versus cases disposed. And that I think you should ask Joel and Jay Anthony --
MR. MOORE: Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: -- about. I don't -- I don't think that -- I know that Kathy can't answer that for you adequately, although she could probably do a pretty darn good job of it. But they're the ones that are experts in that area.
MR. MOORE: Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: And I don't think you're un-- the reason you're not understanding her answer to your question you guys are talking about, you don't have the --

Page 100

MR. MOORE: Different things.
MS. SHIPMA: -- same language.
MR. MOORE: Okay. That is definitely fair enough. I became a lawyer for -- and not a mathematician for a reason. So...
BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Very good. But, in any event, as far as the cost bucket is concerned, we discussed how you come to -- come by these numbers that are included in this column; right?
A. Correct.
Q. It's by that SAM II?
A. Um-hum. That is correct.
Q. Okay. And you said that Joel Elmer would be the person to discuss assigned versus disposed; right?
A. That would be a good idea.
Q. Okay. If you'd turn to page 16.
A. I'm there.
Q. Look at the category that says Administrative Tasks/Special Projects. Do you see that?
A. I do.
Q. What is special projects exactly?
A. That, again, would be a Joel question.

Page 101

Q. Okay.
A. I don't know.
Q. That's just what you see whenever you're looking at the data you receive?
A. Um-hum. From info.
MR. MOORE: I think that's all I have.
MS. STEFFAN: I have a -- I just have a couple of follow-up questions.
THE WITNESS: Okay.
CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MS. STEFFAN:
Q. You testified you've been at the Public Defenders for about 45 years?
A. I think it's 43. Yes.
Q. And you said you've been to each of the individual offices?
A. I have.
Q. And you've worked with other employees and other departments for many years?
A. I have.
Q. And that includes the directors as they've changed over the years?
A. I have.
Q. And the division directors?
A. I have.
Q. And the HR staff?

Page 102

A. I have.
Q. And IT staff?
A. I have.
Q. And the, at least at times, individual attorneys and mitigation specialists and investigators?
A. Yes. There's been a lot of turnover.
Q. So presumably you've learned a lot on the job over the last 43 years?
A. I have.
Q. And you -- I think you testified that you have worked on this annual report since 1984?
A. I believe that's correct.
Q. Is it -- is it fair to say that the statements in the report are based on the information you have gathered during your tenure with the Public Defender System?
MR. MOORE: I'll just object to the extent that it misstates her prior testimony as to what's contained in the report. But you can go ahead.
BY MS. STEFFAN:
Q. Do you want me to repeat the question?
A. Yeah, I think so.
Q. Okay. Is it fair to say that the statements in the report are based off the information you have gathered during your tenure with the Public Defender System?
A. Yes.
Q. And based on your considerable personal experience with the Public Defender System?
A. Yes.
Q. I'm going to make you turn back to a couple of specific pages.
A. Okay.
Q. Other than -- other than updating the report to reflect new events and new data that has happened during the last year, so fiscal year 2016, turning back to Exhibit 1, I'm looking at page 1 --
A. Okay.
Q. -- did you see or learn about anything that happened during fiscal year 2016, anything unusual about that time that would have merited any changes to page 1?
A. No.
Q. Okay. How about -- I'm going to ask you --
A. The --
Q. I'm sorry, go ahead.
A. May I make an exception to that? I don't remember off the top of my head whether or not there's a change in the shear number of employees, which is who works for MSPD.
Q. And would that have been information you would have updated?
A. I would if it had changed, correct.
Q. Okay. I'm going to ask you to look at page 7 and answer that same question. So I see there are a couple of boxes down there at the very end of this timeline for the years 2016 and 2017. Other than those boxes, is there anything that happened in fiscal year 2016 that would have merited any changes to the previous years on that timeline?
A. I don't believe so.
Q. Okay. I'm going to ask you to look at the next page, page 8. Did anything happen in fiscal year 2016 that would have merited any changes to the statements on page 8?
MR. MOORE: I'll just object to the form of the question as being vague and also foundation as to things that have happened.
But subject to that, you can respond.
THE WITNESS: I don't think there's any significant changes.
BY MS. STEFFAN:
Q. And what about page 9?
A. The definitions wouldn't have changed. However, the amount of money changed from '15 to '16.
Q. Okay. And that's just based on what was appropriated and/or expended in fiscal year 2016?

A. Correct.
Q. Okay. And what about page 16?
A. What do you want to know about 16?
Q. I'm sorry, I'll restate. Was there anything that changed or that you saw that was unusual or anomalous about fiscal year 2016 that would have merited any changes to the statements on this page? I understand that the charts are information --
A. Updated.
Q. -- based on what happened during fiscal year 2016.
A. I would say not.
MR. MOORE: And, again, I'll just make an objection that I think the question is kind of vague and ambiguous as to, you know, what's strange or anomalous. But the answer is on the record. So...
BY MS. STEFFAN:
Q. Okay. I'm going to ask the same question as to page 17. So answering based on your experience with the Public Defender System, did you see or learn about anything in fiscal year 2016 that would have merited any changes to the statements on page 17?
A. Absolutely not.
Q. And what about page 18? Sorry. That's the -- captioned Missouri Public Defenders --

Page 106

A. There are no changes.
Q. And my last question is page 19. Anything unusual about fiscal year 2016 that would have merited any changes, except for any -- if there's anything -- I see like the 52.24 percent caseload. I assume that's based on updated data. But anything other than that that would have merited any changes --
MR. MOORE: And same --
BY MS. STEFFAN:
Q. -- to page 19?
MR. MOORE: Sorry. Same objection just as to form.
THE WITNESS: No changes.
MS. STEFFAN: Okay. That's my last question.
RECROSS-EXAMINATION BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. Kathy, would you turn back to page 10, please.
A. Sure.
Q. In the box that's there, the chart that's there, the column that says total amount, can you explain what that is? Total amount of what?
A. The total amount column on page 10 represents the amount of general revenue appropriated and received by the Public Defender System from the legislature over this time period.

Q. So the number of dollars that the legislature appropriated in their appropriations bill for the public defender for each specific year?
A. With the exception of 2015. And although it was appropriated in 2015, money was withheld by the governor and not released.
Q. Okay.
A. But other than that, that's exactly right.
Q. Okay. The total FTE --
A. Yes.
Q. -- what does that -- I understand what the definition of an FTE is. But I'm asking, for instance, the 410.38 in 1994, is that the number of F-- tell me what that means.
A. That means that when you get to the end of a fiscal year, the State Public Defender System was authorized to have 410.38 FTE. And the way you determine how many FTE you have is take the number of total hours worked during that year by any public defender employee, include the number of annual leave hours paid out to any public defender employee, add those two numbers together and divide by twenty-eighty. We have no authority to exceed the number that's on this page.
Q. So that number that I just referred to for

Page 108

1994 --
A. Um-hum.
Q. -- the 410.38, that's the number the legislature authorized us to have?
A. No more than that.
Q. And going down for each of the years --
A. That is correct.
Q. -- that's the same? So the legislature, for instance, in 2016 said you can have no more than 585.13 FTE?
A. Correct.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay. That's all the questions I have.
FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION BY MR. MOORE:
Q. I'll have you turn to page 3 of the report. This just kind of goes through the Public Defender Commission, each of the persons, I guess, that are on the Commission; is that accurate?
A. That's correct.
Q. Are you -- do you draft these profiles of the people or do they come from somewhere else?
A. They came from somewhere else.
Q. Okay. Do you recall, you know, where these come from?
A. Mostly probably from them.

Q. Okay. They like submit something to you and --

A. Right.

Q. Okay.

A. Actually, it could have come from the governor's office too, as their -- the little jacket that comes along with them when they get appointed.

MR. MOORE: Okay. I think that's all I got.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Read and sign?

MS. SHIPMA: Read and sign.

VIDEOGRAPHER: That concludes the deposition. We are off the record. The time is 3:33 p.m.

(Off the record.)

SARAH K. JOHNSON, of lawful age, produced, sworn and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs, deposes and says:

(Starting time of the deposition: 9:06 a.m.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're on the record. Today's date is October 6th, 2017, and the time is approximately 9:06 a.m. This is the video-recorded deposition of Sarah Johnson, in the matter of Shondel Church, et al., versus State of Missouri, et al., Case Number 17-04057-CV-C-NKL, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division.

This deposition is being held at ACLU of Missouri Foundation in St. Louis, Missouri. The reporter's name is Bill DeVries. My name is John Niehaus. I'm the legal videographer. We are with Midwest Litigation Services.

Will counsel please introduce yourself for the record?

MS. QUINN: Sure. I'm Mae Quinn, M-A-E, Q-U-I-N-N, from the MacArthur Justice Center on behalf of plaintiffs.

MS. ANAND: And I'm Easha Anand, that's E-A-S-H-A, last name A-N-A-N-D, and I'm from Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe also for plaintiffs.

MR. RAMSEY: Steven Ramsey on behalf of the State of Missouri and on behalf of Governor Eric Greitens.

MR. MOORE: Justin Moore on behalf of the State of Missouri.

MS. SHIPMA: Jacqueline Shipma on behalf of the public defenders.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Could you please swear in the witness?

COURT REPORTER: Do you swear or affirm that the testimony you are about to give in this proceeding will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: I do.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MS. QUINN:

Q. Good morning, Ms. Johnson.

A. Good morning.

Q. Thank you for being here today. So we know each other from our work in the community here; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And would you state your full name for the record, please?

A. Sarah Kennedy Johnson.

Q. And what is your current title, Ms. Johnson?

A. Sure. So I have two of them. I am the director of juvenile defense and policy for the public defender system. I am also the deputy district defender for the city of St. Louis trial office.

Q. Congratulations --

A. Thank you.

Q. -- about the second. All right. And how long have you been with the public defender service?

A. So I have been with the public defender service since 2009, October. So approximately eight years.

Q. Okay. And so you have been asked to be here today to represent the public defender's office.

Page 9

(Exhibit 1, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) I'm going to show to you Plaintiff's Exhibit 1. It was previously marked. I don't know if the other folks in the room have a copy or need a copy. Would you mind taking a look there at Exhibit 1?

A. Okay.

Q. And have you seen that document before?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And you recognize that as the 30(b)(6) notice for deposition for the public defender's office, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were asked to be here today to testify about the subjects on the attachment to that notice, correct?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And you are prepared to do that today?

A. I am.

Q. And as you noted earlier, your focus seems to be on juvenile matters in the public defender system; is that right?

A. Yes.

Page 10

Q. And so with regard to the notice, your focus then would be policies, practices, procedures relating to juvenile cases?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. And did you do anything in preparation for your testimony today?

A. I did. I spoke with our general counsel Ms. Shipma. I also reviewed the National Juvenile Defender Center Justice Rationed article that was created on Missouri. I also reviewed the Department of Justice report and I reviewed the Department of Justice agreement.

Q. All right. And you named a number of documents that I think have already been introduced into this suit by way of exhibits to our complaint. Was there any document beyond those that you reviewed that perhaps we do not have?

A. I reviewed -- there is a memorandum of understanding that was created between the public defender system and the 22nd Judicial Circuit Family Court. It is a contract attorney -- providing a contract attorney for juvenile cases in the city of St. Louis.

Q. All right. And by chance did you bring that MOU with you today?

Page 11

A. I did. There are five copies.

Q. Terrific. Let the record reflect that Ms. Johnson has shared with us a copy of this MOU relating to services of contract attorneys in the city of St. Louis for the public defender service and the juvenile court of St. Louis city and with permission of Ms. Shipma I will distribute these to everyone here.

MS. SHIPMA: Uh-huh. Are you going to have those marked?

MS. QUINN: Yeah. I think we'll get to these later on. Yeah. So I'll turn to this later if that's all right.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Was there any other document that you reviewed in preparation for today?

A. I reviewed the complaint that was filed.

Q. All right. And I noted that you earlier mentioned something called the National Juvenile Defender Center Justice Rationed report. Do you have any objection for today's conversation if when we talk about materials from the National Juvenile Defender Center that we use the term NJDC?

A. I do not.

Q. Okay. And same with regard to the

Page 12

Department of Justice's report, I think you mentioned, I assume you mean there the St. Louis County investigation of the juvenile court, correct?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And do you have any objection as -- as we talk about that set of materials that we use the term the DOJ report?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Or maybe the DOJ investigation to be clear; is that all right?

A. That's just fine.

Q. And then the DOJ agreement is the second related document --

A. That's fine.

Q. -- does that work? Okay. Have you ever testified under oath before?

A. I have not.

Q. Okay. It's not --

A. You know what, yes. I -- I take that back. Yes, I did once previously.

Q. Okay. And was it in a deposition?

A. No, it was not. It was in a trial.

Q. All right. And -- but you were under oath?

A. I was.

Page 13

Q. So you know to tell the truth?
A. Yes.
Q. You also know if I ask a question and it's not clear, just to seek clarification from me?
A. Yes.
Q. And I'm frequently unclear, so I will not take it personally if you need me to restate the question.
A. Okay.
Q. I'm from New York as you know, and I tend to interrupt people. I'll try not to interrupt you, and maybe you can do the same. We'll try not to speak over each other so that we get a good record. And if you need a break, of course you can just ask for a break and Jacquie, your attorney of course knows to do the same. I guess the one thing is if there's a question on the table that you answer it first before we take the break.
A. Okay.
Q. Does that all work for you?
A. Yes, ma'am.
Q. Terrific. All right. So let us then talk about information that we sought by way of the 30(b)(6) notice. As the designated juvenile expert for the public defenders system, can you tell us a little bit about your -- your education and background?

A. Sure. So I went to St. Louis University and I got my undergraduate degree there. I went to St. Louis University Law School and I graduated there in 2009, and then I began with the public defender system in 2009 and have been there ever since.
MS. QUINN: Okay. And then are you able -- is everyone getting Ms. Johnson loud enough?
VIDEOGRAPHER: Yeah.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Okay. And after joining the public defender's system -- and forgive me, I'll often say the public defender's service from working at other places, but the public defender system, what roles have you played in -- in your job there?
A. Sure. So I have always been in the St. Louis city trial office, so from 2009 to 2010 I was downtown representing adults in misdemeanors and low level felonies. From 2010 to 2011 I worked in the St. Louis city juvenile division and I represented youth.
I also had some adult misdemeanor cases at that time. From 2011 to 2014 I was representing adults back downtown in the St. Louis city trial office. And then from 2014 to present I have represented youth in St. Louis city, St. Louis County, St. Charles County, St. Francois County, and Jefferson County.

Q. So you've anticipated my next question, and that was, you know, how many counties have you handled juvenile matters in, and so it sounds like talking a total of five at this point?
A. Yes. And that was for conflict cases. So St. Louis County, St. Charles County, St. Francois County, Jefferson County, those were all for conflict cases.
Q. Have you handled any juvenile appeals?
A. I've handled one.
Q. And what about juvenile postconviction matters separate from appeals?
A. No.
Q. And through your many years of experience with the public defender service in both adult and juvenile matters, have you had the opportunity to interact with other public defenders who handle juvenile cases?
A. I have.
Q. And you've mentioned some of the counties where you do conflict cases. In addition to that set of interactions, how else have you interacted with juvenile defenders across the state?

A. Sure. So in a couple of different ways. First through phone conversations. So if someone from the public defender system has a question regarding juvenile matters, they're often directed to me. So I speak with individuals who have represented youth or are -- or who are currently representing youth.
The second is through juvenile training. So we have a once-a-year juvenile training. That has traditionally been held in Columbia, Missouri or in St. Louis where individuals who represent youth in the public defender system are encouraged to come and be trained. And then the last interaction would be in court settings where I would run into individuals representing youth.
Q. All right. And we may unpack some of those interactions a little bit -- bit more as -- as we talk today. You also mention beyond handling juvenile matters and interacting with juvenile attorneys that you've also handled adult matters in the system?
A. I have.

Page 17

Q. And so is it fair to say then that you have a good sense of the differences between adult defense practice and juvenile defense practice?

A. I do.

Q. And when we're talking about juvenile defense practice we might use the term delinquency. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain for folks, especially who maybe don't do juvenile practice, what the term delinquency means?

A. Sure. So when a youth under the age of 17 in Missouri is charged with an offense, it is called a delinquent offense. It is not an actual felony charge. So when a child is charged with an offense, there are allegations filed in a petition and they are felony -- they would be either felonies or misdemeanors if an adult was charged with them.

Q. Okay. Now, when you say they're not actual felonies, in fact they are felonies with all of the same elements as an adult felony charge, correct?

A. They are, yes.

Q. I think perhaps you're talking about whether or not it's an open record like an ordinary felony adult case?

A. And -- and whether it's a conviction. So they are not considered convictions under the juvenile code.

Q. And in terms of the young people who are charged in juvenile court, do we call them defendants?

A. No.

Q. What do we refer to them as?

A. They're referred to as juveniles, but the practice has -- is shifting towards youth. They're trying to use the word youth.

Q. Yeah. And what about the term respondent, does that mean anything to you in the context of juvenile practice?

A. It does. That is the -- the respondent is the youth or the juvenile.

Q. All right. And you have talked already a little bit about the range of matters or charges that a young person might face. Might you unpack that a little bit more for us?

A. Sure. So there are the criminal offenses that a youth can face, so those could be anywhere from very low level misdemeanors all the way up into murder in the first degree. So those would be the -- under the criminal code. There are also the 211.031 subsection two charges, which are the status offenses.

So those are the offenses that adults would not be charged with. So that is truancy, behavior injurious, not -- not following their parents' rules, curfew, those kinds of violations, status offenses.

Q. All right. So it sounds like in essence there are three possibilities for a young person to face in terms of charges in juvenile court: Status offenses, misdemeanor offenses or felony offenses?

A. Yes.

Q. And just so that everybody is clear, when you -- the status offense list that you spelled out for us, those are things that a person is charged with given their status as a young person; a grown person could not be charged with those, those are not considered wrongdoings for fully grown adults?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you did touch on this already, but just so the record is clear, can you talk again about the cutoff between childhood and adult for purposes of juvenile delinquency charges in the State of Missouri?

A. Sure. So in Missouri any child -- anyone is considered a child if they are under the age of 17.

Q. How does that compare to other case -- other states?

A. So Missouri is currently one of five states left that has that age of under 18. So there are -- they are one of five left.

Q. All right. So the default -- the majority rule across the country is 18 is the cutoff, but we're in the minority because we use 17 as the cutoff before you go to adult court; is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, do young people under the age of 17 ever go to adult court to face charges?

A. Yes, they do. But the court in -- the juvenile court first has to make a determination pursuant to section 211.071 to determine under the certification statute if they should stay in trial as an adult.

Q. Okay. Can you explain a little bit about that process and what that means?

Page 21

A. Sure. So if a child is charged with a list of offenses under 211.071 including murder in the first degree, robbery, assault first, rape, there are some other -- arson, that is called a mandatory certification review.

So the judge has to look at those ten factors under section 211.071 to determine whether the child can be rehabilitated in the juvenile system or whether they should stand trial as an adult.

There -- the statute also provides, though, that a child can be certified for any felony as well as if it is their third subsequent felony.

Q. All right. So now you have used the term mandatory to refer to some transfer or certification cases. That does not mean that the child must necessarily go to adult court, correct?

A. It does not. It means that there must be a mandatory review by the court.

Q. Okay. And you mentioned ten factors under the statute I think you meant -- said that the judge must look at. Are those the only factors the court might look at during certification?

A. No. No. That -- that is not an exhaustive list.

Page 22

Q. And in terms of nonmandatory certifications, can you talk a little bit about the process there and what the court might look at in those cases?

A. So when you mean nonmandatory certifications, you mean just permissive?

Q. Yeah, or discretionary. Yeah.

A. Okay. So these would be offenses that -- offenses that would not be listed in that list under 211.071. The procedure is the same. The court still has to look at those factors to make a determination whether the child should be sent to adult court.

Q. And how is it determined if a case will be processed with a discretionary type certification request?

A. Sure. So the request can either be made by the legal officer, who is the prosecutor. It can be made by the child or the child's parents or any interested party. It could also be the court that makes that recommendation or request.

Q. And these processes we've just spoken about in terms of certification and transfer, you noted they are in section 211; is that right?

A. Yes.

Page 23

Q. What is section 211?

A. That is the family code and the juvenile code for Missouri.

Q. And that is one of the central bodies of law that controls juvenile cases in Missouri; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Outside -- it's outside of the criminal code entirely?

A. Yes.

Q. So now, since you have practiced both on the adult side of the docket and the juvenile side of the docket, do you have any opinion about juvenile defense being a specialized type of practice?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Can you tell us more about that?

A. Juvenile defense is an absolute specialty. It requires knowledge in adolescent brain development. It requires knowledge in specific laws. It requires knowledge in procedural rules that are different. It requires an ability to work with families to a greater extent in my opinion than in other cases. It also requires a knowledge of dispositional resources and -- and it requires an ability to work with and understand children.

Q. And it sounds like given what you mentioned earlier that a juvenile defense lawyer to be able to do their job must know the criminal side of the docket for those possible certification cases as well as all of these things on the juvenile code and juvenile practice side?

A. Absolutely. And -- and I failed to mention including Supreme Court case law and the bodies of research that surround juvenile practice.

Q. Now, you mentioned some of the things that make the job of a juvenile defender or someone who's defending a juvenile to be particularly challenging. What about communicating with juveniles, what's that like?

A. Sure. So communicating with youth is a lot different than -- than communicating with adults for several reasons. First, many youth have never been in the juvenile justice system before and so they don't have an understanding of the process and the procedures. Second, youth don't have an understanding necessarily or they might lack the necessary communication skills or language skills to understand the terminology that you're saying to them, so you have to break it down and make the system understandable to them.

Q. And maybe we'll make it a little more concrete. In juvenile court, as an adult court, are young people ever presented with plea offers?
A. Absolutely.
Q. And in your experience, just as a very singular example, in conveying a plea offer to a grown adult versus conveying a plea offer to a young person in juvenile court, what are the differences or perhaps challenges that you confront?
A. Sure. So a youth's first question and their first goal if they're detained is when am I going to get out, and so a lot of times that desire over -- that desire outweighs any collateral consequence or any foreseeable consequence for a youth admitting to an offense.
And so that is one difficulty. The other difficulty I see in conveying plea offers to youth is while their -- their parent might not be in the room, parents have a big influence on what happens to a child and whether or not they plead guilty or admit to the allegation -- or do not admit to the allegations.
Q. Yeah. And just from what you have described, it sounds like perhaps it takes more time to convey to a young person a plea offer and ensure that what they're doing is knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. Is that a fair assessment of what you just conveyed?

A. Yes, it is.
Q. All right. We may return to some of those topics later, but I want to shift our attention a little bit here to the history of juvenile practice in the State of Missouri and within the public defender's system.
A. Okay.
Q. Are you familiar with the different studies or assessments that have been undertaken to evaluate the public defender system in the State of Missouri?
A. Are you referring to juvenile assessments or just assessments in general?
Q. Actually, general. General at this point.
A. Okay. Yes, I'm familiar with some of them.
Q. All right. Are you familiar with something that is referred to as the Spangenberg report or Spangenberg report?
A. I mean, I've heard of it, but I've not read it.

Page 27

Q. Okay.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 21, Exhibit 6 of complaint, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) I'm going to show to you what we're going to mark as Plaintiff's Exhibit 21, which confusingly has on its cover Exhibit 6, and that is because this is Exhibit 6 to our complaint. All right, and if you wouldn't mind, just take a few moments to familiarize yourself with that document. Have you had an opportunity just to scan some of the document that I've presented to you?
A. Yes, I have.
Q. All right. And I'm actually going to direct your attention to some specific sections --
A. Okay.
Q. -- in this report if you don't mind. Can we look together at page one, the footnote two on page one in particular, and if you wouldn't mind reading into the record what that footnote says?
A. You said footnote one?
Q. I'm sorry, page one, footnote two.
A. (Quote as read):
The statutes do not distinguish between juveniles and adults. As discussed -- discussed in section 3C of this report, we are deeply concerned about the few juveniles represented by the MSPD. We have been unable to determine why this is the case, and we strongly urge that the issue receive further inquiry and attention.

Q. All right. So even though perhaps you haven't spent a lot of time with this report previously, the Spangenberg report, does that footnote in some ways ring true to you?
A. Yes, it does.
Q. All right. Let's then turn to what they're referring to in this footnote on page 57, and I'll just say I think what they mean is 2C, not 3C, but let's take a look at page 57 at the end, and then heading into page 58 as it -- the report talks about juveniles. And here I'll direct your attention to the very last line on page 57 that starts more surprising still. And if you would just to yourself take a look at that next section. All right. So the -- the section I've directed your attention to indicates that (quote as read):
More surprisingly still is that the

MSPD represented only 35 percent of the juvenile delinquency and status offense cases filed in Missouri courts in 2007, down from 40 percent in 2004, 38 percent in 2005, 37 percent in 2006. Does this information ring true to you given your experience?

A. I don't know the -- the percentages. I don't question this report, but I don't know the percentages of youth represented currently in Missouri, but it would not surprise me that -- that this is the -- the state of representation.

Q. Okay. And we'll -- again, we'll unpack this maybe a little bit more later on in our conversation, but is it your understanding that MSPD represents all young people who need counsel in juvenile courts?

A. No.

Q. And is it your understanding that some young people are going without counsel who need counsel in juvenile courts?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And that some young people who are entitled to counsel are going without counsel in our juvenile courts?

Page 30

A. Absolutely.

Q. All right. So turning then from the Spangenberg report that I marked as Exhibit 21, I want to turn your attention to the report you -- you've mentioned earlier in your testimony and that's the NJDC assessment entitled Justice Rationed. And here too confusingly you'll see that this exhibit that I'm marking as Plaintiff's Exhibit 22 for purposes of our deposition, has the cover Exhibit 9.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 22, Exhibit 9 of complaint, was marked for identification.)

A. Okay.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Exhibit 9 refers to it being Exhibit 9 in our complaint. All right. So as to Exhibit 22, are you familiar with that document?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Tell us what you know about this document.

A. So this was conducted or written in 2013. I know that NJDC came and interviewed defense attorneys, juvenile attorneys, looked at and talked with the Office of State Courts Administrator Scott Data regarding representation in Missouri and then made an assessment of the quality of representation that youth were receiving in our state.

Q. And can you tell us a bit about the main findings of this report with regard to the quality and quantity of defense services provided to juveniles in Missouri?

A. Sure. So it was very troubling. They found that youth were routinely waiving the right to counsel. They found that many youth did not have the ability to receive counsel for important offenses, and that -- also that the structure of Missouri's juvenile court system is very conflicted and that children were not receiving adequate representation throughout all of the stages of their offense.

Q. Okay. On that last point that children were not receiving adequate representation throughout all the stages of their case, can you unpack that a little more for us in terms of NJDC's findings?

A. Sure. So first youth were not receiving counsel for detention hearings or pre -- pretrial representation. Additionally, not receiving adequate representation throughout the process and then were not receiving postdispositional services from an attorney.

Q. And do you remember anything in the report about its findings with regard to the quantity of youth who were receiving defense representation from the public defender service or maybe said another way the percentage of youth who were going without representation in the juvenile courts?

A. I don't remember the exact number, but I know that it was alarmingly high.

Q. All right. You'd indicated this was a report that was put together by NJDC, the National Juvenile Defender Center in 2013. Do you have a sense of how they came to these conclusions?

A. So they came to the conclusions by interviewing defenders in Missouri and in -- in talking to individuals in the court system as well as looking at data.

Q. Okay. And based on your experience with the public defender system and working within our juvenile courts, do you disagree with any of their findings?

A. I do not.

Q. And even though this report was from 2013, as you sit here today, do you feel like much has changed with regard to their findings?

Page 33

A. I think that for the most part, no, I think that there -- there is some inching along that has done and maybe some good intentions, but no, for the most part this report rings true.

Q. Maybe you could flag for us a few of the good intention items and how you have characterized them as just inching along.

A. Sure. So one of the things is that we in the public defender system have identified that yes, this is an issue, and I am somebody who is supposed to start to create juvenile specialty as -- as something of importance in our system. We want to do trainings, we want to make sure that juvenile defenders are receiving adequate training. But this is just a small step, and so that is one thing. The other thing is there are organizations and groups trying to move forward, so I am a part of the Juvenile Justice Advisory Board. And so that is also trying to move the ball forward with regard to juvenile representation in the state.

Q. And the Juvenile Justice Advisory Board, that's a state-appointed position; is that right?

A. It is.

Q. All right. And we'll return to some of the topics that we just lifted up to unpack them a little bit more, but let me turn your attention if I can to another document that you have previously mentioned.

Page 34

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 23, Exhibit 11 of complaint, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) This will be Exhibit 23 for purposes of the deposition with a cover indicating Exhibit 11 because it's Exhibit 11 to our complaint. All right. Would you mind taking a look at Exhibit 23, please?

A. Sure.

Q. Okay. And are you familiar with this document?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Can you tell us what it is and why you're familiar with it?

A. So this is the investigation of the St. Louis County Family Court from 2015. I am familiar with it having been in practice and practicing as a juvenile attorney during that time. I've read it and used it in motions.

Q. All right. And are you at all familiar with what the Department of Justice did to come to these conclusions?

Page 35

A. I don't know the exact steps that they use, but I know that they went into St. Louis County Family Court, they spoke with defenders, they spoke with deputy juvenile officers, they spoke with legal officers and they also looked at individual files.

Q. All right. And can you share with us your understanding of the findings of the Department of Justice with regard to the St. Louis County juvenile court?

A. Sure. So they made several findings. They found that there was not adequate representation with regard to youth primarily because the -- there was only one defender that was representing all of the youth. She had represented over 400 youth in the time period that they looked at. They also looked at children waiving counsel.

They looked at children admitting in informal -- informal offenses, admitting to the allegations, which is something that was problematic. They were admitting to those allegations without representation. They looked at representation of children pretrial. They looked at motion practice. They found the motion practice problematic.

They looked at post -- postdisposition practice. They found that there was not postdisposition representation. They also found that there were equal protection violations. So youth of color were being detained, they were being filed, petitions were being filed more frequently, they were being sent out of home placement, and they were also being certified more frequently than youth of other races.

Q. Now, you've indicated that the report found that there was only one public defender assigned to the county of St. Louis's juvenile court, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain to us based on your experience in that setting how many courtrooms in a given day that a defender might have cases in or how many courtrooms are processing cases each day there?

A. Sure. So there are two judges. So there could -- those would be two courtrooms. And then there are currently two commissioners and I believe that -- there have always been only two commissioners. So four courtrooms.

Q. Four courtrooms. And then what about detention hearings, is that another docket that might take place on a given day over there at the county juvenile court?

A. Sure. So that different -- is a different practice from St. Louis City, but in St. Louis County there are detention hearings every morning at 8:30 a.m.
Q. All right. So a total of five different dockets that a defender might be called upon to participate in in a given day at the county juvenile court?
A. Yes.
Q. And then in each one of those court settings, how many prosecutors -- and we'll clarify what that term means, prosecutors are there assigned to handle those dockets?
A. I don't know specifically, but I know that there is one assigned to each courtroom, at least one assigned to each courtroom. There might be more.
Q. And I'll try -- I've shifted us to the future or the -- the present, but let me -- I'll -- I'll keep our attention back on 2015. In 2015 when the DOJ report was written, was it the practice of the county juvenile court to assign a juvenile prosecutor to each of those five different courtrooms to cover the dockets?

Page 38

A. Yes.
Q. And in contrast, there was a single public defender assigned to cover those five dockets?
A. That's correct.
Q. And I've used the word prosecutor to talk about persons who are filing and prosecuting cases in juvenile court. Is that the usual term we use here in Missouri?
A. No. The usual term is either legal officer or attorney for the deputy juvenile officer.
Q. And just so the record is clear for folks who maybe don't know this practice, can you explain that a little bit more?
A. Sure. So the attorney who is prosecuting cases is also the attorney for -- who is a person who is called the deputy juvenile officer. They are the individual who can help file the case, question the youth, make a recommendation as to the placement of the youth, and then supervise the youth once the disposition has completed.
Q. Okay. And so deputy juvenile officer might be seen as akin to a probation officer?
A. Yes.
Q. So these prosecutors are actually representing the probation officers essentially in all of these proceedings?

Page 39

A. That's correct.
Q. And this set of findings that the Department of Justice made relating to the county juvenile court, in your opinion based on your experience practicing across the state, were those findings unique to St. Louis County?
A. No.
Q. Can you tell us more about that?
A. With regard to representation, I can't speak to every single county in Missouri, but I know that the representation for youth is not necessarily done by a juvenile specialist. I don't know how many children are waiving the right to counsel and admitting, so I think that's another thing that is a problem across the state, as well as admitting to informal allegations without an attorney present.
With regard to the equal protection violations, I have only practiced in the city and I only know the statistics in the city, but I would believe that those statistics ring true across the state.
Q. And just to clarify, you just there said that you only practiced in the city, but you practiced in -- in other counties as well?

A. I have, but I do not know the number, the statistical numbers with regard to the equal protection violations.
Q. Got you. So you've just now indicated that in terms of the quality of representation provided in St. Louis County's juvenile court as described by DOJ in 2015 is consistent with your impressions of the quality of practice across the state in 2015; is that correct?
A. Yes, and I -- and I believe -- to clarify a little bit, I believe that the number of cases, I believe that if the attorney had had less cases that she would have been able to adequately represent the youth.
Q. Yes. And I will turn to that.
A. Right.
Q. So there's the -- the quality which sounds like in your opinion is greatly impacted by the quantity?
A. Yes.
Q. And the, for instance, needing to cover five courtrooms to defend against five prosecutors on your own?
A. Correct.

Q. In terms of the quantity and the expectations for defenders in other counties, would you in your opinion say that that disparity in terms of what's provided to the defender as compared to the prosecution exists across the state?

A. Absolutely. And I think with a little bit of a difference. I think a lot of jurisdictions have a lot of adult cases, and only a handful of juvenile cases. And so the disparity exists not in the number of juvenile cases, but in the lack of time and the ability to spend focusing on those juvenile cases, as well as the specialization.

Q. All right. So let me turn your attention to what I'm going to call for purposes of this deposition Plaintiff's Exhibit 24 --

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 24, Exhibit 8 of complaint, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) -- which has a cover indicating Exhibit 8 because it's Exhibit 8 for our complaint. Can you take a look at Exhibit 24 and tell us if you recognize it?

A. I do.

Q. And what is this document?

A. It is a letter that our director, Michael Barrett, wrote to the then governor of Missouri.

Page 42

Q. And you've seen this before?

A. I have.

Q. And what is it that Director Barrett is telling the governor in this letter?

A. He outlines the Department of Justice, the -- the problems that were found in that report. He talks about the resources and the fact that we do not have the ability to represent indigent persons given the current budget.

Q. And in reviewing this letter, is there anything about it that you believe to be untrue or that you disagree with?

A. No.

Q. And is the position of Director Barrett in particular with regard to the problem of the juvenile defender system being in crisis, do you agree with that?

A. I do.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 25, Exhibit 12 of complaint, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. So I'd like to turn your attention now to Plaintiff's Exhibit 25 for purposes of the deposition. You'll note the cover says Exhibit 12 because it's Exhibit 12 to our complaint. Do you recognize that document?

A. I do.

Q. And what is it?

MS. SHIPMA: Could we go off the record for just a moment?

MS. QUINN: Sure, uh-huh.

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 9:48 a.m.

(WHEREIN, a discussion was held off the record.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 9:50 a.m.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. We just took a break so that I could correct an imperfection in our exhibit, and before we took a break we were talking about Exhibit 25, and I think I asked if you recognize that document.

A. I do.

Q. Notice I didn't use this scrolly thing. I'm sorry. And -- and what is Exhibit 25?

A. It is the memorandum of agreement between the U.S. DOJ and St. Louis County Family Court.

Q. And what is your understanding of the meaning of that agreement and what it does?

Page 44

A. So -- so it was an agreement reached by a number of parties including St. Louis County Family Court and it lays out specific findings and agreements between the parties.

Q. And with regard to defense services, is there anything in that document that speaks to that topic?

A. Sure. So several different things. One is that for any youth who is detained and not represented, the public defender system shall be appointed. If they are not detained and they are not deemed indigent, they can go to a number of contract attorneys. There is one specific contract attorney who has been hired by the county to represent youth and there is also a panel of contract attorneys who are also able to represent youth.

Q. And so is the upshot of this agreement with regard to defender services that one more defender has been assigned to assist with juvenile cases in St. Louis County?

A. Correct. At least one. And I don't know the numbers of -- or of how many youth the other contract attorneys are representing.

Q. But prior to the agreement there was also a panel of -- of conflict or contract attorneys that existed?

A. Sure.
Q. And is that any different now?
A. Just a little bit because these are not necessarily conflict attorneys. So these are attorneys for youth who don't qualify for the public defender's services. So in practice they could be representing more youth, but I don't know the answer to how many youth they're representing.
Q. Okay. And we might be getting kind of deep into the weeds on this one, but I reference a single attorney who seems to be designated as an additional defender for delinquency cases in the county.
A. Correct. Yes.
Q. And that person's name is Quinn Grimes?
A. That's right.
Q. And does Quinn handle cases of kids who are indigent?
A. I believe so, yes.
Q. Okay. And the panel is for folks who would not otherwise qualify for the public defender services?
A. You are correct.

Page 46

Q. So the public defender's services essentially have been expanded one fold or you have one additional attorney assigned in the county to assist with those five dockets we talked about earlier?
A. Correct. But that person is not hired by the public defender's office and she does not work with the public defender system.
Q. And she's receiving funds from elsewhere; is that right?
A. That is correct.
Q. Do you know much about what she handles in terms of cases or what she's assigned?
A. Sure. I know a little bit. I know that she does delinquency cases and I know that she also handles the informal adjustments.
Q. And the informal adjustments are those matters that you referenced earlier where youth might be diverted off the ordinary prosecution track, but there are concerns about admission being made in the context of those informal cases?
A. That's correct.
Q. And by Missouri law, youth are entitled to counsel at those proceedings, correct?
A. That is correct.

Page 47

Q. And previously they were not receiving access to counsel on a regular basis?
A. That is correct.
Q. So Quinn's time sounds like is a fair amount spent on those informal cases?
A. I don't know the answer to that question.
Q. Okay. Do you know if she's handling certifications?
A. I don't know the answer to that question.
Q. All right. With regard to Exhibit 25, does that agreement impact any other county in the State of Missouri other than St. Louis County?
A. It does not.
Q. And so while we now have one additional attorney with -- so a total of two public defender-type attorneys handling five dockets in the county, there's been no similar change in other counties?
A. That's correct.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 26, Exhibit 7 of complaint, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. I'd like to share with you what we're going to call Exhibit 26 for purposes of the deposition. It has a cover indicating Exhibit 7 because it's Exhibit 7 to our complaint. Can you look at this document and let us know if you recognize it?

A. Yes, I do.
Q. All right. And what is this document?
A. This is the RubinBrown study done of the Missouri public defender's system.
Q. And did you participate in the timekeeping required for this study?
A. Yes, I did.
Q. Can you explain a little bit to us about what timekeeping entailed?
A. Sure. So there was a system on our computer where you could document how much time you spent for a particular task, and you did it in five-minute increments.
Q. And this was a change in practice in terms of how you might record your time previously, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. More detailed?
A. Yes.
Q. More onerous?
A. Yes.

Page 49

Q. Did it take time to keep your time?
A. Absolutely.
Q. Are you aware of any similar system ever imposed on the prosecutors in the State of Missouri?
A. I am not.
Q. Have you ever heard of the legal officers over there in juvenile court being forced to keep track of their time to justify their existence?
A. I have not.
Q. Okay. So in terms of findings this RubinBrown study made findings relating to cases across the criminal and juvenile justice systems in Missouri, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. With regard to juveniles, what is your understanding of the finding relating to -- to juvenile defense matters?
A. Could you be a little bit more specific.
Q. Sure. On page 15 in the section with a title here I think it's time study in section C --
A. Sure.
Q. -- it has a list of average reportable controllable case task hours per case. Do you see that section?

Page 50

A. I do.
Q. And what findings were made with regard to how much time on average in the State of Missouri is being spent on juvenile matters?
A. 4.6 hours.
Q. So -- and to be clear, 4.6 matters on juvenile delinquency defense cases, yes?
A. That's correct.
Q. And are you aware of what this study suggested as a appropriate amount of time to be spent on -- as a -- an appropriate amount of time to be spent on such matters?
A. The study or the AB --
Q. The study.
A. Okay.
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. ABA standard. 19.5.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. And you mentioned another standard. Will you share some about that?
A. Sure. So the ABA standards require approximately ten hours, I believe, on a -- on a juvenile case.

