VIDEOGRAPHER: We are on the record. Today's date is December 5, 2017, and the time is 2:49 p.m. This is the video recorded deposition of Jeffrey Martin in the matter of Shondel Church, et al., versus State of Missouri, et al., Case Number 17-04057-CV-C-NKL in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division. This deposition is being held at the American Civil Liberties Union of Missouri Foundation.

The reporter's name is Emily Hughes. My name is Ryan Gray. I'm the legal videographer. We were with Alaris Litigation Services.

Would the attorneys present please introduce themselves?

MR. WILLIAMSON: Jason Williamson from the ACLU for the plaintiffs.

MR. RAMSEY: Steven Alan Ramsey for the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens.

MS. SHIPMA: Jacqueline Shipma for the Missouri State Public Defender defendants.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Would the court reporter please swear in the witness?

JEFFREY MARTIN, of lawful age, produced, sworn and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs, deposes and says:

EXAMINATION

BY MR. WILLIAMSON:

Q. Good afternoon, Mr. Martin.

A. Good afternoon.

Q. My name is Jason Williamson. I am one of the attorneys for the plaintiffs in this case. Have you ever been deposed before?

A. Maybe once or twice.

Q. Do you remember when that was?

A. Oh, no. It would have been during the course of working for the public defender's office.

Q. So in the context of a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Today, I'm going to ask you a number of questions relevant to the case. You are required to answer those questions truthfully and to the best of your abilities. Please remember that your testimony here is under oath, so it's just as if you were testifying in court. You understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your attorney may object to one or more of my questions, but in limited circumstances, you are still required to answer the question; okay?

A. Sure.

Q. If you don't hear my question or you don't understand my question, just please let me know immediately so that I can repeat or rephrase the question.

And a few things that I wanted to make sure we keep in mind for the benefit of our -- our court reporter: One is to make sure that you're speaking clearly and loudly enough for her to record. I have a feeling that won't be a problem.

A. Not a problem.

Q. Also, make sure that you answer all questions verbally as opposed to using any kind of body movements; okay?

A. Sure.

Q. And I'd like for us to -- to try to let one another finish before we -- we move on, so please, let me finish my question before you answer, even if you can anticipate the question that's coming. And I'm going to -- to do my best to -- to let you finish your answer before I ask another question; okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Did you prepare for the deposition today?

A. I spoke with Ms. Shipma I think twice. First when she notified me that I was going to be included on the list, and then actually, I think yesterday, she touched base with me to see if I had any questions.

Q. And did you talk with -- talk with anyone else in preparation for the deposition?

A. In preparation, no. I mean, I let, like, my staff and, you know, my wife and a few other people know that I was going to be coming down here but --

Q. Okay.

A. -- not otherwise.

Q. Did you review any documents in preparation for today?

A. I don't know that I reviewed them. I didn't have -- I had a few documents that I had forwarded to Ms. Shipma, which I think were e-mails to me from the Court that I couldn't remember whether I had forwarded them to her, so I wanted to make sure that I had -- that I had done that. I may have re -- in essence, resent them again, but -- but other than that, there wasn't a bunch of documents that I reviewed or anything like that.

Q. And did you do anything else that you can think of to prepare for today?

A. No.

Q. In all of your spare time?

A. Correct. No.

Q. Who is your current employer?

A. Missouri State Public Defender.

Q. And what is your title?

A. I am the Area 17 district defender.

Q. And how long have you served as district defender?

A. District defender -- I have been the district defender there since '99, I believe, something about like that.

Q. And have you served the with MSPD in any other capacity?

A. I served at -- I mean, I was an assistant public defender prior to becoming the district defender. I've been with MSPD since 1996. I mean, January will -- will be 22 years.

Q. And what other positions did you hold within the office prior to becoming district defender?

A. I was an assistant public defender until I became district defender.

Q. And did you start as an APD 1?

A. Yes. I -- well, yes. I'm trying to remember. There used to be -- when I first started, there was a designation, APD 1, and APD 1P, and I don't remember which one was first.