Page 51

Q. On a -- on a juvenile case. And do you know if there are any differences on how the ABA measured juvenile case time on average versus this study?
A. I do not.
Q. So for instance, if we take a look at the RubinBrown study, you know, it suggests 19.5 hours for a juvenile case, but a juvenile case might wind up in adult court, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And so if a juvenile case moved from juvenile court into adult court and we were dealing with a homicide charge, what is the number of hours the report, RubinBrown report says should be spent on a homicide case?
A. 106.6.
Q. And then how much time on page 15 is it -- does RubinBrown study suggest is being spent on a homicide case on average in Missouri?
A. 84.5.
Q. And now reviewing this report, is there anything about it that seems inaccurate to you in terms of the amount of time being spent on average by colleagues across the state on these cases?
MR. MOORE: Just object to the

foundation of the question. Subject to that, you can answer.
A. I -- say -- would you ask the question again?
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Yes. Does it seem about right to you that such a limited amount of time is being spent on juvenile cases across the state?
MR. MOORE: Same objection. Go ahead.
A. I can tell you I do not disagree with the findings of the -- of the report.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. So we're going to talk a little bit now about policies and procedures generally, maybe a little less about these documents. Do you -- do you want to take a break?
A. No, I'm okay.
MS. QUINN: Anyone? Okay.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) So in terms of juvenile practice you did mention earlier there are some trainings that are now taking place. What about juvenile case policy manuals, is there any statewide policy manual for juvenile defense cases?
A. Not currently.
Q. What about a case procedures manual?

Page 53

So say separately from policies about how the system might process cases or document cases. What about procedures for actually handling such matters, the attorney actions and tasks, is there a manual for that?

MS. SHIPMA: And Mae, could I just -- and you mean MSPD manuals?

MS. QUINN: Yes, yes.

MS. SHIPMA: Thank you for clarifying.

MS. QUINN: Uh-huh. Statewide.

A. Not currently. Not currently.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Is there a training manual for new attorneys who may be handling juvenile cases statewide?

A. Not currently.

Q. What kind of training do new hires to MSPD receive?

A. You mean generally?

Q. Generally.

A. Sure. So there are two trainings. There is a new defender workshop. It's a week-long workshop that is given. There is also trial skills that's usually -- one is usually in the summer and one is usually around mid-year.

Q. All right. And -- and let me back up a bit. No one is hired at this point as a designated juvenile defender in the State of Missouri, correct?

A. Aside from myself?

Q. Yes.

A. And Katrina Jones would be the other juvenile defender.

Q. Well, when you post for jobs --

A. Oh, sure.

Q. -- it's public defender for Hannibal or public defender for wherever, but no designation of a specialized juvenile defender, correct?

A. You are correct.

Q. And so someone is hired on and they go through some upfront training to learn the job?

A. Yes.

Q. You've mentioned two possible trainings they would attend?

A. Yes.

Q. Do defenders before they hit the ground and receive cases necessarily participate in both of those trainings you've just mentioned?

A. Not right away. They are required as a new attorney, but they don't -- it's not the first week on the job that they necessarily receive that training.

Page 55

Q. So you might be in court handling matters, but you've not participated in any kind of specialized training relating to your job?

A. Potentially, yes.

Q. Now, in either one of these two trainings that are provided as a matter of course, is there any component that relates to juvenile practice?

A. Not currently.

Q. So just so -- so we're clear, there's an annual defender training that takes place that any defender can attend?

A. Any new.

Q. Any new defender can attend?

A. Yes.

Q. And it has no information about juvenile cases?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And then a trial skills training is a different training, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. And it too does not at all relate to juvenile practice?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And a trial in an adult court is quite different from a trial in a juvenile court, correct?

Page 56

A. Absolutely.

Q. Tell us a little bit about why.

A. So a juvenile trial is going to be in front of a judge, so it's going to be a bench trial. So there are differences in strategy that you would use. Also, there is the element of having a parent sitting at counsel table with you, so that's a difference between juvenile court and adult court. Also, knowledge of adolescent brain development, the potential to use juvenile-specific jury instructions, case law is going to be different, just to name a few differences.

Q. Okay. Now, beyond trainings for new defenders, is -- is there any kind of training that might be offered relating to juvenile practice?

A. Yes.

Q. And -- and what is that training?

A. So that is the once-a-year juvenile training put on by the public defender system.

Q. Now, that training is relatively new, correct?

A. It is.

Q. Do you know how long ago MSPD began to put on juvenile-focused trainings for its lawyers?

Page 57

A. I believe it began in the winter of 2014.
Q. So when we're saying every year, it's only been two years or three years, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you have any sense how many people attended that first winter 2014 training?
A. I don't.
Q. Were you present?
A. I was on maternity leave.
Q. That is right. And what about the next training after that?
A. So the training in 2015, approximately 30 attorneys.
Q. And what about the most recent? I think it would be the most recent, 2016 training?
A. No, 2017 would be the most recent training.
Q. Okay.
A. Probably 20 to 25 attorneys.
Q. And how many attorneys total, if you know, practice as public defenders in the State of Missouri?
A. I don't know the exact number.
Q. Would it be safe to say only a small percentage of the attorneys in the state of Missouri's public defender system have been trained specifically relating to juvenile practices?

A. Yes.
Q. Are you familiar with a program called JTIP?
A. I am.
Q. And what is JTIP?
A. JTIP is the Juvenile Training Immersion Program.
Q. And do you know who came up with this program and what it entails?
A. Sure. It is a collaboration between Kris Henning from Georgetown University and the National Juvenile Defender Center, and it is a set of training specifically related to topics in juvenile law.
Q. And is it a training that individuals from any state might be able to participate in?
A. Yes.
Q. Are you familiar with the number of Missouri defenders who have been trained in JTIP best practices?
A. Yes.
Q. How many?

Page 59

A. Myself, Katrina Jones, so that's two. Sue Rinne, that's three. Mary Fox, that's four. Courtney Goodwin, that's five. And yourself, so six.
Q. And are you familiar with Katrina Jones being unable to participate in the JTIP program at some point?
A. I don't -- I don't know.
Q. Okay. Did you find the JTIP program to be helpful to you?
A. Absolutely.
Q. Are you aware of any other juvenile-focused opportunities -- well, strike that.
I'm going to turn to another document. I think we're on Exhibit 27 at this point?
MS. SHIPMA: Uh-huh.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 27, New Attorney Toolbox, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Would you mind taking a look at Exhibit 27, please?
A. Okay.
Q. Have you seen this document before?
A. No.
Q. All right. The cover of this document, would you mind indicating for the record what -- what it's -- how it's labeled?

Page 60

A. It says New Attorney Toolbox: Guide to Area Ten and Other Important Stuff.
Q. And then on the bottom of it, where is it -- where is area ten?
A. Hannibal.
Q. Are you familiar with practices in Hannibal or area ten?
A. No, I am not.
Q. Have you ever seen one of these toolbox-type training documents before?
A. No, I have not.
Q. So let's if we can walk through this together. If you would turn to page -- I don't think the pages are numbered, but it is two, three, four, five, at the bottom it's MSPD 5668 Bates stamp on the bottom.
A. Okay.
Q. Here on this page it appears the Hannibal area ten office is providing information about poverty guidelines, correct?
A. That's what it looks like.
Q. And it says public defender guidelines and there are some charts or there is a chart on this page, yes?

Page 61

A. Yes.
Q. Have you seen this chart before?
A. I -- I have no idea if I've seen this chart before. It doesn't look familiar to me.
Q. Okay. I'll direct your attention to a section that says towards the bottom (quote as read):
Parents' income considered if D is under 18, a full-time student, or dependent on parents or if parents or a relative post bond.
Have you seen that kind of terminology before?
A. No.
Q. Can you tell us if this is the practice across the state?
A. I can tell you that children file -- they fill out -- they fill out an application, but they traditionally are accepted and not based on their parents' income.
Q. All right.
A. And that's based on my practice in St. Louis city.
Q. All right. So the practice in St. Louis city is that a child actually fills out a form seeking a public defender?

A. No. So the practice is that they are appointed an attorney with the public defender's office. We ensure that they want an attorney from the public defender's office and they fill out an application. But my practice, we have not turned away children based on indigency.
Q. Okay. So just so I'm clear again, so in the city the court appoints the public defender to a child's case, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And thereafter an assessment of indigence is undertaken; is that right?
A. Yes.
Q. And is it the child that fills out the form or somebody else?
A. No. I help the child fill out the form.
Q. But just -- and let me be clear. So it's not the parent --
A. No.
Q. -- who fills out the form, it's the child in St. Louis city?
A. Yes.
MR. MOORE: I'll object to the form of the question. I think it misstates her prior testimony that she assists the children in filling out the form, but subject to that the answer is already in the record, so we can continue.

Page 63

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Do you want to clarify anything?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So in the city all young people in the court system receive appointment at the front end of a case for the public defender's representation?
A. Yes.
Q. Thereafter a screening is done to determine if they qualify for public defender services?
A. And if they want an attorney from the public defender's office.
Q. In terms of the qualifying, it's the policy and practice of the city that all children are deemed indigent because they're under 18 and cannot work to support themselves, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. But that is not the practice across the state?
A. I don't know.

Page 64

Q. Do you know if that is the practice in St. Louis County?
A. I don't know. I know that they fill out applications, but I don't know anything beyond that.
Q. Do you know who fills out the application in St. Louis County?
A. I do not.
Q. What about St. Charles County?
A. I do not.
Q. What about those other places you do -- do cases?
A. I do not know. Usually by the time we get the cases in the other jurisdictions, a -- an -- a defender from that jurisdiction has entered and deemed it a conflict, so they have at some point determined indigency and then conflicted the case to our office.
Q. You're coming in later so you don't know what happened --
A. Correct.
Q. -- on the front end?
A. That's correct.
Q. So I want to turn our attention back to this area ten tool kit. Can you, if you would, please, look through the forms that are in here looking at documents such as the penalty worksheet, the case log, client interview form, waiver of preliminary hearing form, protocol form, DWI client questionnaire form. Look through the whole document really if you don't mind.

Page 65

MS. SHIPMA: And Sarah, take your time to look at --

MS. QUINN: Yeah.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MS. QUINN: You know, if it's all right, we can go off the record because I wouldn't mind to take a little time to take a look at this and then for me to -- to look at this document as well. So if it's all right, can we go off the record?

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 10:15 a.m.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 10:24 a.m.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. Ms. Johnson, we just took a break, but before the break I asked you to take a look at this area ten new attorney toolbox document, correct?

Page 66

A. Yes.

Q. Having now reviewed that document, did you see anything in there relating to juvenile practice?

A. I did not.

Q. But to be fair, you don't -- you've never seen this document before?

A. I have not.

Q. You don't know if this is still the current toolbox tool kit given to Hannibal area attorneys?

A. I do not.

Q. But if it was, do you have an opinion about whether this is sufficient to bring new attorneys up to speed relating to their responsibilities for juvenile clients?

MR. MOORE: Also object to the form of the question. I think it's a little vague. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. As there is nothing with regard to juvenile clients, I would say no, it is not sufficient.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Now, I'd like to turn our attention to St. Louis city juvenile court practices.

Page 67

A. Yes.

Q. And I think, correct me if I'm wrong, but your opinion might be that St. Louis city as an office tries to set the bar of best practices for the city -- for the state of Missouri's juvenile defenders?

A. When you say St. Louis city you mean the public defender's office?

Q. Yes. Uh-huh.

A. Yes.

Q. It's one of the few offices that has a dedicated juvenile defender?

A. Yes.

Q. And so therefore you try your best to become a model for other attorneys who are doing juvenile practice across the state?

A. I do.

Q. But are you able to do everything you think you need to do as a defender on the cases you handle?

A. No.

Q. Do you have a policy manual in St. Louis city for juvenile defense cases?

A. Myself?

Q. The office.

Page 68

A. No.

Q. Is there a office procedures manual relating to juvenile cases, how somebody should be handling a case in terms of all of the tasks that need to be accomplished in a juvenile case, any kind of manual like that?

A. No.

Q. Is there any kind of new employees tool kit or training manual for defenders joining the city of St. Louis who might handle juvenile cases?

A. You are looking at her.

Q. But if you were to hire a new attorney, would they receive any kind of manual or materials that tell them how to handle juvenile cases if they had to cover a case?

A. Sure. So I have done some trainings of attorneys if they're going to do a case, but we don't hand them pieces of paper, no.

Q. All right. And you mentioned trainings that might take place in St. Louis city. What are those trainings?

A. Sure. So we have -- I have trained some of the newer attorneys with regard to what a juvenile case is, what the processes and procedures are, case law, important Missouri case law, and so that has taken place a couple of times.

Q. Yeah. So you say a couple of times. Can you tell us exactly how many times?
A. So we have an attorney -- another attorney Rachel who does some juvenile stuff so I've trained her, and then I trained a group of four other attorneys. So twice.
Q. All right. And when did you train those four lawyers?
A. Exact date?
Q. Roundabout.
A. Couple months ago.
Q. And how long did that training last?
A. About an hour.
Q. Beyond that, no other juvenile-specific trainings have been conducted in the St. Louis city office relating to juvenile practice?
A. No.
Q. How many lawyers do you guys have there?
A. Approximately when we were fully staffed 30, but I believe we have about 27 right now.
Q. And of those 27 lawyers, you've indicated you're the only one that's sort of all the time is in juvenile court; is that fair to say?

A. It is fair to say.
Q. You've mentioned Rachel. What are her duties?
A. So Rachel handled -- before we stopped taking conflicts she handled the St. Louis County conflicts, as well as the St. Charles County conflicts for juvenile court, and she also has an adult caseload in the city.
Q. And does she do any juvenile cases in St. Louis city's juvenile court?
A. Yes, she has done some.
Q. And I'm sorry if you said that and I just missed it. So then the other 25 attorneys, they are not generally assigned to handle cases in St. Louis city juvenile court; is that right?
A. That's correct.
Q. But every attorney might in some way, shape, or form be involved in a juvenile case if it is certified to adult court; is that fair to say?
A. No. I take all of the -- if a child is certified in the city of St. Louis, I keep the case.
Q. And you stay on throughout the whole duration of that matter?
A. That is correct.

Page 71

Q. Do you know if that's the practice around the state?
A. I do not know that.
Q. Do you know anything about the practice around the state?
A. No.
Q. St. Louis County, do you have any sense?
A. I don't.
MS. QUINN: All right. You have shared with us a document today that we will mark as Exhibit 28. And I think everyone has a copy of it.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 28, Memorandum of understanding, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) You have -- you have that document as well?
A. I do.
Q. Can I switch you?
A. Sure.
Q. So now it is marked Exhibit 28. Can you tell us what that document is?
A. Sure. It is a memorandum of understanding between the Missouri state public defender and the 22nd Judicial Circuit of Missouri, Family Court, Juvenile Division.

Page 72

Q. And what does this document seek to accomplish?
A. So it is seeking to appoint a contract attorney in good standing to represent youth in St. Louis city juvenile court.
Q. And so when you say it's seeking to appoint an attorney, is it for -- there's to be now one contract attorney in the city or is this for any number of contract counsel? I'm just a little confused.
A. Sure. So currently there is one contract attorney in the city of St. Louis.
Q. And who is that?
A. Cindy Finney.
Q. And has Cindy Finney been trained as a juvenile defender?
A. Yes, she went to the juvenile training in the summer and I am a resource for her.
Q. And how much is Ms. Finney paid per case?
A. So there are two numbers on page two (quote as read):
The contract attorney shall be paid $500 for cases involving nonviolent offenses and $750 for cases involving violent offenses, and it will not exceed $20,000.

Q. And do you know how many cases Ms. Finney currently has?

A. Two.

Q. So this is new?

A. Yes, it is. She began the first week of October.

Q. Oh, I see. I see it's dated July of '17, yes?

A. Correct.

Q. But it's only taken effect it sounds like this past month, this month?

A. This past week, yes.

Q. And so for a burglary case it sounds like unless there was the use of a weapon, she would be paid $500 no matter what that case entailed?

A. Are you referring to a burglary first, burglary second?

Q. Ah, very good. We'll go burglary second.

A. Okay. I believe that would be $500.

Q. All right. And so even if she had to interview ten different witnesses, yes?

A. Potentially, yes.

Page 74

Q. No matter how many motions needed to be filed in that case?

A. That's correct.

Q. No matter how much mitigation evidence needed to be marshaled?

A. That's correct.

Q. No matter how many times she had to appear in court?

A. That's correct.

Q. Detention review hearings?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is there anything else about this document you think I should know?

A. No.

Q. And is there anything different about that arrangement, $500 no matter how much is asked of the lawyer in a juvenile nonviolent matter? Is that different from what's taking place across the state for contract counsel?

MR. MOORE: I'll object to the form of the question. I think it's argumentative and vague. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. Do you mean contract counsel for conflict cases?

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Yes.

Page 75

A. As far as the amount of money, I believe it's the same.

Q. Did you feel I was being argumentative?

A. I --

MR. MOORE: Object to the form of the question as well.

MS. QUINN: All right. I don't want to argue with you, Sarah.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Okay. So you raised this question of conflict. Let's talk -- let's talk about conflicts of interest and conflict counsel.

A. Sure.

Q. So you indicated earlier that in the city of St. Louis the court appoints the public defender for any child coming through kind of as a stopgap measure in -- on the front end of a case?

A. That's correct.

Q. And you -- do you know if that -- well, that's not the practice necessarily across the state?

A. No.

Q. So focusing on across the state, do you know then on the front end of a case how youth are being appointed counsel, what the practice or policy is?

Page 76

A. Just generally. I know that it's either they are appointed subject to 211.211, or they are telling the court when the court first inquires either at a detention hearing or at a status conference whether the child wants counsel and then allows them the opportunity to apply for public defender services.

Q. So there -- there may be instances when a child is appearing before the court let's say at a detention hearing without any attorney on the case?

A. That's correct.

Q. In St. Charles County, for instance, are there any attorneys at the detention hearings?

A. And when you mean attorneys, public defenders?

Q. Public defenders.

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And again, across the state at the -- at the beginning stage of a case it would be important to discern if there was a conflict of interest, correct?

A. Yes, but by the -- by the defender or who are you --

Q. Just -- just as an ethical matter.

A. Sure.

Page 77

Q. There are concerns about having an attorney on the case who might have a conflict of interest in any adult or juvenile case, yes?
A. Absolutely.
Q. Do you know how conflicts of interest are discerned across the state in juvenile matters?
A. I do not.
Q. Does the public defender system have any policy relating to figuring out if and when there are conflicts of interest at the very beginning of a case?
A. Yes. There -- there would be a policy.
Q. Do you know what that is?
A. Well, I mean, I think if you -- if there is more than one child or more than one adult charged in an offense, that would be a pretty obvious conflict. That would be discerned right up front. There might be more subtle conflicts, so once you get into a case, you might recognize that the child is saying that another individual did it and then realizing that you also represent that individual.
Q. All right. And so you've kind of identified a classic conflict of interest, and that is co-defendants generally should not be represented by the same attorney --

A. Yes.
Q. -- during the course of a case?
A. That's correct.
Q. And so what is the policy or practice with regard to the MSPD system for figuring out when that happens and how to protect against it?
MS. SHIPMA: If you know.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) If you know. Sure. Sure.
A. I guess I'm a little bit confused about your question how to protect against representing multiple defendants.
Q. That's right.
A. So you -- if you -- if a petition charges multiple children are acting as -- acting together, then protecting against it would be to conflict it to other offices.
Q. All right. So let's talk about -- I'll look at St. Louis city practices then.
A. Okay.
Q. So you've already indicated I think that the St. Louis city public defender's office does not represent all indigent youth in the St. Louis city juvenile court, correct?

Page 79

A. Correct.
Q. Some are going to the contract counsel who we just talked about?
A. Correct.
Q. Are there other panel or other attorneys handling juvenile matters in -- in the city for those who are indigent?
A. No.
Q. And who covers detention hearings in the city of St. Louis?
A. I do.
Q. And do you cover all detention dockets?
A. Yes.
Q. And if a case comes in with multiple respondents or juveniles charged in a single offense, do you handle that detention hearing?
A. I do.
Q. And so let's say there are five co-defendants charged in a fight.
A. Sure.
Q. You would stand up for all of those children at the detention hearing as their lawyer?
A. Yes.
Q. And that's a conflict of interest, right?

Page 80

A. Yes.
Q. When, if at all, does a new lawyer come into the case to take some of those co-respondents off your hands?
A. Sure. So if we are able to get the conflict attorneys to come down and cover the detention hearings, certainly that's something that is an option. However, if not -- it usually takes a couple weeks to contract the case and for there to be a status conference in order for all of the attorneys to get together.
Q. So for the first few weeks of a case it could be the child is without conflict-free counsel; is that right?
A. No, that's not right. So once the detention hearing is held, immediately after the cases are conflicted. So I do not -- after that first initial detention hearing, I am not visiting all five children in the detention center. I am only visiting the individual who I entered on in the case.
Q. How long does it take from that detention hearing for the new counsel to enter on average to take over the matter?
A. I don't know.

Page 81

Q. And would you agree that the beginning days of a case, juvenile or adult, are some of the most important days on a case to investigate and -- and do your job?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you also agree that detention hearings, whether somebody is incarcerated or not incarcerated, detained or not detained, is sometimes one of the most important facets of -- of a case in terms of determining outcome?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Do you feel like when you're standing on a case where there's five co-respondents and you're asked to represent all of them and you know that you're conflicted, that you're able to do your job as -- as you ought to be able to do?

A. Sure. I think in a perfect world that there would be five different attorneys representing those children, but at the moment of detention hearing my goal is to get all five children released. And so at that time I want to ensure that those children, because that is their most important question is when am I going to be released is to fight for them to get released.

Q. Are you speaking to each one of those five about the facts of the case when you're preparing for the detention hearing?

A. I am not.

Q. But the facts of the case could be important to a detention determination?

A. They are, and I rely on the probable cause document to make any very prima facia arguments.

Q. So it's safe to say you modified what would be considered an appropriate and best practice in order to accommodate the limitations of the system?

A. Yes.

Q. Why don't you have five attorneys standing up on five co-respondent cases?

A. We don't have the ability to with the time to get those five conflict attorneys assigned because by the time -- when the petition is filed and the detention hearing is three days and we don't have enough time to do that.

Q. And -- and let's talk about that predetention hearing period that you've mentioned, three days. How much work are you doing between when a case is papered or petitioned and when that detention hearing takes place? How much work or investigative time are you spending on that matter?

A. So are you asking generally?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Okay. So when a case is petitioned I am visiting with the child, talking with the family, potentially getting any mitigation information, investigation. I don't have addresses or phone numbers for the witnesses, so usually the investigation piece is just talking to the child and if the parent knows any information. That's the investigation that's done predetention hearing.

Q. What about lining up alternatives to detention, are you able to do that work?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Tell me more about that.

A. So you -- you're talking to the parents or any kin that would be willing or able to take the child, as well as if there is a schooling issue, potentially arranging alternative schooling.

Q. I mean inpatient drug programming, residential placement, other placements other than the family to provide as an alternative at the detention hearing.

A. Children don't normally -- that's not something that they normally want, so that's -- no,

Page 84

I have -- I usually do not look into that option.

Q. So if a child had an option of being detained or going to a treatment program, it's not within your practice to look into that possibility of a treatment program?

A. Well, of course, if the -- if that's what the child wanted, then yes, I would look into the inpatient treatment program.

Q. What is -- do you know anything about the practice across the state in terms of the ability of lawyers handling juvenile matters to use that three days to investigate, obtain, and put into place alternatives to detention?

A. I don't.

Q. You talked a little bit about conflicts of interest and -- and how conflict cases might be reassigned. Can -- can you unpack a little bit more what that process looks like and who covers what county?

A. So I -- I'm sorry, I'm a little bit confused about your question.

Q. Yeah, me too. So let me clarify. Focusing on St. Louis city.

A. Sure.

Q. If there's a case with multiple respondents and conflict counsel needs to be assigned, what takes place? What -- what follows after that determination?

Page 85

A. Currently what takes place is we determine the conflict, and then it is sent to Columbia to be contracted out.

Q. And so Columbia gets this information and then what's the realm of possibilities, to whom may those cases go?

A. I don't know the exact individuals, but they could go to any number of contract attorneys for the -- the system.

Q. So is it safe to say there's like a relationship among St. Louis city, St. Louis County, and St. Charles County attorneys doing conflict cases?

A. So that used to be the practice, but that is no longer. So these are -- St. Louis County and St. Charles County public defender's office is no longer taking conflicts.

Q. Oh, okay. When did that go into effect?

A. I don't know. Recently.

Q. Would -- would you say within the last month?

Page 86

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know if you any longer will be required to travel out of county personally to -- to cover cases?

A. No.

Q. No, you will not or you don't know?

A. I will not.

Q. Will other attorneys across the state need to travel out of their own counties to cover cases?

A. Potentially if those are cases that they are currently entered on.

Q. But you don't know what the practice will be going forward in terms of who's getting what cases, who's covering what county?

A. No.

Q. Speaking about your practice up until this recent change, is it fair to say as you mentioned earlier that you were covering cases in five different counties?

A. Yes. I -- I stopped doing that approximately a year and a half ago.

Q. And was that because of your change in role?

A. No. My change in role was in July of this year, so it's just a new position. But I was -- I split that duty with Rachel Dowd. So I think it's been about a year.

Q. So when this change happened, is this intended to improve delivery of services, like do you have a sense of why this is going on?

A. Why I stopped doing the conflict?

Q. Yeah. Uh-huh.

A. Yes. Yes, to improve services. So I could focus my time on St. Louis city youth.

Q. What about the attorneys out in St. Charles County, are they still any of them being asked to travel outside of county to cover cases?

A. I don't know the answer to that question.

Q. And St. Louis County, any of those folks?

A. I don't know.

Q. I want to shift a little bit and talk about expert witnesses if that's okay.

A. Sure.

Q. I assume you have in your experience used expert witnesses in cases, yes?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Do you have any opinions about expert opinions -- about expert witnesses in juvenile matters? And let me ask do you feel like the use of experts is more important or something that should be relied upon more frequently in juvenile matters than adult matters?

A. I think it depends. I think expert witnesses are definitely a very important thing for juvenile cases, but I -- they could be just as important for an adult case.

Q. And so in terms of the range of experts one might use in a juvenile case, can you share with us a little bit who some of those folks might be?

A. Sure. So you might have a mental health expert who is talking either about competency or about learning disabilities or issues with a child understanding maybe verbal language, comprehension of the system. So you have those -- that kind of expert. Also have an adolescent brain development expert, psychologist, psychiatrist who would be able to -- psychologist who would be able to talk about brain development and why that is important with regard to a case. You also might have the range of experts that you would use in an adult case, so ballistics or fingerprint DNA, those kinds of experts.

Q. So experts relating to the trial elements or the charge elements might be one area of expertise you're using?

A. Yes.

Q. And a whole other array of experts relating to the youth-specific features in a particular case perhaps?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And what's the process for obtaining an expert witness in a juvenile matter in -- in the Missouri system?

A. Sure. So you of course have to identify the expert that you're going to use, talk with them, understand how much they are going to charge an hour, and then you have to do an encumbrance request. So you have to identify the reason why you're going to be using the expert, what expert you want to use, and how much money you are going to be needing for that particular expert.

Q. And so then what is the policy or practice for then turning that information over? Like to whom do you direct that request?

A. Sure. You direct that request to your district defender and then if it reaches I believe over $500 it goes to another group, another level of management who then have to review the request.

Q. Are you aware of any limits on your ability to access experts or use experts?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Do you know anything about the amount of money that has been allocated to the Missouri public defender system for expert witnesses?

A. No, I do not.

Q. You've never made something called an AKE motion or AKE motion to the court directly for expert expenses?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you feel like your ability to -- to access experts is -- are there any -- any limits on your day-to-day practice that impact your ability to -- to access or use expert witnesses?

A. No.

Q. The caseloads and the like don't enter into your thinking around what kind of time you might spend with an expert or otherwise?

A. Ask -- ask that question again.

Q. Yeah. So it takes time to work with an expert?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Tell us some -- some about what that looks like.

Page 91

A. So you're going to be talking to them about, you know, pre -- using them kind of what -- what strategies you have or maybe what -- what you want them to be used for. Then you're going to be giving them documents.

They're going -- they're going to have to do a document review, maybe even a witness review, maybe talk to family members, individuals that that child has interacted with. Then you're going to be talking to them before they potentially write a report.

Do they want to write a report, do they not want to write a report? Then you're going to be talking to them pretrial or prehearing about what kind of questions you're going to be asking them, what kind of exhibits you're going to be using, what kind of questions the legal officer -- officer is going to be asking them, and then there is the hearing and then any other posthearing issues.

Q. So it sounds like to locate, work with, and deploy an expert well, it could take 4.6 hours alone on that task?

A. It could.

Q. Is it your sense that the practices in St. Louis city relating to the use of experts in juvenile cases are different from across the state?

Page 92

A. I can't speak for certain, but we have youth experts in the city of St. Louis.

Q. And do you know anything about the -- your colleagues across the state, how much they're using experts in juvenile cases or --

A. I don't.

Q. -- making requests? What about investigators, are there policies and procedures statewide with regard to the use of investigators in juvenile matters?

A. Sure. So each office is assigned investigators. If you would like an investigator to do something for you, you create what's called an action item. You send that to the district defender or deputy district defender and then they reassign that action item.

Q. And so what -- how long would you say does it take for you from when you make a request for something to be investigated for it to be assigned and the action item to be acted upon?

A. Same day.

Q. And are you finding that the investigators are dedicating the same amount to juvenile cases as adult cases?

A. I don't know specifically, but I do know that they are divided amongst all of the attorneys, so they have a lot of action items and investigative requests to complete.
Q. And do you know how many investigators there are in St. Louis city, the St. Louis city office?
A. I believe four.
Q. And are any specially assigned to the juvenile court?
A. No.
MS. QUINN: Just one moment.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Okay. So at this time if it's okay, I'd like to talk a little bit about discovery.
A. Okay.
Q. Discovery in juvenile cases in particular. What are the ways in which a juvenile defender in Missouri -- or I'll -- and I keep saying juvenile defender, an attorney handling a juvenile case or a juvenile court case in Missouri, how did they seek discovery?
A. Through a discovery request.
Q. Okay. So you can make a request in writing?

Page 94

A. Yes.
Q. You can make an informal request?
A. Sure. Sure.
Q. Just ask for materials. Are there other means of gathering information, other discovery mechanisms in juvenile cases?
A. Are you asking through the legal officer or just in general?
Q. In general.
A. Sure. So you have your own ability to investigate a case. You can get releases signed from the youth or their family to obtain school records. You can have the investigator go take pictures, interview witnesses yourself.
Q. Okay. So investigation versus discovery. Let me just talk about informal discovery.
A. Okay.
Q. Are you familiar with the informal discovery practice in St. Louis County?
A. Are you talking about the file?
Q. Yes.
A. Okay.
Q. The blue file.

Page 95

A. Sure. Sure.
Q. Whatever color it is.
A. Yes. So the practice was -- and I don't know if this is shifted over to the new building. When I was working in the old -- when I went to the old building they would say if you want the police reports go to a file room and pull out the police reports, make a copy yourself.
Q. Okay. And the practice then in St. Louis County was to obtain whatever was in the file, but not to make a formal written request; is that right?
A. I don't know that specific instance. We always made a written formal request.
Q. And that's the city office was trained to always make a written request for discovery?
A. Yes. And that was E filed.
Q. And --
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. That was E filed.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) What about outside the city of St. Louis, do you know if the attorneys across the state handling juvenile cases are routinely making written discovery requests?
A. I don't know the answer to that.

Page 96

Q. Are you familiar with Rule 25 of the Rules of Criminal Procedure in Missouri?
A. I am.
Q. And how that might impact or come into play in a juvenile case?
A. Well, sure. There is a Supreme Court rule, I don't know the exact rule, but it says that Supreme Court Rule 25, discovery applies to all juvenile cases.
Q. Okay. Are you aware of whether across the state all juvenile practitioners are aware of their ability to access discovery under both Rule 25 and the rules of juvenile procedure?
A. I don't know that.
Q. Are you aware of whether the prosecutors or legal officers on the other side are aware that they have duties to turn over materials beyond informal discovery under the juvenile rules?
A. I'm not aware of that.
Q. What about Brady materials? Do you personally make requests for Brady materials in your cases in juvenile court?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know if all of the defenders across the state who handle juvenile cases are doing so?

Page 97

A. I don't know.
Q. Do you know if it is the practice of legal officers or juvenile prosecutors to turn over such discovery, Brady discovery?
A. I don't know.
Q. How about depositions? Tell us about the use of depositions in your practice.
A. Sure. So if I believe that I need to depose a witness, I will make a request again through an E-Num request, identify how much money I think it will cost to depose a witness and then that goes to -- to the district defender to approve or deny.
Q. And so every time you need to take a deposition it comes out of the sort of state's budget for the public defender generally?
A. I don't know what budget it comes out of.
Q. But you're not making a request to the court directly?
A. I am not.
Q. And you said when you determine that the deposition is appropriate. The right to depose witnesses exists the same in juvenile cases as it does in adult criminal cases, correct?

A. Absolutely.
Q. On average how -- how many depositions would you say that you take in the course of a month?
A. Gosh, I -- I can't speak specifically. Not -- not more than ten.
Q. Okay. And in -- would you say you're taking depositions in every case?
A. No.
Q. Half the cases?
A. Probably not.
Q. A quarter of the cases?
A. Maybe.
Q. And do you have a sense of the practice across the state for people handling juvenile cases?
A. I don't.
Q. What about in certification matters, do you take depositions precertification?
A. Generally, no. But there have been occasions, yes, that I have taken depositions.
Q. And so in certification hearings -- well, I'll hold off on that question. Shifting from discovery and investigation to social workers, how many social workers are employed by the public defender system statewide, if you know?

A. I don't.
Q. Are there any written policies and procedures relating to the use of social workers in juvenile cases?
A. I don't know of any.
Q. What about policies or procedures relating to requesting social workers to assist you with those matters?
A. I don't know of any.
Q. Do you have a social worker assigned in St. Louis city -- well, to the St. Louis city office at all?
A. Yes.
Q. How many social workers?
A. One.
Q. And so safe to say that person's handling all cases, not just juvenile cases?
A. That is correct.
Q. Do you feel like there -- there then is a limit on your ability to access social work support for your juvenile matters?
A. Yes.
Q. Is it -- would you say it is -- is it safe to say that every juvenile case could benefit from the support of a social worker?

A. Absolutely.
Q. Are you able to do that?
A. No.
Q. And you -- again St. Louis city is the best office across the state when it comes to providing juvenile-specific defense services?
A. I don't -- I don't know that -- if it -- if it is the best, but we definitely do our best to provide adequate representation, yes.
Q. What about support staff, let's say paralegals, someone to review documents, or other kinds of attorney support services? What -- what kind of support do you have for that work?
A. Sure. I have one legal assistant who helps with that -- that sort of work.
Q. And is the legal assistant assigned to you and you alone?
A. No.
Q. Who does that legal assistant work for?
A. She has several other attorneys that she works for and with.
Q. And how many legal assistants are there for the city of St. Louis office?
A. I believe there are six total.

Page 101

Q. And they handle such things as writing letters, making copies, reviewing documents?
A. Potentially depending on what the attorney requests.
Q. And are -- do you feel like you're sufficiently supported administratively in your work?
A. Yes.
Q. In terms of support staff, social workers, investigators, are they provided with any training specifically for juvenile matters?
A. No.
Q. How about interpreters? Does the state public defender system have any interpreters on staff?
A. No, but we can hire them.
Q. Tell us about what that process looks like.
A. It's the same for a deposition or an expert. You have to do an -- an action item or an E-Num request -- I'm sorry, an E-Num request, and you have to encumber money, talk to the interpreter and then make a request to the boss.
Q. And the interpreter would -- you could access an interpreter for in-office meetings let's say with family members who don't speak Spanish?

A. Yes.
Q. Or don't speak English, but speak Spanish?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you worked with family who are non-English speaking but used family or others to serve as an informal interpreter for your work?
A. I have not.
Q. Never?
A. No.
Q. What about when sending letters or materials to families that are non-English speaking, how does that work?
A. So we have a translator, we can hire a translator to translate police reports, write letters, those things.
Q. And do they do that as a matter of course?
A. What do you mean by -- when you say --
Q. In every case where there's an issue of a non-English speaker, does every case have a translator and interpreter to translate every document for -- for the family?
MS. SHIPMA: You're talking about juvenile cases?

Page 103

MS. QUINN: Juvenile cases, yeah.
A. In my practice, yes. I don't know about everywhere else.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) So I mentioned earlier we'd come back to certification. Can you talk a little bit more about certification and why it's such an important process?
A. Certification is basically the death penalty for youth. So when a child is certified, they are forever going to be in the adult system and they could be potentially facing very long prison sentences and so it is important to focus a lot of efforts on certification hearings.
Q. We talked earlier already about there are mandatory certification matters or discretionary certification matters. Do you approach either one of those differently?
A. No.
Q. Do you know about practices across the state in terms of if they're approached differently or not?
A. I don't.
Q. Are you aware of what the burden of proof is in a certification case?

Page 104

A. Oh, gosh. That's a really good question. I would have to review the statute. I believe -- I mean, it's up to the judge, and I don't -- but I don't know the -- I can't recall at this time the burden of proof.
Q. And have you not ever challenged the fact that there is no burden of proof listed in the statute for certification cases?
A. I have not.
Q. What about weight of the evidence with regard to elements under the statute?
A. So -- so I have not challenged that, but I recognize that the court is able to give what weight it will to any of the doctors.
Q. What about proof presented by the defense in a certification case? In your practice, what kind of proof do you try to or tend to present in a certification case?
A. So with regard to the first three factors, challenges to the actual incident itself. So I've put on witnesses, I've put on police officers, potential witnesses for the case, introduced documents with regard to challenging whether or not there's probable cause for the case to proceed.

With regard to the next seven factors I've put on statisticians through the court to talk about the racial disparity on certification. I've put on family members to talk about the sophistication and maturity of the child.

I've put on case managers who have -- and residential placement managers who've talked about the services that a child has received. I have also put on care and protection individuals, so case managers, I've put on guardian ad litems, and then expert witnesses as well, psychologists and the like who talk about a child's history.

Q. And are you aware of how that practice compares with the practice of your colleagues across the state who might be handling juvenile certification cases?

A. I do not.

Q. What about the proof that is presented on the other side, proof from the juvenile officer? What is your experience in terms of what they present?

A. They traditionally and typically present the testimony of the deputy juvenile officer.

Q. Do they usually present any other testimony?

Page 106

A. Not usually.

Q. And that's based in your experience across the five different counties you practiced in, yes?

A. And I guess there -- there have been victims who have testified regarding the impact of the -- the crime.

Q. Okay. But in terms of the elements under the statute for certification, it's almost always only the juvenile officer?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever challenged that practice?

A. Tell me what you mean by that.

Q. Based on the lack of expertise or the lack of ability of that person to be a competent witness in that respect.

A. Sure. Through cross-examination, but not through formal motion.

Q. Have you ever deposed that deputy juvenile officer before they testified at a certification hearing?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you know if your colleagues ever depose deputy juvenile officers before a certification hearing?

A. I do not know.

Q. How long if you know do most certification hearings last in the State of Missouri?

A. I don't know.

Q. Are you aware of the standing practice in St. Louis County of certification hearings taking one hour or less?

A. No, I'm not aware of that.

Q. Have you ever had a certification hearing in St. Louis County that took longer than an hour?

A. Yes.

MS. SHIPMA: Sarah, your voice is getting softer.

THE WITNESS: Yes. Sorry.

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Are you aware beyond St. Louis city of what happens with a child's case upon certification? If it's a -- if it's a public defender case, what happens with that kiddo?

A. Beyond St. Louis city?

Q. Yeah.

A. So I can just talk generally about what happens. So if a child is certified, then the prosecutor has to decide whether or not they're going to issue the case. If they decide to issue the case, they pick the child up from the detention center and transport them to the adult jail. And then the child either retains that counsel if they are providing that representation, if the public defender is providing the representation or they have to apply for services.

Q. Are you aware of the practice generally -- so in -- in what percentage of cases does the initial assigned defender stay on the case postcertification?

A. I do not know.

Q. Are you aware of cases where children between the moment of certification and when they next appear in front of a judge in adult court are essentially without counsel?

A. Am I aware of specific instances? No, I'm not.

Q. Based on your understanding of the practices across the state, is it your understanding that much work is happening between certification and when the case is next presented to a judge?

A. Work done by the defender?

Q. By the defender.

Page 109

A. I can't speak to that. I don't know.
Q. That too would be an important window for working on a case, yes?
A. Absolutely.
Q. What about motions to transfer a case from adult court back to juvenile court? Are you familiar with that practice?
A. I am.
Q. And it's -- do you have any -- have you done it yourself?
A. So before the collateral representation from certification to adult court we had an attorney, Bill Marsh, who did those motions. So before we did the continuity of representation if a child was certified he would represent all the 17-year-olds. So yes, he has done those motions and I am currently working on a motion right now.
Q. And this is in St. Louis city?
A. That I am working on a motion, no, it's in St. Louis County.
Q. Okay. But -- so across the state, are you aware of how many times when a kid hits adult court a motion is filed to transfer them back to juvenile court?
A. I'm not aware.

Page 110

Q. Is -- is that a -- are you -- have you heard of that practice happening frequently?
A. I've heard of it happening, but I don't know how often.
Q. Let's talk a little bit about collateral consequences.
A. Sure.
Q. Can you tell us what collateral consequences of a prosecution, what that term means to you?
A. Sure. So collateral consequences would mean consequences of a child being adjudicated of an offense. They could include schooling, employment, college, immigration, military service. They impact all aspects of a child's life.
Q. And are you familiar with any case law relating to collateral consequences, United States Supreme Court or otherwise, about the duty of a defender and collateral consequences?
A. Yes, and as you're asking me this the motion -- the -- the case escapes me, but it is a case about immigration consequences.
Q. And are there statewide manuals or materials that lay out for defenders in MSPD's system what all the collateral consequences of a prosecution might be?
A. Of an adult prosecution?
Q. Yes.
A. I don't know.
Q. Have you ever seen any?
A. I've not seen a manual, no.
Q. What about for juvenile cases?
A. Sure. So we've been collaborating with the National Juvenile Defender Center to create a pamphlet for collateral consequences. So there have been drafts made, but there is no -- currently no pamphlet that is available to -- for distribution.
Q. And there has -- it hasn't been the practice in the past for juvenile defenders to be referring to such material then?
A. Correct.
Q. What about immigration consequences in particular since you've raised that? Do you have in the MSPD system an immigration consequences expert?
A. Sure. So I know there are attorneys who have practiced immigration law, so yes, we have the ability to reach out to them. I don't know if they would be deemed as an immigration law expert. But also we reach out to several different organizations in the city of St. Louis with regard to immigration questions.

Q. Okay. So just focusing on kind of statewide resources and practices, what is the practice, policy or procedure for finding out about immigration consequences or accessing an immigration expert?
A. You're -- you're asking what MSPD's policy is?
Q. Yeah, uh-huh.
A. I don't know what the policy is for accessing. I can only speak to what -- what I -- what we do --
Q. Uh-huh.
A. -- in the city.
Q. Before we get to the city, these folks you'd mentioned, you mentioned maybe there's some people who happen to be public defenders who also happen to in their past life do immigration work.
A. Sure.
Q. Do they have -- you know, are they designated the go-to for immigration questions?
A. Not that I'm aware.
Q. Do you know when they last practiced immigration law?
A. I believe within a year is the -- is the person that I'm thinking of.

Page 113

Q. And where is that person?
A. She is in the -- now in the St. Charles office.
Q. And so like did an e-mail go out that said, hey, we now have an immigration expert in St. Charles, everyone should access this person if they have immigration questions?
A. No.
Q. And you mentioned sort of differently or separately in St. Louis city you guys have some practices, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And you mentioned some maybe local immigration attorneys who currently practice immigration law that you access?
A. Yes.
Q. What does that look like? What do you do?
A. So we call the -- the offices, so it's -- there is the St. Louis Catholic legal society, I think it's part of SLU, and then there's also the MICA Project. So we reach out to the attorneys, ask them for advice on immigration issues.

Page 114

Q. Are you aware in the rural counties what the practices are along those lines?
A. I do not know.
MS. QUINN: You want to take a break or should I keep going?
MS. SHIPMA: How much more have you got?
MS. QUINN: I'm on 11 of 14.
MS. SHIPMA: Keep going.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) All right. Let's talk about motions practice a little bit if that's okay.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. So just like in adult criminal cases, juvenile defendants or respondents can file pretrial motions, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Can you share with us just a range of the kinds of motions that -- that could get filed in a juvenile prosecution case by the defense lawyer?
A. Sure. Motions to suppress statements, motions to suppress evidence, motions to dismiss, motions to exclude witnesses, motions to exclude hearsay. Could be motions to dismiss based on specific adolescent -- so there's not specific -- you know, adolescents could not have this type of intent or could not form this type of intent. Motions to dismiss based on the conflicted system.

Page 115

Q. Okay. And do you have a sense statewide what the motion practice is like in juvenile court cases?
A. No, I do not.
Q. In the conversations you're having with fellow attorneys who are handling juvenile cases, is it your sense that they're all filing motions that are necessary in a case?
A. I think they want to file all motions that are necessary in a case and that is where I come in to help them talk that through.
Q. And so are you able to do the work for them to -- to file those motions?
A. What do you mean by that?
Q. Well, it sounded like there's an impediment to their ability to do it, and so I'm just trying to understand what that means.
A. So -- so attorneys will reach out and ask, so for example, if it's a sex case, what types of motions you would file. So I help with case law, provide relevant case law and talk through potential motions that could be filed. I'm not writing the motions for them.

Q. Okay. And is there any let's say resource, you know, a motion section or a group of law students who busy public defenders could access to write motions they would not otherwise have the time to write?
A. I think it depends on your jurisdiction if you have a law school that's available and that there are interns that are working through the public defender system.
Q. But it's not the case in every county?
A. I don't believe so, no.
Q. How about in St. Louis city cases, are you -- are you filing all the motions that -- that we just talked about?
A. I -- I am trying to, yes.
Q. And is there any impediment to your ability to do so in every case?
A. I think time is an impediment.
Q. Let's focus specifically on a motion I don't think you mentioned, and that is a detention review motion. Are you familiar with what that is?
A. I am.
Q. Can you explain what that means?
A. Sure. So every 30 days when a child is detained the judge or commissioner has to review whether or not there are changed circumstances and whether the child should remain in detention.

Q. Okay. So that's by statute what the court does automatically, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. In St. Louis city does everyone kind of get around the table in 30 days to review that situation?

A. No.

Q. Isn't it the case that in St. Louis city as well as around the state the judges are making those reviews behind closed doors and then issuing an order about whether the child remains detained or gets released?

A. Yes.

Q. And so in terms of motions, a defense motion to review detention status, that is different from that statutory process we just talked about?

A. Correct.

Q. So what is a detention review motion that might get filed by a -- by a juvenile defender?

A. So if the defender believes that there are a change of circumstances pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 127, then they could file that motion and have the detention reviewed and ask for the release of the child.

Q. Is there anything else that might enable a juvenile defender to seek a review of the detention status other than change in circumstances?

A. Not that's coming to my mind.

Q. In terms of filing detention review motions, is that a regular part of your practice?

A. Not a regular part of my practice I would say, no.

Q. How many detention review motions do you file in a month?

A. Well, there are not very many children detained right now, so I would say right now I haven't filed any in the past couple of months due to the low numbers in detention.

Q. Through the course of your career since 2009 how many detention review motions do you think you've filed?

A. I have no idea.

Q. More than ten?

A. Probably.

Q. More than 20?

A. Probably.

Q. More than a hundred?

A. No, probably not.

Page 119

Q. Fewer than 50?

A. I would say probably between 50 and a hundred.

Q. Okay. What about your colleagues across the state, do you know if they are filing detention review motions?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. Do you know if they've been trained to file detention review motions?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. What about a motions bank or resource that folks can go to beyond calling you for motions, what's that look like?

A. I know that we have a motions bank in our system, and so if there are juvenile-specific motions they could access them there.

Q. How robust is that juvenile motions part of your motions bank would you say?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you not been to it?

A. Not recently, no.

Q. Okay. You've talked about your new role as kind of statewide juvenile defense and I want to call it not coordinator, but --

A. The director of juvenile defense and policy.

Q. And as part of that job or new role, do you observe -- as part of your role to go and observe people in court?

A. So I think that will be eventually. I'm handling my own cases, so I have been working on all my own cases. So I have not observed anyone in court statewide.

Q. And to date there's been no practice of anyone with specific juvenile expertise going into the courts to make sure attorneys are doing what they ought to do with regard to juvenile cases?

A. I can't speak to that, no.

Q. And you mentioned that folks might call you up and ask questions as they're working on a motion. Do you review draft motions?

A. I have for attorneys that I've worked with in my office, but I've not for other attorneys.

Q. Before you had this position, did anyone hold this position?

A. No.

Q. What was Karen Craft's role as a -- a kind of juvenile go-to person in the State of Missouri?

A. Sure. So Karen had several roles, including dealing with capital offenses. I believe she was kind of a go-to for that as well, but she -- she went to the legislature, she answered juvenile questions, and she served as someone who was well versed in juvenile law. So I would say yes, she -- she was somebody who like me knew juvenile law.

Q. Did Karen ever handle a juvenile case in her practice?

A. I think she did. I don't think in later years she did, but yes, I believe she handled juvenile cases.

Q. So even though she wasn't practicing in juvenile court, she was the go-to for people to seek advice about juvenile matters for the last several years?

A. She and Mary Fox and myself also.

Q. But statewide Mary Fox is not designated?

A. No.

Q. Were you aware of Karen Craft reviewing motions that were filed by anyone handling juvenile cases?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. Are you aware of Karen Craft doing any trainings for juvenile practice around the state?

Page 122

A. So she was involved in the trainings that I referred to that have happened in the past couple of years. She has since retired, so I don't -- I don't remember what year she retired, but she has not -- was not present for this year's training.

Q. And is it safe to say if you know that Karen Craft was put in that position perhaps in reaction to some of the findings of the -- of NJDC and the Department of Justice?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. Was there anyone in Karen Craft's role before Karen Craft?

A. I don't know.

Q. Since you've been with the public defender system, have there ever been specialized juvenile defender offices?

A. So I was an intern in 2007 and 2008 and I know that the juvenile youth advocacy units were present then, but I -- I -- since I've been practicing as an attorney, no.

Q. Can you tell us more about what that looked like then in comparison to now?

A. I -- actually, I don't know what it looked like. I just know that they were present in the public defender system. I did not interact with any of the attorneys or go watch any hearings while there were youth advocacy units.

Q. I'm sorry. So I misunderstood. I thought you were intern with the specialized units.

A. Nope. I interned with --

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) The specialized units. So is it safe to say the specialized juvenile defense units have been dismantled?

A. Yes.

Q. And that all of the cases that previously were handled by specially trained juvenile defenders have been dumped into the regular system?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to turn to the question of caseloads and turning away cases.

A. Okay.

Q. Are you aware of any policies or procedures that allow for Missouri public defenders who are handling any kind of matter to turn away a case if their -- if their caseload has become excessive?

A. You said policies and procedures?

Page 124

Q. Yeah, what is the practice?

A. There is not a practice. I mean, there is a statute that the legislature created, but at this time I do not believe that there is a practice --

Q. Are you --

A. -- statewide.

Q. I apologize. I was stepping on your words there.

Are you aware of any recent correspondences or communications from Michael Barrett around turning away cases or indicating that your caseload has become too high to accept new matters?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us about what's going on and what your understanding is of the current situation?

A. Sure. So an attorney, Mr. Hinkebein was disciplined by the office of chief disciplinary counsel for failing to do his -- his due diligence in representing clients, and so some circuits, including Columbia have -- or not circuits, some district defenders have turned away -- determined and their attorneys have determined that they're going to turn away cases due to their ethical obligations.

Q. And are you familiar as you sit here with, you know, which districts or which offices are turning away cases now or seeking to turn away cases?

A. The only one I know of specifically is Columbia.

Q. What about juvenile matters, are you hearing anything about attorneys turning away juvenile appointments or juvenile respondents who are seeking assistance?

A. I -- I am not aware.

Q. Is there any special follow policy or special practice for those kinds of cases to -- to turn them away or seek to close the spigot if you will on those?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Have you ever turned away a case because your caseload was too high, a case for a juvenile?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you handled cases of juveniles while you feel like your caseload was too high for you really to -- to manage effectively?

Page 126

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with this new pro bono practice group in the city of St. Louis with private lawyers and private firms handling cases?

A. I am.

Q. What do you know about that?

A. It's called the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel, and it is private firms who have offered to take cases on pro bono.

Q. Are you aware of whether they are handling any juvenile court cases?

A. They are not.

Q. So they're doing nothing to alleviate the pressures on those who are handling juvenile cases or to -- I'll just say to handle juvenile cases?

A. They are not handling cases in the city of St. Louis, no.

Q. Okay. We talked earlier about both the Spangenberg report and the NJDC report indicating that there are high percentages of youth in the State of Missouri who are in need of juvenile defense representation, but are not being provided with counsel; is that fair to say?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. I'd like to take a look at another document. I think this is the last one. Exhibit 29.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 29, Exhibit 1 of complaint, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Okay. And I've marked it as Exhibit 29 for purposes of our deposition, but as you see, it has a cover indicating Exhibit 1 because it is Exhibit 1 in our complaint. Looking at this document, do you recognize it?

A. I -- I don't recognize -- I mean, I know what it is, but I've -- I've not looked through it.

Q. And so in terms of knowing what it is, can you tell us what your understanding is of this document?

A. It is the two -- 2016 fiscal year annual report.

Q. And it's fair to say that the public defender system each year produces a report kind of providing an outline of the services it's provided?

A. Yes.

Q. And taking a look together at page 23 of this report, there is a chart. Are you familiar with this chart?

Page 128

A. I'm not.

Q. You see here that there's case type 50-N, 50-S, 50-V. Do you know what those numbers and letters mean?

A. So those are the case types for juvenile nonviolent, juvenile status and juvenile violent offenses.

Q. And so is that your own system, kind of you designate things with these numbers and letters internally to make clear what kind of case or matter it is?

A. Yes.

Q. And looking together at these -- these numbers, it appears that in 2016 approximately 1,600 juvenile cases were opened by the public defender system. Is that your understanding of how we should read this report?

A. Without doing the math, I can tell you that there were 912 nonviolent, 81 status, and 625 violent.

Q. Okay. And so that would be like the world of juvenile cases that the MSPD system handled in this year?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of how many actual juvenile cases, juvenile court delinquency cases there were in the State of Missouri in 2016?

A. I'm not aware.
Q. Do you have any sense of like what percentage this is of the world of juvenile cases?
A. I'm not.
Q. And so this -- I'll -- I'll take a guess, around about 1,600 cases handled by the Missouri public defender system for juveniles, are you aware of how frequently in those 1,600 matters defenders might handle pre-petition Miranda engagements?
A. I don't know.
Q. In your own practice, how frequently have you handled a child being Mirandized pre-petition?
A. Only a handful of times.
Q. So fewer than five times since 2009 you've been able to assist a child to --
A. Probably. Sorry.
Q. My fault. I got these long questions. Fewer than five times since 2009 you worked with a kid who's being Mirandized?
A. Probably.
Q. What about lineups? How many lineups have you personally covered for juveniles who are -- have been taken into custody by police?

Page 130

A. The practice in the city of St. Louis is they call me whenever there is going to be a lineup. So probably around 25 I would say lineups I've gone to. Certainly less than 50.
Q. And this is since 2009?
A. Yes.
Q. And what is your understanding of that practice statewide for juveniles?
A. I don't know the answer to that.
Q. And is it your sense based on everything you know that it is probably far less across the state in terms of juvenile defenders showing up to be with you during lineups?
A. Yes.
MR. MOORE: Also object to the foundation, but the answer is in the record, so go ahead.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) You talked earlier about diversion being a process where a youth might be essentially interrogated by government agents, the court staff about an allegation; is that fair to say?
A. Well, I mean diversion is something different than a child being interrogated about the action. So diversion would be the process in which a petition is not filed, and then services are provided for the kid. If they are trying to do an informal adjustment conference that's when they could potentially question the kid about what happened.

Q. Okay. And I think you had raised earlier on this dilemma or problem of -- of children going to diversion conferences or informal adjustment conferences without counsel and then being asked about the facts of the case.
A. Yes.
Q. And that was a -- a problematic practice flagged by the Department of Justice, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And now that practice has changed it seems to be in St. Louis County with the special attorney present to assist there?
A. As well as in the DJO guidelines.
Q. Okay.
A. And standards, yes.
Q. Has -- do you think across the state that the -- the juvenile -- the defenders handling juvenile cases, are they showing up in every county to assist children in -- in diversionary meetings?

A. Not that I'm aware of.
Q. What about violation of probation proceedings? In the 1,600 matters that we just talked about for 2016, do you have any sense of what number might have involved violation of probation hearings?
A. I -- I don't know the exact number, but based on looking at the table, I would assume that those would be the juvenile status because they would be -- you know, I don't -- yeah, I -- sorry.
Q. Yeah. I may be asking you something that you -- you -- don't have the data for --
A. Yeah.
Q. -- but just speaking generally, in a juvenile case just as in an adult case, a young person can face a motion seeking to violate their probation?
A. Yes.
Q. Separately, differently, there's something called a probation review hearing, yes?
A. Correct.
Q. As a matter of course, young people come back to court to see a judge relating to their compliance with probation?

Page 133

A. That is correct.
Q. When there are violation of probation hearings, how often are you personally able to handle those cases in St. Louis city?
A. I handle all of the motions to modify.
Q. And what about status, probation status hearings in St. Louis city?
A. Do you mean review hearings?
Q. Review hearings, right.
A. I do not go to the review hearings.
Q. So children are appearing in St. Louis city before a judge to talk about how they're doing on probation sometimes without an attorney with them?
A. Yes.
Q. What about across the state? Do you have an understanding of the practice for juveniles in other districts with such matters?
A. Sure. I know that in St. Louis County attorneys are attending the review hearings, but I don't know anywhere else.
Q. What about drug court? Are you familiar with something called drug court?
A. I am.
Q. What is that?

Page 134

A. So there are -- is an adult drug court and there's also a juvenile drug court. A -- in juvenile drug court a child would have to admit to the allegations before going to drug court. If they successfully complete the term then their petition and the allegations are dismissed and the -- and the child is free to go.
Q. And that process moving from that admission of guilt to the dismissal is a fairly lengthy process; is that fair to say?
A. It can be, yes.
Q. How long can it take?
A. It can some -- sometimes take over a year.
Q. All right. And during that year these children are appearing in the juvenile drug court before the judge to talk about their compliance, yes?
A. They are.
Q. And they might be asked about drug use?
A. Yes.
Q. They might be asked incriminating questions?
A. Yes.
Q. How frequently are you appearing in the

Page 135

St. Louis city drug court?
A. Not -- not as frequently as I would like to. So I appear -- I used to appear every Friday, that's when the drug court docket is, but I haven't been able to go recently.
Q. And what about across the state, do you have any sense of whether defenders are covering drug court appearances for youth?
A. I don't know if there are other drug courts for juveniles across the state.
Q. Okay. And what about other postdispositional advocacy on behalf of youth? For instance, youth who are in the division of youth services or who want to aside from direct appeals challenge the practice of their attorney, challenge the -- something relating to the -- the representation they received. What does that look like across the state?
A. I don't know.
Q. Have you provided any representation to any children who have been placed in DYS?
A. No, I have not.
Q. And -- and what about appeals from juvenile cases? Is it safe to say that juveniles like adults have the right to appeal a juvenile court finding?

A. Yes.
Q. What is the practice or policy across the state for informing youth of their right to appeal and what steps to take?
A. Sure. So I don't know what other individuals do. I can speak to what our practice is is --
Q. Okay. So before we get to your practice --
A. Sure.
Q. -- there's no manual, policy, procedure to ensure best practices around appeals being taken for young people statewide?
A. No.
Q. Okay. And then your practice?
A. Is to after a child is adjudicated speak with them about what their right is to appeal and talk with them about what that would entail, and then if they want to appeal, filing the notice of appeal and sending it to our juvenile appellate person.
Q. Okay. And you mentioned you do this after there is an adjudication for a young person, yes?

Page 137

A. And -- yes. And disposition.
Q. Okay. So after a case is resolved with adjudication and disposition or in grown-up speak finding of guilt and sentence, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. You do that in cases where there has been a trial; is that right?
A. That's correct.
Q. What about in all of your plea cases?
A. No.
Q. Do you not in the -- as a matter of course speak to children who have pleaded guilty and had their cases disposed of or had disposition tell them about their right to appeal?
A. No.
Q. Why not?
A. That's a good question. I don't know.
Q. What is a child's right to appeal following a guilty plea?
A. So I can tell you what -- what an adult -- adult has PCR rights. I don't know that there is case law in Missouri about whether a child has postconviction rights.
Q. But I mean a direct appeal following the plea of guilty and then an imposition of what grown-ups would call a sentence.

A. Correct.
Q. Is there no direct appeal right from that?
A. I believe there is, but I have -- I have not talked to a child about that.
Q. Do children waive their right to appeal when they take a plea?
A. No.
Q. How many appeals were filed for juveniles across the State of Missouri last year if you know?
A. I don't.
Q. How many appeals were filed by the city of St. Louis office or request to appeal?
A. In 2016? Probably less than five.
Q. Okay. Shifting gears a little bit, so I -- do you live in the city or county?
A. I live in St. Louis County.
Q. Okay. But you're aware of much of what's unfolding in the city of St. Louis around the protests relating to the Stockley verdict, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. Some is happening in the county of St. Louis, but some is happening in the city, yes?

Page 139

A. Yes.
Q. Are you aware of how many arrests have taken place in the city of St. Louis since you work there relating to protesters?
A. Hundreds.
Q. And are you familiar of any -- familiar with any offer by our attorney general Josh Hawley to the city prosecutor Kim Gardner with regard to those cases?
A. I -- I'm not aware.
Q. Would it surprise you to hear that Josh Hawley has offered Kim Gardner assistance to help prosecute those protest cases in the city of St. Louis?
MR. MOORE: I'll object to -- you can go ahead.
MS. SHIPMA: I was going to object to this. I mean, she was designated to talk about juvenile matters.
MS. QUINN: Yes, uh-huh.
MS. SHIPMA: And -- and this seems --
MS. QUINN: It's a foundation to -- I'll get -- I'll go directly to it then.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay.
MS. QUINN: That's fine.

Page 140

Q. (By Ms. Quinn) Has -- has your office, the city of St. Louis's public defender office received any offer of assistance from Josh Hawley's office to defend matters?
A. Not that I'm aware of.
Q. No post-Stockley verdict letters have come to you to assist -- to offer assistance to you or your colleagues in defending any cases in the city of St. Louis?
A. No letters have come to me personally.
Q. Is there anything else you think I should ask you about that I've not asked you about relating to juvenile practices, procedures, and policies for the Missouri public defender system?
A. There is nothing that I can think of. There is one correction, though, that I would like to make, which is I think that I probably have done less than 20 of the motions to release the youth. You were talking about the --
Q. Detention review motions?
A. Yes. Yeah.
Q. Fair enough. Fair enough. So before we wrap up, you did indicate earlier that -- that your caseload and -- and some of your responsibilities, the just amount of cases and responsibilities that you have has prevented you from doing everything you think is necessary in at least some juvenile cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us more about that?

A. So I can tell you that I've been practicing juvenile for three years, specifically juvenile. When I first started I handled both Jefferson County conflicts, adult conflicts as well as juvenile cases. That was too much. That was a lot of moving parts of traveling and so I believe that there were youth that I could have impacted more effectively during that time.

Also, I believe that while my caseload is significantly lower and I have been able to do a lot of work with regard to youth, I think that time is a big issue. So doing all of the detention hearings and ensuring that each client receives the effective representation, I think that sometimes the caseloads are too high to be doing every single thing that I would like to do.

MS. QUINN: Okay. I have nothing further.

MR. MOORE: Yeah, so I mean, do you want to keep going?

Page 142

VIDEOGRAPHER: Do you want to go off the record?

MR. MOORE: Sure.

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 11:43 a.m.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 11:51 a.m.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:

Q. Good afternoon. Could you please state your full name for the record with the middle name spelled out as well?

A. Sure. My name is Sarah with an H, middle name Kennedy, K-E-N-N-E-D-Y, and my last name is Johnson, J-O-H-N-S-O-N.

Q. Okay. Sarah, my name is Justin Moore. I'm here for the State of Missouri and also now for Governor Greitens.

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Mr. Moore) So my name is Justin Moore. I'm here on behalf of the State of Missouri and also for Governor Greitens. And my entry was filed at the beginning of this deposition. So I'm just going to be going back to the beginning kind of filling in some of the blanks and asking you some follow-up questions if that's all right.

A. Sure.

Q. So we had discussed briefly your educational background and I believe you said you went to Saint Louis University for undergraduate. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And then also SLU Law?

A. Yes.

Q. And any additional schooling after that?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Now, when you went to Saint Louis University for your undergraduate degree, what was that degree in?

A. I got a bachelor's in political science and a mine -- and a minor in Spanish and I was a prelaw scholar.

Q. Okay. And did you have any particular specialization or focus when you went to the Saint Louis University School of Law?

A. Yes. I --

Q. And what was that?

A. Focused on criminal law.

Page 144

Q. Okay. So is it safe to say that you don't really have any particular specialization in like statistical analysis?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Okay. No particular specialized background in sociological studies or psychological studies of any kind?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And you don't have like a major in math or any kind of mathematical background other than general coursework in your undergraduate, right?

A. I do not.

Q. Okay. So then going back to some of these reports we were looking at earlier, I guess we'll start at the very beginning. So we can look at Plaintiff's Exhibit 21, the Spangenberg report I think is how it's been pronounced.

A. Okay.

Q. And I'm sorry, heard you say that you had reviewed this report prior to the deposition today?

A. No, I did not.

Q. So this is the first time you're seeing this report; is that correct?

Page 145

A. Yes.
Q. And so you wouldn't be able to assess with any degree of certainty whether the methodology or statistics that underpin this report were in any way accurate; is that right?
A. I cannot speak to that, no.
Q. Okay. And you had nothing to do with the production or creation of the data that they use in this report; is that right?
A. No.
Q. And you haven't taken any steps to verify that the findings of this report or that the numbers in this report are accurate, right?
A. I have not.
Q. So any commentary that you would make about the report or whether it's accurate or inaccurate it would just be kind of your personal opinion based on your review here today at the deposition; is that right?
A. Opinions with regard to --
Q. Whether the finding of the report are accurate or inaccurate or whether they I guess jibe with your own experience; it would strictly be based on your review of this report here today and your time as a public defender?

Page 146

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And do you know the people who wrote this report?
A. I do not.
Q. Have you ever spoken with any of those people?
A. I have not.
Q. Okay. I guess I would just have the same questions as to the other reports that were reviewed today. So we have Plaintiff's Exhibit Number 22.
A. Yes.
Q. And same general questions as to this report. To the extent there's any kind of analysis of data or, you know, collection of data, methodology, you wouldn't have any experience with those methods, would you?
A. With the methods that were used in this report?
Q. Right.
A. So the -- from my understanding the methods that were used in this report were the numbers from the Office of State Courts Administrator. So I don't know what -- how they collected that data, no. And with regard to the -- what if any data was collected with regard to the public defender system, no, I did not have anything to do with that either.

Q. Okay. And so you wouldn't know whether the data was accurate or inaccurate -- or inaccurate, correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. You haven't independently reviewed the data in any way?
A. I have not.
Q. Okay. And was this one that you say you had reviewed prior to the deposition today or had you not?
A. No, I -- I had reviewed that prior to the deposition.
Q. Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: That was affirmative, you had reviewed it?
THE WITNESS: I have, yes.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So the same questions as to Exhibit 23, so we're looking at the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division report of July 31st, 2015.
A. Okay.
Q. Again, for this one as to the methodology or research that it took to create this report, you are not personally aware of like the methodology that they utilized; is that right?

Page 148

A. I am not personally -- personally aware, no.
Q. And you didn't have anything to do with the collection of that data personally?
A. I did not.
Q. Do you know who wrote this report?
A. I don't know who wrote this report.
Q. Okay. And had you reviewed this report prior to the deposition today?
A. Yes, I have.
Q. Okay.
(WHEREIN, a discussion was held off the record.)
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I'm sorry, I may have asked this already, but as far as the data utilized in this report you wouldn't have any knowledge or understanding of like how they generated that data or collected that data; is that right?
A. I mean, I know the -- how they collect -- I mean, I know that they collected data from St. Louis County and through interviews through looking at case files and things like that, but I don't know how they then processed those into numbers.

(Court reporter interruption.)
A. Processed that into the numbers and the statistics that they used, correct. I was not present for that.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. And so as far as you know, these numbers could be accurate, inaccurate, you just don't know, right?
A. I don't know -- I have not reviewed the -- the statistical analysis of this, no.
Q. Okay. Okay. So now looking at Exhibit 26, that's the RubinBrown report.
A. Yes.
Q. And forgive me again I can't recall, had you seen this report prior to the deposition today?
A. No.
Q. So you hadn't reviewed it in any capacity, this is just the first time you've been presented with this report?
A. I -- I've seen portions of this report, but no, I have not read it page to -- from front to back.
Q. Okay. But again, you know, to the extent there's any data involved in the generation of this report, you wouldn't be able to give any kind of opinion as to whether the methodology was, you know, the right methodology to use or whether the numbers are accurate; is that right?

A. Yes, that is correct.
Q. Okay. And you don't know the people who generated this report, do you?
A. The -- the individuals?
Q. Right.
A. No, I do not.
Q. You never talked to those individuals before?
A. No, I did not.
Q. Okay. Now, the -- a number of questions have been asked about procedures in the St. Louis city office which is where I -- I mean, I think you operate out of, right?
A. Yes.
Q. But also as to other counties in the State of Missouri, right?
A. So the questions that were asked, yes, they were asked about this -- other counties as well, yes.
Q. Right. But you have not practiced in every county in Missouri, right?

Page 151

A. I have not practiced in every county, no.
Q. And in fact, earlier I think you said that it was five counties that you have practiced in, correct?
A. I don't know the exact number, but yes, I listed off those counties. Yes.
Q. Okay. Do you think there were counties that you practiced in that were not listed off earlier?
A. No. I just don't know the exact number. I -- I know the counties that I've listed off, but I don't know --
Q. Okay. No, that's totally fine.
A. Yeah.
Q. But those counties appear to be located generally around the St. Louis area, right?
A. That is correct, yes.
Q. So it's like Jefferson County and St. Louis County, things of that nature, correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. So you wouldn't really have any idea about what's going on, for example, on the -- on the other side of the state, those counties and those offices; is that right?

A. So I've corresponded with individuals across the state, but I don't know the daily ins and outs, no, of what happens in each circuit.
Q. Okay. And when you say you corresponded, what do you mean exactly?
A. So if a attorney has a question about a juvenile matter, then they are directed to me.
Q. Okay. So has any attorney from, you know, some of those other counties have they ever sent you a list here -- here are policies that we have in our office and let's compare policies to the St. Louis city office? Have you ever --
A. No.
Q. And I'm sorry, the answer?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So as far as you know, they were asking about the daily policies and procedures and whether the offices across the State of Missouri do X or Y thing, you would not really have any knowledge as to what they are doing; is that right?
A. I do not have any knowledge.
Q. Okay. And that doesn't say anything about whether, you know, their policies are better or worse than St. Louis city, could go either way, you just simply don't know, correct?

Page 153

A. That is correct.
Q. Okay. Now, you were asked earlier about having to enter some time for the work that you were doing, right?
A. Yes.
Q. Tell me a little bit more about when that took place.
A. I don't know the exact year, but we were asked to start time logging.
Q. Okay.
A. And we were asked to keep our time in five-minute increments.
Q. Okay. And do you know whether it's typical in the legal profession to bill your time?
A. I know in the civil world that usually civil defendant attorneys do have to keep their time.
Q. Okay. But you say in the criminal world people don't usually bill their time in that manner?
A. No, I -- I don't -- I don't know what private attorneys do. I can't speak to what they do.
Q. Okay. You've only ever worked as an attorney at a public defender's office; is that right?

Page 154

A. That's correct.
Q. So you've never worked in private practice or in any other capacity on any other area of law, just the public defender's office?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Okay. There's been some discussion about the average time spent on cases. Do you remember -- do you recall that discussion?
A. Yes.
Q. Would you say that those numbers are not representative of every single case that you have before you?
MS. SHIPMA: I'm going to object. Which cases are you speaking about? Which averages?
Q. (By Mr. Moore) So I believe that there was a number thrown around the public defender has like four hours per a particular type of case.
MS. SHIPMA: That was 4.6 per juvenile case.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. So that's good. We can go with that. So 4.6 per juvenile case. Does that figure sound familiar?
A. Yes.

Page 155

Q. But that's not the amount of hours that you spend on each juvenile case, right?
A. I can't speak to each case, but each case is going to be different. So --
Q. Well, exactly, right? So I mean, each case has different needs and so some cases are going to get more hours and some are going to get less hours; is that fair?
A. I would hope that a juvenile case would not get less than 4.6 hours, but I -- I would definitely say yes, most of my cases get more than 4.6 hours.
Q. Right. I'm just generally speaking, though, so each case has different needs?
(Court reporter interruption.)
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. Generally speaking, each case has different needs, right?
A. Yes.
Q. So some cases are going to require way more than the 4.6 hours and you give those cases more than 4.6 hours, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And there are cases that sometimes require at 4.6 hours or maybe even less than 4.6 hours, right?

Page 156

A. They could potentially.
Q. Right. So when you're looking at like an average of the number of hours you spend on cases, that's not representative necessarily of how much you spend on every particular juvenile case, right?
A. You're asking if 4.6 is representative?
MS. SHIPMA: Of what she spends?
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Yeah. So for yourself personally, the 4.6 figure, basically an average is just an average, correct, it doesn't say how much you're spending on every single one of your cases?
A. That number of 4.6 is not indicative of the number of hours I spend on my cases, no.
Q. Okay. And you think you spend more than 4.6 on your cases probably?
A. I would say yes.
Q. Okay. So there's also been some discussion of the training that public defenders go through as it pertains to general public defender service and then also as to the juvenile-specific section. Do you recall that testimony?
A. Yes.
Q. I think you talked about there's like a conference that the public defenders go to each year?

A. With regard to adult or juvenile representation?
Q. I just remember you said there was some like statewide public defender conference that they go to; is that accurate or --
A. So there are -- there are conferences, but I don't know whether you're referring to juvenile or adults representation.
Q. I guess let me just kind of go through again, like is there an annual training of some kind?
A. Sure. So there is an annual spring training for all public defender attorneys and then we also put on a juvenile-specific training once a year.
Q. Okay. And tell me a little bit about the annual spring training. How long does that last and what goes on at those trainings?
A. It's a little bit less than a week. It's usually from a Tuesday to a Friday. And there is training on and CLE credit on any number of -- of issues.
Q. Okay. And how about the juvenile-specific training, what does that look like?

A. Sure. It's about the same, two to three days and it's training on specific juvenile issues.
Q. Okay. So it's your opinion that juvenile cases involve specific issues that are special to juvenile cases, correct?
A. Absolutely.
Q. And you testified that areas of knowledge would include like brain development and there are some other things as well, but that's a special area of knowledge that a juvenile attorney would require, right?
A. Yes.
Q. Now, do you think there are special areas of knowledge that other public defenders working in other areas of law would also require?
A. I definitely think there are other specialties or other subsets of criminal cases that an attorney could specialize in, yes.
Q. Okay. So like if somebody is handling murder cases they probably would be dealing with different specialized issues than, you know, the juvenile cases, right?
A. One would think so, yes.

Page 159

Q. Okay. And do you know whether, you know, any specific training materials are provided for those other subspecialties?
A. I -- I can't speak to that, no.
Q. Okay. So you're just not sure one way or another if they provide --
A. That's correct.
Q. Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: Sarah was provided to speak on juvenile matters, not the MSPD system as a whole.
MR. MOORE: Okay.
MS. SHIPMA: Those depositions were Wednesday.
MR. MOORE: Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) But in any event, as far as, you know, the juvenile-specific attorney materials you're provided, you could be being provided the same amount of materials as other public defenders with their specialties or more or less, you're just not sure I guess; is that right?
MS. QUINN: Objection, form of the question, vague. I just don't know what you're asking.
A. I don't either. I apologize. I have no idea what you're asking.

Page 160

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. So if there's discussion about, you know, if there's any juvenile-specific brochures or, you know, training materials provided regarding juvenile cases, do you recall those questions?
A. Yes.
Q. And so I believe you said that you weren't really aware of any and that you were working on a brochure of some kind at this time as well, amongst other testimony. Is that familiar?
A. The brochure that you're referring to is the collateral consequences brochure that I'm work -- we're collaborating with the National Juvenile Defender Center. So --
Q. Right.
A. Yes. So we are working --
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. National Juvenile Defender Center. I'm providing that to the state. But no, currently there is not a brochure on collateral consequences.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) And -- okay, very good. And as to juvenile-specific issues as well, I don't -- I think you said you weren't aware of any specific materials for juvenile cases that are provided to public defenders; is that right?

A. That is correct.
Q. Okay. But you're not sure whether that's typical of other specialities of the public defender's office as well; is that correct?
A. I -- I don't know.
Q. Okay. Because I mean, it could be that, you know, they do have materials or they don't have materials, you just don't know, you know about the juvenile arena only, right?
A. I -- I know about juvenile-specific, yes.
Q. Okay. But you know, attorneys that are hired by the public defender's office they've all gone to law school, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And they've all passed the bar exam?
A. Yes.
Q. Public defender's office do you have access to legal research materials of any kind?
A. Yes.
Q. And what are those legal research materials?
A. We have access to Westlaw.
Q. And as far as your Westlaw sub -- subscription goes, I mean, are there any significant limitations on it that you've noticed or do you pretty much have access to what you need to access?

Page 162

A. I -- I mean, I think that there -- would it be lovely to have all of -- access to the entire Westlaw subscription, absolutely, but I think that generally speaking I have access to the appropriate case law that I need to access.
Q. Okay. So generally you're able to access the materials that you need for your cases, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And also materials that you would need to apprise yourself of changes in the law, right?
A. With regard to Westlaw access?
Q. Or other research materials or avenues that are provided to you.
A. Yes, we are -- we -- we have the ability to find out what laws have changed, yes.
Q. Okay. And to learn about new areas of law that maybe you have been assigned to deal with, but have never dealt with before?
MS. QUINN: Objection as to form. I still don't know kind of what -- are you asking about her specifically, the system?

Page 163

MS. SHIPMA: Yeah.
MR. MOORE: I'm asking about the access to like legal research materials and whether they are --
MS. SHIPMA: For her --
MR. MOORE: -- adequate.
MS. SHIPMA: -- or for the entire system of attorneys?
MS. QUINN: Juvenile, not juvenile?
MR. MOORE: We're talking about for herself.
MS. SHIPMA: For herself, okay.
MR. MOORE: Right.
A. So you're asking if there's a new type of law that I need to have access to, do I have research materials?
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I'll just rephrase the question, I guess, right.
So you have been given access to Westlaw, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And are there other like legal research avenues or utilities that you can utilize?
A. I mean, we have interns that we can rely on to get access to documents that we need. I also can utilize resources such as the National Juvenile Defender Center to provide with documents. Yes, I mean, I have -- I have the ability to go outside of the -- of Westlaw and get legal research, yes.

Q. Okay. And is that how you trained yourself to be competent in the juvenile representation?
MS. SHIPMA: I object. This is -- you're assuming that she trained herself. She hasn't said that she trained herself.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Okay. So I guess I'll ask how -- whenever you started at the public defender's office you were not in the juvenile arena; is that right?
A. That's correct.
Q. How did you become competent and train to step into that arena?
A. Sure. So I think competence is something that you're always continuing to grow upon, so I think that -- I'm not saying that I have -- I'm completely competent in the area of juvenile law, but I have attend the National Juvenile Defender Center trainings for approximately the past five years, since 2012. I have also been

JTIP-certified. So I am certified to train others in juvenile law.

I have attended the JTIP summer academy, so I have myself been trained. I attend the juvenile trainings every year since the year 2013. And I help present at those trainings. I -- and I read and I -- I try to do my best to keep up with the new case law that comes through with regard to juvenile-specific issues.

Q. Okay. Okay. And would those same -- would those same avenues be available for other attorneys that are in your office who are looking to step into the juvenile arena as well?

A. Well, they would have to apply through our training division to go to the -- to the trainings. Just anyone can't go to the training. It -- it's costly, so you have to apply to do those trainings.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Of course, they are able to educate themselves on juvenile law -- law through case law and national standards. And then they can, yes, go to the trainings that are once a year.

Q. Okay. I also understand you testified earlier something about a motions bank; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me a little bit about the motions bank.

A. So it's a -- it's a area where defenders can go to look at motions for their cases.

Q. Okay. Tell me a little bit more. So is it like case-specific, do you pull up cases in there or are they like just a bank of here's a motion to dismiss and there's a bunch of examples? What does it look like, I guess?

A. It would not be case-specific in case there would -- are potential conflicts. I think it would be topic-specific.

Q. Okay. So you have this bank of motions and do you have any knowledge as to like how far back this motions bank goes?

A. I don't.

Q. Okay. Would you say there's like a voluminous amount of motions and examples inside the bank?

A. I can't speak to that.

Q. Okay. Would you say there's like an adequate amount of motions in the bank?

A. I can't speak to that.

Page 167

Q. Okay. Has there ever been a time when you went to the motions bank and were unable to find like a basic motion that you were just trying to utilize in your practice?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And so all the public defenders that deal with parole matters would have access to this motions bank?

MS. SHIPMA: That deal with what kind of matters?

MS. QUINN: I'm sorry, what?

MR. MOORE: The -- I think I said parole. The --

MS. QUINN: Yeah.

MR. MOORE: Did I say parole or did I say juvenile?

MS. QUINN: You did say parole.

THE WITNESS: Parole.

MR. MOORE: Okay. Sorry. So I'll strike that.

MS. QUINN: That's my other case.

MR. MOORE: Right. Right.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Juvenile matters. So would other attorneys working on juvenile matters have access to this motions bank?

Page 168

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So let me talk a little bit about the detention hearing aspect of this.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. I think you said earlier there was like a time constraint as it pertains to getting counsel -- separate counsel for every single juvenile who might be facing this detention hearing at the same time. Do you recall that conversation earlier?

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me a little bit about the time constraints. I think you said there's like a three-day period?

A. Correct. So from when the petition is filed until detention hearing, the detention hearing shall be heard within three days of that petition being filed.

Q. Okay. And so as far as, you know, the restrictions on getting counsel for -- conflicts counsel for these hypothetical juveniles, what are the -- is it simply a time constraint, there's no time to process these claims or what is preventing that from taking place in your opinion?