Q. Okay.

A. But in essence, I started at what would be the beginning position.

Q. And from there, you -- you moved up the ranks to APD 2, 3, and 4?

A. I became -- I was an APD 3 at the time I became a district defender, so I never actually became an APD 4. I became district defender before that occurred.

Q. Were you an APD also in Area 17?

A. Yes. That's the office I started in, and I've always been there.

Q. Okay. Got it. And did you have any -- did you do any other legal work prior to coming to the MSPD?

A. I worked privately for about three years, I would say. About three years before coming to MSPD.

Q. And was that as a criminal defense attorney?

A. For the most part, yes.

Q. Did you do other kinds of legal work?

A. I did some. Most of it was, like, municipal court, traffic work, criminal work, did some bankruptcy work, but it was mostly limited to that.

Q. So can you tell me which counties are included in Area 17?

A. Area 17 has primary coverage in two circuits. Those two circuits are the 17th Circuit, which is Cass County and Johnson County, Missouri, and then the 27th Circuit, which is Henry County, Bates County, and Saint Clair County. Our office also covers conflict cases for counties that are -- for the offices basically that are to the north and the south of us, so for the Area 16, the Kansas City office; for the Area 7 office, which is Liberty; and then for the Area 28 office, which is Nevada. We, over the years, have done conflict cases from those offices, so when they have multiple codefendants or conflict witnesses or situations like that, then we would end up getting those conflict cases from those offices.

Q. Now, is your office presently still handling conflict cases?

A. We still have conflict cases assigned in our office. We are currently not receiving conflict cases from the Kansas City office or the Liberty office. As far as new conflicts arriving, we have had a few come from the Nevada office, but for the most part, those were getting contracted out as well. They were contracting out the conflict cases here over the last number of months.

Q. And is it your understanding that the public defender's office received additional funding this -- this fiscal year to cover conflict cases?

A. Yes.

Q. But your testimony is that there are still -- notwithstanding that additional funding, there are still conflict cases that are being handled by your office?

A. We were -- we are generally not receiving new conflict cases, but I still have conflict -- I have two attorneys right now that are still -- part of their caseload are conflict cases that they're doing the -- one attorney, that is primarily what he does, our cases from Jackson County and Clay County and Platte County.

Q. But those are all cases that were opened prior to --

A. Previous.

Q. Do you expect that trend to continue?
A. I would be hopeful, but no. Based on my experience with budgets and the State for the last 22 years, my experience would be that while we had that this year, and we're -- my office is certainly grateful to have had that, I would fully expect that when the next fiscal year rolls around, in all likelihood, that will not be the case, and that I will start getting conflict cases from Jackson County and Clay County and Platte County and Nevada and that sort of thing again.
Q. Okay. How many attorneys do you have on staff right now in your office?
A. Okay. My overall -- my overall staff right now is 12.
Q. 12 attorneys?
A. No. That's -- my overall staff is 12. That includes the office support assistant, which is the person up front that answers phones and opens files and that sort of thing. I have two legal assistants, one investigator, and then there's an eight-attorney staff total. Now, I have been designated another position, attorney position, which I have been trying to fill for the last six months, so I have a position that is open right now.

Page 14

Q. Okay. And that -- the eight attorneys includes yourself?
A. Oh, yes. That includes me.
Q. Okay. And you said you have -- there's -- there's funding for an additional attorney?
A. Yes. I would end up with a staff of 13 total.
Q. Okay. How soon would you expect to be able to fill that position?
A. I have offered the position, I believe, at least three times now that I can think of. The first person did not pass the bar -- strike that.
I think four times, because then the next three people have all declined the position, declined the offer to work somewhere else, accept offers somewhere else.
Q. We'll talk in a bit about the -- the Hinkebein decision. But were -- is it your understanding that the -- the decisions to turn down those offers had anything to do with those recent events?
A. As a matter of fact, I can tell you that during my interview process, one of the last questions that I ask people during the interview process is, would you have any -- other than asking them if they have questions for me --