A. Well, sure. It's -- it's a number of things. It -- before we had to contract cases through Columbia the defenders who were taking these contract cases might have court. So three days' notice is not a lot of notice to give someone to then have to appear in court.

They could be in other juris -- they are in other jurisdictions, and so it is an impediment to have to come down and -- and do something at a specific time. So that is one of the constraints. The other constraint now is that in order to contract a case it has to go through Columbia and then Columbia needs to find the attorneys that are going to be representing those youth. So that is now the constraint. So three days is simply not enough time to be able to do that.

Q. So for instance, it sounds like it's just a quick turnaround with three days, and also there's just some administrative things that need to be gone through and it takes time; is that accurate?

MS. QUINN: Objection. That's not -- I would object to the form of the question as mischaracterizing her testimony.

MR. MOORE: Just a -- just a question. I guess can you read the question back?

Page 170

COURT REPORTER: Question: So for instance, it sounds like it's just a quick turnaround with three days, and also there's just some administrative things that need to be gone through and it takes time; is that accurate?

Q. (By Mr. Moore) I guess I can break it down a little simpler then. So as far as what is preventing counsel from being appointed for all these hypothetical juveniles at these detention hearings, I think you testified that it's one, a timing issue, the three days is kind of a quick turnaround; is that right?

A. It -- it's an issue for the attorneys who have to represent the children, the conflict -- the conflict attorneys. So they have other cases in other jurisdictions, and so three days is oftentimes not enough time for that attorney to then find coverage for the cases that they are dealing with.

Q. Right.

A. And the current clients that they have to represent.

Q. Okay. So that kind of sounds like a -- like a yes, it is like a timing thing, right, three days is not often enough time to give notice to the proper attorneys or to, you know, recruit the counsel, three days is just kind of quick; is that accurate?

A. It is very quick.

Q. On the other side of that you also said that there were some issues with getting the pieces in line or recruiting counsel, making sure their calendars were cleared, things of that nature; is that right?

A. So that was the first thing that you just -- that we just talked about. The second thing is that now we refer all cases that are conflicts through Columbia, okay? And so now Columbia has to then find all of the contract attorneys that are going to represent those youth. So then that -- that is an additional piece of time. And these are also attorneys who are representing other individuals and so they have time constraints and court hearings that they potentially have to attend as well.

Q. Okay. Do you know why it all goes through Columbia?

A. That is where we -- how we contract attorneys. Columbia is the main office.

Q. Okay. And do you have anything to do with that decision as to base it all in Columbia or how that administratively gets handled?

A. I have nothing to do with that.

Q. Okay. There was some discussion earlier about the use of experts in juvenile cases. Do you recall that conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. And so, you know, correct me if I'm wrong, but bottom line is you don't necessarily need an expert for every single case that comes your way; is that right?

A. I don't -- I don't think that's a bottom line. I think that each child comes to you as a unique and different circumstance and so would I love to have an expert to talk about adolescent brain development on every single child, yes. Do I have that ability, no.

Q. Okay. But you would agree that the type of experts that you need on a case would be dependent on the specifics of that particular case, right?

A. Absolutely.

Q. But in your opinion you would offer an expert in every single juvenile case about juvenile brain development?

A. Juvenile brain development or mitiga -- or mitigation or something to explain how a juvenile's intent for a certain type of case might be different than another, yes. Some form of expert, whether it be for disposition or adjudication, yes.

Q. Okay. Has there ever been a circumstance where you had requested experts be utilized in a case, but your request was denied?

A. No.

VIDEOGRAPHER: One moment, please. Can we go off the record for a second? We're going off the record at approximately 12:21 p.m.

(WHEREIN, a discussion was held off the record.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 12:22 p.m.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Thanks. I think the last question that we -- I asked you was whether you had ever been -- you had ever had your request for an expert in a case denied and I think your answer was no, that's never happened?

A. That's correct.

Q. Same question as to investigators in your cases, have you ever requested an investigator and had that request denied?

Page 174

A. No, I have not.

Q. Okay. There was some discussion earlier about like the number of depositions and motions that you filed in your cases. Do you recall those questions?

A. I do.

Q. Now, would you agree that the number of depositions and motions you file in a case are going to be highly dependent on the case itself and what's happening in that case?

MS. QUINN: Objection as to form, compound question.

A. So you asked about depositions, so yes, deposition -- it would depend on what kind of case it is. And then what was the other piece?

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Motions.

A. Motions. It would -- it would depend on the case, yes.

Q. Right. You -- you basically do what the case requires as far as taking depositions and filing motions, right?

A. I -- yes, at the time of -- that I am representing a youth, I do everything that I can to try to represent that youth to the best of my ability.

Page 175

Q. All right. And so there's also some discussions about like social workers on cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know if there are any like ethical requirements that you utilize social workers on your cases?

A. Ethical requirements imposed upon myself?

Q. Right.

A. I don't know of any.

Q. How about any like legal or statutory requirements for social workers on your cases?

A. I don't know of any.

Q. Are you aware of any constitutional requirements that you util -- you utilize social workers on your cases?

A. No, I do not believe that there is a constitutional requirement that requires me to use a social worker.

Q. Okay. So you were also asked about support staff earlier. Do you remember that conversation?

A. I do.

Q. And I think you did end up stating that you felt like you were adequately supported with the support staff that you currently have; is that right?

A. Yes, with -- with her current duties. Would I like her to do more, absolutely, but with the duties that I give her, I believe that I am adequately assisted.

Q. Right. Very good. And there was a question about whether your staff received a special instruction as to parole matters -- or sorry, not parole. Juvenile matters. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. But as I understand the task that the staff are engaging in include like typing up letters, right?

A. Well, we don't normally do many letters because the youth are either detained or we're -- we're calling them on the phone. So letters is not necessarily juvenile-specific.

Q. Okay. I mean, do you feel that the staff would need juvenile-specific training in order to perform their duties?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And in what way would they need the additional training?

A. They need to know the rules and the policies and procedures with regard to juvenile court. They need to know that the individuals that we're dealing with are different than the adults. So a call from a youth from a facility is -- is going to need some very quick attention. They need to know about filing practices. They need to know about timelines and deadlines. Juvenile cases go very quickly and so they need to understand the urgency with which we deal with juvenile cases.

Q. And you've worked on adult criminal cases as well, right?

A. I have.

Q. And are there deadlines for criminal cases that involve adults as well?

A. Yes.

Q. And you also field phone calls from adult -- adults who have been convict -- or accused of crimes, right?

A. Yes. I -- I think they're important, but I -- children, their understanding of what is happening to them and what is going on and the urgency with which you address those phone calls, I think is very important that support staff understand. So I'm not placing their lives any higher than an adult defendant's life, but the -- the staff needs to understand the urgency with which to treat their requests.

Q. Okay. And again, you feel like your staff is supporting you adequately as it relates to these requirements; is that correct?

A. With regard to the tasks that I am giving my support staff, I believe that I am adequately assisted.

Q. Okay. So as to the certification cases, you discussed that process a little bit earlier. Do you recall the conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. And I think you were asked about the type of evidence that you put on versus the type of evidence that the prosecution would put on, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And it sounded like the prosecution just puts on the deputy juvenile officer; is that right?

A. In most cases, yes.

Q. And you said yourself you have used witnesses of various kinds, you've had officer testimony, and other types of evidence as well, right?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. So kind of sounds like in many cases you're presenting more evidence and calling more witnesses than the prosecution for these certification issues; is that right?

A. Yes. In -- in my certification cases usually I am.

Q. And you definitely feel like you've met your ethical responsibilities with regard to these certification procedures, right?

A. I -- I don't think I can -- I can say that.

Q. You don't feel like you've met your ethical obligations to your clients with regard to certification procedures?

A. Not in every case, no.

Q. And -- okay. So in -- in what way do you feel like you have not?

A. In what way? Are you asking for generally or specific cases?

Q. If you have specifics --

MS. SHIPMA: I would object to her answering any questions about specific cases.

MR. MOORE: Okay.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) So like I said, I'm jumping around a little bit. So you talked a little bit about the pre-Miranda process.

Page 180

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me a little bit about what that entails.

A. If a child is detained and they request counsel before being interrogated by a police officer, then the juvenile court would call me.

Q. Okay. And I think you said as far as lineups go, you are now called for any lineups prior to the lineups taking place in St. Louis city; is that right?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Okay. Now, you were asked earlier about your involvement in appeals of juvenile matters. Do you recall that conversation?

A. I do.

Q. And I think you said that maybe you had worked on a small amount, maybe one appeal or so; is that right?

A. I have written and argued my own appeal, but I have appealed other cases.

Q. Okay. But in any event, I mean, you have to have a reason to appeal in each case, right?

A. I do not have to have a reason to appeal. The child has to indicate that they want to appeal the case.

Q. And there has to be, you know, like a -- a legal foundation and -- you know, for the appeals process whenever you're making arguments to the court filing motions, right?
A. I'm a little bit confused by your question. Every child has a right to an appeal, so I don't have to find a reason for them to appeal. If they want to say they want to appeal a case, a case will be appealed.
Q. Okay. So if they ask you for the appeal, then you do the appeal, right?
A. That is correct.
Q. And if they don't ask you, then, you know, there's -- you don't have any right to independently pursue an appeal, right?
A. So --
MS. QUINN: Objection. I don't understand what you're asking.
MR. MOORE: I think it's a pretty straightforward question.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I mean, so if they don't ask you for an appeal, then you don't have any independent right to just say, well, we're going to appeal this case whether you like it or not, right?

Page 182

A. So -- so we educate a child about their right to an appeal and part of that education includes also informing the parents that they also can appeal a case -- the case, so that is the process that -- and procedure that we go through with regard to juvenile appeals.
Q. Okay. So just a couple things and then we'll be done here. Looking at Exhibit 29, Plaintiff's Exhibit 29, this is the -- actually, you know what, that's not the one I wanted to look at. I want to look at 27, the new attorney toolbox.
A. Okay.
Q. I think you might have said this earlier, but just to clarify, you're not sure whether this is being utilized or in what manner it's being utilized by any public defender --
A. No, I am not.
Q. -- personally, right? You don't know whether it's been modified or amended or totally done away with in any particular county, right?
A. Correct.
Q. You didn't help draft this report in any way, did you?
A. I did not.
Q. To the extent there's any kind of instructions or, you know, mathematical formulas, you had nothing to do with the creation of those things, did you?

A. I did not.
Q. I guess just the last item would be Exhibit 29. That's the fiscal year 2016 annual report.
A. Okay.
Q. Again, you know, you didn't help with any part of the data collection in this -- pertaining to this report, did you?
A. I did not.
Q. You didn't help draft this report?
A. I did not.
Q. Do you know who did draft this report?
A. I do not.
MR. MOORE: Okay. I think that that is all I have for right now. I'll look at my notes, but you go ahead.
MS. SHIPMA: Well, no, I'll let you look over your notes and see if you have any other questions before I do my questioning.
MR. MOORE: Okay. Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Do you have any say as to how funds are allocated within the public defender system?

Page 184

A. I do not.
Q. Do you have anything to do with how public defender's budget is allocated or separated out as between the offices?
A. I do not.
Q. Oh, I do have a question about discovery process. You mentioned something about like a blue file?
A. Yes.
Q. What is the blue file exactly?
A. So in St. Louis County and I can't speak to their current practices, but when I was representing juveniles in St. Louis County they had a series of blue files for each specific case, and so when you wanted to go see the police reports you would go back into the legal officers' area, pull the blue file that pertained to your case and make a copy of the -- the police reports.
Q. Okay. So as far as like obtaining those records and putting the blue file together, I mean, is that something the attorneys would do themselves or would support staff assist them in creating those files?
A. And when you're saying attorneys, are you talking about the legal officers?

Q. Not exactly sure. Like this is the public defenders I guess. Would they be considered the legal officers or --
A. No. So the public defenders are not creating those blue files.
Q. Okay. So I guess -- so who does that, the legal officers you said?
A. Yes, so the -- the prosecutors are -- I -- their entity is creating those files. I don't know exactly who is doing it --
Q. Oh, I see now.
A. -- but I -- but they -- that entity is creating those files.
Q. Okay. Now I understand. Have you ever subject -- have you ever been subject to any kind of discipline towards your law license with regard to your handling of cases while you were at the public defender's office?
A. I have not.
MR. MOORE: I think that's all I have. Thanks.
EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. All right, Sarah. I'm not going to belabor this. I'm going to work backwards just for fun. How does that sound?

Page 186

A. Okay.
Q. Okay. The Missouri public defender system has an appellate division, correct?
A. Yes, they do.
Q. Does that appellate division handle juvenile -- juvenile appeals?
A. Yes.
Q. You mentioned -- or you -- you testified a couple of times about the fact that you're called prior to lineups occurring in St. Louis city?
A. Yes.
Q. Do -- are you able to make it to all those lineups?
A. No, I am not.
Q. And why would that be?
A. Sometimes the lineups are late at night or early in the morning and I am already home.
Q. Okay.
A. Or I'm in court, so I'm -- I'm not able to leave court and go to those lineups.
Q. Understood. Are there tasks that you would like to assign to your support staff but are unable to?

A. Yes.
Q. And why are you unable to do that?
A. I'm unable to do that because she in addition to myself has a number of attorneys that she is also working with to provide the best assistance that she can.
Q. Can you give me an example of one kind of task that you would like to assign to a support staff but are unable to do so?
A. Sure. So there is something called a social file in a juvenile case. A social file is a file that contains all the documents with regard to a specific youth. So it could be care and protection case files, it could be school records, it could be mental health records. It could be previous police reports or previous deputy juvenile officer social investigations. Sometimes it's hundreds of pages. Myself, I use a scanner and I scan all of those pages myself. I would love to delegate that task to her, but I am unable to.
Q. Because of the tasks that she's doing for other attorneys as well?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. I think that Mr. Moore asked a question that was sort of characterizing that you believe that you do what the case requires when you're handling a case.

A. Sure.
Q. You remember that question?
A. I do.
Q. Are there things that you would like to do in cases, but are unable to do?
A. Yes.
Q. And why are you unable to do things that you would like to do in other cases?
A. Because of time constraints, because of obligations to other clients and -- and limitation. When you are tasked with a child who is sitting in a detention center, a num -- a number of children who are sitting in a detention center, you know, you don't want them to languish.
Q. Can you give me one example of something that you can think of that goes by the wayside because of time?
A. I was asked specifically about placement in inpatient or residential facilities. My ability to investigate options such as those, I'm not able to do on every single case.
Q. Why don't you assign that task to someone else to investigate?

Page 189

A. Because they -- the -- either the investigator or the social worker who would be doing that is also overloaded.
Q. Have you ever requested an outside investigator?
A. Outside of the public defender system?
Q. Right.
A. No, I have not.
Q. Okay. You -- you testified that you had never had a request for an expert denied, correct?
A. That is correct.
Q. Have you ever had a request for an expert modified?
A. I have not.
Q. You talked a couple of times about the motion bank. Are you familiar with a resource called the litigation resource board?
A. Yes.
Q. And that's separate from the motion bank?
A. It is.
Q. Do you know if that resource has juvenile-specific materials on it?

Page 190

A. I believe it does, but I'm not for certain.
Q. You haven't visited that?
A. Not recently, no.
Q. Sorry, but I am going to direct you to page -- to Exhibit 29, page 23 just because I want to make sure we're all using the same terminology when we look at this. You see -- I believe that Ms. Quinn asked you about the approximately 600 -- or 1,600 and I believe she said open cases.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. Okay. Look at the columns at the top, the descriptors for the various columns.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. You see one that says Case Type, one that says Description, and one that says Opened Cases rather than open cases?
A. Correct.
Q. In -- in your mind, is there a distinction between an open case and an opened case?
A. Yes, there is.
Q. Do you know what -- do you know if MSPD makes a distinction between open cases and opened cases?
A. I believe they do, yes.

Q. And what is that distinction?
A. So when a case is open, it is open and assigned to an attorney in our system. When a case is opened, it could be opened and then a private attorney had entered or it had been dismissed or something else. So that doesn't necessarily mean that someone is currently representing that individual.
Q. Do you know in this Opened Cases column, does that include cases that were pending that were not opened during fiscal year 2016, but maybe had carried over from a prior fiscal year? And if you don't know that, that's okay.
A. I don't know that.
Q. I can get that from someone else. Okay. Thank you. Do you know if Karen Craft had any other job responsibilities other than juvenile matters?
A. Yes.
Q. What were those?
A. I know for certain that she had also dealt with capital cases as well as I believe sex cases, and then she was also a manager of several offices or units.
Q. Okay. So she wasn't designated specifically just to juvenile like you had been for a while?

Page 192

A. Correct.
Q. You were asked some questions regarding a policy on how to determine a conflict.
A. Sure.
Q. Do you remember that? Do you know if there's a written policy that MSPD has regarding how to spot a conflict?
A. I believe there is.
Q. Okay. Do you know if that policy differs in any respect from just the rules of professional responsibility, professional conduct?
A. No, I'm not.
MS. SHIPMA: I have no other questions.
MS. QUINN: We just have a few if it's all right.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MS. QUINN:
Q. I believe earlier you were asked on cross-examination about hypothetical juveniles whom you might be involved with at detention hearings where there's a conflict of interest. It is in fact true that you have represented youth at detention hearings and been conflicted while doing so, correct?

Page 193

A. Yes.
Q. Can you estimate how many children in the last year you have represented at detention hearings while knowing that you were conflicted based on their status as having a co-defendant?
A. I can't. I'm sorry. I don't know. I don't know how many.
Q. More than ten?
A. Probably.
Q. More than 50?
A. I don't think so.
Q. And you were asked about appeals and it sounded like perhaps the question posed assumed that you were supposed to cull out when an appeal is an appropriate or inappropriate path for youth. Do you remember that question?
A. I do.
Q. Is it your understanding that all youth found guilty or adjudicated have a right to appeal?
A. Yes.
Q. And it is in fact true that you have not informed all youth of their right to appeal, correct?
A. All youth after an adjudication hearing, trial?

Q. Yes.
A. Yes, all youth after a plea hearing, no.
Q. And the vast majority of your cases are resolved by a guilty plea, correct?
A. I would disagree with that.
(Court reporter interruption.)
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) The vast majority of cases are resolved by a guilty plea?
A. I would say no. I would say there -- we have a lot of trials in the city of St. Louis.
Q. Right. I think the national average is somewhere around ten percent of cases go to trial and 90 percent are resolved by guilty plea. Is that about right for your office?
A. I don't think so, no.
MS. SHIPMA: And Mae, are those statistics for juvenile cases?
MS. QUINN: I think so. I think so.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay.
Q. (By Ms. Quinn) So in any event, no matter the number, when a child pleads guilty, it has not been the practice to inform them of their right to appeal at that -- at that time?

Page 195

A. No, it has not been the practice.
Q. Now, there was some review of this 4.6-hour on average number generated by the RubinBrown study relating to juvenile cases. Do you recollect that?
A. I do.
Q. And just to be clear, have you ever encountered a juvenile case in your own docket that could be handled in less than 4.6 hours?
A. It would be a very rare circumstance.
Q. And what about any of these attorneys who have called you to seek your assistance, is there any matter that they've called you about that in your opinion could be handled in less than 4.6 hours?
A. No.
MS. QUINN: I think that's it.
MS. SHIPMA: I don't have anything further.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Just a couple quick follow-ups. Okay. So you said earlier that you are notified whenever there's going to be a lineup in the city of St. Louis, right?

Page 196

A. Yes.
Q. But you don't always go to those lineups, right?
A. No, I do not.
Q. And what was the reason for not going to lineups? I think you said some happened in the middle of the night, and were there other reasons?
A. I've never been called in the middle of the night, but there have been some late at night. I have two small children and so I am not able to leave those -- my children and go to the lineups. Also, I have had court constraints, so I've been called in the middle of a court hearing and I've not been able to leave that court hearing and go to the lineup.
Q. Okay. And so you talked about certain tasks that you would like to assign to your support staff but that you can't. Remember that?
A. Correct.
Q. I think one of those sounded like it was basically like making copies of the social file; is that right?
A. It's scanning. We're not allowed to make copies, but we can scan it with a special instrument, yes.

Q. Okay. Any other tasks that you would like to assign to staff that you are unable to because of -- or for whatever reason?

A. I think probably notification of court hearings and coordination of witnesses potentially. Making sure everyone knows the right place, coordinating if people need bus passes or if they need some sort of transportation help. Potentially drafting some basic form motions. Not necessarily substance of law motions, but form motions.

Q. And so you're saying these are things that you cannot assign to your support staff?

A. I could, but she is very overworked and overloaded and with the specific time constraints of juvenile cases I don't know that she would be able to accomplish those tasks in the specific time needed.

Q. Okay. Have you ever tried to assign those tasks to her or is it just something you've never done before?

A. No, I have assigned -- the only thing I've not assigned to her is the scanning of the social file. I have assigned other tasks to her, yes.

Q. Okay. Tell me a little bit more about the litigation resource board. What exactly is that?

Page 198

A. It's a board where there are resources, case -- cases, as well as motions for attorneys across the state.

Q. Is that a -- like an on-line form of some kind or is it like a physical board?

A. No, it's -- it's on-line. It's -- it's in our system.

Q. Okay. And so you're able to access that from your computer whenever you want, right?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And other public defenders could presumably do the same thing, right?

A. Yes.

MR. MOORE: I think that's all I have.

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 12:50 p.m.

COURT REPORTER: Counsel, there were orders from the depositions on Wednesday. Could I just get confirmation that those same orders apply for today?

MS. QUINN: Yes, sir.

MS. SHIPMA: Yes.

MR. MOORE: Yes.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors would like to thank the juvenile defenders across Missouri who took time out of their busy schedules to meet with our assessment teams and share their experiences, successes, and challenges in representing indigent children in juvenile court. We would also like to thank the judges, legal officers, deputy juvenile officers, detention staff, administrators, and others across the state of Missouri who allowed us into their courtrooms and facilities, spoke candidly with us in interviews, and confided in us about their views of and experiences with juvenile indigent defense in their counties.

We could not have conducted this assessment without the support and guidance of many, most notably, Cathy Kelly, Director of the Missouri State Public Defender Office; Chief Justice Richard B. Teitelman, Missouri Supreme Court; Judge William R. Price Jr., former Missouri Supreme Court Chief Justice; Judge Patricia Breckenridge, Missouri Supreme Court; Tim Decker, Director of Missouri's Division of Youth Services; Karen Kraft, Division Director, Missouri State Public Defender Office; Patricia Harrison, Assistant Clinical Professor, St. Louis University School of Law; Mae Quinn, Professor and Co-Director of the Civil Justice Clinic, Washington University School of Law; and Kathryn Pierce, Clinical Attorney, Washington University School of Law's Civil Justice Clinic.

We are also especially grateful for the thorough and dedicated work of the assessment team members who generously donated their time and expertise to travel all over Missouri, conduct comprehensive interviews, observe delinquency court proceedings, analyze data, participate in meetings, transcribe their findings, and provide project staff with guidance, feedback, and insights. Members of the assessment team included:

In addition, we appreciate the behind-the-scenes support of the National Juvenile Defender Center and Central Juvenile Defender Center staff, law clerks, and interns who worked hard to coordinate all site visits and logistics, prepared briefing binders, collected and analyzed data, and compiled and synthesized notes. We also thank Jordan Lawrence Pauluhn from Washington University School of Law, who provided substantial assistance with writing and editing this report.

CHAPTER FOUR: Conclusion and Recommendations 55

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

While Missouri stands out for its innovation in providing small, regionalized juvenile corrections programs, an effective juvenile justice system is not built solely upon the corrections options available to youth after they have navigated their way through a complex legal process. An effective juvenile justice system must encompass the foundational elements of fundamental fairness and due process. The system must include legal advocacy and zealous representation by competent and well-trained attorneys who uphold the rights of children at all critical stages. The 1967 United States Supreme Court decision In re Gault extended the principles of due process to delinquency proceedings.[1] It held that accused youth facing the awesome prospect of incarceration have the right to counsel.[2] Due process is violated when children's legal interests are not protected.

This assessment is designed to provide policy makers and juvenile defense leaders with relevant baseline information about whether youth have timely and meaningful access to qualified counsel in delinquency proceedings, identify systemic barriers to quality representation, highlight best practices, and provide recommendations and implementation strategies for improving Missouri's juvenile indigent defense delivery system.

The report begins with a summary of the evolution of due process and the right to counsel for youth in delinquency proceedings. It then provides an overview of this right as it pertains to youth in Missouri, and gives a snapshot of the state's judicial system, the juvenile justice system, and the indigent defense system. A synopsis of Missouri juvenile law and the various stages of delinquency proceedings are then described to facilitate an understanding of how youth navigate through the system.

Findings made in the report are based upon the results of survey data from judges and attorneys across the state, interviews with other key stakeholders, youth and families, and information obtained from extensive site visits to local juvenile courts in a sampling of jurisdictions. Three overarching concerns were identified by the investigative team as endemic in the system, and reached across many areas of practice:

1. Missouri's indigent defense system is in crisis and has endured at least two decades of crushing caseloads and inadequate resources to provide its mandated services. In spite of numerous reports, attempts, legislative fixes, and litigation, the system remains broken and forced to ration services. With the exception of a few counties that rigorously defend the right to counsel for juveniles, youth are discouraged from and systematically denied counsel throughout the state.

2. While Missouri is recognized for innovative facilities and an effective service delivery system for youth in the delinquency system, this does not negate the need for adequate due process protections to be put into place. There is an imbalance between acknowledging and protecting the basic rights established in In re Gault and adjudicating youth delinquent in order to obtain services or otherwise intervene in the lives of children and families.

3. The structure of Missouri's juvenile court, by its very nature, creates conflicting roles. The role of the deputy juvenile officer (Missouri's equivalent of probation officer) and legal officer (Missouri's equivalent of prosecutor), as designed and implemented, presents challenges to the judiciary regarding the fair implementation of due process, supervision, and the requirement of impartiality. The role of the deputy juvenile officers may also contribute to high rates of youth waiving their right to counsel.

It is against this backdrop that the juvenile defense delivery system must be put into context. Ensuring due process for youth in delinquency proceedings takes low priority in the system. This denial of due process is well known, and it is deeply entrenched in the culture of many juvenile courts, as evidenced by the many interviews, reports, and other sources of information reviewed as part of this assessment.

[2] Id. at 36-37.

Findings also include descriptions of barriers to accessing counsel, and barriers to effective practice among attorneys defending youth at each critical stage of court proceedings. However, the investigative team also found several promising practices and programs that promote the representation of indigent youth, including some run by Missouri law schools.

The Recommendations are directed at all three branches of government and other stakeholders that impact juvenile defense practices. These Recommendations should be used as the basis for various reform initiatives to improve access to and quality of representation for children who come before the juvenile courts in Missouri. Included in the final chapter are both Core Recommendations and Implementation Strategies. The Core Recommendations, also provided directly below, focus on the principal areas in which work is needed to improve both access to counsel and quality of representation for youth in the delinquency system. The Implementation Strategies derive from these Core Recommendations and provide more detailed suggestions for achieving reform in specific areas.

THE CORE RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Ensure Timely Appointment of Counsel: Youth must be appointed counsel and have access to counsel early in their case.

2. Reduce Waiver of Counsel: Missouri should establish a presumption against waiver of counsel; whereby, a youth must first consult with counsel before any waiver is permitted. No child should be denied counsel because of lack of resources.

3. Afford Representation at All Critical Stages: Missouri youth should be afforded counsel at all critical stages of the proceedings.

4. Allocate Sufficient Resources: Missouri must commit adequate funding to juvenile representation that allows for reasonable caseloads and effective advocacy. Juvenile defenders must also have access to ancillary services such as investigators, experts, and social workers.

5. Strengthen Monitoring and Oversight: The indigent defense delivery system should include a separate juvenile division to centralize leadership, innovation, and responsibility around juvenile defense. The division would strengthen positive practices and policies and would provide ongoing statewide oversight and monitoring.

6. Establish Data Collection: A system of data collection should be established, which can track appointment of counsel at early stages, and other pertinent data regarding juvenile representation to aid management in decision making. Best practices and innovations should be identified and promoted through data collection.

7. Recognize Juvenile Defense as a Specialized Area of Practice: Juvenile defense should be recognized and appreciated as a highly specialized practice. A system with ongoing training, support, and networking among defenders should be established. Attorneys should participate in comprehensive training before working in juvenile court, and they should have the opportunity for ongoing training to enhance their practice skills and knowledge of the field.

8. Reduce Youth in the Adult System: The age for adult criminal court jurisdiction in Missouri should be raised from 17 to 18.

9. Adopt Standards of Practice: Juvenile defense practice standards should be adopted and implemented statewide. Expectations regarding ethical obligations and performance of attorneys providing representation at all critical stages should be included.

10. Address the Role of the Deputy Juvenile Officer: The expansive role of the deputy juvenile officer should be addressed to ensure that it does not influence, directly or indirectly, the ability of youth to be appointed counsel early in the process, and to prevent statements made to these individuals from being admissible in court.

INTRODUCTION

In 2013, over forty-five years after the landmark Supreme Court decision affording youth the right to counsel in delinquency proceedings, youth are regularly denied access to and provision of counsel in many states. The National Juvenile Defender Center, in partnership with our regional juvenile defender centers and other key stakeholders, has embarked on a 50 state strategy to assess access to and quality of juvenile defense afforded to youth in conflict with the law.

Several consistent themes emerge from these state assessments, including: an array of systemic barriers that prohibit youth from receiving timely access to qualified juvenile defense counsel; juvenile defense is not recognized or acknowledged as a specialized legal practice; and juvenile defense is significantly under-resourced. While all juvenile justice professionals want to ensure the best outcomes for young people and for society, the U.S. Supreme Court clearly noted in In re Gault that, the "absence of substantive standards has not necessarily meant that children receive careful, compassionate, individualized treatment," and that "Juvenile Court history has again demonstrated that unbridled discretion, however benevolently motivated, is frequently a poor substitute for principle and procedure."[3] Since the Gault decision, juvenile indigent defense systems have faltered and failed, leaving far too many children defenseless in courts of law across the country.

Underscoring the importance of a specialized juvenile defense bar, the Supreme Court noted in its 2010 decision in Graham v. Florida that there are, "...special difficulties encountered by counsel in juvenile representation. As some amici note, the features that distinguish juveniles from adults also put them at a significant disadvantage in criminal proceedings."[4] Juvenile defenders require specialized knowledge and understanding of adolescence; the skills needed to address unique hearings such as detention, transfer, and disposition; and the capacity to assist and engage their youthful clients in effective decision-making toward their defense if they are to overcome this "significant disadvantage."

While Missouri stands out for its innovation in providing small, regionalized juvenile correctional programs, an effective juvenile justice system is not built solely upon the corrections options available to youth after they have navigated their way through a complex legal process. The juvenile justice system must encompass the foundational elements of fundamental fairness and due process. It must include legal advocacy and zealous representation by competent and well-trained attorneys who uphold the rights of children at all critical stages. This piece of Missouri's juvenile justice system has been long neglected and patently misunderstood.

Missouri's indigent defense system has reached its tipping point. In a 2009 assessment (the third since 1993), a national consulting group on indigent defense systems found that the Missouri State Public Defender (MSPD) was the lowest funded state public defender system in the country and was on "the brink of collapse."[5] The caseload crisis, for which there has been no relief in two decades, has "placed MSPD's attorneys in the cruelest of positions, one in which they are virtually guaranteed to fail, despite efforts that could fairly be described as heroic."[6] In spite of efforts to reach out to all three branches of government, the MSPD has failed to obtain sufficient funding to provide constitutionally required defense services. Since 2008, MSPD has had administrative rules that establish maximum caseloads for each office and authorize the office directors to place an office on "limited availability" status to allow more time for serious cases.[7] Ongoing writ litigation in the Missouri Supreme Court has determined the reasonableness of the caseload protocol; however, it did not remedy the underlying problems of the broken and underfunded system.[8]

Little to no attention has been paid to what this crisis means for youth in the delinquency system. In fact, juvenile cases make up only about 2.36% of the cases represented by the MSPD.[9] In the 2009 assessment of the MSPD the question of juvenile representation was left unanswered, "Whether these low rates reflect a deliberate decision of the MSPD or instead are representative of a system in which indigent clients do not seek the services of a public defender even when they are eligible, the results are the same: an already overburdened MSPD is not serving potential clients....Indeed, we are deeply concerned by the few juvenile cases being handled by the MSPD, which appears remarkably low and for which we have been unable to determine an immediate cause. This question merits further investigation and serious scrutiny."[10]

The breaking point is here. The time for serious scrutiny is now. This report is part of a national strategy to review state juvenile indigent defense delivery systems and evaluate how effectively attorneys in juvenile court are fulfilling their constitutional and statutory obligations to their clients. It is important to note that the findings made in this report are based on information obtained from a number of sources, including existing data, reports, prior assessments, online surveys, and on-site investigative interviews, and observations. The information presented in this report is in aggregate form and does not reflect the practices in every juvenile court jurisdiction or public defender office. These are trends identified in Missouri, which are reflective of large scale systemic issues, as well as some best practices for service delivery. The intent of this report is to highlight the challenges faced by lawyers, judges, and other key stakeholders in ensuring access to justice for children and to offer recommendations to build upon their dedication and capacity.

> "The problem is not an abstract one. Its story is not told in statistics and pie charts, but in shortcuts that lead to wrongful convictions, incarcerations for weeks or even months with no access to counsel, attorney disciplinary proceedings and malpractice lawsuits with the state of Missouri on the hook. Triage has replaced justice in Missouri's courts. The breaking point is no longer coming. It is here."

I. PURPOSE OF ASSESSMENT

Juvenile indigent defense assessments are comprehensive in scope and designed to furnish policy makers, indigent defense leaders, and other key stakeholders with baseline qualitative and systemic information upon which they can make informed choices regarding the nature and structure of their state juvenile indigent defense system. The assessment process investigates and presents a complete picture of the strengths and weaknesses of a juvenile defense system with tailored recommendations crafted to address each state's distinctive characteristics. Assessments are designed to help decision-makers focus on key trouble spots and highlight best practices.

II. METHODOLOGY

The National Juvenile Defender Center (NJDC) relied upon its well-tested and highly structured methodology to conduct this juvenile indigent defense assessment. NJDC, in partnership with our regional juvenile defender centers and other key stakeholders, have completed state assessments in 21 states, including Missouri. Until this process began, issues, policies, and funding decisions specific to juvenile defense had never been fully understood or studied separately from the adult system. Throughout the assessment process it has become clear that the adult criminal justice model has not served juvenile courts or its clients well.

In Missouri, the State Public Defender invited NJDC and its partner, the Central Juvenile Defender Center CJDC), to conduct an assessment of juvenile indigent defense to fill the knowledge gap and educate lawmakers and others about access to counsel for youth in the state. The Chief Justice of Missouri's Supreme Court issued a letter to juvenile court judges across the state asking for their cooperation in meeting with assessment investigators and providing access to juvenile court hearings. Other stakeholders within Missouri's juvenile justice system were engaged by NJDC and CJDC staff and were supportive in the statewide assessment process as well.

The assessment began with repeated visits to the state for meetings with key stakeholders, policymakers, advocates, and defenders. NJDC staff prepared a comprehensive briefing memorandum with general information about Missouri's geography, demographics, economy, judicial branch, and politics, and specific information about Missouri's juvenile justice system including the juvenile code, arrest statistics, disproportionate minority contact, the right to counsel in juvenile delinquency proceedings, transfer to adult court, and the adult indigent defense system.

With advice and input from on-the-ground experts, NJDC and CJDC selected a sample of counties and judicial circuits for in-depth study. The selected sample includes sites that handle approximately 50% of the youth who go through Missouri's juvenile delinquency courts and comprise over 50% of the state's total population. The sites were selected based on a thorough analysis of state demographics, population rates, juvenile arrest data, disposition rates, and the location of public defender offices, juvenile courts, detention centers, and other youth facilities. The goal in selecting these counties was to ensure that the information gathered would be representative of the delivery of juvenile defense services throughout the state, as practices vary significantly across jurisdictions. The study sample includes urban, suburban, and rural areas, and reflects the geographic and cultural diversity of the state. To ensure confidentiality, the names of the jurisdictions visited and those interviewed remain anonymous.

An investigative team of experts in juvenile defense were then recruited by NJDC and CJDC to conduct extensive visits in the selected sites. The investigative team included current and former public defenders, private practitioners, academics, juvenile defense policy experts, and juvenile justice advocates. Team members all possess extensive knowledge of the role of defense counsel in juvenile court. Investigative teams were trained and then fanned out across the state to conduct court observations and confidential meetings and interviews with key justice system personnel. The teams also visited county detention centers and state-run commitment facilities where they interviewed administrators and staff. Each team member used standardized interview protocols developed by NJDC and specifically tailored to Missouri's juvenile court system to guide their investigative activities. Upon completion of each site visit, investigators debriefed with NJDC staff and submitted field notes derived from in-depth interviews and court observations at each site. Investigators' field notes were mined for prominent themes, analyzed and incorporated into the assessment findings.

Additionally, with the assistance of the Office of State Courts, a self-report survey was sent to all juvenile court judges handling delinquency and status cases from the 45 judicial circuits in Missouri, from which 19 surveys were completed and returned. Self-report surveys were also conducted with the 34 public defender trial offices representing Missouri's 114 counties and the City of St. Louis. Thirty offices completed the survey about juvenile practices within their jurisdictions. Stakeholders and NJDC staff members compiled data from both judges and defenders that was used as one source of information about access to counsel, quality of representation issues, and systemic barriers.

CHAPTER ONE
Due Process and the Role of Counsel in Delinquency Proceedings

I. THE EVOLUTION OF DUE PROCESS AND THE RIGHT TO COUNSEL IN DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS

On July 1, 1899, Illinois created the first juvenile court in the United States.[11] Prior to the development of this court, minors accused of crime were treated as adults. The juvenile court movement intended to remove children from the harshness of criminal court and adult prisons and improve their chances of rehabilitation.[12] The new juvenile courts involved only cursory proceedings, utilizing judicial economy and a parens patriae approach to justice with no regard for due process or protection of children's legal rights. No defense attorneys were involved. Social workers and others recommended "the best disposition," and courts were allowed unfettered discretion to decide what was best for wayward youth.[13] Children were placed in child-only facilities, training schools, and private foster homes.[14] Soon thereafter, most other states followed suit.[15]

For many years after their creation, juvenile courts survived constitutional challenges.[16] States denied children many of the standard procedural rights, including right to counsel, right to notice of charges against them, right to a jury trial, and right against self-incrimination.[17] Children were often convicted by a mere preponderance of the evidence and courts regularly denied basic due process rights.[18]

In In re Gault, the Supreme Court extended fundamental elements of due process to juveniles in delinquency proceedings.[19] The case specifically held that juveniles have the right to counsel under the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment.[20] The Court stated that youth in juvenile court were getting "the worst of both worlds."[21] Youth received "neither the protections accorded to adults nor the solicitous care and regenerative treatment postulated for children."[22]

In Gault, the Court also explained the dangers of substituting other individuals to serve as the child's advocate.[23] "The probation officer cannot act as counsel for the child. His role...is as arresting officer and witness against the child. Nor can the judge represent the child."[24] No matter how many court personnel looked after a child's best interests, any child facing "the awesome prospect of incarceration" needed "the guiding hand of counsel at every step in the proceedings against him."[25]

Gault also extended the right to notice of charges, the privilege against self-incrimination, and the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses to juveniles.[26] In cases following Gault, the Court also held that proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required to convict juveniles in delinquency proceedings and that double jeopardy bars multiple prosecutions of a juvenile for the same allegations.[27] The Court reiterated that "civil labels and good intentions do not themselves obviate the need for criminal due process safeguards in juvenile court[.]"[28]

Following theses legal changes, Congress enacted the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA) in 1974.[29] The JJDPA created statutory mechanisms to protect the rights and welfare of youth involved in the juvenile justice system, and required the National Advisory Committee on Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to develop national juvenile justice standards and guidelines.[30] The Committee published a manual of standards in 1980 recommending that counsel represent children at early stages of delinquency proceedings and that many status offenses should be decriminalized.[31]

In 1992, Congress reauthorized the JJDPA and reaffirmed the importance of the role of defense counsel in delinquency proceedings.[32] It specifically noted the deficiencies of prosecutorial and indigent defense delivery systems.[33] Congress recognized the need for more information about the functioning of delinquency courts across the country and asked the federal Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) to address the issue.[34] The JJDPA was last reauthorized in 2002.[35]

At the same time, leading non-governmental organizations also acknowledged the necessity of protections for youth in delinquency courts. Beginning in 1971, the Institute for Judicial Administration (IJA) and the American Bar Association (ABA) produced 23 volumes of juvenile justice standards.[36] The standards were designed to establish a juvenile justice system of lasting excellence that would not fluctuate in response to transitory headlines or controversies.

Despite these standards, federal law, the array of Supreme Court cases, and numerous reform efforts, states are still struggling to effectively implement basic due process rights for juveniles almost half a century after In re Gault. Where and to what extent Missouri has implemented these due process guarantees for juveniles has been largely unknown until now.

II. THE ROLE OF COUNSEL IN DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS

As in all states, Missouri attorneys representing children in the juvenile delinquency system must be prepared to assist clients to "cope with problems of law, to make skilled inquiry into the facts, to insist upon regularity of the proceedings, and to ascertain whether [the client] ... has a defense and to prepare and submit it."[37] The U.S. Supreme Court reaffirmed these principles when it declared, "[w]e made clear in [Gault] that civil labels and good intentions do not themselves obviate the need for criminal due process safeguards in juvenile courts," and held that juveniles were constitutionally entitled to proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" during an adjudication hearing.[38]

Affording the right to counsel in delinquency proceedings is critical; yet, it is equally important to recognize that juvenile defense is a specialized legal practice requiring distinct training and skills for the practitioner.[39] Effective juvenile defense demands all of the training and knowledge of criminal defense practice in addition to specific expertise in adolescent development and juvenile justice. It is essential for a public defense delivery system to appreciate that children and adolescents differ from adults in significant ways. For example, children do not possess the same cognitive, emotional, or behavioral capacities as adults. Thus, juvenile defenders must create legal arguments addressing juvenile culpability and rehabilitation.[40] Juvenile lawyers also must learn about and master the elements unique to juvenile proceedings like detention hearings, disposition hearings, certification hearings, and juvenile competence proceedings.

Juvenile defense lawyers face additional challenges in establishing effective relationships with their young clients. Getting arrested and/or detained is a traumatizing and frightening experience. This holds especially true for children and adolescents. By the time youth meet their attorneys, they may have been questioned by many adults—including police officers, deputy juvenile officers, and family members. A youth may be distrustful of additional adult questioning and may not even be able to distinguish his or her defender from all the other adults in the system. Thus, at the start of a case, lawyers must work hard to establish rapport with their client. Defenders must take the time to explain that their job is to help defend their clients against the charges and represent the client's interests.[41] In addition to asking for information, it is vital for counsel to take time to discuss what is likely to happen in court and to help the client understand the nature of the attorney-client relationship.[42]

Developing a good working relationship with youth in highly stressful circumstances raises unique challenges and requires special awareness and responses by counsel. An attorney's ability to both perceive and appropriately address a young client's fears and anxieties is central to their ability to work effectively with the client and to ensure high-quality defense. Youth in the delinquency system often have disabilities that affect critical aspects of their functioning, especially their ability to communicate and comprehend.[43] Juvenile defenders must be alert to the special needs of each client and also learn of the client's strengths—be they familial, personal, or potential—and help integrate those strengths into the theory of the case, any plea bargaining, and the disposition planning.[44]

The defense lawyer plays a critical role for youth in delinquency court by protecting clients from unfairness, promoting accuracy in decision making, providing alternatives for decision makers, and monitoring institutional treatment, aftercare, and re-entry. Throughout the entire court process the juvenile defender is the individual responsible for bringing the child's perspective and interests before the court.

III. CONCLUSION

The jurisprudence delineating juvenile rights in the delinquency system has long recognized the importance of due process guarantees, and the essential role that counsel plays in these proceedings at all critical stages. Codes of professional conduct, administrative orders, case law, legal scholarship, and standards of practice have further defined the role of juvenile defense counsel, and the specialized nature of juvenile defense practice.

CHAPTER TWO
Legal Representation of Youth in Context

I. THE RIGHT TO COUNSEL IN MISSOURI

Missouri incorporates the constitutional requirements of due process and the right to counsel for juveniles accused of crimes in its statutory chapter on Juvenile Courts, which state that Missouri children are "entitled to be represented by counsel in all proceedings."[45] At a minimum, this means children must have an attorney representing their interests from the detention hearing through final disposition.

Missouri Supreme Court Rules also provide for a right to counsel at informal adjustment conferences. The Rules state that "the juvenile officer[46] shall inform [the juvenile and guardian] at the commencement of the conference of the right to counsel and the right of the juvenile to remain silent."[47] If the juvenile or the guardian requests counsel, the juvenile officer must adjourn the informal conference to allow the juvenile to consult with counsel.[48]

Missouri statute and Court Rules both require the appointment of counsel when necessary to assure full and fair hearings,[49] when a juvenile requests appointment prior to filing of a petition and the requesting child is indigent,[50] or in a proceeding when there appears to the court to be a conflict of interest between the juvenile and his or her parents, guardians, or custodians.[51] According to Missouri Supreme Court Rules, the attorney appointed to a child as guardian ad litem may also be appointed as counsel for the juvenile in a delinquency matter unless a full and fair hearing (as determined by the court) requires separate counsel for the expressed interests of the child.[52]

After a petition has been filed, a child may only waive his right to counsel with the approval of the court.[53] A court analyzing a waiver must do so in the context of the juvenile's age, experience, education, background, intelligence, and capacity to understand the warnings received.[54] If a child chooses to waive his or her right to counsel, the child may undo the waiver at any stage of the proceeding.

By Missouri statute, an attorney is relieved of his or her duties once a final disposition has been ordered by the court.[55] Counsel is to serve for the appeal as well, but has no further obligation if no appeal is taken.[56]

II. SYSTEM STRUCTURES IN MISSOURI

A. Structure of Missouri's Judicial System

The court system in Missouri includes three levels; the Missouri Supreme Court, three regional Courts of Appeal, and 45 circuit courts. The Missouri Supreme Court is the state's highest court and has exclusive jurisdiction over certain cases[57] and certain cases can be transferred to the Supreme Court at the Court's discretion.[58]

Below the Missouri Supreme Court in the state court hierarchy is the Missouri Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals is divided into three regional districts—the Eastern District, the Western District, and the Southern District. The Court of Appeals handles all appeals from the circuit courts.[59] For the vast majority of appeals, the Court of Appeals' decision is final; unless the appeal relates to an issue within the Missouri Supreme Court's authority or the Missouri Supreme Court uses its discretion to accept the appeal.

The lowest level of courts in Missouri is the trial or circuit court. Missouri's counties and the city of St. Louis are divided into 45 judicial circuits.[60] Every county and the city of St. Louis are included in a circuit, with some circuits comprised of multiple counties. The circuit courts are typically located in the county seat, but there may be additional locations.[61] Missouri circuit courts have various divisions, including associate circuit, small claims, municipal, family, probate, criminal, and juvenile courts.[62]

The juvenile and family courts are specialized court divisions within the circuit courts. Missouri law mandates that all judicial circuits—except in jurisdictions that have a family court pursuant to statute—must designate by local court rule the division(s) of the circuit court to be made into juvenile divisions, and the classes of cases that will be assigned to each.[63] Some Missouri circuit courts also have specialized divisions including teen courts, drug courts, and truancy courts that divert youth from regular juvenile court proceedings.[64]

The Office of Court Services Administrator (OSCA) is an arm of the courts and conducts statistical analyses for annual reports in order to provide the Missouri juvenile and family court division with data on the number of status, law, and abuse-neglect referrals processed by Missouri's juvenile court divisions.[65]

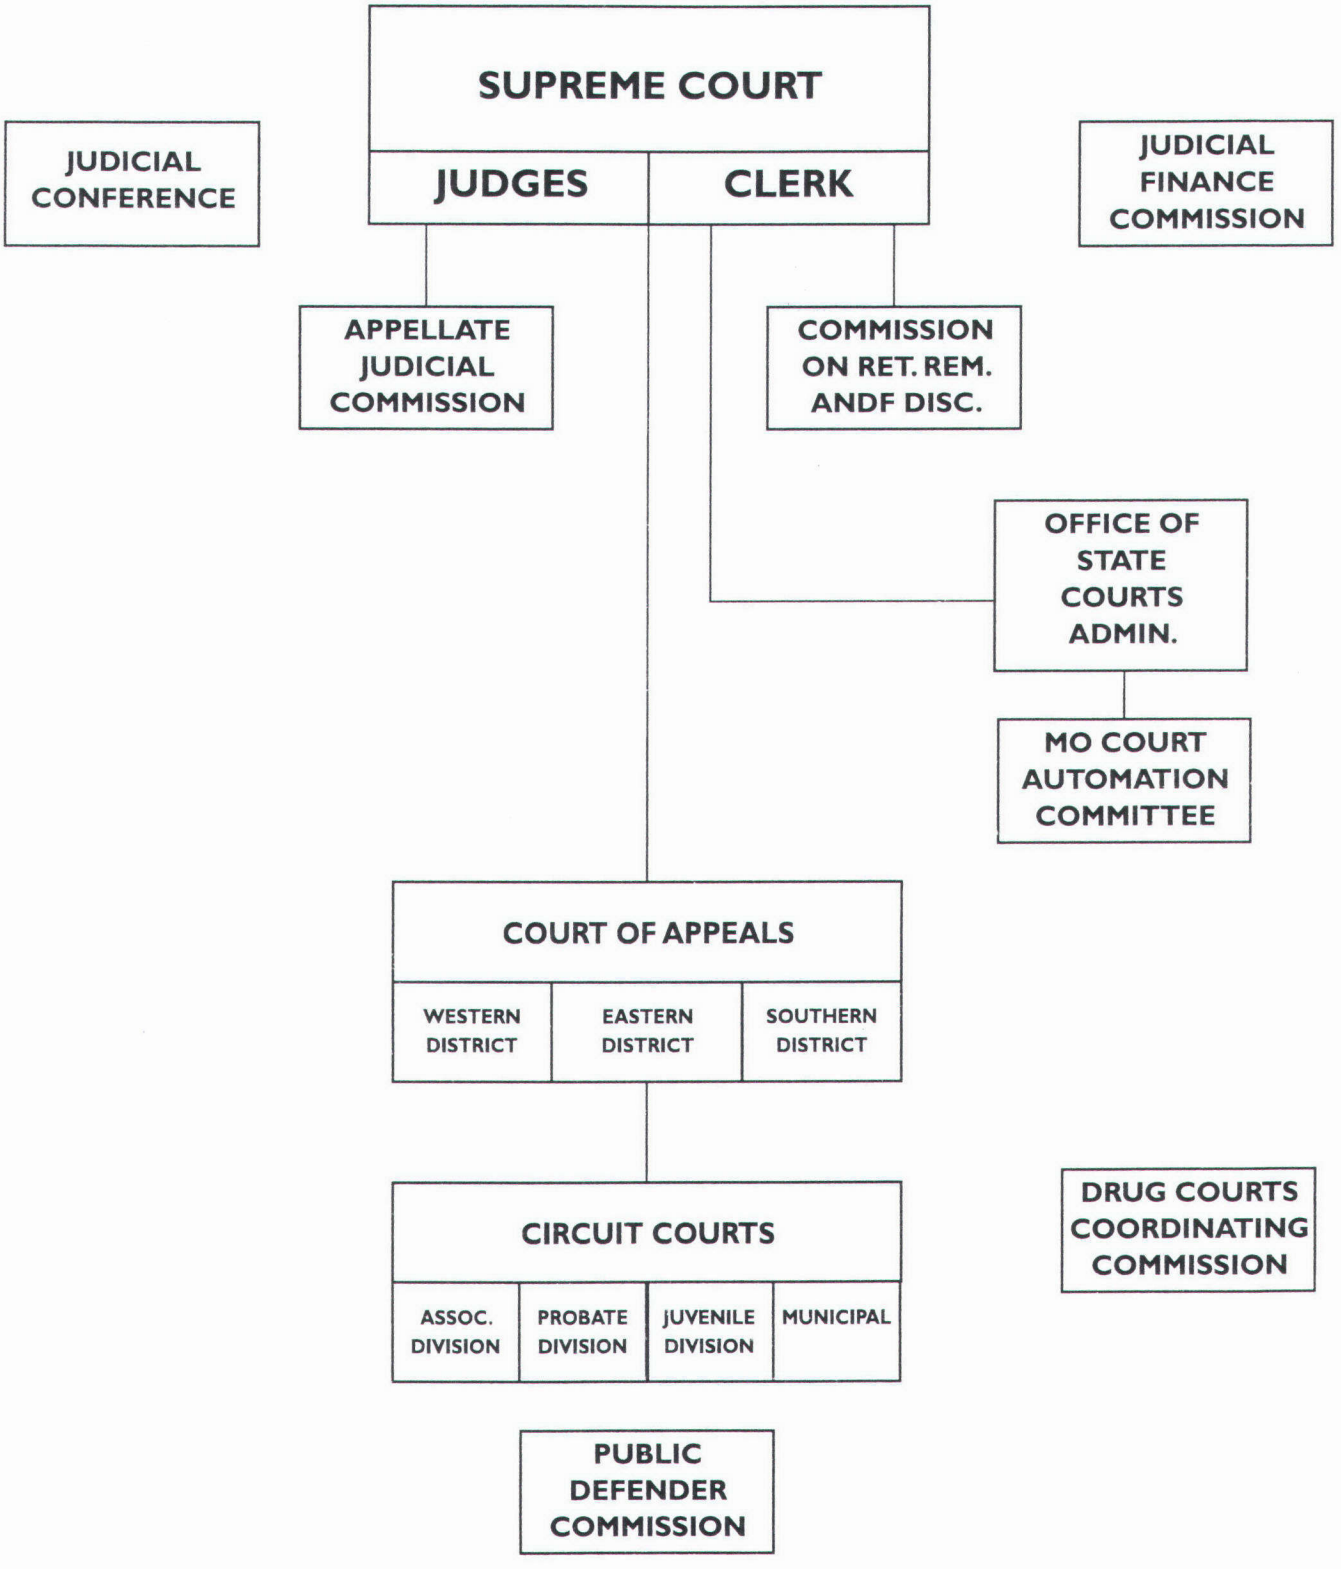
ORGANIZATIONAL CHART OF MISSOURI'S JUDICIAL BRANCH



B. Structure Of Missouri's Juvenile Justice System

1. Juvenile and Family Courts

The Missouri juvenile court was established in the early 1900s but did not have its own procedures and authority until the enactment of the juvenile code in 1957. In 1993 and 1995 a series of extensive amendments to the Juvenile Code impacted waiver, confidentiality, determinate and dual sentencing, juvenile and family court funding, structure, personnel, and programs.[66] In 1993, the Missouri legislature, following the national one-family/one-judge trend to addressing family issues in the legal system, enacted a new law that created a designated family court in six judicial circuits.[67] In 1995, the amended Juvenile Crime Bill expanded both the age range of children that could be placed into the Division of Youth Services (DYS) custody and the services DYS could provide.[68] The Bill also increased information sharing across agencies, reduced confidentiality of records, and allowed for dual jurisdiction and determinate sentencing.[69]

The 45 circuit courts encompass Missouri's 115 counties and the city of St. Louis.[70] Missouri's juvenile and family courts are specialized court divisions within the circuit courts. At a minimum, each of Missouri's 45 judicial circuits has a judge who oversees the juvenile office in charge of all juvenile court cases. In turn, each juvenile office is headed by a lead juvenile officer who supervises key system players such as legal officers as well as deputy juvenile officers (DJOs). Legal officers are the equivalent of prosecuting attorneys and DJOs are the equivalent of probation officers in other states. Their roles are described in greater detail below.

a. Judges and Commissioners

Circuit level judges are either elected or appointed by a non-partisan commission in Missouri. The judges rotate through different divisions within their circuit. The presiding circuit judge or administrative judge of the family court is ultimately responsible for overseeing family court personnel, such as legal officers and DJOs.

b. Legal Officers

Legal officers have many of the same roles and responsibilities as prosecutors or state's attorneys in other states. However, legal officers also represent the legal interests of the DJOs in court. Many of the legal officers bear the title, "Attorney for the Juvenile Officer." In essence, this means that the prosecutor represents the probation officers in court. Therefore, if the allegations of the petition are denied, the legal officer (who is counsel for the juvenile officer) elicits evidence from the DJO at a hearing on the petition.[71] All parties at the hearing are allowed to put on witnesses, cross-examine, and testify.[72] Legal officers defend the petition based on the evidence gathered.

c. Deputy Juvenile Officers (DJOs)

DJOs work for the judicial circuit's juvenile office and are the individuals primarily responsible for processing delinquency and status offense cases through Missouri's juvenile and family courts. DJOs are vested with all the power and authority of sheriffs to make arrests; however, DJOs must allow interrogations to be conducted by law enforcement officers.[73] During an interrogation, the DJO is responsible for both informing the juvenile of his or her rights and protecting the interests of the juvenile.[74] This role—acting as both an arm of the prosecution and a protector of due process rights—may be unique to Missouri DJOs.

The DJO also plays a unique role in the screening and intake of delinquency cases. DJOs are responsible for investigating referrals, determining legal sufficiency, and writing and filing petitions. DJOs determine which cases should be handled formally and forwarded to the juvenile court for processing, and which can be disposed of informally, either through dismissal or informal supervision.[75]

DJOs also administer more traditional juvenile court probation services, which include predisposition investigations, dispositional recommendations, and probation supervision. Depending on the circumstances and the results of risk/needs assessments, DJOs may recommend a youth be placed in out-of-home services such as a private licensed residential care facility, or with a member of the child's family. They may also recommend that a child be committed to DYS and/or Missouri's Children's Division (Missouri's child welfare agency).

d. Detention Facilities

By the end of 2011, Missouri had 19 juvenile detention facilities run by the circuit courts.[76] Not all judicial circuits have a juvenile detention facility, so those that do not enter into an agreement with juvenile detention facilities to detain youth if necessary. In 2011, Missouri's detention facilities admitted at least 6,953 juveniles.[77]

Detention reform has been a part of the Missouri juvenile justice agenda since 2006 when several counties began to work with the Annie E. Casey Foundation Juvenile Detention Alternatives Initiative (JDAI). There are now 18 JDAI sites in Missouri, each focusing on reducing the unnecessary detention of youth in the delinquency system.[78] Missouri has committed to state expansion of JDAI and developed a JDAI replication team to oversee new sites.[79] To support these reform measures, the Missouri Supreme Court has issued orders mandating a statewide risk-assessment instrument and the downsizing of multiple detention facilities.[80]

2. Missouri Division of Youth Services (DYS)

DYS is the state agency responsible for the care and treatment of delinquent youth committed to its custody by the state courts.[81] DYS is a subsection of the Missouri Department of Social Services.[82]

DYS operates under a unique model of corrections that is known nationally as the "Missouri Model."[83] This model emphasizes rehabilitation in small regional facilities with therapeutic environments rather than the traditional model of larger, more punitive adult-style corrections facilities.[84] The "Missouri Model" has been looked at and replicated by a number of other states seeking alternatives to their adult-style corrections models.

DYS runs 32 juvenile residential facilities throughout Missouri,[85] and is responsible for juveniles placed into the custody of the state by the court. Therefore, DYS has substantial control over the confinement of youth.[86] Juveniles in Missouri are subject to indeterminate sentencing.[87] Once placed in DYS custody, the agency determines whether a juvenile will be placed in a residential facility, how long to hold a juvenile, when a juvenile will be released, and how long he or she will be supervised after release.[88] Although judges occasionally impose a minimum period of custody, DYS usually controls release.

C. Structure of Missouri's Indigent Defense System

The Missouri State Public Defender System (MSPD) provides representation for both adult and juvenile cases.[89] The mission of MSPD is:

> To provide high quality, zealous advocacy for indigent people who are accused of a crime in the State of Missouri. The lawyers, administrative staff, and support staff will ensure that this advocacy is not compromised. To provide this uncompromised advocacy, the Defender System will supply each client with a high-quality, competent, ardent defense team at every stage of the process in which public defenders are necessary.[90]

MSPD encompasses 33 district offices with three additional offices located in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Columbia that handle capital and appellate cases. The Public Defender Commission—which governs MSPD—consists of seven individuals appointed by the governor. These commissioners also are responsible for hiring MSPD's Director.

In Missouri, juveniles have a right to counsel for all stages of the proceedings.[91] Youth can either hire their own attorney or ask that one be appointed. Missouri law entitles every party in juvenile courts to be represented by counsel.[92] By statute, the court must appoint counsel for a child prior to the filing of a petition if a request is made and the court finds that the child is the subject of a juvenile court proceeding. The court must also find that the child making the request is indigent.[93]

In order to be indigent, a person—including a juvenile—must establish that he or she does not have the means available to him or her to obtain counsel on his or her behalf. This determination is based on all the circumstances of the case including ability to make bond, income, and the number of persons dependent on the person moving to be found indigent for support.[94] The primary factor to determine indigency is income.[95] In order to be eligible for public defender services, a person must not have income that exceeds the federal poverty guidelines as issued in the Federal Register.[96] For 2013, a single person household must make $11,490 or less in order to qualify.[97] Under Missouri regulations, when determining the income level, a person's debts and expenses, a spouse's income, and assets need to be taken into account.[98] "If a defendant is receiving disability payments, pension, unemployment compensation, or Social Security, this is considered income and the amount of the payment must be considered."[99] If a person is under 18, the parents' income must also be considered.[100] A Missouri Court of Appeals decision held that parents are not required to procure counsel for their child, and that the income and assets of the juvenile are the only consideration for whether an appointment is appropriate.[101]

In response to toughening penalties for juveniles enacted in 1995, MSPD established separate juvenile public defender units, called Youth Advocacy Units, to serve St. Louis City and County in 1997, and another in Kansas City in 2000.[102] These Youth Advocacy Units were designed to be a model for juvenile representation throughout the state and to help train other public defenders on juvenile issues.[103] These units were responsible for reducing the number of children transferred to adult court and increasing public awareness of juvenile law.[104] However, Missouri's ongoing budget crisis resulted in the elimination of the MSPD Juvenile Advocacy Units in 2007.

III. OVERVIEW OF DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS IN MISSOURI: A SUMMARY OF THE JUVENILE COURT STATUTE

A. Juvenile Court Jurisdiction

In a judicial circuit, the juvenile or the family court has exclusive jurisdiction in juvenile cases involving abuse and neglect, status offenses, and delinquency. Under the Missouri Juvenile Code, "child" means any person younger than 17 years of age, or who is 17 years old and alleged to have committed a status offense.[105] The juvenile or family court has jurisdiction over status offenses and delinquency cases where a person that is 17 and under is alleged to have committed a status offense,[106] or is alleged to have violated state law or municipal ordinance prior to becoming 17.[107]

[106] Id. A status offense is one that is only illegal because of the child's age—i.e. truancy, curfew, etc.
[107] § 211.031.1(3).

Juvenile court may retain its jurisdiction over a child until he or she turns 21, unless the child is in DYS custody.[108] DYS can petition the court to retain jurisdiction up to age 21 if it determines the child is still in need of services.[109] Even when a child has been committed to DYS, the court can regain jurisdiction by requesting it from DYS. This jurisdiction does not include cases where the youth has committed an offense after turning 17.[110]

The juvenile or family court does not have jurisdiction over:

- Any child who is a resident or found in the county, is over 15 years old, and is alleged to have violated a state or municipal traffic law that is not a felony;
- Any child who is over 15 years old and alleged to have violated the prohibition on the possession or use of tobacco by minors;[111]
- Any child who is 17 years old unless he or she is alleged to have committed a status offense; or
- Any youth between 17 and 21 years old that the court had retained continuing jurisdiction, if that youth committed a criminal offense between those ages.[112]

The juvenile court has concurrent jurisdiction with:

- The municipal court over any child alleged to have violated a municipal curfew ordinance;
- The circuit court for any child who is alleged to have violated a state or municipal ordinance involving use of any tobacco product;[113] and
- The adult court for a youth younger than17 years old who has been transferred to adult court and whose prosecution results in a conviction or plea of guilty, if the court chooses to invoke dual jurisdiction and impose a juvenile disposition that would postpone the execution of an adult criminal sentence.

Not all juvenile cases are handled by the juvenile courts. A child between the ages of 12 and 17 who has committed an offense that would be considered a felony if committed by an adult can be transferred or "certified" to adult court by motion of the court, juvenile officer (probation officer), child, or the child's custodian. The court has discretion whether to certify the case to adult court and must hold a hearing on the motion. In the case of certain serious felonies, there is no age limit for certification, and the court must hold a hearing before deciding to dismiss the juvenile petition and transfer the case to adult court.[114]

B. Pre-Adjudication Custody and Detention

In Missouri, a youth may be taken into judicial custody through a court order, by a police officer, or by a juvenile officer. The juvenile court gains legal authority over youth as soon as they are taken into custody.[115] Although taking a juvenile into judicial custody is not legally considered to be an arrest, youth may be taken into custody when it is alleged that they violated state criminal laws or municipal ordinances. Youth may also be taken into judicial custody for several types of status offenses.[116]

In Missouri, youth who are taken into custody must be advised of the following prior to interrogation:

- They have the right to remain silent;
- That any statement they make to anyone can be and may be used against them;
- They have the right to have a parent, guardian, or custodian present during questioning;
- They have the right to consult with an attorney and that one will be appointed and paid for them if they cannot afford one; and
- That even though they begin to talk, the youth retains the right to stop talking at any time.[117]

The person who takes the youth into judicial custody must immediately notify a juvenile officer and undertake a reasonable attempt to notify the juvenile's parents, guardian, or custodian. If someone besides a juvenile officer takes the youth into custody, he or she must submit a written report to the juvenile officer as soon as possible within 12 hours. The written report must state the facts and circumstances that led to the youth being taken into custody and the reasons the juvenile was not released.[118] The detained youth must be immediately informed verbally and in writing of the reason for detention, the right to remain silent, the right to counsel, the right to a detention hearing, and his or her rights during secure detention.[119]

"Generally, juveniles should not be held in secure detention unless they present a risk to public safety or may fail to appear in court for their hearing."[120] Each juvenile held in custody is rated using the juvenile detention assessment (JDTA) written checklist of criteria for specific detention-related risks. The overall risk score is a guide in making the initial decision whether to detain a juvenile in secure detention, utilize an alternative to secure detention, or release him or her to a custodian with or without conditions pending a hearing.[121]

In order for a youth to be placed in detention, the juvenile court must issue an order that he or she be detained, or the juvenile officer must order a 24-hour temporary detention.[122] During this time, the juvenile officer must obtain sufficient information from the law enforcement officer conducting the investigation, file a petition or a motion to modify, and submit it to the judge for an order of temporary detention. Within the 24-hour period, a juvenile judge must review the complaint or motion to modify and any supporting reports and statements. Upon reviewing these documents, the judge may order that the juvenile be released or detained pending a detention hearing. The judge may order continued detention only upon determining that: (1) probable cause exists that the juvenile committed the alleged delinquent or status offense; and (2) conditions requiring continuing detention exist.[123]

If the judge orders the child continue to be detained, a detention hearing must be held within three days, not including Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays, unless the court continues the hearing for good cause.[124] At the detention hearing, the judge simply determines whether or not there is good reason to detain the youth until the adjudicatory hearing. In order to continue detention, the judge must make specific findings about the need for continued detention.[125] If the court orders that the youth be detained after this hearing, the court must review the order every 30 days until the final order of disposition.[126] If a juvenile is released, the court may place limitations upon what the youth is permitted to do, who he is allowed to see, and to whom he is released.[127]

C. Diversion and Informal Adjustment

In Missouri, youth not formally processed through the juvenile court can go through an informal court process or be referred to diversion programs. Missouri law enables government subsidies for early intervention programs designed to keep at-risk youth out of the formal justice system, while retaining supervision over the youth through a diversion program.[128] These programs were created to divert juveniles from the formal system, provide services, and maintain some level of oversight.

Prior to filing a petition, the juvenile officer can decide that an informal adjustment is appropriate for a case and will hold an informal adjustment conference with the youth and his or her parent, guardian, or custodian.[129] The juvenile officer must counsel and advise the youth and his or her parent, guardian, or custodian about the right to counsel and the right to remain silent when an informal adjustment is made. The youth is required to admit to the allegations, and, if done so, such informal adjustment is considered in the juvenile's court history as an admitted referral. The adjustment can include supervision by the juvenile officer and temporary placement of the youth with an appropriate person other than the parent, guardian, or custodian.[130] At any time, the juvenile officer can terminate the informal process without further proceedings or file a petition in the interest of the juvenile. However, the informal adjustment process cannot continue beyond 12 months from the date of the informal adjustment agreement.[131]

D. Petition

Before the juvenile can be brought before a juvenile court, information must be referred to the juvenile officer, who makes a preliminary inquiry to either make an informal adjustment or file a petition.[132] Filing a petition formally creates a juvenile court case.[133] If it does not appear that there is sufficient information to bring a juvenile into the jurisdiction of the court, the complaining witness is notified and can seek the attention of a judicial officer who determines the necessity of additional investigation.[134]

When petitions are filed for delinquency and status offenses in juvenile court, the court clerk must issue a summons for service to all parties. The summons, which should be personally served, requires the juvenile and the juvenile's parents, guardian, or custodian to appear at the hearing date set.[135] If the juvenile is detained, the judicial officer shall ensure that the juvenile is brought to the hearing.[136] Personal service must occur at least 24 hours before the time set for the hearing, but when circumstances permit, earlier notice should be given.[137]

The petition may be amended with approval from the court at any time, and a petition can be dismissed by the juvenile officer.[138]

E. Adjudication Hearing

If the juvenile officer does not initiate an informal adjustment, the case will be filed by petition and proceed to adjudication. The adjudication stage is the juvenile equivalent of trials in the adult criminal justice system. At the adjudication hearing, the court will hear juvenile admissions on allegations in the petition or motion to modify and shall receive evidence on those allegations that have not been admitted.[139] The court must also determine: (1) whether the juvenile and the juvenile's parents, guardian, or custodian have received notice of the hearing and been informed of the allegations and the range of possible dispositions if the allegations are admitted or proved; (2) whether the juvenile has been informed of the right to counsel and, unless counsel has been previously retained or waived, whether he or she objects to proceeding without counsel; and (3) whether the juvenile's parents, guardian, or custodian have been informed of the right to counsel and whether any objections to proceeding without counsel exist.[140]

The adjudication hearing must be held on the record.[141] During the hearing, the rules of evidence apply and all parties are afforded the opportunity to testify, present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, present arguments of law and fact, and assert arguments concerning the weight, credibility, and effect of the evidence.[142] To reach a finding of guilt in a delinquency proceeding, the court must find that the state proved the allegations beyond a reasonable doubt.[143] For allegations of status offenses, the government's standard of proof is by clear and convincing evidence.[144]

F. Disposition

If a juvenile is found to have violated the law, a disposition hearing is held to determine placement or treatment. The juvenile court may hold a dispositional hearing either separately or immediately after an adjudication hearing.[145] At a disposition hearing, the court must determine and make findings on the disposition, or sentence, to be imposed on the juvenile. The disposition findings include the legal and physical custody of the youth, as well as any services, treatment, and placement necessary to facilitate the care, protection, and discipline of the youth.[146] The court must receive evidence at a hearing on the record and must make a determination that is in the best interests of the youth.[147] Although the rules of evidence do not apply, all parties must have the opportunity to testify, present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, present arguments of law and fact, and present arguments concerning the weight, credibility, and effect of the evidence.[148]

The court must admit into evidence any social study, recommendations of the DJO, any support regarding the recommendations of the DJO, and material relevant to determining the appropriate disposition in the interest of the juvenile.[149] The court, or any party, may order a social study, which must include an investigation and evaluation of the habits, surroundings, conditions, and tendencies of the youth and the youth's parents, guardian, or custodian.[150] All ordered evaluations and reports must be made available to all parties, attorneys, guardians ad litem, and volunteer advocates at least 15 days prior to any dispositional hearing.[151]

There are several dispositional options for youth that have been adjudicated delinquent. Youth may be placed at home on probation with in-home services, placed in a residential facility, or committed to DYS.[152] Additional sanctions may also be brought against adjudicated youth. The state can suspend or revoke a state or local driver's license;[153] the youth can be ordered to make restitution;[154] or the court can select an organization at which the juvenile is required to complete community service.[155] If the juvenile violated a municipal ordinance or committed what would otherwise constitute a misdemeanor, the court may order the juvenile pay $25 to the clerk of the court.[156] The juvenile may be assessed $50 if he or she committed an act that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult.[157]

The most restrictive disposition option is a commitment to the Missouri DYS. Any child may be committed to the custody of DYS when the court determines a suitable community-based treatment service does not exist or has been proven ineffective. The court can place youth in DYS custody only after it has determined and made findings on: (1) whether reasonable efforts were made to prevent or eliminate the need for removal of the youth from home; and (2) that it would not be in the best interest of the child to stay in the home.[158] The court may specify a minimum length of stay at DYS or leave it to DYS's discretion.[159] If the youth is committed to DYS, jurisdiction of the juvenile court is terminated.

In Missouri, courts must biennially review a random sample of assessments of children and the disposition of each child's case to recommend assessment and disposition equity throughout the state.[160] The statute does not explicitly provide a method for review, but requires that the confidentiality of the cases be protected.[161] This review should also examine any racial disparity in certification to adult court.[162]

G. Post-disposition Proceedings

After a disposition order has been entered, the juvenile has the right to appeal the sentence. A juvenile or a parent, guardian, legal custodian, relative, or next friend, on the juvenile's behalf, can appeal any final judgment, order, or decree under the juvenile code.[163] Notice of appeal must be filed within 30 days after the judgment, disposition order, or decree has been entered. Notice of appeal or any motion filed subsequent to the final judgment does not suspend the judgment unless the court orders it.[164] Counsel for a child must serve at all stages of the juvenile court proceedings, including appeal, unless relieved by the court.[165] Delinquency appeals are heard by the Missouri Court of Appeals and may be heard by the Missouri Supreme Court upon its own discretion.[166]

Appeals are not the only form of post-dispositional relief. A disposition order may be changed at any time by the court's own motion.[167] The juvenile officer, parent, legal guardian, custodian, spouse, relative, or next friend of a child that is committed to the custody of an institution or agency can also petition the court at any time for a modification of the custody order.[168] The court can deny the petition without a hearing or can conduct a hearing about the issues in the petition and make orders regarding those issues as it determines to be proper.[169]

Extraordinary writs—such as habeas corpus and mandamus—are available to challenge a youth's confinement as illegal, if the confinement itself is unlawful (when minors, for example, are held in adult jails despite statutory prohibitions), if the juvenile's detention exceeds statutory length, or if harmful conditions exist.[170]

H. Children in Adult Criminal Court

For youth between the ages of 12 and 17, a hearing to certify a youth to adult court is required and is only allowed if the child has committed an offense that would have been a felony if committed by an adult.[171] The juvenile court has discretion over whether or not a juvenile petition should be dismissed and transferred to adult court for youth under 17 years old. Youth who commit criminal offenses at the age of 17 are automatically tried in adult court, as individuals 17 and older do not fall under the definition of "child" in Missouri's juvenile court system.[172]

There is no age limit for certification to adult court if the petition alleges that the child committed any of the following felonies: (1) first degree murder; (2) second degree murder; (3) first degree assault; (4) forcible rape; (5) forcible sodomy; (6) first degree robbery; and/or (7) distribution of drugs.[173] Transfer to adult court is also permitted if the juvenile committed two or more prior unrelated felony offenses.[174] In these cases, the court is required to hold a hearing on whether the child should be certified. Written notice of the certification hearing must be given to the juvenile and his or her custodian consistent with state law.[175]

In preparation for a certification hearing, the juvenile officer must prepare a written report that includes all available information relevant to the criteria to be considered by the court, including but not limited to:

- The seriousness of the offense alleged and whether protection of the community requires transfer to a court of general jurisdiction;
- Whether the offense alleged involves viciousness, force, and violence;
- Whether the offense alleged was against persons or property with greater weight being given to the offense against persons, especially if personal injury resulted;
- Whether the offense alleged is part of a repetitive pattern of offenses which indicates that the child may be beyond rehabilitation under the juvenile code;
- The record and history of the child, including experience with the juvenile justice system, other courts, supervision, commitments to juvenile institutions, and other placements;

- The sophistication and maturity of the child as determined by consideration of his home and environmental situation, emotional condition, and pattern of living;
- The age of the child;
- The program and facilities available to the juvenile court in considering disposition;
- Whether or not the child can benefit from the treatment or rehabilitative program available to the juvenile court; and
- Racial disparity in certification.[176]

If the court dismisses the juvenile court petition and allows a child to be prosecuted in adult court, jurisdiction of the juvenile court over that child is terminated forever, unless the child is found not guilty.[177]

When sentencing a certified juvenile, Missouri law allows the adult court to invoke dual jurisdiction of both the criminal and juvenile codes. This allows the court to impose a juvenile disposition as a condition of the suspended adult criminal sentence. When the youth reaches the age of 17, the court must hold a hearing to revoke the suspension and order the youth to be taken to the Department of Corrections, direct that the offender be placed on probation, or direct that the offender remain in the custody of DYS, if DYS agrees to the placement.[178]

If DYS agrees to the placement, it must petition the court for a hearing before it releases a child under dual jurisdiction at any time before he or she reaches the age of 21. At that time, the court can either revoke the suspended adult sentence or direct that the youth be placed on probation.[179]

IV. CONCLUSION

The Missouri juvenile court system is similar to other states in many ways and is distinctive in several other ways that have a significant impact on the due process rights of youth. The findings in the next chapter will describe the strengths of this system as well as the challenges that impact access to justice for youth in Missouri's delinquency courts.

CHAPTER THREE
Assessment Findings and Analysis

This chapter begins with key findings about Missouri's system of juvenile indigent defense and the barriers to providing an effective juvenile defense delivery system. Overarching themes related to resources, structure, and juvenile court culture are important to better understand the climate in which juvenile indigent defense operates. The second section presents a discussion of barriers that limit youth's access to counsel as well as issues related to the timing and appointment of counsel. Section three is devoted to the examination of barriers to effective juvenile defense practice, focusing on key stages of proceedings, and practices which impede fundamental fairness and the establishment of an adequately trained and prepared defense bar. The chapter concludes with strengths and promising practices that were observed or highlighted.

I. BARRIERS TO PROVIDING AN EFFECTIVE JUVENILE INDIGENT DEFENSE SYSTEM

A. Inadequate Resources to Ensure Effective Juvenile Defense

A discussion about Missouri's juvenile defense delivery system must necessarily acknowledge that the entire indigent defense system in Missouri is in crisis, and has been struggling for over the last two decades.[180] MSPD has not been fully staffed to meet caseload requirements since 1989—the year the public defender system went statewide to assume responsibility for all of Missouri's indigent defendants. Growing caseloads throughout the 1990s outpaced staffing levels and peaked by 2004. In the years following, the number of indigent criminal cases did not decrease. MSPD was forced to find ways to keep their caseloads manageable and alleviate the critical overload.[181]

In 2005, the Missouri Bar President chaired a Task Force on indigent defense which hired a national consulting group to do an outside assessment of the Public Defender system. The findings of that report noted that the Missouri system had the lowest per capita expenditure of all statewide public defender systems, and noted that attorneys were "practicing triage" in violation of ethical and constitutional requirements.[182] In 2007, after a Senate Interim Committee recommended caseload reductions and increases in both attorney and support staff,[183] MSPD received $1.15 million to help cover cases by contracting out to private attorneys.[184] In desperation, the Public Defender Commission retained the advice and counsel of the Partner in Charge of the Community Services Team at the law firm Holland & Knight,[185] and worked toward enactment of an administrative rule to determine maximum allowable caseloads for each office and authorized the director to place an office on "limited availability" status once it exceeded this maximum for three consecutive months. The limited availability rule went into effect in the fall of 2008.[186] In 2009, the Missouri legislature adopted a law to statutorily clarify that the Commission had the authority to set and enforce caseload limits for public defender offices; however, the governor vetoed this legislation with a message that the real fix for this problem was more resources.[187]

The Missouri Bar Foundation then hired the same national consulting group and the George Mason University Center for Law, Justice, and Society to conduct a follow-up study in hopes of developing a caseload standard to determine specific needs. That study was unable to make that determination as hoped. The study revealed a situation so dire that to recommend standards "would serve only to institutionalize bad practices."[188] The Missouri Supreme Court then decided that the public defender could not turn away categories of cases due to case overload and that the proper remedy was to make the office unavailable until it could reduce the caseload below the standards set by the Commission.

By 2010, MSPD received a meager $250,000 increase in additional funding, and notified 22 judicial districts, including 43 counties, that the public defender offices serving them were at risk of closing their doors to additional cases until there were drastic reductions in caseloads. The responses by the judiciary were varied; some courts began appointing private lawyers to handle juvenile cases, while others increased pre-screening of probation violation reports. A number of prosecutors agreed to waive jail time on lower level offenses. While this helped, it did not bring the public defender offices within maximum allowable caseloads.[189] By July of 2010, two counties were "certified" and placed on limited availability status.[190] By the end of 2011, eight offices serving 23 counties were certified and were taking steps to refuse cases in excess of their maximum monthly intake under the Commission's regulations.[191]

MSPD challenged the appointment of new cases by the court in Christian County in a writ taken to the Missouri Supreme Court. A Special Master was assigned to take evidence on the reasonableness and accuracy of the Caseload Protocol that the Commission adopted and held hearings in late 2010.[192] In July of 2012, the Missouri Supreme Court held that because there was no finding by the trial court that the rule was invalid or inapplicable, the trial court should have respected the rule and applied it. The opinion does not resolve the caseload crisis in Missouri. It merely reduces the number of cases handled by MSPD, not the number filed by prosecutors. The Court recognized that "the inherent authority of courts to manage their caseloads in this manner will continue and should be utilized so as to best ensure that a defendant's constitutional rights, the defender's ethical duties, and the State's right to prosecute wrongdoers are respected."[193] While the opinion does not invalidate the process currently being used to certify counties as unavailable for accepting new cases, the ultimate lack of resources to provide a constitutionally sound system has yet to be addressed. As of October 1, 2012, 18 of MSPD's trial district offices were certified and placed on limited availability and another nine were pending certification.[194]

The formula established by MSPD for determining maximum allowable workloads is based upon the number of attorney hours needed to effectively handle each case. Cases are "weighted" generally based upon the anticipated number of attorney hours needed. Juvenile cases are weighted at 10 hours each.[195] Of the 80,588 new cases opened through the trial division in 2012,[196] only 1,923 were juvenile delinquency or status offender cases.[197] This means that juvenile cases were little more than 2% of the MSPD caseload in 2012.