Q. Uh-huh.
A. -- about various things, I ask them, "Do you have any concerns about joining the public defender's office? Is there anything that would, you know, concern you, or what worries would you have?"
Q. Uh-huh.
A. Every single person that I've interviewed almost to a T, at least one of the questions that they've asked has been about the caseload and what kind of caseload they would have, and you know, what that -- what that looked like. And my impression of that was not from a -- just an interest standpoint of, you know, well, what does my caseload look like? Like, what is my average day look?
Q. Right.
A. There were a number of them, many of them that that question was a specific question that was geared towards, like, how heavy is my caseload going to be the day I start?
Q. And what -- when were those four offers made and what -- and in what time frame?
A. I have been -- the position has been open, I believe, since July, so it has been during that context at that time frame. The person that obviously didn't pass the bar I think found out in -- whenever bar results come out. I want to say -- I forget whether it's September or -- but it -- that person found out about bar results. And I should correct one thing. There was one person that we were in -- that I was going to offer the position to that accepted an offer with another office, with actually an MSPD office.

Q. Okay.
A. But then the other people declined the offers. Those offers then took place after -- after making -- after the one person not passing the bar --
Q. Uh-huh.
A. -- then I simply, you know, started checking references on what -- who would have been the next person on my list --
Q. Right.
A. -- moved down from there. If we didn't have applicants that I felt would meet the criteria at -- which I have done, I basically reopened my process and started rescreening applicants and am still doing that now.
Q. What kind of turnover rate do you have in your office? And we can start with turnover rate among the lawyers.

A. Yeah. Because it has -- it has varied. I'd say on average, I probably lose an attorney somewhere around -- I'd lose one probably once every, if I had to kind of average it out, like, nine -- nine months to a year, somewhere around in there, you know. And -- and that kind of accounts for there's sometimes where I'll have people, and maybe they'll -- I'll be fully staffed for a year and a half and, you know, that sort of thing or, you know, up to two years; and then all of a sudden, I'm down two attorneys. In an office like mine, when you start losing more than one attorney, that becomes a real problem.

Q. Now, to the extent that you can recall this, of the other seven attorneys in your office, what is the range of experience that they have as attorneys, as criminal defense attorneys?

A. Right now -- right now, I have a fairly experienced staff with the exception of one attorney, which is a -- a new hire. I've been able to hire a person, but I had a person leave, so still have the position that I was trying to originally fill is still open. That person is a -- is a brand new licensed attorney. He was just sworn in. Other than him, most of the attorneys in my office are fairly experienced attorneys. Some of them have been at -- with my office -- let me think here. One of them has been in -- bee with my office since she started and has been with me probably nine years or so, something like that. The other attorneys that I have have transferred -- many of them have transferred in from another office, so they weren't, like, a direct hire for me as a new attorney.

Q. Okay.

A. They transferred in from somewhere else, but many of them have -- have a pretty good -- I'm blessed to have a number of attorneys that have experience right now. I've had the converse of that.

Q. Uh-huh. What would you say are the primary differences between having experienced attorneys on staff versus young lawyers?

A. Well, having an experienced attorney on staff, the benefit of having an experienced attorney is that if somebody's gone, if someone's sick, if they have to cover a docket, if they have to do something that's out of the ordinary, it -- it's a lot easier for them to do it, to walk into an unfamiliar jurisdiction. Since our office covers so many counties, there would be places that people might have to go that they haven't ever been there before as opposed to working in one courthouse generally. So other than figuring out, you know, how to get from point A to point B, for them, you know, it might not be that big of a deal to do. There are other kinds of logistics that they're familiar with that they know, you know, I'm going -- if I'm going to do this, I'm going to probably be deposing, you know, a certain number of people. Here's the kind of case I have. I might need an expert for that, so I need to kind of be planning, you know, what I'm tong to do. Recognizing mental health issues in clients, some of those kinds of things. Experienced attorneys have a better grasp of -- of some of -- some of those things and being able to recognize it or know those things early on as opposed to later on.

Q. Do you -- how long does it generally take for you to fill a position? And I know you've talked about trying to fill this --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- sort of new position, but when someone leaves, generally, how long is it between the time that person leaves and the time you're able to replace them?

A. Oh, at best, usually the turnaround is about 90 days or so, at best. And it depends on how it gets fills. Because, for example, like, one of those experienced attorneys, if they're transferring from somewhere, if that attorney is transferring from an office that they, themselves, might -- obviously, they're going to be losing someone, if it's a smaller office, they might have to really go through a hiring process before that attorney can leave, because otherwise, it might leave them in a real hole. So I may operate -- because I have more attorneys than they do, I might operate with that hole for a while at my end until they can try to get their situation taken care of. Other times, it's had to do with just the time of year and -- and various other kinds of things. For example, in this round of stuff, I've had nobody apply transfer-wise throughout the entire course of this. All of this has been people that would be new-hire scenarios.

Q. How -- how do you think that this -- that the -- the turnover rate and the difficulty in replacing attorneys who leave impacts your office's ability to provide the kind of representation that you think is necessary for your clients?

A. Well, it creates a number of problems, not the least of which is, people basically are just filling in. They're covering something in some way. And so from a client standpoint, they were talking with person A; they're now talking with person B. For some clients, that -- you know, they may be okay with that, and it doesn't bother them. For other clients, it's a -- it -- you have to spend time developing trust with a client in order to be able to talk to them about certain aspects of cases, what the outcomes might be, those kinds of things. So from that standpoint, it creates logistic problems that way.

For us, the other logistic problem that it creates is, we've got a number of counties we go to, and I only have so many people that can do stuff. And court, based on what days you have court and how many people you have, people can't be in two places at once. They also can't -- it inhibits their ability to go the jail and visit clients. It inhibits their ability to do other things that would help them be able to investigate or move a case forward because they're filling those days with other court dates. You know, even if it's just to reset something or to try to get somebody out of jail or whatever it might be, you've taken a day that would have been -- or days that would have been constructive workdays and turned those into another court day. And so you know, while people can go to court and can cover court, that might be all they're doing.

Q. Can you talk to me a little bit about your day-to-day responsibilities as district defender?

A. Well, I have -- generally, I have two functions. I am the -- as a supervisor of the office, I have all of the managerial duties, so I'm supervising attorneys, supervising other staff, dealing with families and other individuals outside the office that might be calling in or contacting the office, people with general questions that can't be answered by support staff that need to be answered by somebody else. Generally, I would be the person that a number of those things get directed to. Dealing with Courts and jails and other kinds of responsibilities that -- that you have, from a management standpoint.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I then also, because of our office and staffing, I have my own caseload, and so I have a caseload responsibility like everybody else in my office. And while I've had to reassign that in various ways at various times, that also requires me to go to jails, to be able to go to court, to be able to, you know, deal with my own clients. To be able to work on their cases as well along with the other aspects of the office.

Q. How does your caseload compare to the caseload of the other attorneys?

A. I've tried at times to do various things with -- with my caseload, in -- in either limiting it, rearranging it. I've tried things to adjust it in various ways, but as a practical matter, my caseload is very comparable to other people in the office. There's no -- there's no good way not to be able -- there's no good way not to be able to do that. It's just an impossibility.

Q. And I assume you mean there's no good way to do that with the current number of attorneys --

A. Correct, right.

Q. -- you have on staff?

A. Right. Everything -- yeah. Everything is in the context of what I -- with what I have right now, there's no way for me to -- me to be able to functionally do that. I -- it would dump enough cases on other attorneys that they wouldn't -- it -- they have too many as it is.

Q. Do you have a sense of how many cases you have right now?

A. How many I, personally, have?

Q. Individually, yeah.

A. If I opened up my laptop and logged on, I could tell you exactly, but the exact number, I wouldn't be able to tell you. I would venture to say at any given time right now, I've floated anywhere between 120 and 150 cases.