It is against this backdrop that the juvenile defense delivery system must be analyzed. In Fiscal Year 2012, the Missouri Supreme Court reported a total of 4,631 new juvenile delinquency and status offense petitions statewide.[198] MSPD reports that during the same time period, it was assigned only 1,923 juvenile delinquency or status offender cases.[199] With only 24 juvenile cases contracted out to private counsel due to conflicts of case overload, this leaves questions about access to counsel for approximately 60% of Missouri's court-involved youth.[200]

The mystery of what happens to the vast majority of youth who come before Missouri's court on delinquency and status charges that are not encompassed in MSPD's data has begun to unravel. With the exception of the few counties observed rigorously defending the right to counsel for juveniles, and a few which assign and pay for private counsel or enlist pro bono help, youth are discouraged from and systematically denied counsel throughout the state. This denial of due process is well known, and it is deeply entrenched in the culture of many juvenile courts, as evidenced by the many interviews, reports, and other sources of information reviewed as part of this inquiry.

Youth are discouraged from and systematically denied counsel throughout the state.

But the issue of resource deficiencies does not tell the whole story. The lack of understanding about the critical role of counsel for juveniles is intertwined with minimizing the allocation of resources and justifying the lack of necessity of ensuring youth are provided lawyers. The very structure of the system, with a strong emphasis on diversion and a model corrections program, may well lend itself to support the denial of counsel. Although perhaps intended to further the best interests of youth, their legal rights are ignored. These barriers combine to create a culture where many if not most youth proceed unrepresented through juvenile court proceedings.

B. Notable Service Delivery System for Youth but Insufficient Emphasis on Basic Due Process Guarantees

Missouri has long been recognized for its successful approach in having a solid continuum of care for community-based services and for providing treatment and rehabilitation for youth in the delinquency system in small, regionalized facilities. The investigative team was impressed by the practices in many counties to divert low level offenders from formal court processing and to handle a significant percentage of juvenile cases informally. One investigator visiting a medium-sized county noted that it was "simply remarkable in the number of cases that are referred to diversion.... Only 10% of cases are filed, and these cases are described as youth who did not successfully complete diversion or 'serious' cases."

Indeed, in its 2011 report, OSCA data showed a total of 29,110 law violations by juveniles, of which more than 69% were misdemeanors.[201] Fewer than 19% of the total offenses were felony level, and only about 3% were A or B level felonies.[202] 81% of law violation cases were disposed of through the informal court process.[203] Of the remaining cases, the most common formal dispositions included in-home supervision (10%), and placement outside of the home (5%).[204] For status offense cases, 88% were disposed of informally. In-home supervision was the most common formal disposition (6.4% of cases.)[205] About 3.4% of status offenders were placed outside of home upon formal disposition.[206]

Another investigator described one of the treatment facilities as "an amazing secure facility with wonderful programming." One seasoned investigator who spends significant time touring juvenile facilities as part of his job indicated, "I have a highly developed ability to assess when a facility presents itself in one way but is in fact completely different. [This] facility seemed to me to be absolutely what it claims to be, a humane and caring environment dedicated to meaningful rehabilitation." The process also identified well-regarded practices by some courts to determine whether a youth's behavior was symptomatic of abuse, neglect, and/or mental health issues, or whether the behavior actually requires any "treatment."

However, a good system of services and programming for this population does not negate the need for adequate due process protections. In Missouri, there appears to be an imbalance between acknowledging and protecting the basic rights established in In re Gault over 45 years ago and adjudicating youth delinquent in order to meet the perceived treatment needs of the youth before the court.[207] Unfortunately, due process protections often lose out under the guise of rehabilitation and treatment.

This is evidenced by the fact that a very high number of youth are committed to DYS for misdemeanors, technical violations, status offenses, and non-violent felony offenses. Of the 920 youth committed to DYS in 2012, 39.7% of the total commitments were for class C, D, and/or unspecified felonies, which include property offenses, drug crimes, and theft. Just over 38% of youth were committed to DYS for misdemeanors and other non-felonies, which include probation violations and escapes from custody. Finally, 10.9% of youth committed to DYS were committed for juvenile offenses such as truancy and curfew violations.[208] The need for heightened due process protections is underscored by the fact that the majority of youth committed to DYS are there for non-violent, low-level offenses and technical violations.

As one juvenile court judge noted, "The choices for juvenile justice systems are either great outcomes and no due process or great due process and no good outcomes. The trick is to mix the best of both worlds to marry procedure with compassion."

An excellent step toward achieving the goal of marrying procedure with compassion was the establishment of the Youth Advocacy Units by MSPD in 1997. The offices were created in recognition of the unique nature of juvenile law, and the differing needs of young clients. They were also established in recognition of increased legislative penalties for juveniles, and to ensure protections were in place similar to their adult counterparts. The units included juvenile dispositional specialists to develop client-driven disposition plans and placement options. Juvenile attorneys in these offices served as trainers and advisors to other defender offices with smaller juvenile caseloads. The programs successfully documented reductions in DYS commitments and adult certifications, while serving many other functions. Falling victim to budget cuts, the units were eliminated in 2007. As the Public Defender Commission notes in its 2007 report:

> The programs were doing good work. However, with the shortage of resources in the rest of the system, the extra resources devoted to juvenile practice could no longer > be supported. Those offices were eliminated; the two juvenile dispositional specialist positions were converted to attorney FTE, and the juvenile cases rolled back into the regular caseloads of the existing trial offices in those areas. Those involved in Missouri's juvenile justice system consider this a major step backward and a failure of Missouri's public defender system. They are correct. There is nothing else MSPD can eliminate, reduce, or change to shore up the system.[209]

[208] Missouri Division of Youth Services FY 2012 Annual Report 7 (2012).

The Juvenile Advocacy Units could have been a significant driver in enhancing juvenile defense practices in Missouri by modeling a culture of child-focused representation. The assessment team found no concerted attempts to incorporate the concepts of the Juvenile Advocacy Units into current practice.

C. Structural Challenges Minimize the Role of Defense Counsel

The structure of the Missouri juvenile court, by its very nature, creates conflicting roles. Juvenile court judges have a direct (or at least an indirect) supervisory role over legal officers (juvenile prosecutors) and DJO's (probation officers). The requirement of neutrality on the part of the judges, as well as independent decision making on the part of the legal officers in a prosecutorial role, is compromised under such a structure.

Similarly, many have expressed concern that practices bordering on the unauthorized practice of law by some DJOs create potential legal and ethical problems for some courts. In addition to judicial monitoring and oversight, DJOs are represented by legal officers in all court proceedings. Prosecutors literally stand in as general counsel for DJOs in the same hearings where they are supposed to represent the interests of the state. DJOs make many of the filing (i.e. legal sufficiency) decisions that are more appropriately made by prosecutors. DJOs in Missouri have roles and responsibilities that include duties typically carried out by law enforcement, probation, and prosecution. This comingling of duties creates an inherent conflict in their role with youth.

> The [DJO's] have major role confusion, veering from caring and protective advocacy for the child's interest to interrogation and punishment, and sometimes using caring, protective approaches to get statements to ensure punishment."

The judiciary is responding to this issue and concerns about the allegations of unauthorized practice of law by DJOs, who are not attorneys. A recent inquiry by the State Court Administrator found that in some circuits DJOs were representing themselves in court proceedings and preparing their own pleadings. In other circuits, DJO's were represented by counsel but still drafted and signed pleadings.[210] The inquiry suggested that some of the DJO activities may constitute the unauthorized practice of law and noted that changes could have a significant effect on some long standing practices in some circuits.[211]

The role of the DJO is problematic in other ways. It was described by one legal officer as "basically a pre-Gault role." The DJOs are required by their position to advise youth of their rights, investigate the allegations, prosecute the case in court, present their arguments for disposition, and then monitor the youth if placed on probation. As one investigator noted, "the bad aspect of this approach is that the [DJO's] have major role confusion, veering from caring and protective advocacy for the child's interest to interrogation and punishment, and sometimes using caring, protective approaches to get statements to ensure punishment." In State of Missouri v. Bustamante, a 2011 decision by a Missouri trial court noted this role confusion when it held that a DJO went far beyond her statutory role when describing herself as an advocate for the youth while obtaining incriminating statements that were ultimately suppressed as a result.[212] The court noted that the DJO used deceptive practices to suggest to the youth that she was an "advocate" looking at best interest, but involvement in the interrogation of the youth exceeded her role as a DJO.[213]

Although the investigative team met many passionate and caring individuals who served as DJOs, their role in the ultimate disposition of cases often impeded the ability of the case to proceed with adequate due process, including the appointment of and assistance of counsel. DJOs are involved in deciding whether—and often what—charges get filed, engaging in interrogation, reading Miranda rights, and taking signed statements from youth during these sessions that can be used against them. They also prepare reports and make recommendations to the court. There was a limited understanding by many of the DJOs as to the role that defense counsel played throughout the proceedings, particularly during the investigation and fact-finding phases. As such, there was often little regard, and in some cases actual resistance, to youth representation at early stages in the proceedings or at all.

Counties varied in the degree to which they embraced a "pre-Gault, best interest" court. In several counties there was a court culture that appeared to exert pressure on defenders to work as a team with the other stakeholders, while most counties did exert both covert and overt pressure for attorneys to minimize zealous advocacy and work with the judge and the DJO to obtain services for youth coming in contact with the court. In one county, there was a blatant disrespect for the role of defenders as expressed interest advocates. A public defender interviewed there said, "Adversarial posturing does not work – collaboration and social work does. [PDs] have a unique role in this system; it's more social work than legal work."

II. BARRIERS LIMITING ACCESS TO COUNSEL

A. Waiver of Counsel Among Children in the Juvenile Court is Alarmingly High

The Missouri State Public Defender represents only a portion of the total delinquency cases filed each year. As mentioned earlier, in Fiscal Year 2012, the Missouri Supreme Court reported a total of 4,631 new juvenile delinquency and status offense petitions statewide.[214] MSPD reports that during the same time period, it was assigned only 1,923 juvenile delinquency or status offender cases.[215] 24 juvenile cases were contracted out to private counsel due to conflicts of case overload.[216] Nearly 60% of the youth that come before the Missouri courts are not represented by the state's designated system of indigent defense.

Nearly 60% of the youth that come before the Missouri courts are not represented by the state's designated system of indigent defense.

It cannot be determined with certainty that these youth all waive the appointment of counsel and their right to counsel, or are otherwise denied lawyers. In some counties, judges have reported using privately appointed counsel for juvenile cases, or at least for cases which arise after the local office is certified and unavailable to take new cases. In at least one county, there was reported appointment in all cases, with no involvement of MSPD. The judge in this county stated that, "No youth can understand enough to waive counsel. It is a fundamental fairness system. No youth can understand that process." A handful of other courts have utilized pro bono attorneys to represent juveniles. There is no consistent data kept or reported on the remaining roughly 60% of cases not provided lawyers through MSPD. However, based upon observations and interviews in multiple sites, the number of youth who proceed without counsel is alarmingly high in many counties. The reasons for and the rates of waiver of counsel vary by jurisdiction, but several important themes emerged during site visits and in interviews.

First and foremost, the impact of limits on availability of defense counsel in the adult indigent defense system is magnified in juvenile court. In counties that are "certified," judges cannot exceed capacity in their number of appointments and the weighted point value assigned to each type of case. As one judge explained, cases are assigned a number of hours, and for juvenile cases, that number is ten hours, regardless of the complexity or seriousness of the case. Adult probation violations are ten hours, and felony cases are at 33 hours. He could not appoint juveniles attorneys once he reached his threshold numerically. There was enormous frustration on the part of public defenders, judges, and legal officers in these certified counties where "rationing" of hours resulted in youth being denied lawyers even when they were eligible and requested them. As one public defender pointed out, "In a month where the judge doesn't have to worry about numbers, he will send us cases. If he has to be concerned about hours, they push kids into waiving a lawyer."

"In a month where the judge doesn't have to worry about numbers, he will send us cases. If he has to be concerned about hours, they push kids into waiving a lawyer."

One of the most troubling findings by investigators is the role that the DJO often plays in directly or indirectly promoting waiver of counsel. One investigator noted, "Defense attorney presence is de miminus. The public defender is rarely involved and there is no significant private bar involvement.... These children do not consult with an attorney. The DJO is clearly in control of the system. The officers [DJOs] screen cases, take pre-trial statements and admissions from the child, determine whether to prosecute, and prepare reports and recommendations for sentencing.... While the nature of offenses being dealt with are not generally serious, what this means is that the net is wider and guilt and challenging legal issues becomes lost. The culture is supported by a 'not much is at stake attitude.'"

One DJO explained that they get police reports, statements from youth, and "...everything we need. After the process is done, kids don't ask for lawyers. They might want one just for disposition." This officer did not see how a lawyer could make a difference in most cases because, "the judge already knows we have exhausted resources."

Parents also have an important role to play in the proceedings, and their support and resources can have a significant positive effect on the outcome of the case. But parental consultation should not substitute for the advice of an attorney who can best counsel the child regarding the facts of the case, possible defenses, the range of penalties, and potential collateral consequences of adjudication. Parents may exert undue influence over the youth to admit to charges, take responsibility, and move the case to disposition without understanding the possible dangers of self-representation. In some cases, parental conflicts were noted (e.g. where they were the victim), or the parent simply did not want to return to court for financial, employment, logistic, or other reasons.

Investigators noted that youth often waived their right to counsel without understanding what an attorney does or why one might be important to the case. When asked if youth understood the rights they are waiving, one judge admitted, "[N]o, they don't. For two reasons: kids are trying to avoid additional expenses for their parents, and the parents say, 'this is nothing.'" The financial considerations were noted by some investigators as well. One individual noted that "the fact that the Office of the Public Defender charges a significant amount of money to represent indigent clients (including detained juveniles) and that the amount is significantly less if the child enters a guilty plea is likely an added incentive to waive counsel or, if not to waive counsel, to plead guilty." Others noted that youth do not understand the role of counsel and assume there is nothing that an attorney can do about their cases. Youth are also encouraged to wind up their cases and plead out without counsel by DJOs. In spite of the fact that all youth should be presumed eligible in terms of indigence, counsel is discouraged, or if requested, denied in most cases where there is 'no dispute' about the charges. Unfortunately, because no defender has ever looked at the case, whether a legal dispute exists is impossible to determine.

Judicial colloquies—the process through which young people are advised of their rights and what it means to waive them—regarding the rights of children in the courtroom varied considerably. Investigators found some excellent practices by juvenile judges who took concerted time and energy to explain rights in developmentally appropriate ways. In some cases, judges appointed counsel to children facing more serious charges even though youth indicated they didn't need one. In other cases, judges did not advise of the dangers of self-representation or the potential disposition and collateral consequences that youth may face if they waived their rights. One investigator noted an assumption on the part of the court that the child will waive the right to counsel and witnessed "subtle pressure put on the children" by inferring that their parents would have to pay for private counsel, and the youth would meanwhile remain in detention.

B. The Process for Determining Indigence is Inconsistent, and in Some Jurisdictions Contributes to High Waiver Rates

The determination of indigence for purposes of appointment of counsel is not well understood and is not consistently applied in juvenile court. Investigators reported a mix of responses ranging from an all-inclusive approach that presumes indigence for youth to one in which parents are nearly always charged a fee and a lien is placed on their potential tax credits.

As a general principle, public defender services in Missouri are not free. Indigence, or eligibility for public defender services is tied to the federal poverty guidelines.[217] And even after indigence is determined, some of the fees charged for having an attorney in juvenile cases can be substantial. At the end of a case, the public defender fills out a form that is submitted to the court and signed by a judge providing authority for MSPD to "intercept" any state money that would otherwise go to the client to make sure that the fee is paid. The fee may be waived or the judge may decide not to sign the form. A juvenile case that results in a plea costs $125, one that has an "early disposition" costs $65, and a case taken to trial costs $250,[218] with a lien on tax refunds due to the parent. Extra fees for taking depositions, hiring experts, and hiring investigators may also be imposed.[219] There was conflicting information as to whether these fees were ever collected; however, MSPD's form clearly states, "your income tax refund may be intercepted to satisfy this debt."[220] The graduated fee system clearly incentivizes juveniles to plea, even where they are not held personally responsible for paying for public defender services, because parents may pressure youth to plea or waive counsel entirely to avoid fees.

C. Counsel is Frequently Appointed Late in the Process After Critical Rights Have Been Forfeited by the Child

Juvenile defense systems should not only ensure that children do not waive the appointment of an attorney to assist them, but also ensure that counsel are assigned at the earliest possible stage of the delinquency proceeding.[221]

Site visits suggests that in some counties, counsel is not appointed during the early stages of proceedings when key decisions are made about the case. Reports from several DJOs indicate that the fact-finding process is minimalized, and that counsel, if appointed, has a stronger role in the disposition stage, particularly if a DYS commitment is being considered. This approach fails to recognize the importance of advocacy and the role that counsel can and should play in decisions involving detention, pretrial issues, the right to remain silent, and the presumption of innocence. One assessment team member noted that, "While waiver is extraordinarily high, for those youth who do receive lawyers, it is often too late to have meaningful impact."

"While waiver is extraordinarily high, for those youth who do receive lawyers, it is often too late to have meaningful impact."

III. BARRIERS TO EFFECTIVE PRACTICE

Legal representation of youth in delinquency proceedings across Missouri is uneven at best. Although site visitors observed numerous incidences of effective juvenile defense advocacy on behalf of youth, an even greater number of proceedings were observed where there was no attorney representing the child or the representation was completely lacking.

Juvenile defense counsel is required to act as the client's voice in the proceedings. The attorney must act based on the expressed interests of the client, not what the attorney deems is in the client's "best interests."[222] Defense counsel owes juveniles the same duty of loyalty that is owed to adult criminal defendants. Juvenile defenders should not assume they know what is best for the client; instead, they should employ a client-centered approach that seeks the client's input and conveys respect for the client's perspective.

To the greatest extent possible, defense counsel should allow the client to be the primary decision maker during a case.[223] A client should be advised by his or her attorney, but should personally direct whether to cooperate with alternative disposition options, accept plea offers, be tried as an adult, testify, or agree to specific dispositional recommendations.[224] The lawyer maintains control over trial strategy and tactics.

To effectively represent the client's expressed interests, "counsel should seek from the outset to establish a relationship of trust and confidence with the client."[225] A juvenile defender must keep his or her client advised of developments in the case. Additionally, the defender is bound by attorney-client privilege for communication with his or her client.[226] The defender cannot disclose information to parents or guardians, even if the attorney thinks that it would be in the child's best interests.

In Missouri, these dynamics are important. While many court actors—the DJOs, judges, and prosecutors—attempt to work in the best interests of the child and the community,[227] the juvenile defender needs to work for the child's expressed interests.[228]

A. Role of Counsel at Critical Stages of Delinquency Proceedings

1. Arrest

At the earliest points of youth interaction with the justice system, an attorney can safeguard a child's rights with swift advice and action. A juvenile defender's presence during interrogation can ensure that the client does not fall prey to undue coercion, fatigue, or threat of enhanced prosecution.[229] In Missouri, youth can request counsel "prior to the filing of a petition" and receive the guiding hand of counsel during this critical phase of court processing.[230]

Across Missouri, site visitors were told that attorneys rarely, if ever, play a role during post-arrest pre-petition procedures like line-ups, interrogations, identifications, and questioning, despite a Constitutional right to counsel at these stages. In fact, it would seem that in Missouri the role of defense counsel in these early stages of court processing has been superseded by DJOs. Although DJOs are not supposed to participate in interrogating youth, they are assigned the task of giving Miranda warnings and "protecting" juvenile's rights during interrogation.[231] Ironically, DJOs are also responsible for charging decisions and filing petitions against the youth. These roles are in direct conflict. In several different counties, interviewers reported discussing this practice with DJOs who readily acknowledged interrogation as part of their role. After a DJO in one county explained this practice a site visitor noted,

> This situation seems to create a clear conflict of interest between the [DJO's] assumed duty of child's counsel for the purposes of interrogation and her primary duty as a representative of the Juvenile Office that initiates prosecutions. Second, it must be impossible for a child in such a situation to distinguish between the [DJO] and the police officer, thus muddying the waters with respect to the voluntariness of the child's statement to the police.

The dangers of this dual role of the DJO gained public attention in 2011 in the Missouri v. Bustamante case.[232] The Bustamante case (described earlier in this report) illustrates DJO's role confusion and its impacts on kids' passage through the system. In this decision the judge noted the confusion created when a DJO described herself as the youth's advocate while taking an incriminating statement, "This deception likely mislead the defendant into believing that [the DJO] was there to look after her best interests when, in fact, this was not her role."[233]

This decision in Missouri provides a clear example of what many developmental scholars have concluded: youth are vulnerable and in need of added protection in interrogation settings.[234] However, the current practice in Missouri effectively asks DJOs to serve as both law enforcement and youth advocate in interrogation settings. These inherently conflicting duties cannot be carried out by a single individual. DJOs cannot replace the critical protective role of defense counsel in the interrogation context. The decision in Missouri v. Bustamante highlights the inherent dangers of the DJOs' dual role. Providing youth with access to counsel during interrogation contexts would offer youth with the most comprehensive protections possible.[235]

2. Detention and Arraignment Hearings

Missouri youth have a right to counsel in all juvenile proceedings. Despite the clear and critical liberty interest at stake in detention hearings, youth received little or no representation at detention hearings in almost half of the counties visited. Reasons for the lack of legal representation at detention hearings varied. In one county, a defender explained that defenders often did not receive notice of a detention hearing in time to actually attend the detention hearing. In another county, the district defender said there were not enough juvenile clients to justify having a defender attend detention hearings. In yet another county, the defenders' office made a policy decision not to attend detention hearings since the judge refused to allow defenders to advocate for youth at this stage. The lack of defender presence at detention hearings not only denies youth the right to counsel, but also impedes the attorney-client relationship. As noted by one defender in reference to the judge preventing defender advocacy at detention hearings, "one problem with not representing children at their initial detention is it makes creating a good attorney-client relationship more difficult."

"One problem with not representing children at their initial detention is it makes creating a good attorney-client relationship more difficult."

In some of the counties visited, the courts have crafted less than adequate stopgap measures to address the absence of counsel at detention. In one county the court uses pro bono counsel to represent youth at detention hearings. But even in this county, pro bono counsel said timing of appointment poses a barrier to effective representation. The public defender in the county said that many of the pro bono counsel do not know anything about juvenile defense. "I got a call the other day from a bankruptcy attorney who had been appointed [to a juvenile case] and had no idea where to start."

Even where attorneys are present at detention hearings, the hearings are rendered "pro forma" due to the timing of appointment of counsel. Appointments are made so late that it is difficult to prepare and provide effective advocacy. In several counties where defenders did appear at detention hearings, defenders said they were appointed on the day of the hearing and not long before the detention hearing was scheduled to be heard. As a result, many of these attorneys said they had only minutes before the hearing to talk with their clients, prepare an argument based on the client's input, investigate probable cause, investigate alternatives to detention, and present a cohesive plan to the court. A legal officer in one county expressed concern that late involvement by the defenders resulted in youth sitting in detention longer than necessary, forcing juveniles to look to the DJOs to discuss legal issues and options. Since the DJOs' role with youth begins much earlier than defenders, they have already completed an investigation of the case as well an interrogation of the youth before the detention hearing. By the time of the detention hearing, DJOs have either already developed a release plan with specific release requirements, or they have a strong set of reasons why release should not be recommended. Consequently, DJOs' recommendations are more informed and are generally affirmed by the court. DJOs in some counties stated that there was no need for defense attorneys at detention hearings because the DJOs had a recommendation for the court and "they had it covered."

In the detention hearings observed where counsel was present, few attorneys even made arguments to the court. Probable cause was never tested or challenged. Generally, the youth were brought before the judge in leg chains, the judge looked to the DJO for a recommendation, and the judge followed that recommendation. It is hard to imagine that a youth in these proceedings would have any idea what transpired. To add to the confusion a child might feel during these proceedings, in one county visited, the detention hearings for youth were conducted via videoconference. The child watched everyone in the courtroom from a monitor back in the detention facility. Everyone except the child was in court—including the attorney, where the child was fortunate enough to have one.

3. Case Preparation and Client Contact

For youth who are not detained, the first meeting with their attorney is often at the initial court appearance. Despite the fact that earlier intervention by lawyers to investigate the charges, provide legal advice, and explore alternatives to secure commitment may have significant impact on the entire course of the case.[236]

Spending time with a client is really the only means to both establish an attorney-client relationship and to prepare the defense case.[237] Across Missouri, investigators were told that attorneys had only minutes before hearings were held to meet with their clients. In these brief encounters, plea decisions were made based on cursory discussions of the events, and then an abbreviated analysis of possible ways to proceed through complex legal hearings. Not only does the lack of client contact and case preparation diminish the quality of representation, it is damaging to the attorney-client relationship. In one county, two detained youth expressed extremely negative views of their public defenders. They felt that their defenders did not fight for them, did not listen to them, and did not include them in making decisions about the case. One noted that the attorney only spent five to seven minutes with him right before court and said in disgust about the attorney that he did not think the attorney even knew his name.

Also, defenders' lack of contact can exacerbate the stress related to detention and system involvement. In at least two different counties, detention staff expressed concern that defenders did not regularly visit their clients and did not return phone calls from detained clients. One detention superintendent specifically noted that youth rarely saw their attorneys between the detention hearing and the next court date, which created a lot of anxiety for detained youth.

4. Investigation and Discovery

Every defense attorney has a mandated constitutional duty to investigate every client's case and make reasonable decisions about what investigation is necessary.[238] This duty obligates defense attorneys to conduct investigation prior to counseling a client about possible plea negotiations. Prompt investigation allows counsel to obtain quick information about the prosecution's case and assess strengths and weaknesses.

The IJA/ABA's Juvenile Justice Standards and National Juvenile Defender Center's National Juvenile Defense Standards provide that, during the initial stages of representation, many important rights of clients involved in juvenile court proceedings can be protected only by prompt advice and action. The lawyers should immediately inform clients of their rights and pursue any investigatory or procedural steps necessary to protect their clients' interests.[239]

Juvenile defense attorneys have a duty to promptly investigate cases, locate witnesses, examine evidence, obtain exculpatory material, and find information that can aid a client's potential defenses.[240] Even if the lawyer believes the client is guilty, this duty does not change.[241] Attorneys should not allow the juvenile to accept a plea agreement without first examining all available evidence in the prosecution's file and any documents and records of the DJO.[242]

In addition to, and as a result of the investigation, the juvenile defense counsel should protect the pretrial rights of the defendant. Among others, these include the right to remain silent, the compulsory process right, and the right to exclude inadmissible evidence. The lawyer should file appropriate motions, obtain discovery and Brady material, and argue on behalf of the client's rights throughout the process.[243]

In most of the counties visited, the attorneys representing youth in delinquency proceedings said they have insufficient time to conduct adequate investigation. Even in counties where defender offices had access to investigators and could request assistance on cases, the ratio of defense investigators to attorneys was often so inadequate that it was difficult to access their services.

The discovery process is not a substitute for independent investigation. Missouri has open file discovery,[244] and investigators found that in many counties, the discovery practice consisted of the legal officers making their files available to juvenile defense attorneys for copy and/or inspection. In some of the counties visited, the legal officer made the copies and sent the discovery to the defense office. In one county, the defender said that it was onerous to have to take the time to go inspect and copy discovery. In general, however, discovery was not noted as a significant barrier to effective representation but instances of active investigation were rare.

5. Pretrial Hearings and Motion Practice

Motions practice is essential to effective defense work.[245] Well-executed motions can win the case by securing dismissal, excluding evidence, or altering the course of the litigation. The range of possible motions to file and argue in juvenile court is vast. From discovery to suppression to severance to dismissal, an active motions practice indicates an engaged defense.

In Missouri's juvenile courts, investigators found that there were few motions written, argued, or filed during the course of site visits. Again, the culture of many of the juvenile courts discourages formal assertion of legal issues and encourages hallway conversations to resolve legal questions. In fact, a legal officer in one county said that she had only received one written motion in the last several years and "it was from a newbie who should have known better and just called me."

6. Adjudication and Plea Agreements

Juvenile adjudication hearings are the equivalent of trials in the adult criminal justice system. In Missouri, juveniles do not have a constitutional right to trial by jury. Consequently, trials are before juvenile court judges.[246] Youth in Missouri who have been arrested and charged with a crime remain innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.[247] However, the most common observation across the state is that youth in juvenile court need only be "guilty enough" to prove they need some services.

It is the juvenile defender's duty to ensure that the adversarial system is preserved and that the state bears the burden of proving its case.[248] Defense counsel must ensure that all parties respect the presumption of innocence.[249] The elements of the crime and its lesser included offenses should be the central focus of the trial.[250] The juvenile defender must vigorously defend his or her client and clearly explain to the defendant his or her rights and the advantages and disadvantages of exercising them.[251] At the adjudicatory hearing, defense counsel should be thoroughly familiar with the results of pretrial investigations, advance defense theories, utilize experts when needed, and emphasize the heavy burden that the prosecution bears to prove guilt.

The most common observation across the state is that youth in juvenile court need only be "guilty enough" to prove they need some services.

Most juvenile delinquency cases in Missouri are resolved by plea agreement. In the majority of the counties visited, all of the stakeholders agreed that 90-99% of the cases result in a plea. However, when and how the pleas are taken varies greatly across the state. In one county there was an active reluctance to allowing and accepting a plea at an initial hearing, and yet in another county over 90% of the cases were disposed of at the detention or initial hearing.

In one county a judge noted, "If [defenders] had more time and more people, we would have more trials—instead there are more deals cut. Down here when a kid admits, attorneys don't always look at if it can be proved."

What matters most in a plea agreement is whether the child has had the assistance of a defense attorney who has had sufficient time to investigate, negotiate, counsel, and advise prior to the resolution of a juvenile case. Defenders may accomplish significant goals for a youth through plea bargaining in some cases. They may get charges reduced or dismissed, or they may present mitigating factors or other evidence that illustrates the limited role of their clients in the presenting offense. As mentioned previously, many youth in Missouri proceed to plea without an attorney. In one county, the court estimates that more than 90% of youth in detention plead guilty via video at the detention hearing without ever having met their defense attorney in person. However, even in counties where youth do have counsel, a lack of resources can impede counsel's ability to adequately investigate and negotiate the resolution of a case. In one county a judge noted, "If [defenders] had more time and more people, we would have more trials—instead there are more deals cut. Down here when a kid admits, attorneys don't always look at if it can be proved."

The U.S. Supreme Court issued two opinions in 2012 that underscored the importance of effective representation in the plea process and stated that lawyers must conduct investigations into the charges, make recommendations based on the strength of the state's case, and carefully explain the pros and cons of accepting a plea offer to a client.[252] Although many of the juvenile cases observed were resolved only minutes after an attorney met a young client, the attorneys in these cases were not absolved of their duties to: (1) conduct an adequate investigation; (2) present all plea offers; (3) advise of the consequence of the plea; and (4) form a confidential relationship independent of parents.[253]

Moreover, Missouri law makes it clear that the court should not accept a plea unless the child knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waives the right to trial, to cross-examine witnesses, and to remain silent.[254] The record must show explicit advisements and waivers of these constitutional rights and acceptance of the possible consequences.[255] Site visitors reported that counties varied in the extent to which judges delivered developmentally appropriate colloquies—the process through which young people are advised of their rights and what it means to waive them. In some counties, site visitors reported good practices with judges taking the necessary time to ensure youth made knowing, intelligent, and voluntary waivers. In other counties, site investigators reported that judges delivered colloquies so fast it was hard for the investigators—most of whom are lawyers themselves—to understand the warnings.

Although the majority of cases observed were resolved by plea, both with and without attorneys, two of the counties visited had a very active trial practice. Attorneys in these counties investigated their cases, spent greater amounts of time with their clients, called witnesses, entered evidence, and presented a defense. But even in these counties where the defenders were mounting a defense, they commented that the philosophy of the court is, "can we prove enough to allow us to do what we need to do for this kid." A defender in another county stated that the courts,"see no harm in convicting a child to get services that they believe are in the child's best interest." Though well intentioned, when courts adjudicate youth delinquent to mete out services, the result can derail a youth's education, career potential, and entire future. The standard for guilt is not "enough," it is proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

7. Disposition

The significance of disposition cannot be overstated. Juvenile dispositions should "facilitate the care, protection and discipline of children" in a way that serves the best interests of the juvenile.[256] "The active participation of counsel at disposition is often essential to protection of clients' rights and to furtherance of their legitimate interests."[257]

Missouri allows for a range of dispositions for adjudicated youth, which include probation, placement in residential settings, and commitment to DYS.[258] Defense counsel must afford youth the opportunity to proffer an alternative to the DJO's recommended dispositional plan by developing a client-driven option that addresses the interests of the client and is responsive to the court's concerns.[259] Investigation for material relevant to disposition should be conducted at every stage of the proceedings.[260]

Juveniles should take an active role in weighing dispositional options and deciding which would work best.[261] The attorney should inform the juvenile of the possible consequences and the factors the court will consider.[262] Counsel should also prepare the youth for interviews with DJOs and inform them of how their statements will be used in court.[263] Other experts should be consulted to help create an individualized dispositional option to present to the court.[264] Defense counsel should also work to ensure that procedural rights are protected during the disposition hearing by objecting to inadmissible hearsay, examining witnesses, and proffering witnesses.[265]

After a youth is adjudicated delinquent, Missouri law allows for disposition either immediately following the adjudication or in a separate hearing.[266] In most counties observed, the court goes directly from adjudication of the charges to disposition. Generally, the DJOs make a dispositional recommendation that is uncontested by defense and is accepted by the court.

Strong dispositional advocacy by a juvenile defender has long-term impact on the life of their clients. Although many youth in Missouri do not have an attorney at disposition, an attorney is the only person whose role it is to advocate for what the client thinks is an acceptable disposition with conditions that are realistic to adhere to. The defense attorney also advises the client about the possible disposition alternatives, the court process involved in disposition, and the likely outcomes. In the absence of a juvenile defender, the child must rely on the opinion of the DJO who investigated the charges, conducted the interrogation, extracted a statement, and formalized the petition. Without defense counsel, the court has almost no other choice but to go along with the recommendation of the DJO.

In the counties where youth do have an attorney at disposition, almost half of the attorneys said they often contest disposition recommendations offered by the DJO. Some of these attorneys were observed simply cross-examining the DJO to test the strength of their recommendation. In other counties, defenders offered alternative recommendations to the court, called witnesses, and presented community-based options they had developed with their client. Defenders in more rural counties said they lack the resources and options to develop alternative disposition plans and rely on the DJO for disposition planning.

8. Appellate Review

A juvenile's right to counsel and the duty to represent a client does not end after disposition, if the juvenile wishes to appeal. Missouri statute requires counsel to serve for all stages of the case, including appeal.[267] Despite this right to counsel, it appears many juveniles are not being represented for appeals. This is not entirely a result of high waiver of counsel; instead, it results from appeals not being filed. In Fiscal Year 2012, MSPD filed three juvenile appeals and closed four, within the entire state system.[268] Juvenile appeals accounted for 0.15% of the public defender's appellate practice for the year.[269]

Juvenile appeals accounted for 0.15% of the public defender's appellate practice for the year.

Although private attorneys might bring other juvenile appeals, this almost never happens. In the counties visited, almost no key player could remember when the last juvenile appeal was filed. One commissioner reported having no appeals from his decisions in over 15 years. Of the few individuals recalling juvenile appeals, most could only recall one appeal in their years practicing.

The appellate process is intended to provide individuals with several layers of review. It prevents a person's future from being determined by one individual. However, the extreme lack of juvenile appeals leaves juvenile court decisions untested and without appeals, the law remains undeveloped and unreviewed. The final decision for juvenile cases can thus take place in an informal setting without counsel, without informing the juvenile of his or her rights, and without regard for due process rights. Without appeals, juvenile rights may be short-circuited and the ill-defined and nebulous procedure may even discourage others from filing appeals in the future. In Missouri, juvenile's right to appeal is simply not utilized.

9. Other Post-Disposition

In addition to the lack of juvenile appeals, other post-disposition actions in Missouri are notably lacking. By statute, attorneys are relieved of their duties when a final disposition is in place.[270] This heavily impacts juveniles during probation review hearings. The public defender closes a case after disposition; thus, ongoing monitoring of the case is not possible. Public defenders are reappointed only when new charges are brought.

However, juvenile defense attorneys have obligations not addressed in the Missouri statute. Juvenile defense counsel should research and timely file writs of habeas corpus and others motions challenging the outcome of a case.[271] Defense lawyers can be effective in addressing problems concerning the fact, conditions, or duration of confinement by bringing these motions.[272]

Attorneys should also periodically check on their clients to determine if there are resolvable issues preventing successful completion of their disposition.[273]

Post-disposition review is an effective tool for ensuring court orders are monitored, youth are released from facilities at the earliest point possible, and community programming is used effectively. Once a youth is committed to DYS, there are no regular reviews. Periodic reviews occur only for juvenile offenders who are in the community. While some counties have a more formal post-disposition review process, these seem to be the exception, not the norm. Still, it is important to note that these reviews usually occur without attorneys. As a result, when problems arise in review hearings, youth have no one to advocate on their behalf. One defender explained, "[A review hearing] is where so much happens...that is where we start writing the narrative about the child." Once youth get to a hearing where they are facing placement due to an accumulation of violations or other problems, there is no recognition that a lack of defender advocacy at post-dispositional review hearings may inhibit the court's ability to have all of the information necessary to make appropriate decisions.

10. Ancillary Representation

Though there were significant discussions of the multiple systems impacting the lives of most youth in the delinquency system, investigators did not see examples of ancillary representation in Missouri. Youth in the juvenile justice system often have an array of legal and social needs outside of the juvenile court. Often a youth's needs are multi-systemic and branch into arenas such as school discipline, special education, mental health, substance abuse, housing, familial problems, and immigration. A juvenile's status in any of these arenas can significantly impact delinquency proceedings. For example, the outcome of a school disciplinary hearing could influence detention advocacy or dispositional outcomes.

With the goal of affording clients holistic representation, juvenile defense counsel should, either directly or indirectly, provide youth referrals and/or assistance in ancillary services of the law that intersect juvenile indigent defense.[274] Juvenile defense counsel should become familiar with resources that will assist youth in addressing legal and social issues outside of the juvenile justice system. Juvenile defense counsel who face limitations in providing ancillary services directly, should develop contacts with advocates who can represent youth in other systems.[275]

B. Youth Tried in Adult Courts

The jurisdictional age is set at 17 in Missouri, which results in all 17 year-olds facing criminal charges being automatically processed in the adult system. Excluding less serious traffic, municipal, and conservation violations, 3,199 17 year-olds were charged in Missouri's adult criminal system in 2011.[276] Additionally, a number of youth below the age of 17 are "certified" as adults and processed through the adult system. In 2011 alone, 74 youth were certified as adults.[277] Unfortunately, the total number of certification hearings conducted was not available. However, in two counties, judges estimated that of the total number of certification hearings held, about 25% of youth were certified and transferred to the adult court. Given that the mechanism through which Missouri transfers youth is a judicial hearing, juvenile defenders have the opportunity to mount a strong defense to retain youth in the juvenile court. Unfortunately, due to limited resources and the lack of a specialized juvenile defense bar, defenders are often unable to effectively argue on behalf of youth at certification hearings.

Missouri, similar to many other states, disproportionately transfers African American youth to adult court. A recent report issued by the Missouri Juvenile Justice Association in collaboration with the Missouri Juvenile Justice Advisory Group, examined disproportionality in the certification of African American youth in Missouri.[278] Using data of youth cases disposed for felony allegations between 2008 and 2011 from the Judicial Information System (JIS) from all of Missouri's judicial circuits, the report found the disproportionate certification of African American youth by level of offense, offense type, and kind of offense. Although the report acknowledges that its analysis cannot draw the conclusion that inequities in processing "caused" the disproportionate certification of African American youth, they do state that "[t]he totality of these findings appears to suggest that there may be more of an inclination to certify African American youth than Caucasian youth."[279]

Given these statistics, it is important to note that among the several criteria identified by statute that a judge must review in making a determination to "certify" a youth is the consideration of whether or not racial bias plays a role in the certification process. Defenders can play an important role in addressing the disproportionate certification of African American youth by addressing this issue head on in certification hearings. One of our site visit teams had the opportunity to witness this promising practice while observing a certification hearing where a defender referenced this criterion and asked the judge to consider the issue of racial bias in determining whether or not the youth should be certified to the adult court.

C. Lack of Juvenile Court Specialization, Training, and Standards

Training of public defenders and appointed counsel in Missouri's juvenile court is minimal—almost non-existent. The lack of training was a major issue identified by many of the key stakeholders. Among many of the counties visited, there was a general consensus that public defenders, judges, and prosecutors lacked training on juvenile issues. These key players lacked both opportunities for such trainings and resources to host or attend them. Current training for the public defenders is a three day conference that may or may not include occasional juvenile topics. Some of the individuals interviewed expressed a need for additional training on adolescent development and issues unique to juvenile adjudications.

One public defender expressed interest in more training on delinquency proceedings and newer techniques for fighting certification. Another court officer indicated that there was some juvenile training that was beneficial, but it mostly focused on child protection. Of the training available, there was not much consistency or availability. Most of the training is very ad hoc. A major barrier to effective training for public defenders is that the heavy caseloads prevent individuals from conducting or attending any extensive training—especially on juvenile issues.

The disbandment of the juvenile-specific units perpetuated the lack of training and specialization. While these units were in place, the public defenders in those offices were recognized for their expertise, specialization, and training on juvenile issues. Now, juvenile courts are used as "training" grounds to prepare public defenders for adult cases. Juveniles no longer have trained attorneys; instead, they have attorneys in training. The focus on juvenile specialization has faded to the detriment of juvenile defendants.

Juveniles no longer have trained attorneys; instead, they have attorneys in training. The focus on juvenile specialization has faded to the detriment of juvenile defendants.

Adding to the confusion about role of counsel and juvenile defense specialization is the Missouri mechanism for allowing attorneys to play the dual role of defense attorney and guardian ad litem in the same case in juvenile court. Under Missouri Supreme Court Rules, juvenile defense attorneys can be appointed to act as a guardian ad litem for the same child they are defending in a delinquency case despite the inherent conflict between these two functions.[280] It is well settled that the role of the juvenile defender is to represent the stated interests of their juvenile clients.[281] In contrast, the role of the guardian ad litem is to represent what the attorney believes is in the best interest of the child. As stated in a 2012 opinion addressing a similar mechanism in Illinois, "...the type of 'counsel' which due process . .require[s] to be afforded juveniles in delinquency proceedings is that of defense counsel, that is, counsel which can only be provided by an attorney whose singular loyalty is to the defense of the juvenile."[282] Although the assessment teams did not observe this dual appointment in practice, the fact that it is permissible is untenable with due process.

D. Juvenile Court Culture

Courts in Missouri overwhelmingly discount the role of juvenile defense counsel by failing to appoint counsel at the outset, ignoring the defender voice when attorneys are involved in juvenile cases, and significantly restricting resources so that juvenile defenders cannot mount an adequate defense. Unfortunately, the lack of resources may force defenders to choose whether their time is spent with adult or juvenile clients. Along with the lack of resources, the lack of prestige awarded to defending juvenile clients is a constant issue. Speaking on that point, a chief DJO in one county expressed concern that defenders view juvenile court as "kiddie court" and spend more time preparing for and speaking to adult clients than they do with juvenile clients. A juvenile defender in one county explained, "We're drowning. We do a shameful job on our juvenile cases in this county."

"We're drowning. We do a shameful job on our juvenile cases in this county."

Even when attorneys have the opportunity to be advocates, their voices are often ignored. In one jurisdiction where most youth are represented by counsel, a defense attorney stated, "In juvenile court, I am not much more than a potted plant. My judges have virtually always (I can think of one exception in seven years) sided with the juvenile officer [DJO] in spite of the evidence, rules of procedure, or law. Commonly, my only achievement in a juvenile case is to explain the process to the client and attempt to comfort him/her. My work seldom changes the end result of the case." Another juvenile defender stated, "There is not a lot I can do...it's essentially standing next to someone while they get sent to DYS for petty nonsense."

IV. STRENGTHS AND PROMISING PRACTICES

A. Counties with Routine Appointment of Counsel

While the practice of allowing youth to waive their right to counsel was pervasive throughout many jurisdictions, there were exceptions to this in counties where adequate resources for appointment of counsel were provided. Judges in those counties recognized that youth could generally not competently waive counsel without consultation and should be entitled to the assistance of an attorney through all critical stages. We heard resolve on the part of these judges that in spite of the public defender caseload crisis, juveniles would not go unrepresented in their courts.

In one jurisdiction where no waiver of counsel was seen, the judge noted that, unlike his counterparts, he appreciated the importance of juvenile court and intentionally uses a different vocabulary and demeanor. He mentioned that training through the judicial college specifically on juvenile law helped, although there was no ongoing juvenile training for judges in Missouri. In this jurisdiction, attorneys are appointed following arrest and lawyers were present at detention and at all other initial hearings.

In another jurisdiction—where the public defender system does not receive juvenile court appointments—the court has established a system of using private attorneys to handle all delinquency cases. A fund for legal costs was established by the county and provides funds for defense attorney and guardian ad litem appointments. The defense attorneys appointed in that county were generally experienced solo practitioners who receive little or no pay for their services. They were described as "tough, zealous advocates" in part because of their significant experience in adult criminal cases. Even prosecutors noted that these attorneys take procedural due process obligations seriously. "I have to come prepared with all of my i's dotted and my t's crossed. They want details," said one of the prosecutors. Youth in this jurisdiction are appointed counsel once charges are filed.

B. The Role of Law Schools in Forging Change

Missouri has four law schools—Saint Louis University, University of Missouri-Columbia, University of Missouri-Kansas City, and Washington University in St. Louis. These schools can and do offer significant contributions to the field of juvenile defense. By raising awareness and providing thousands of hours of free legal service to juveniles in the state, clinical programs have helped to provide training to new lawyers who can develop as leaders in the field and create a dialogue on emerging trends in juvenile defense practice.

Several of the law schools have hosted symposia on access to counsel and juvenile justice. In 2010, the Missouri Law Review hosted a symposium entitled Broke and Broken: Can We Fix Our State Indigent Defense Systems?[283] The symposium looked at the problems facing the nation's indigent defense systems. The program brought together national scholars and Missouri experts on indigent defense. In 2012, Washington University hosted a colloquium entitled Evolving Standards in Juvenile Justice: From Gault to Graham and Beyond.[284] Events like these help bring attention to the major problems facing indigent and juvenile defense in Missouri.

The law schools are also promoting access to counsel through clinical programs. The clinics serve two main purposes; they offer free legal services to indigent juveniles and train law students to become effective juvenile advocates. Both Saint Louis University and Washington University have clinics dedicated to juvenile indigent defense.[285] These clinics allow students to gain hands-on experience working with children and defending them on delinquency charges. Clinics like these offer immediate assistance for juveniles, long-term training for new lawyers, and recognition of juvenile defense as a specialized practice.

C. Youth Advocacy Units

Specialized Youth Advocacy Units had a strong impact on the representation youth received in Missouri. Reinstating these units across the state would significantly improve due process protections for Missouri youth in juvenile court. In 1995, the Missouri General Assembly took a more punitive approach to juvenile crime.[286] Missouri's law became focused on community protection instead of juvenile rehabilitation.[287] The public defender system recognized the higher stakes and secured resources to staff a Youth Advocacy Unit within the Trial Division. Offices were located in St. Louis and Kansas City.[288] These units were created in 1997 to provide specialized training and services.[289] The units included investigators, dispositions specialists, and licensed social workers who were part of the defense team.

In the years immediately following the creation of the Youth Advocacy Unit, there was a significant reduction in DYS commitments in St. Louis City and St. Louis County.[290] Additionally, the number of juveniles certified as adults decreased while the Youth Advocacy Units were responsible for juvenile cases.[291] These units were able to provide more attention and services directly to the juveniles. The attorneys and social workers handling the cases were able to be acutely aware of the particular needs and challenges facing juveniles.

There was a proposal to expand the Youth Advocacy Units to cover additional counties in Missouri.[292] However, this plan was never executed. Budget problems prevented the expansion and led to combining the Youth Advocacy Units with the general Trial Division.[293] What was a promising practice that could have been replicated with significant results fell victim to the state's indigent defense resource crisis.

CHAPTER FOUR
Conclusion and Recommendations

Children facing criminal or status offenses in Missouri's juvenile justice system frequently do so without the benefit of counsel or without adequate representation through all critical stages. As this report identifies, there are significant gaps in both access to and quality of representation provided to youth that fall well below the standards established by the Institute of Judicial Administration and American Bar Association's Juvenile Justice Standards, the ABA Rules of Professional Conduct, the Ten Core Principles for Juvenile Indigent Defense established by NJDC, and NJDC's newly released National Juvenile Defense Standards. Justice is often rationed to juveniles in Missouri for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is the crisis in the public defender system and the parens patriae attitude that is still present in some courtrooms.

Missouri's strength is in its commitment to rehabilitation and the collaborative efforts built into its juvenile system. Across the state, there are many committed and talented people who work hard to protect the rights of children. The dozens of individuals throughout Missouri's juvenile system who committed time, resources, and insights by participation in and contribution to this assessment are reflective of the commitment to children in Missouri. This is encouraging in moving forward to use this report as a catalyst for changing the system.

When attorneys have the time and training to provide zealous representation, there can be an immediate and long-term impact on ensuring due process and decreased system costs to counties and to the state. Lawyers have the ability to develop effective and meaningful relationships with their young clients, and they should be an integral part of ensuring that youth are not adjudicated delinquent as a means to access services. And when adjudication is substantiated, defense counsel ensure that youth are subject only to the most appropriate and effective services and programs in the least restrictive setting possible.

The following recommendations were formed after a careful review of the data and findings compiled in this study. The recommendations are divided into "Core Recommendations" and "Implementation Strategies." Core Recommendations are the key proposals with general application. They represent the principal areas in which work is needed to improve both access to counsel and quality of representation for youth in the delinquency system. The Implementation Strategies flow from these Core Recommendations to provide more detailed suggestions to relevant state or local entities.

Core Recommendations:

1. Ensure Timely Appointment of Counsel: Youth must be appointed counsel and have access to counsel early in their case.

2. Reduce Waiver of Counsel: Missouri should establish a presumption against waiver of counsel; whereby, a youth must first consult with counsel before any waiver is permitted. No child should be denied counsel because of lack of resources.

3. Afford Representation at All Critical Stages: Missouri youth should be afforded counsel at all critical stages of the proceedings.

4. Allocate Sufficient Resources: Missouri must commit adequate funding to juvenile representation that allows for reasonable caseloads and effective advocacy. Juvenile defenders must also have access to ancillary services such as investigators, experts, and social workers.

5. Strengthen Monitoring and Oversight: The indigent defense delivery system should include a separate juvenile division to centralize leadership, innovation, and responsibility around juvenile defense. The division would strengthen positive practices and policies and would provide ongoing statewide oversight and monitoring.

6. Establish Data Collection: A system of data collection should be established, which can track appointment of counsel at early stages, and other pertinent data regarding juvenile representation to aid management in decision making. Best practices and innovations should be identified and promoted through data collection.

7. Recognize Juvenile Defense as a Specialized Area of Practice: Juvenile defense should be recognized and appreciated as a highly specialized practice. A system with ongoing training, support, and networking among defenders should be established. Attorneys should participate in comprehensive training before working in juvenile court, and they should have the opportunity for ongoing training to enhance their practice skills and knowledge of the field.

8. Reduce Youth in the Adult System: The age for adult criminal court jurisdiction in Missouri should be raised from 17 to 18.

9. Adopt Standards of Practice: Juvenile defense practice standards should be adopted and implemented statewide. Expectations regarding ethical obligations and performance of attorneys providing representation at all critical stages should be included.

10. Address the Role of the Deputy Juvenile Officer: The expansive role of the deputy juvenile officer should be addressed to ensure that it does not influence, directly or indirectly, the ability of youth to be appointed counsel early in the process, and to prevent statements made to these individuals from being admissible in court.

Implementation Strategies:

To make substantial improvements in Missouri's system of juvenile indigent defense, the cooperation of numerous entities must be involved. The legislature, judiciary, Missouri Public Defender System, law schools and local and state bar associations can and must all play a role in a concerted effort to reform policy and practice. The Implementation Strategies below are designed to address the Core Recommendations with specific multi-systemic reforms.

The Legislative Branch should:

- Adequately fund the system of indigent defense to encompass sufficient resources for a strong juvenile defense delivery system as well as conflict attorneys;
- Require representation of children to extend after disposition and provide funding for this representation;
- Enact a presumption of indigence for children and eliminate the requirements of a lien and fees once representation is provided;
- Strengthen the waiver of counsel statute to limit the ability of courts to allow youth to waive their right to counsel without adequate procedural safeguards;
- Restrict the ability of DJOs to obtain and utilize incriminating statements by juveniles in later proceedings and re-examine the line of supervisory authority for these positions to eliminate actual or perceived conflicts; and

- Join the majority of other states by changing the statutory age for youth in juvenile court to 18 in order to provide fair and developmentally appropriate advocacy and services to all juveniles in the state.

The Judicial Branch should:

- Work to remove the barriers to appointment of counsel for youth in the delinquency system and significantly reduce the number of unrepresented youth;
- Assure that counsel is appointed for all critical stages of the proceedings, including early appointment at the detention hearing stage and through disposition and post-disposition proceedings;
- Examine court rules to ensure waiver of counsel is limited and that youth are otherwise afforded adequate due process protections; and
- Ensure that colloquies in all juvenile cases are legally adequate and developmentally appropriate.

The Missouri State Public Defender should:

- Continue the longstanding efforts with the legislative branch in advocating for a fully funded indigent defense delivery system, especially for juvenile defense;
- Take the lead in reforming juvenile indigent defense and in implementing the core recommendations of this assessment;
- Promulgate practice standards for juvenile defenders that require attorneys to meet with clients prior to court proceedings, consult with clients and families about the case and social information, investigate cases, file motions as appropriate, provide vigorous and independent advocacy at detention, adjudication, disposition and post-disposition hearings, negotiate for fair and favorable plea agreements, prepare for and set trials to ensure that the government can meet its burden, and advise clients about all proceedings and consequences for any decision made;
- Create a high-impact culture for juvenile defense practice within the state that recognizes the practice as a specialized field and recruits and maintains well-trained and zealous lawyers;
- Create a state level Juvenile Division within MSPD, which can focus on enhancing appeals and other post-disposition work, providing specialized juvenile defense training, implementing juvenile defense policy work, and offering technical support for trial offices on juvenile cases;
- Reinstate the Youth Advocacy Units in the counties or comparable offices which can specialize in juvenile practice in large jurisdictions as well as provide assistance and consultation for smaller offices;
- Implement a means of electronic sharing across the state—e.g. listservs, social media, etc.—for those engaged in juvenile defense practices to share information and resources and provide technical assistance;
- Actively engage the law schools to further student interest and skill building in juvenile defense work and to develop potential leadership in the next generation of lawyers;
- Identify and suggest changes in court rules, which could improve access to counsel and quality of representation for youth in the delinquency system; and
- Work with and promote JDAI initiatives in participating counties to ensure that youth are provided with effective detention advocacy and that defenders are actively engaged with the JDAI committees and leadership structure. MSPD should be an active participant in the state leadership group for JDAI.

Missouri Law Schools Should:

- Continue to provide and expand high quality clinical and experiential learning programs, which can train students to be practice ready in the field of juvenile defense and identify current and relevant issues for litigation;
- Enhance the dialogue around juvenile defense reform through continued use of symposia, publications, and continuing education seminars; and

Ethical restrictions on attorney availability

Your Honors,

I am sending you this email as my office, Area 31 of the Missouri State Public Defender System (MSPD), covers Greene, Christian, and Taney Counties. I am sure you all aware of the recent action taken by OCDC against a public defender and their recommendation that the attorney's license be disciplined due to his alleged failure to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. While the Supreme Court did not follow OCDC's recommendation to suspend the license of the attorney, OCDC's brief and oral argument, as well as individual justices' statements and questions, leave no doubt that public defenders cannot defend themselves against bar complaints with evidence of a high caseload. It was made clear that the Rules of Professional Conduct absolutely apply to public defenders and any breach of those Rules will subject the defender to action against their license to practice law.

The Supreme Court referenced Rule 4-1.7, which states in part that it is a conflict of interest "if there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client[.]" MSPD recognizes that while each attorney is employed by the System, it is the individual and personal responsibility of each attorney to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. MSPD also recognizes that District Defenders, such as myself, and Deputy District Defenders, such as Mr. Hatley, also have a duty under the Rules to make sure that no attorney under their supervision violates the Rules. See 4-5.1(c). The Court has also held the Rules impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of their clients, and that attorneys violate those rules if they "accept [ ] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 607 (Mo. banc 2012)(citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3 and 4-1.4).

The assistant public defenders of Area 31 have been instructed to notify myself or Mr. Hatley if they believe accepting any additional new clients would materially limit their responsibilities to an existing client so they might comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Additionally, both Mr. Hatley and myself have reviewed the caseload, case type, experience of each individual attorney and other factors such as travel of every assistant public defender in Area 31 to ensure there is no ethical violation as we have a specific obligation under the Rules to ensure those under our supervision do not violate the Rules.

The American Bar Association has previously weighed in on this issue. Formal Opinion 06-441, states in part "[i}f a lawyer believes that her workload is such that she is unable to meet the ethical obligations required of her in the representation of a client [...] she must decline the representation. A lawyer's primary ethical duty is owed to existing clients. (internal citation omitted) Therefore, a lawyer must decline to accept new cases[.]"

Last week, Mr. Hatley and myself had individual meetings with every attorney under our supervision. Each of them stated, and we concur, that their current individual caseloads create a conflict of interest with existing clients because they are forced to choose effective representation of one client to the detriment of other clients. It is also our belief that assigning any new cases to any individual attorney would create a conflict of interest because they would have no ability to adequately represent either their current or prospective clients.

Until one or more of the attorneys in our office are able to fully comply with their ethical obligations under the Rules of Professional Conduct, we will no longer be immediately entering into cases in which a defendant is qualified. When the Court refers the public defender to determine eligibility, our office will do so. We will continue to inform the Court if an applicant does not qualify. If the prospective client qualifies, we will also notify the court but will not assign an attorney until there is an attorney who can assume the representation without violating the Rules of Professional Conduct. We cannot file an entry with an individual attorney's bar number if we and the attorney know that doing so violates the Rules of Professional Conduct. To be clear, there are no hidden agendas or motivations with regard to this decision. This is simply about ensuring all Area 31 public defenders are able to maintain their license to practice law without threat of discipline by OCDC.

We have started an internal wait list for defendants who qualify for representation but who do not yet have an attorney assigned to them. We will internally monitor attorney work load and the wait list and assign attorneys to cases based on custody status. We will be providing defendants on the wait list with a letter advising them they qualify and that we will notify them as soon as an attorney is available to take their case. Any current client who acquires additional cases will be represented by counsel of record and will not be placed on the wait list. Also, in the event two or more codefendant's apply for the public defender, we will not be seeking conflict counsel until an attorney is able to represent the defendant this office ultimately keeps.

It is my sincere hope the Court will adhere to its own duty and fidelity to the Rules and will support and work with our attorneys during this process. If you have any concerns, issues or thoughts please feel free to email or call myself or Mr. Hatley.

RE: Availability of Area 07 Liberty Trial Office & In re Karl Hinkebein, SC96089

Your Honors:

I am confident you are aware of the recent action taken by the Office of Chief Disciplinary Committee (OCDC) against an attorney employed by the Missouri State Public Defender (MSPD) and their recommendation that the public defender attorney's license be disciplined due to the alleged failure to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. In re Karl Hinkebein, SC96089. OCDC's brief and oral argument, as well as individual Justices' statements and questions made during oral argument on September 7th , leave no doubt that public defender attorneys cannot defend themselves against bar complaints with either evidence or excuses of a high caseload (or an excessive, overly burdensome workload). It was made clear that the Rules of Professional Conduct absolutely apply to public defender attorneys and any breach of those Rules will subject the attorney to action against his or her license to practice law.

Instead of consideration given or exception made within the Rules for public defender attorneys who work within a system with far too few resources and a seemingly (and actual) unlimited source of clients, the Hinkebein Court pondered aloud solutions for overburdened public defenders: perhaps (i) they could tell me that they were refusing the cases I assigned to them or (ii) they could simply resign. And what of the solemn oath taken by us all "to practice law to the best of [our] . . . ability and with consideration for the defenseless and oppressed"? Do I just say "not me" as one Justice suggested? Do I

15 Cardarella
depobook.com

just cut and run and quit as was suggested by the other Justice, who took that very oath on the same date as I over a quarter of a century ago?

That oath also contained the promise to "at all times conduct myself in accordance with the Rules of Professional Conduct". The Hinkebein Court referenced Rule 4-1.7, which states in part that it is a conflict of interest "if there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client[.]" MSPD recognizes that while each attorney is employed by the System, it is the individual and personal responsibility of each attorney to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. MSPD also recognizes that District Defenders, such as myself, and Deputy District Defenders, such as Ara Bailey Brown, also have a duty under the Rules to make sure that no attorney under their supervision violates the Rules. See 4-5.1(c). The Supreme Court has also held the Rules impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of our clients and that attorneys violate those Rules if he or she "accepts a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [his or] her ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence and to keep the client reasonably informed." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W. 3d 592, 607 (Mo banc 2012) (citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3 and 4-1.4).

The assistant public defenders of Area 07 have been instructed to notify myself or Ms. Brown if they believe accepting any additional new clients would materially limit their responsibilities to an existing client so they can ensure compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Additionally, I have reviewed the office total workload, the attorneys individual assigned caseload and case types, the experience of each individual attorney and various other factors including but not limited to the inherently necessary travel time of every assistant public defender in Area 07 to ensure there is no ethical violation as we have a specific obligation under the Rules to ensure those under our supervision do not violate the Rules.

The American Bar Association has previously weighed in on this issue. Formal Opinion 06-441, states in part "[i]f a lawyer believes that her workload is such that she is unable to meet the ethical obligations required of her in the representation of a client . . . she must decline the representation. A lawyer's primary ethical duty is owed to existing clients. (internal citation omitted) Therefore, a lawyer must decline to accept new cases[.]"

At present, it is my firm belief that every attorney under my supervision is currently in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, albeit unintentionally. Unfortunately, their current individual caseload demands create a concurrent conflict of interest with existing clients such that they are forced to choose effective representation of one client to the detriment of other clients. It is also my belief that assigning any new cases to any individual attorneys would create a concurrent conflict of interest and cause them to become further unable to provide competent and diligent representation as envisioned by the Rules of Professional Conduct to each affected client.

The public defender attorney(s) ordinarily assigned to criminal cases in Clay County, Platte County and Clinton County will no longer be immediately entering into cases in which a Defendant has been deemed qualified for indigent representation. In the event the Court directs the Office of the Public Defender to determine eligibility, our office will examine any and all submitted Applications for Public Defender Services as we always have, as our time permits and, as Chapter 600 dictates, conduct any necessary and relevant investigation. We will continue to inform the Court if an applicant does not qualify. If the prospective client qualifies, we will not assign an attorney until there is an attorney who can assume the representation without violating the Rules of Professional Conduct. We cannot file an entry with an individual public defender attorney's bar number if, in my belief, doing so is a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

To be clear, there are no hidden agendas or motivations with regard to my decision. Any of you that know me I shall hope understands that this was not an easy decision for me. My public defender career has always sought to adhere to the simplistic approach envisioned by Mother Teresa who had said:

> Never worry about numbers.
> Help one person at a time, and always start with the person nearest you.

The Hinkebein Court has caused me to make necessary changes to my otherwise longstanding approach. This is simply about protecting my attorneys and doing everything in my power to ensure that each of them are able to maintain their license to practice law without threat of discipline by the OCDC.

It is my hope that the Court maintains a high degree of understanding, flexibility and empathy as our office endeavors to place this new and necessary process into motion in our collective and sincere attempt to abide by the Rules of Professional Conduct. As is always the case, I remain available for your call or requested meeting.

HON. PATRICK W. CAMPBELL,	)

PETITION FOR WRIT OF PROHIBITION,

AND SUGGESTIONS IN SUPPORT

COMES NOW Relator, District Defender Ruth Petsch, pursuant to Rules 84.22 to 84.26, and 97.01 et seq., V.A.M.R., and moves this Court to issue a preliminary writ of prohibition against Respondent, the Hon. Patrick W. Campbell, Circuit Judge of the Jackson County Circuit Court, to prohibit Judge Campbell's order of October 19, 2017, which ultimately appointed Ms. Petsch personally to represent Keith A. Nevels, contrary to this Court's holding in State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, 48 S.W.3d 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001), that a trial court exceeds its authority in appointing a specific Public Defender attorney to a specific case.

After a preliminary writ and opportunity for Respondent to respond, Relator requests that this Court make the writ permanent, or alternatively, order full briefing, and thereafter, make the writ permanent.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. Relator, Ruth Petsch, is the District Defender of the Area 16 Public Defender Office in Kansas City, Missouri, which is located in Jackson County. A District Defender is the supervisor of a local Public Defender Office.

2. Respondent, the Hon. Patrick W. Campbell, is Circuit Judge, Division 10, of the Jackson County Circuit Court, 16th Judicial Circuit.

3. Keith A. Nevels is the underlying defendant in State v. Keith A. Nevels, Jackson County No. 1616-CR01742-01 (E1).[1] As relevant herein, he is currently charged with a probation violation following a prior plea of guilty to the Class C felony of unlawful possession of a firearm, Sec. 571.070 RSMo. (E3-E4, E5, E7, E9-E10).

4. At the outset, Relator wishes to make clear to this Court that although the issue in this writ arises in the context of the Area 16 Public Defender Office's attempt to not accept new cases due to excessive caseload, that is not the issue Relator is raising herein. Relator will be pursuing other avenues of relief with the Jackson County Circuit Court regarding excessive caseload. The sole issue Relator raises herein is that the trial court lacked authority to appoint a specific Public Defender attorney to Mr. Nevels' case under State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, supra.[2]

---

[1] The exhibits in this case are page numbered consecutively E1, etc., and are referred to by individual "E" page number herein. "E" stands for exhibits.

[2] A copy of this case is in the Exhibits beginning at p. E76.

5. On Oct. 13, 2017, District Defender Petsch sent an email to Jackson County Presiding Judge John M. Torrence to notify the Jackson County Circuit Court that due to excessive caseloads in the Area 16 Jackson County Public Defender Office, the attorneys in her office were not able to provide ethical and competent representation to further clients, and, as a result, were creating a waiting list for defendants who qualify for representation but for whom there is no attorney available (E58-E59). Petsch cited, among other authorities, State ex rel. Missouri Public Defender Commission v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 607 (Mo. banc 2012), citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3, and 4-1.4, for the directive that attorneys violate the Rules of Professional Conduct if they "accept[] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed" (E59). Petsch wrote that as soon as caseloads fall to an ethical level, she would begin assigning new cases to attorneys in her office (E59). Petsch's action came after the Missouri Supreme Court recently disciplined another Public Defender attorney (E58). Although there was no opinion issued in that case, the Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel's brief and individual judges' comments at oral argument indicated that Public Defender attorneys cannot defend themselves from discipline with evidence of an excessive caseload (E58).[3]

6. On Oct. 17, 2017, Presiding Judge Torrence wrote to Petsch to inform her that the Executive Management Committee of the Court en banc had discussed her email and "unanimously agree[d] that your position is invalid and unlawful. Consequently, the judges of the 16th Circuit will continue to appoint you and your office to represent eligible persons charged with new offenses" (E60). Judge Torrence asked Petsch to meet with the Court in an "informal process" or to invoke the provisions of Sec. 600.063 RSMo. to deal with the caseload issue (E63).

7. Meanwhile, in Mr. Nevels' case, on Oct. 16, 2017, Respondent Judge Campbell held an initial appearance hearing on the probation violation (E33). The State requested that an attorney be appointed for Mr. Nevels (E35). Judge Campbell found that due process required appointment of counsel, and asked the Public Defender attorney assigned to that courtroom, Gara Feldman-Gary, if Mr. Nevels qualified for Public Defender representation (E35). Feldman-Gary said he does qualify, but that he had been placed on the Public Defender's waiting list (E35). Judge Campbell then directed the "Missouri public defender to represent him in this matter. So whether that's you Ms. Feldman-Gary or you go get somebody else over here to represent him but he needs to be represented" (E36). After additional discussion following Feldman-Gary telephoning her supervisor for direction, Judge Campbell reiterated, "I've appointed the Missouri Public Defender's Office. Who's representing him?" (E37). Feldman-Gary said her supervisor would be available to speak to the court later in the day, but the court said:

> THE COURT: Well, you're here now. Who do you work for?
> MS. FELDMAN-GARY: I work for the Public Defender's Office of the State of Missouri.
> THE COURT: So represent him. ...

(E37-E38).

8. After further discussion, Feldman-Gary informed the court that State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, 48 S.W.3d 64, states that a court does not have authority to appoint a specific Public Defender attorney (E38). The court said: "I didn't. I appointed the Missouri public defender. You are the Missouri public defender specifically assigned to this division for special actions; am I correct about that?" (E39). Feldman-Gary said yes (E39). The court then said there is a statute that the Public Defender shall not refuse appointment (E39). After further discussion, the court said it was "entering an order directing the Missouri public defender to represent the defendant" (E41). "The Court will further order that the district defender of the Missouri Public Defender's Office Ruth Petsch shall appoint and provide counsel for the defendant Mr. Nevels and have counsel prepared to appear, enter their appearance, and represent the defendant" on October 19 (E42).

9. On Oct. 16, 2017, the court issued a written order that "District Defender Ruth Petsch, of the Missouri Public Defender, shall provide counsel for defendant, have counsel prepared to appear and enter appearance, and represent defendant" on October 19 (E12).

10. On October 19, 2017, Petsch entered an appearance "under objection and order of court" (E13). She referenced her prior email to Presiding Judge Torrence; Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3, 4-1.4 and 4-1.7; and Waters, supra, for her inability to accept new cases (E13). She expressly reserved the right to pursue appellate remedies to vacate the appointment (E14).

11. Also on October 19, 2017, Petsch filed a motion to reconsider and vacate the appointment on various grounds, primarily having to do with her ethical obligations under Rule 4 prohibiting her from accepting new cases (E15 – E31).

12. On October 19, 2017, Judge Campbell resumed the probation revocation matter. Petsch said that she wanted to present evidence about all attorneys in her office and their obligations under Rule 4 (E47). The court said, "Well, I have appointed you as the public defender" (E47). After further discussion, including that the other attorneys in Petsch's office believe they would violate Rule 4 by accepting new cases, the court told Petsch, "Well, I haven't appointed a single one of them other than you, Ms. Petsch. So I see no purpose in allowing you to present that evidence" (E51)(emphasis added). The court denied the motion to reconsider (E51). The court then said:

> THE COURT: Do you wish to represent Mr. Nevels? Do you wish to file a writ? I am more than happy to let you do either of those two things. Or do you wish to disobey the Court and proceed under a contempt proceeding? What's your preference?

(E51). Petsch said she had entered the case [under objection] and would go forward, but that she would also pursue a writ (E51-E52).[4] The court denied the motion to reconsider and reset the probation violation hearing for October 26, 2017, to allow for a writ (E52-E53).

[4] ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 (May 13, 2006)(Ethical Obligations of Lawyers Who Represent Indigent Criminal Defendants When Excessive Caseloads Interfere With Competent and Diligent Representation) states that when a Public Defender is not allowed to withdraw from a case in the face of excessive caseload, the Public Defender

13. Later on October 19, 2017, the court entered a written order stating, in relevant part:

> The Court finds that the Defendant, Keith A Nevels is qualified for appointment of counsel. The Office of the Missouri Public Defender has entered their appearance with objection. The Missouri Office of State Public Defender has not obtained prior approval from a court of competent jurisdiction to refuse representation. The Missouri Office of State Public Defender has not sought relief pursuant to RSMo. Section 600.063. Therefore, it is clear that the Missouri Office of State Public Defender is obligated under RSMo Section 600.062 to represent the Defendant, Keith A Nevels.[5]

(E30).

14. This petition for a writ of prohibition follows.

RELIEF SOUGHT

must obey the court's order while pursuing appellate remedies. Id. at 6 and n. 24. A copy of this ABA opinion is in the Exhibits beginning at p. E63.

[5] A copy of Secs. 600.062 and 600.063 are in the Exhibits beginning at p. E72.

Jackson County Circuit Court, to prohibit Judge Campbell's order of October 19, 2017, which ultimately appointed Ms. Petsch personally to represent Keith A. Nevels, contrary to this Court's holding in State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, supra, that a trial court exceeds its authority in appointing a specific Public Defender attorney to a specific case. Judge Campbell exceeded his authority in appointing a specific Public Defender attorney to Mr. Nevels' case.

STATEMENT OF REASONS WHY WRIT SHOULD ISSUE

16. "The extraordinary remedy of a writ of prohibition is available: (1) to prevent the usurpation of judicial power when the trial court lacks authority or jurisdiction; (2) to remedy an excess of authority, jurisdiction or abuse of discretion where the lower court lacks the power to act as intended; or (3) where the party may suffer irreparable harm if relief is not granted." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Pratte, 298 S.W.3d 870, 880 (Mo. banc 2009).

17. Prohibition may be used to "undo" acts done by a court "as long as some part of the court's duties in the matter remain to be performed" and may be used "to restrain further enforcement" of the court's orders. Id. (citation omitted).

18. In Franklin, 48 S.W.3d at 65-66, a trial judge ordered two specific Public Defender System attorneys – the Director of the Public Defender System and the Trial Division Director – to enter their personal appearances for a defendant, after five other Public Defender attorneys had entered the case but ultimately withdrew due to leaving the Public Defender Office. The trial court believed it had authority to order this due to its "broad discretion in controlling its docket" and to "break the chain of continuances made by withdrawing defenders." Id. at 69.

19. The Public Defender sought a writ of prohibition from this Court on grounds that the trial court's order appointing specific Public Defender attorneys exceeded the trial court's authority, because the authority to assign specific Public Defender attorneys was vested solely in the Director of the Missouri Public Defender System under Chapter 600 RSMo. Id. at 66. This Court agreed, and issued a permanent writ of prohibition. Id. at 70.

20. This Court held that under Chapter 600, which created the Public Defender System, a trial court's sole role is to determine, upon motion by either party, "whether the services of the public defender may be utilized by the defendant." Id. at 69 (quoting Sec. 600.086.3 RSMo.). "The statute provides no authority, other than indigency determinations, for the court to be involved in the functions of the system, including assignment of particular counsel to cases." Id. "That authority is left to the Director and his representatives." Id. (citing Sec. 600.042.5(2), which states "The director may … [d]esignate persons as representatives of the director for the purpose of making indigency determinations and assigning counsel"). "The appointment of specific counsel within the public defender system, and particularly the Director, to represent indigent defendants is beyond the court's jurisdiction." Id.

21. Here, Respondent Judge Campbell exceeded his authority in ultimately appointing District Defender Petsch personally to represent Mr. Nevels (E51). While it appears that Judge Campbell, at least in his initial order of October 16, may have intended only to cause Ms. Petsch to assign counsel (E12)("Ruth Petsch, of the Missouri Public Defender, shall provide counsel for defendant, have counsel prepared to appear, and enter appearance....")(see also E36, E37, E41-E42), at the October 19 hearing, he appointed Petsch personally (E51)("Well, I haven't appointed a single one of them [the other attorneys in Petsch's Office] other than you, Ms. Petsch.")(emphasis added). Under Franklin, Judge Campbell exceeded his authority in appointing a specific Public Defender attorney to represent Mr. Nevels. Judge Campbell was authorized only to appoint the Public Defender System, and to allow the Public Defender Director, or his designee, to then assign the particular counsel to the case.

22. Nothing in Secs. 600.062 or 600.063 changes the holding in Franklin. Sec. 600.062 provides that the Public Defender shall not limit its acceptance of cases based on a "caseload standard," and that the Public Defender "may not refuse to provide representation required under this chapter without prior approval from a court of competent jurisdiction." Sec. 600.063 provides a procedure for a District Defender to request a conference with a court to discuss caseload issues and seek possible relief. Although Relator contested the applicability of both statutes in the trial court and may continue to do so in future cases as events warrant, for purposes of this writ proceeding, Relator is not raising any claims under Secs. 600.062 or 600.063. For purposes here, nothing in either statute authorizes a trial court to appoint a specific Public Defender attorney. See Secs. 600.062 and 600.063. Assuming arguendo that the statutes applied – which Relator does not concede – Judge Campbell was authorized under Franklin only to appoint the Public Defender System, and to allow the Public Defender Director, or his designee, to then assign the particular counsel to Mr. Nevels' case.

23. In short, Judge Campbell exceeded his authority in appointing Relator Petsch to personally represent Mr. Nevels. This Court should issue a writ of prohibition to order Respondent Judge Campbell to rescind the order that Ms. Petsch personally represent Mr. Nevels.

WHEREFORE, Relator respectfully requests that this Court issue a preliminary Writ of Prohibition against the Respondent, to prohibit Judge Campbell's order of October 19, 2017, which ultimately appointed Ms. Petsch personally to represent Keith A. Nevels, contrary to this Court's holding in State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, 48 S.W.3d 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001), that a trial court exceeds its authority in appointing a specific Public Defender attorney to a specific case.

After a preliminary writ and opportunity for Respondent to respond, Relator requests that this Court make the writ permanent, or alternatively, order full briefing, and thereafter, make the writ permanent.

SUGGESTIONS IN SUPPORT OF WRIT OF PROHIBITION AND/OR MANDAMUS

The Writ of Prohibition and/or Mandamus filed by Relator, Assistant Public Defender _____, should be granted for the following reasons:

1. There is no exception to the rules of professional conduct for Public Defenders. State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 608 (Mo. banc 2012); State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Pratte, 298 S.W.3d 870, 880 (Mo. banc 2009). Public Defenders "themselves are risking their own professional lives" if they violate the professional rules. Pratte, 298 S.W.3d at 880.

2. The Missouri Supreme Court has held that the rules of professional conduct impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of their clients, and that attorneys violate these rules if they "accept[] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed." Waters, 370 S.W.3d at 607 (Mo. banc 2012)(citing Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3 and 4-1.4).

3. The Court has held that these duties apply not just to new clients, but to existing clients, "so that an attorney's acceptance of a new case violates Rule 4-1.7 if it compromises [his or] her ability to continue to provide effective assistance to [his or] her other clients." Id. "[A] lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest, which exists if there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client." Id. at 607-08 (citing Rule 4-1.7(a)(2); internal quotation marks omitted). "[A] conflict of interest is inevitably created when a public defender is compelled by his or her excessive caseload to choose between the rights of the various indigent defendants he or she is representing." Id. at 608 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

4. Rule 4-1.16(a) provides, in relevant part, that "a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if: (1) the representation will result in violation of the rules of professional conduct or other law[.]"

5. Counsel does not have adequate time or resources to ethically, effectively and competently represent Defendant in this case, in addition to counsel's other clients. If counsel must represent Defendant, counsel will be forced to choose amongst counsel's clients as to whom to provide ethical, effective and competent representation. Counsel will be forced to violate or risk violating Rules 4-1.1 (competence), 4-1.3 (diligence), 4-

1.4 (communication), and 4-1.7 (conflict of interest), as well as the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel.

6. Comment 2 to Rule 4-1.3 mandates that "[a] lawyer's work load must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently."

7. ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 requires that "[i]f a lawyer believes that [his or] her workload is such that [he or] she is unable to meet the basic ethical obligations required of [him or] her in the representation of a client, [he or] she must not continue the representation of that client or, if representation has not yet begun, [he or] she must decline the representation." ABA Formal Opinion 06-441 at 4 (copy submitted as Exhibit A).

8. Judges, too, have an obligation to ensure that indigent defendants are represented by appointed counsel who can be competent, ethical and effective in their particular cases. Pratte, 298 S.W.3d at 875. Judges must ensure that appointed counsel are able to effectively investigate, prepare for and present defendants' cases. Id. 9.

9. The Sixth Amendment right to effective counsel at all critical stages is not just to be determined after a guilty plea or trial. Waters, 370 S.W.3d at 607. The right to effective counsel is "prospective" and applies to all critical pretrial stages. Id. at 606.

10. "Simply put, a judge may not appoint counsel when the judge is aware that, for whatever reason, [the] counsel is unable to provide effective representation to a defendant. Effective, not just pro forma, representation is required by the Missouri and federal constitutions." Id. at 607.

11. If Relator must represent Defendant, Relator will be unable to comply with the rules of professional conduct, and will be unable to fulfill Relator's constitutional obligations to provide effective assistance of counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution and Article I, Sections 10 and 18(a) of the Missouri Constitution. Defendant will be denied the rights to ethical and competent counsel, effective assistance of counsel, conflict-free counsel and due process under the rules of professional conduct and these federal and state constitutional provisions.

WHEREFORE, Relator respectfully requests that the Petition for Writ of Prohibition and/or Mandamus be sustained, and Relator be permitted to withdraw from Defendant's case.

Respectfully submitted,

Assistant Public Defender

MISSOURI STATE PUBLIC DEFENDER
NOTICE PURSUANT TO 18 CSR 10-4.010 OF PENDING CERTIFICATION OF PUBLIC DEFENDER LIMITED AVAILABILITY

TO: The Thirty-Eighth Judicial Circuit,

Judge: Mark Orr, presiding,

District Public Defender: Rod Hackathorn

BE ADVISED:

The Missouri State Public Defender has determined that the district office serving your circuit has exceeded the Public Defender Commission's maximum caseload standard for a period of three consecutive calendar months and is therefore at risk of certification pursuant to 18 CSR 10-4.010.

This is notice pursuant to the Missouri Public Defender Commission Rule on Caseload and 18 CSR 10-4.010(C), requiring State Public Defender to provide notice to the presiding or chief judge of each affected court that the public defender office for the circuit is at risk of being certified at least one calendar month prior to certification.

October 31, 2017

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Walter Stokely, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

To Whom It May Concern:

My name is Walter Stokely, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated:

This letter is concerning the high caseload that public defenders in the Missouri State Public Defender System's Area 19 (Jefferson City) trial office have experienced in recent years.

I was an assistant public defender in Area 19 from April of 2013 through February of 2017. During that time, I was the lead attorney on well over a thousand cases in counties including Boone, Camden, Cole, Maries, and Miller.[1] My primary caseload was in Cole County.

Within one week of beginning my employment in Area 19, with no criminal law training or experience outside of one summer internship, I was given a stack of (about sixty, as best I can recall) already open files to work as lead attorney. Several attorneys having recently departed, the office had no choice. Soon after that, in December of 2013, after only eight months of practicing criminal law, I was the lead attorney on a felony case that went to jury trial. By the time of my departure, less than four years later, I had tried three sex felony cases in front of juries while also handling charges such as arson, murder, robbery – the whole gamut.

During my time in Area 19, four of the then seven attorney positions turned over, some several times. The resulting caseload redistribution caused the number of open, active cases assigned to me to surpass two hundred. This happened multiple times. When the office was fully staffed, my "normal" caseload would usually settle out around one hundred and twenty open, active cases.

During no time in my employment in Area 19 did I feel my clients were getting adequate, competent representation. Even during the best of times, it was impossible to adequately prepare for each jury trial (of the several that would typically be set each month), conduct an adequate investigation on each case, keep each client reasonably informed as to the status of their case and upcoming court dates, litigate things such as suppression issues, review discovery, or conduct necessary depositions, to name some of a criminal defense attorney's duties. On top of this, just in Cole County, I was appearing in court nearly every workday, oftentimes for the majority of the workday.

Due to the high caseload, I was often unable to give clients competent representation. Additionally, my attention was so divided among the many cases that clients suffered as a result. One jury trial meant at least one hundred other clients' cases gathered dust for one week at a minimum. Despite complaints to my bosses, cases were continually assigned to me to the point where few if any clients received competent representation. When clients would phone or write with requests or questions, I was unable to return their communications or do what they asked in a reasonable time. Many complained to the Court that I never returned their calls, or made time to see them in person. This was doubly true for incarcerated clients, of which there were many in the Cole County jail, and in Missouri Department of Corrections facilities across the state.

Because of all of these issues, there were discussions within the office, particularly toward the end of my tenure, regarding how to limit Area 19 public defender caseloads. More manageable caseloads would mean for Area 19 not only that attorneys are complying with relevant Missouri Supreme Court ethics rules, but also that the defendants – our clients – are receiving competent, adequate representation, as the Constitution guarantees. With a reasonable and workable caseload, the problems described above could be mitigated, or even eliminated. Until then, Area 19 attorneys, at least when I was there, felt that our bar licenses were in jeopardy, but more importantly that the State of Missouri was failing in its duty to provide adequate and competent legal representation to criminal defendants.

In short, I was failing in my ethical duties to my clients as an attorney. Criminal defendants have a right to counsel, but I was only able to act as their counsel as time would allow, which was inadequate for too many.

---

[1] This is to say nothing of the estimated hundreds of other cases that were never formally assigned to me, but I still worked as the primary attorney in associate court, before the office switched to "vertical representation" in 2014.

Walter J. Stokely

Subscribed and sworn to before me on this 30 day of October, 2017.

I started with the public defender system in 2015. At the time there was no discernable restriction on caseload. It was simply a matter of doing your best with the cases you were assigned. It was not common to hire experts, examine scientific data, challenge lab results, or even conduct depositions.

As a criminal defense attorney, our primary ethical duty is to the client. As a public defender, I have a duty to represent the poor. Until recently, I have let them down. Without restrictions on caseload, that ethical responsibility is demolished. Put plainly, without restrictions on caseload, I cannot represent clients effectively.

Effective representation is sometimes hard to define, but I think we can look at it through the course of working on a case. 1) meeting with clients; 2) reviewing discovery; 3) investigating a case. Each step requires an extraordinary amount of work.

First, meeting with clients can be difficult. The first issue is simply that I have 22 clients currently incarcerated throughout the state. I have clients in Algoa Correctional Center, Camden County Jail, Chillicothe Correctional Center, Cole County Jail, Eastern Reception and Diagnostic Center, Farmington Correctional Center, Fulton Department of Mental Health, Fulton Reception and Diagnostic Center, Jefferson City Correctional Center, Northeast Correctional Center, Petosi Correctional Center, South Central Correctional Center, Southeast Correctional Center, Tipton Correctional Center, Western Reception and Diagnostic Center, and Women's Eastern Reception and Diagnostic Center.

The second issue is that scheduling meetings means going through red tape. Many facilities only allow visits on specific days. For example, JCCC only allows visits on Monday and Thursday from 9am through 3pm, and Friday from 9:30am to 1:30pm and 2:30-6:30pm. Further, DOC has recently changed their policies with confidential phone calls. Previously, a phone call was relatively simple to set up. It was even possible to speak to a client the day you set up the call. Now, however, all calls must be set up 24 hours in advance, and the calls have to be scheduled through the central office in Columbia. To be clear, this means that every single public defender in the State of Missouri has to schedule phone calls through a single telephone line in Columbia. This means that some calls have to be scheduled far in advance.

Even if a client is out of custody, it is difficult to meet with a client. I have clients throughout the state. Some clients live in rural areas where cell phone reception is spotty. Further, our clients are indigent. They lack resources we take for granted. They do not have cars or transportation. These are simple resources that most of us have in the criminal justice system, but our clients do not.

Another factor in is reviewing discovery. In one case, there are over 30 CDs of photographs, videos, and medical evidence spanning hundreds of pages. Each photograph must be parsed, and each video must be viewed. Further, effective representation requires speaking to each witness. In another case, I have hundreds of pages of medical and mental health records that need to be analyzed.

Finally, there is the task of actually investigating the case. Many cases, are eyewitness identification cases. In order to be effective, I need to speak with each witness, either through our investigator or through depositions. Our investigator is excellent and efficient. However, he is the only investigator in our office, and he must investigate 694 cases assigned to seven attorneys spanning three counties.

Locating witnesses is often time-consuming. Witnesses often change addresses, change phone numbers, or relocate with friends and family, all without notice. Our investigator must track down leads, speak with friends and co-workers, and navigate social media in order to track down a witness.

For example, one client was an immigrant from the Philippines. He was accused of very serious conduct, and it was likely that he the ultimate resolution of the case would be his deportation. I had to work with the consulate in America, as well as research immigration law, to work out a resolution.

For many clients, I am the third or fourth attorney on their case. In one unfortunate case, my client was passed from attorney to attorney before the case was dismissed. My client did not have time to celebrate, however, because the state refiled and I was ultimately assigned. In another case, even though I am the third attorney, previous counsel had been unable conduct depositions. Even though the case has been pending for over one year, it is still necessary to depose the witnesses. Essentially, I have to treat the case as though I am the first attorney on the scene, and work the case from the ground up.

Finally, I must discuss a policy of caseload restrictions. This year marks the first time in my career that I have been allowed to restrict my caseload. Over the past six months, I have been able to spend time educating myself on the law and science. I have consulted with experts from across the county. They have helped me understand the new Daubert standard in Missouri and assisted in motion practice. I have been able to spend more time crafting motions and assisting clients. I have had time to research areas of the law, I would otherwise have been unable to research. I would not have been able to effectively assist my clients absent relief. Without these restrictions, I would not be ethical.

The poor deserve the type of representation the constitution requires. Caseload restrictions are absolutely necessary to ensuring the poor get the representation they deserve.

Affiant

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 30 day of October, 2017.

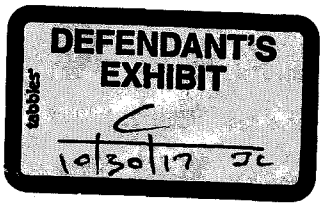
AFFIDAVIT
STATE OF MISSOURI



Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Taylor Elswick, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

My name is Taylor Elswick- MO Bar Number 69810, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated:

I took the Missouri Bar Exam in February 2017 and found out I passed in April 2017. I became employed in the Jefferson City Public defender's office on June 5, 2017. I have been practicing law for approximately four months.

In order to provide adequate and diligent representation, I have indicated each month that I am not able to take on additional cases. Each month, we are assigned a number of cases and asked if we can competently take additional cases. In my professional judgement, I do not believe I can take on additional cases after I have been allocated my monthly total number of cases. As a new attorney, I am still in the process of learning how to juggle all of the aspects of being an attorney. For instance, meeting with clients, going over discovery which includes viewing multiple reports and videos, preparing for various hearings, depositions, trials, and all of the investigative work in between.

In my professional judgement, I believe that being assigned more cases than I already have will have a substantial impact on my ability to work on my current cases. Each case carries with it a differing degree of time and energy depending on different factors. Some of the factors include severity of charges, number of cases assigned to each client, amount of discovery etc. In my professional judgement, being assigned more cases will impede my ability to diligently work on each case that I currently am assigned to. This would impact my ability to make time to meet with clients in jail or department of corrections, conducting legal research, writing motions, doing evidence views, crime scene views, meeting with clients that are out of custody, and investigating work on each case. As a new attorney, I feel that it takes me longer to work on each case for the fact that I am not as experienced as my colleagues and I do have to spend extra time because I am not as familiar with case law and statutes etc.

I currently have eighty four open cases in Cole County and Miller County. Eighty two of the cases are in Cole County, while two of the cases are in Miller County. The two pending cases in Miller County are juvenile cases, as I am the designated attorney in the office that takes juvenile cases. Juvenile cases are complex in the fact that different rules and statutes apply that are different from adult courts. Almost every juvenile case that I have worked on requires a substantial amount of work because once a juvenile has been detained, I am required to drive to Miller County and have a detention hearing within three days. I also have to drive to the juvenile detention center (one hour drive each way) to see clients that are in detention. Also, I can expect to have an adjudication hearing each juvenile law day that is essentially a trial.

I currently have clients that are incarcerated in Cole County jail, Mary Dickerson Juvenile Justice Center, Chillicothe Correctional Center, Farmington Correctional facility, Fulton Reception and Diagnostics Center, Missouri Eastern Correctional Center, Moberly Correctional Center, and Women's Eastern Reception, Diagnostic and Correctional Center.

Listed below is a list of all of my current cases that are open:

1. Wendall S Belisle Jr.- 13AC-CR03269: Theft/Stealing
2. Donald L Phibert- 13AC-CR00935: Probation Violation
3. Ashley N Osborn- 11AC-CR02087- Probation Violation
4. Nathanial Jones- 15AC-CR01814- Driving while suspended/revoked
5. Michael T Leavell- 14AC-CR00710- Probation Violation
6. Allen Vaughn- 15AC-CR03231- Domestic Assault 2nd
7. Allen Vaughn- 16AC-CR00878- Domestic Assault 2nd

- These two cases are currently set for trial in January and will require extensive work and planning on setting depositions soon.

8. Danneisha Nesbitt- 16AC-CR00239- Theft/Stealing

AFFIDAVIT
STATE OF MISSOURI

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Adam Cartwright, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

My name is Adam Cartwright, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated and am competent to testify hereto:

I began working with the Public Defender office in Jefferson City on October 23, 2017. I previously worked at the Public Defender office in Poplar Bluff and am still the attorney of record on over 100 cases from that office. I have already been assigned 59 cases; many of these cases have had multiple previous attorneys. I am still in the process of contacting and locating many of these clients. One such felony assault case contains approximately 1,300 pages of discovery and multiple discs of digital discovery.

Insofar as my clients in Jefferson City, there are several that I have not contacted. I have clients incarcerated in the following facilities:

- Cole County Jail
- Laclede County Jail
- Chillicothe Correctional Center
- ERDCC
- Jefferson City Correctional Center
- Northeast Correctional Center
- South Central Correctional Center
- Western Missouri Correctional Center
- Potosi Correctional Center

Attached is a list of all cases I am currently assigned since October 23, 2017, in the Jefferson City office.

Due to the volume of cases I have been recently assigned, along with my continued duties to clients in my previous office, I feel that in my professional judgment it is inadvisable to request more cases be assigned at this time. During this transition, it will be difficult to continue to effectively represent all of my clients and deliver the service necessary to ensure their constitutional rights are protected. Failure to do so could result in a finding of ineffective assistance of counsel. This would result in an increased burden on the state through the post-conviction relief process. Further, it could result in discipline by the Missouri Bar Association.

For the foregoing reasons, I have requested my District Defender, Justin Carver, that I not be assigned more cases until further notice.

Affiant

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 30 day of October, 2017.

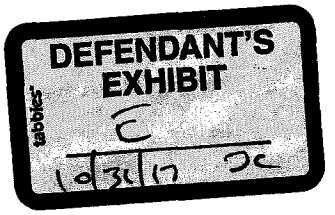
AFFIDAVIT
STATE OF MISSOURI



Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Chelsea L Harris, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

My name is Chelsea Leigh Harris, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated:

I, Chelsea L. Harris, Missouri Bar No. 65951, have personal knowledge of the contents of the information in this affidavit and, if called as a witness, would be competent to testify thereto.

I became employed as an Assistant Public Defender in April of 2014 in the Area 25 Office of the Public Defender in Rolla, Missouri. I transferred to the Area 19 Office in October of 2016 and have been employed as an Assistant Public Defender in Jefferson City since then. I have been a practicing attorney in Missouri since October 2013.

I currently have 132 open cases in 6 different counties: Cole, Moniteau, Miller, Morgan, Camden, and Dent. It is very common for me to have court in more than one jurisdiction at the same time. This means I must ask another lawyer to cover my court appearances.

The 132 cases include: 1 murder in the first degree, 1 A-B drug felony, 9 A-B other felonies, 6 A-B sex felonies, 38 C-D-E drug felonies, 44 C-D-E other felonies, 1 C-D-E sex felony, 1 pre-charge representation, 7 misdemeanors, and 23 probation violations.

I have clients who are incarcerated in 16 different institutions, including: Chillicothe Correctional Center, Cole County Jail, Fulton Reception & Diagnostic Center, Fulton State Hospital, Jefferson City Correctional Center, Miller County Jail, Moberly Correctional Center, Moniteau County Jail, Northeast Correctional Center (Bowling Green, MO), South Central Correctional Center (Licking, MO), St. Louis Metropolitan Psychiatric Center, Tipton Correctional Center, Vandalia Correctional Center, Western Missouri Correctional Center (Cameron, MO), Western Reception, Diagnostic & Correctional Center (St. Joseph, MO), and the Women's Eastern Reception, Diagnostic & Correctional Center.

The fact that I have to attend court in 6 different counties and I have clients confined in 16 different institutions all over the state means I must spend a substantial amount of time traveling each month.

As discussed above, many of my clients are incarcerated across the state. It is time consuming to drive to where they are to consult with them. Because of their indigency, it is often difficult or impossible for my clients to contact me if they are not in jail. This is because many do not have the money for a cell phone and many do not have a driver's license or access to an operable and legal vehicle.

Below is a list of my current open cases and the associated primary charges:

1. Matthew Hamm: 17MT-CR00223—Murder 1st degree; Abandonment of a Corpse
2. Matthew Hamm: 17MT-CR00154—possession of a controlled substance

In addition to being understaffed in regards to attorneys, we only have three legal assistants and one investigator. Our staff members are all hard working and very good at their jobs. However, one investigator must assist all attorneys (8 attorneys when fully staffed). He is currently on paternity leave and will not return until January of 2018. This means that one of our three legal assistants is attempting to do his job in addition to her own job duties. Our other two assistants must open and close cases, process applications, and answer phones and in person inquires. This leaves them with little to no time to assist attorneys in their daily practice.

When I left the Rolla Public Defender's Office in 2016, I had been assigned to approximately 800 cases in the less than two and a half years I was employed there. In the last year I have closed 188 cases in addition to my current caseload. All told I have been assigned to 1120 cases in my three and a half years as a public defender.

When I worked in the Rolla Public Defender Office, I carried anywhere from 150-240 cases at a time. I was constantly overwhelmed by the amount of work that needed to be done. If I asked colleagues for advice, I was essentially told that was how the system worked and that I should just prioritize some cases over others. This contributed to a very high burn out rate. Many public defenders I worked with resigned after a short amount of time.

Since I have come to an office where my case load is being somewhat controlled, I have been able to better prepare my cases. I have realized the issues I had overlooked in previous cases due to my excessive caseload. I have been able to file more motions and do more legal research on issues that I may have previously overlooked. However, I am realizing how much more needs to be done on each case. While my caseload has improved slightly, I am still currently unable to give every case the attention I need to in order to be an affective attorney.

Some of my cases are more time-consuming and complicated than others. For example, in the case I have pending in Dent County, the discovery is nearly 10,000 pages. The case has been pending since 2012 and I am the fourth attorney to handle it. I was obligated to take this case to the Jefferson City office from my old public defender office in Rolla. This means that to meet with the client, take depositions, go to court, or otherwise prepare for this case, I often have to drive 100 or more miles. Last week I traveled nearly 300 miles to go to a pre-trial conference for that case.

In another case, I have to review over 100 pages of discovery and 33 discs of audio and video content and pictures. Simply reviewing this entire discovery file will require days of concentration without working on any other case.

I currently have six cases where my clients are accused of statutory sex crimes. These cases present much more work than other cases as there are more motions that must be filed and argued and more procedural steps to take before the case can go to trial.

I have several cases where I need to request and review mental health records because my clients present with a lengthy history of mental health problems that may have contributed to their current situations. I have two clients who are currently incarcerated in state mental health facilities. It is often very difficult to communicate with them.

Because of the turnover in the public defender system, in many cases, I am the third or fourth attorney who has represented a client. Understandably, this often confuses or upsets clients. They do not understand why their cases keep getting passed off to a different lawyer. I have often found that clients have not had basic rights or the judicial process explained to them—meaning I must start from the beginning.

The Missouri Rules of Professional Conduct state that a lawyer "shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client." (Missouri Rules of Professional Conduct [MRPC] 4-1.3.) A lawyer's work load must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently. (MRPC 4.13[2]). MRPC 4-1.4 addresses the issue of client communication and states (in relevant part) :

(a) A lawyer shall:

(1) keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;

(2) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information...

It is impossible for me to meet the standards that I have sworn to uphold if I am continually being assigned cases after informing my supervisor that I cannot ethically handle more cases. It is impossible to affectively represent more than 100 clients at a time. Ethically, that is unacceptable. I have asked not to be assigned any more cases in the near future because I am not able to provide every client with affective representation as I have sworn to do.

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF MISSOURI

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Justine R. Finney, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

My name is Justine R. Finney, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated:

I am a licensed attorney with the Missouri Bar. My Missouri Bar number is 62915. I became employed as an Assistant Public Defender with the Area 19 Office of the Missouri State Public Defender on July 5, 2017. Immediately prior to that, I was employed as an Assistant Public Defender in the Area 15 Office of the Public Defender. I had worked as a Public Defender in that office since September 2015.

I have been a practicing law as a licensed attorney in Missouri since September 2010. My first position as a licensed attorney was as a Staff Attorney and Manager of the Application Unit at Missouri Protection and Advocacy Services, a position I held from September to December 2010. From January 2011 until September 2015, I was employed as an Assistant Attorney General with the Office of the Missouri Attorney General.

I have asked my District Defender, Justin Carver, to assign no additional cases to me at this time. I made that request because I believe accepting any additional cases would make it impossible for me to continue to provide competent, effective legal counsel to each of my current clients in each of his or her cases.

I currently have 100 open cases, not including cases to which I am assigned as second chair. This includes 1 homicide, 4 A-B drug felonies, 18 A-B non-drug felonies, 1 A-B felony sex case, 29 C-D-E felony drug case, 27 C-D non-drug felonies, 2 C-D-E felony sex cases, 8 misdemeanors, and 10 felony probation violations.

My caseload is split between Cole County – where I am assigned to 36 cases – and Miller County – where I am assigned to 64 cases. It is a common occurrence for me to have cases on a Cole County docket and a Miller County docket on the same date and time.

I am also acting as second chair in 1 A-B felony sex case (State v. Bobby D. Bishop, 16AC-CR02997-01) in Cole County and 1 A non-drug felony in Dent County (State v. Ruby M. Pennock, 12CF-CR01091-02).

Below is a list of my current cases and the associated primary charges:

1. State v. Raymond A. Russell, 14ML-CR00451-01: Incest

Several of my cases are unable to move forward because we need to contact witnesses. Many of my clients are waiting on my advice with regard to plea recommendation or a suppression matter, but often such advice is contingent upon finding additional evidence. That evidence often includes witness information and statements. Our office has only one investigator for all of the attorneys. While he is excellent at his job, he is limited in his ability to timely locate and contact witnesses for every attorney on every requested case in the office while also completing his other job duties, such as serving subpoenas. He is currently on paternity leave and is not expected to return until January 2018, leaving our office with no investigator. Our support staff is doing its best to complete investigative tasks in his absence, but they have plenty of their own job duties.

Meeting with clients is especially time consuming with the Missouri State Public Defender ("MSPD"). I have clients who are incarcerated in Boonville Correctional Center, Chillicothe Correctional Center, Cole County Jail, Cooper County Detention Center, Farmington Correctional Center, Fulton Reception & Diagnostic Center, Jefferson City Correctional Center, Miller County Jail, Moberly Correctional Center, Ray County Jail, South Central Correctional Center, Western Missouri Correctional Center, and Women's Eastern Reception, Diagnostic & Correctional Center. It is neither efficient nor convenient to meet with clients in correctional facilities. All require advance appointments, and each facility has its own limited hours for calls or visits. It is not uncommon to schedule a DOC appointment and be notified at the time of the appointment that the client has been transported out on a writ or transferred to another facility. Also, at both jails and prisons, an attorney can anticipate a wait of up to an hour before being permitted to visit with a client in person.

Additionally, not all of my clients who are out of custody are local. I have clients who reside throughout various counties in Missouri as well as clients who live out of state. It is routine to be unable to meet with clients outside of court appearances because of the circumstances that necessarily coincide with poverty and criminal charges. Many of my clients do not have a valid driver's license or transportation to meet with me in my office. Likewise, many of my clients do not have consistent access to a primary phone number where they can be reached for case discussion or updates.

Some of my cases are more time-consuming than others. For example, I am unable to work with one client who lives in another state because of his cognitive disability and inability to travel to my office. He is accused of very serious conduct but I am unable to prepare a defense. I am the fourth public defender from our office to represent him, and our office has still not been able to retain an expert to evaluate him in his home town.

One of my clients is an illegal immigrant, and I am not an expert in immigration law. He also speaks only Spanish. I am unable to meet with him without arranging for a Spanish-speaking interpreter, which is difficult to schedule.

In the cases in which a client is alleged to have committed violence in a correctional facility, our office has to make special arrangements to show the client all electronic evidence in the facility. In at least two of these cases, I have file boxes full of mental health and internal DOC records sitting in a corner in the office waiting to be reviewed. These records were requested by attorneys entered before me, but there are no notes indicating the records have been previously reviewed.

I spoke with an individual in DOC last week who had been a client of Area 19 for nearly a year. I am his third public defender. He thanked me profusely for speaking with him as he explained I was the first attorney he had spoken with.

I am the third or fourth attorney assigned on many of my cases, and that causes a set of problems I would not otherwise encounter. The client is usually angry and confused – and rightfully so – during our first conversation. Too often, previous attorneys have not left sufficient notes on what has been done, what conversations have taken place with the client, or what negotiations have been entertained. I am forced to start as if it's a new case, but without the same advantages. By this time a deposition may have been done but without asking questions relating to what I believe the defense to be; essential discovery has not been timely requested; a client has missed an opportunity for a change of judge or venue; evidence or witnesses that might have existed previously no longer exist or can no longer be found; etc.

I do not believe attorneys who had these cases prior to me intentionally neglected the clients or their files. Rather, I believe they were victims of how MSPD had routinely operated; they had far too many cases, and it was absolutely impossible to effectively represent every client in every case.

In the first MSPD office I worked, Area 15, I had no mechanism for capping my caseload. When I started, I was assigned as the only public defender in Cooper County, Missouri, and that meant I took every criminal case charged against every indigent person who applied for MSPD services in that county. I had five years of experience as an attorney when I started but still could not handle what was demanded of me. I carried a caseload of approximately 150-170 and was also expected to be present in court for the entirety of every associate and circuit law day. I routinely received dozens of new clients each month, and I had to meet and discuss their cases with them as well as continue progression on existing cases. I had very little time for research or motion writing, and my discovery review was done only with great brevity before discussing clients' cases with them. If I determined one case had more meritorious suppression issues or defense strategies, I would spend weekends and evenings preparing that case file.

When I asked my colleagues for advice, I was repeatedly told I had to prioritize some clients and ignore the others in order to accomplish anything and avoid burnout. I was advised to prepare for only one docket at a time – the next docket – unless I was preparing for a trial. If something was going to trial, the strategy was to ignore all cases except the case going to trial until the trial was over. All of this advice amounted to a form of triage that I found to be unacceptable, but nobody offered a more workable solution. The courts told us we had to take cases, and we did not have enough attorneys to lower our individual caseloads. Attorneys would get overwhelmed and resign, and their cases would have to be reassigned amongst the remaining attorneys in the office.

In contrast, the caseload limit in Area 19 has been a great relief. When I started here in July, I was instructed to inform my District Defender, Justin Carver, if I reached a point when I felt I could no longer be assigned new cases and still provide competent representation to my existing clients. When combined with the unique circumstances of MPSD, I still would not consider my caseload to be ideal. However, the change is significant. In cases in which I already have discovery, I am usually able to review the discovery before my first meeting with the client. This makes the conversation more productive and makes the case move more quickly. I have also been able to spend more time researching legal issues. I've used that research to advise clients, prepare for preliminary hearings, write suppression motions, and file legal memorandums. Since September, that has led to a complete dismissal of charges in at least three felony cases.

I have also been able to demand trials and announce that I am fully prepared on the day of trial in three instances in which the prosecuting attorney was not. In those instances, the state dismissed the charges. The same has happened with preliminary hearings: I have filed motions to dismiss if necessary witnesses did not appear, and the court dismissed cases when the prosecutor did not present its witnesses. I've also filed motions to compel discovery after having time to review the file, deposed witnesses, and worked with experts on cases. I won a contested probation violation for a client in which we had two days of testimony involving an alleged laws violation. This took preparation time outside of court and two afternoons of testimony in court. I have done these things while routinely traveling to dockets in Miller County – approximately 30 miles from the office – and spending the day in the county courthouse unable to work on other matters. I've also started appearing for most of my settings in Cole County and meeting with new clients there. Finally, I was able to prepare for and second chair a child sex jury trial and the related pretrial hearings. It has been difficult to accomplish these things with the caseload I currently have, but I am certain I would not have been able to do it with the caseload I had in my last office. More importantly, on a professional level, I no longer feel like my ethical standards for representation are being compromised.

MSPD will face issues in addition to the caseload because of the nature of the work and the clients' life circumstances, but limiting the caseload to what an attorney can competently handle has and can continue to improve attorneys' ability to provide effective representation.

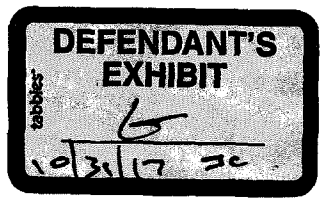
AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF MISSOURI



Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Lori Morgan, who being by me duly sworn, deposed as follows:

My name is Lori M. Morgan, I am of sound mind, capable of making this affidavit, and personally acquainted with the facts herein stated:

My position with the Missouri State Public Defender is Legal Assistant II. I became employed with the Area 19 Office of the Missouri State Public Defender on November 30, 2015. My primary job function is the processing of applications for public defender services to determine if the applicant qualifies for representation based on indigence and if they do qualify, to then assign the cases for the qualifying applicants to one of the attorneys in our office.

In January 2017 our office began to calculate the caseloads of the attorneys in our office with the intent of capping them at ethical and manageable case load. Utilizing this method, each attorney is assigned approximately 15-20 new cases per month (depending on case type). When they reach 100% of their capacity, there are internal discussions about whether the attorney can take more cases and continue to provide competent representation on all of their cases. If they can, more are assigned. If they cannot, they get no more new cases for that month. This is repeated with each attorney in the office until all attorneys in the office have exhausted their ability to take more cases.

After losing 5 attorneys to resignation and one to a military obligation, there was a need to reassign those cases among the remaining attorneys in the office and in doing so it left our office unable to open new cases. At this point I was instructed to no longer open new cases for those that qualify for public defender services but rather to file a motion asking for the appointment of another attorney to represent the qualifying defendant. The motion to appoint is the first pleading filed in our office now when processing an application.

As of October 30, 2017 there are 117 cases in Cole County that have not been assigned to an attorney, 54 in Miller County, and 3 in Moniteau County. Of these, the clients are both in and out of custody. Many are in Missouri DOC facilities, in the Moniteau County jail, Miller County jail, and Cole County jail. There are also clients with unassigned cases that are out of custody and residing across the state. I also have 36 applications for clients with cases in Cole County and 60 for Miller County for applicants that qualify for services that are pending opening.

Below is a list of all unassigned cases that have been opened in the Jefferson City Trial Office as of October 30, 2017:

MOTION REQUESTING CONFERENCE TO DISCUSS CASELOAD ISSUES

COMES NOW Ruth Petsch, District Defender of the Area 16 Public Defender Office, and requests a conference to discuss caseload issues pursuant to Sec. 600.063, subject to the below listed conditions and objections.

Reason for Conference

Due to excessive caseloads, the individual attorneys of the Area 16 Public Defender Office are violating or at risk of violating Missouri Supreme Court Rules 4-1.1 (competence), 4-1.3 (diligence), 4-1.4 (communication), and 4-1.7 (conflict of interest), as well as the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel, if they continue to accept additional cases.

District Defender Petsch requests a conference to discuss caseload issues under the following conditions, and makes the following objections to Sec. 600.063 and Sec. 600.062.

1. That no prosecutor(s) be permitted to participate in the conference.

Prosecutors lack standing to participate and have a conflict of interest in doing so.

Although Sec. 600.063 permits prosecutors to have notice of the conference and to appeal an adverse ruling, nothing in the text of Sec. 600.063 expressly permits prosecutors to be participants in the conference. To the extent that Sec. 600.063 permits or mandates participation of prosecutors, the statute is unconstitutional because in conflict with Missouri Supreme Court Rule 4; the Supreme Court's exclusive authority to regulate attorney conduct; and the rights of individual defendants, whose cases may be discussed at the conference, to confidentiality, see Rule 4-1.6(a), attorney-client privilege, work-product privilege, effective assistance of counsel and due process under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments.

2. That District Defender Petsch and her fellow attendees at the conference be permitted to discuss why her "entire office" is unable to accept additional cases. Sec. 600.063.1 provides that a District Defender may request a conference "to discuss caseload issues involving any individual public defender or defenders, but not the entire office...." However, District Defender Petsch would not need to have a conference with the Court if only some individual attorneys in her office were unable to accept additional cases; she could simply reassign cases within the office to other attorneys who were able to accept the cases. The reason why a conference is necessary is because none of the available attorneys in her office are able to accept additional cases at this time. To the extent that Sec. 600.063 precludes discussion of the "entire office," the statute is unconstitutional because in conflict with Missouri Supreme Court Rule 4, and the Supreme Court's exclusive authority to regulate attorney conduct.

3. That the individual attorneys in Area 16 be permitted to decline to accept additional cases when they are violating or at risk of violating Rules 4-1.1, 4-1.3, 4-1.4, 4-1.7, as well as the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel. The Rules of Professional Conduct impose on all attorneys an ethical duty to provide effective assistance of counsel to all of their clients; attorneys violate those rules if they "accept[] a case that results in a caseload so high that it impairs [their] ability to provide competent representation, to act with reasonable diligence, and to keep the client reasonably informed." State ex rel. Mo. Pub. Def. Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 607 (Mo. banc 2012). To the extent that Secs. 600.062 and/or 600.063 preclude Area 16 attorneys from declining to accept additional cases when they are violating or at risk of violating the Rules of Professional Conduct, Secs. 600.062 and 600.063 are unconstitutional because in conflict with Missouri Supreme Court Rule 4; the Supreme Court's exclusive authority to regulate attorney conduct; the Sixth Amendment; and the individual attorneys' right to Equal Protection of law under the Fourteenth Amendment.

4. That the conference be on the record to allow District Defender Petsch the opportunity to appeal.

5. That the conference be open for attendance by the public, except during those portions where details of individual defendants' cases are discussed.

Subject: Michael Barrett Appointed in Crawford County

Mr. Barrett,

Today Judge Parker appointed Michael Barrett to represent Joshua Wilkins in 14CF-CR01188-01 for a probation violation. On October 16, 2017, judge Parker appointed the PD to represent Wilkins in the matter and ordered the clerk to notify both our office and Michael Barrett as the Public Defender. The case was placed on today's docket for a hearing on the state's motion to revoke probation. When the case was called this afternoon I announced to the court that we did not have any attorneys who could provide competent representation at this time for Mr. Wilkins' case. That assigning an attorney from our office would not fulfill Wilkins' constitutional guarantee of competent representation given our current situation. The judge responded by ordering the entry of Michael Barrett as Mr Wilkins attorney, ordering Michael Barrett to appear at Wilkins' next court date on December 11, 2017, at 1:00 PM, and ordering the clerk to notify OCDC of his order appointing the PD on October 16, 2017, and directing the clerk to send OCDC the docket entries notifying the PD of his appointment on that date. I did notify the court that this was not permissible pursuant to State ex rel. Robinson v. Franklin, but the court declined to withdraw the order.

Judge Parker is one of our more reasonable judges. He informed me that he is trying to bring attention to the matter. I do not believe that his order, while heavy handed, is malicious. He did announce in making the order that our office was under a terrible strain and indicated that he believed we did not have the resources to handle the case.

IN THE TWENTY-FIFTH CIRCUIT FOR THE STATE OF MISSOURI

Circuit Court of Phelps County

	)
In re:	)
Area 25 Public Defender Office	)	Case No. 17PH-CV02226

FINDINGS AND ORDER

The District Defender of the Area 25 Office of the Public Defender System, together with the Deputy District Defender, came before the Court on December 27, 2017. The date and time for the hearing had been set beforehand although the Motion for Conference pursuant to Sec. 600.063 RSMo was not filed until that afternoon. Prosecutors for Phelps, Pulaski and Texas Counties were informed of the scheduled conference beforehand and the Prosecutors for Texas and Pulaski Counties were in attendance. Also in attendance was the Director of the State Public Defender System as well as several Assistant Public Defenders.

Preliminarily, the Court notes Sec. 600.063 RSMo requires approval by the Public Defender Director or the Commission (600.063.1) but the Director's attendance and participation in support of Movant assumes that approval.

Furthermore, Movant's suggestion that Prosecutor's lack standing to participate in the conference is moot. In any case, Sec. 600.063.2 presumes, infers and anticipates that participation. Movant's motion that prosecutors have no standing and to allow their participation makes the statute unconstitutional is denied.

Movant has also filed suggestions to the effect that Sec. 600.062 & 063 RSMo are unconstitutional to the extent they conflict with the Rules of Professional Conduct and that those statutes do not provide the exclusive remedy for addressing excessive case load. The Court does not need to decide those issues since Movant has chosen to avail itself of those statutes and procedures.

This Court notes at the outset that Public Defenders are called upon to provide the highest level of representation to indigent defendants. The Court observes that the Defenders in the Area 25 Office routinely do that, sometimes under difficult cirmcumstances.

The Court notes Sec. 600.063 RSMo permits this Court to grant relief "based upon a finding that the individual public defender or defenders will be unable to provide effective assistance of counsel due to case load issues." However, that statute fails to set out the applicable standard or burden of proof to make that determination. Without further guidance the Court adopts a preponderance of the evidence standard.

Movant argues that the Missouri Supreme Court, in disposing of In Re Hinkebein, SC96089, put the Public Defenders in the impossible position of violating ethical rules about acceptance of cases if they feel their caseload is too high. The Supreme Court, to this Court's knowledge made no such ruling in Hinkebein, but, in any case, that has been the law since at least State ex rel Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592 (2012). Presumably that is why the legislature enacted Sec. 600.063 RSMo in 2013.

Movant has provided the Court with figures for "Cases Initiated by County." (Part of Movant's Exhibit L) For Phelps, Pulaski and Texas Counties this shows cases have risen 14.38% from 2015 to 2017. However, the Court notes this rise is almost exclusively in C&D or low level felonies. A&B felonies for those counties have gone up only 6.48% from 2015 to 2017 and, in fact, fell 10.28% from 2016 to 2017. The Court does not have the benefit of further research in the matter but strongly believes the rise in lower level felonies can be attributed to drug cases; part of the "opioid crisis."

Movant has also provided the Court with the results of application of the Area 25 case load to both the "Old NAC Standard" and "The Rubin Brown Standard" which suggests Movant needs five attorneys each for the Phelps and Pulaski Counties and three attorneys for Texas County. None of those counties currently has that manpower. The Court is not persuaded by these studies/standards sufficiently to place reliance thereon. The "NAC Standard" imposes a numerical limit of 150 felony cases per year/ per lawyer, without regard to the types or complexities of those cases. "The Rubin Brown" study assigns a number of hours per case based on the type of case but those assignments do not coincide with this Court's experience.

The Court believes it must apply its own experience of 35 years as a trial attorney in the same counties served by the Area 25 Office; over 23 of those years as a criminal defense lawyer and 11 ½ years in prosecution, augmented by the similarly vast experience of his colleague on the Circuit Bench, Hon. William E. Hickle.

This Court knows no attorney should accept employment as a trial attorney, whether Public Defender, Prosecutor or associate in a law firm primarily doing trial practice, and expect to work only 40 hours a week. To paraphrase the late Justice Joseph Story of the U.S. Supreme Court, "The law is a jealous mistress."

Movant raises the issue of significant turnover in the Area 25 Office, especially compared to the experience of District Offices in more metropolitan areas. There is no particular evidence to suggest this is directly related to caseload issues versus new lawyers preferring to practice in areas with more social opportunities. To the extent turnover may be salary driven it is not a matter for this Court's consideration.

Movant advocates for use of a "wait list" to "triage" cases awaiting assignment to Assistant Public Defenders. The Area 25 Office has already started doing that without benefit of the procedure mandated by Sec. 600.063 RSMo. This Court is unable to understand how use of a "wait list" does other than to "kick the can down the road." Moreover, if Public Defenders have a statutory and ethical obligation to provide counsel and representation to indigent defendants how are they not violating those obligations by placing such a Defendant on a "wait list" and allowing him or her to stay in jail until they get to that case?

Movant has provided the Court with Exhibits A, D, F, G, H & K, affidavits of the several Assistant Public Defenders professing to be unable to provide adequate assistance to their clients because of excessive caseload. Those caseloads, as recited in the affidavits, range from 39 to 82 with one affidavit failing to recite that defender's numerical caseload. These caseloads are not inconsistent with this Court's experience as a practitioner, nor as a prosecutor, nor what it knows about the caseload of Public Defenders in years past.

Accordingly, this Court does not find that the individual Defenders named in Movant's Motion will be unable to provide effective assistance of counsel due to caseload issues and Movant's Motion is denied.

Further, Movant is hereby ordered to cease immediately any use, or purported use, of "wait lists" in assignment of cases to Assistant Public Defenders.

This Court does, however, feels there are additional methods available to both the Area 25 Office and the Prosecutors that could alleviate workload of all involved. Those include:

1. The taking of depositions has expanded in criminal cases, undoubtedly due in part to use of grand juries in Texas, Phelps and Pulaski Counties in lieu of preliminary hearings. Defendants have a right to take depositions and this Court would never interfere with that right. However, not all witnesses need to be deposed. Taking depositions that do not further the defendant's planned defense wastes time and money for all involved. Assistant Public Defenders with less experience should rely on the District Defender and his Deputy as to when such expenditure of time and money is warranted.
2. Some defendants, especially those incarcerated on lower level felonies may want to accept an offer from the state. If the Defendant admits guilt to counsel and indicates a desire to accept the State's offer, delay in doing so on the part of defense counsel could be a disservice to the client and potentially violate Rule 4-1.2(a) of the rules of professional conduct. In those cases an appropriate record can be made if discovery is not complete but the Defendant wants to proceed anyway.
3. It has happened frequently that a Defender will have upcoming trials and those trials delayed, and Defendants left in jail, when their lawyer is transferred to another county within Area 25 and a new Defender assigned. This needs to stop.
4. Prosecutors should, to the extent able, implement a practice of pro se disposition of low level felonies, if appropriate. Such a "pro se docket" was implemented for misdemeanors several years ago and proved highly effective to reduce Public Defender caseloads. A "drug possession pro se docket" would likely be beneficial as well.

5. To the extent possible, the District Defender and Deputy District Defender should re-examine the methods and procedures by which they assign cases and Defenders to counties to see if modification could result in more effective and efficient utilization of Public Defender resourses.

IT IS SO ORDERED THIS 11TH DAY OF January, 2018.