Q. You, personally?

A. Me personally.

Q. And is -- is that range the same for the other seven attorneys?

A. It is, with the exception of the -- there's two exceptions in that, and -- and I'll explain some with mine as well.

My caseload, I have tried to limit to what would be -- what would be lower class felony cases, and they're primarily in the county that our office is in, is in Cass County, so that way, I'm able to better control being able to go to the jail, being able to go to court, and being able to come back to the office, rather than, in essence, being in court or going to the jail, basically removing me from the office for a day or multiple days.

The youngest -- and I say "youngest." The less -- the least experienced attorney, the newest one that I have, youngest from the standpoint of when he started.

A. He's actually the youngest too. He -- his caseload, it primarily consists of -- there's a large number of cases that are misdemeanor, probation violation, he does have lower level C, D, and E felonies, but -- and he doesn't have any upper class felony cases as of yet.

Q. So when you say that you try to limit your caseload to lower level felonies, in Cass County, those are C, D felonies?

A. Yes.

Q. And E felonies?

A. C, D, and E. Yeah. There's a new classification this year now, E felonies, which I still am trying to get ingrained in bread -- in my head. For so long, it was C and D felonies.

Q. Right.

A. And I did -- and you had answered -- and to go back to the question before --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- the other attorney from a numbers standpoint that has a lower number is the attorney that does the conflict cases up here in Jackson County and in Clay County, Platte. Part of the reason is because the logistics of the travel with all of those cases, and many of those cases are also very serious homicides, multiple count robbery cases, things like that that require him to have different logistics as far as travel and jails and that sort of thing, so his numbers have been solely ris -- restricted in relation to that just because, as a practical matter, he can't do -- he wouldn't be able to do other stuff.

Q. Okay. Is it your testimony that all of your cases -- your personal cases are lower level felonies, or do you also have some misdemeanors?

A. I have -- well, and I also have probation violations in that -- in that context as well. I'm trying to think if I actually have misdemeanor cases. In Cass County, it's a separate misdemeanor docket, so if I have a misdemeanor case on there in my caseload, it would be a random misdemeanor case simply because that person has other cases going on, and I just have that case assigned to me. But on the whole, it's not a misdemeanor caseload that I have assigned myself.

Q. And any particular rationale for that?

A. The rationale for that at the time was I -- I didn't have another attorney to be able to assign to do that, and it -- prior to that, I had myself assigned the smallest county caseload, which was also the county furthest away from the office, and -- which was Saint Clair County. And while in numbers -- that -- that kept numbers down more, the logistics of the jail and the logistics of my travel constantly had me out of the office where I was not able to effectively deal with other things I needed to deal with like family members who might call in or things like that. The logistics of that had me out of the office -- might have me out of the office for a couple of days as a practical matter, and you weren't able to deal with other things that you needed to be able to deal with. Which it also includes just super -- supervision of the office and being there for the staff and answering questions and implementing policy and things like that, so that's why I -- I had to change that to where it put me in the office, and that was the only way that -- at that time to be able to do it.

Q. And there's no one else in your office who is able to do the kind of supervision that -- that you're responsible for -- for doing?

A. Right.

Q. That's not something you can hand to someone else?

A. No.

Q. Do you all -- do you second chair any cases, trials?

Page 28

A. Yes.

Q. How often do you do that?

A. I try to as much as I can, especially with the last -- one of the attorneys -- well, actually, the last two attorneys that left my office were both attorneys that I had hired in the last three years, and one of them had almost no experience, and the other one had a slight bit of private experience, but basically had very little experience as well. I tried to put myself in the position of certainly for people who have first trials or for certain types of cases making myself have available to be able to second chair those individuals, because part of my responsibility as a supervisor and to recommend them in relation to a promotion process is to be able to have observed them demonstrating trial skills. We're a trial office. People, you know, are expected to be able to demonstrate those -- those skills to some degree, and the only way for me to effectively evaluate those is for me to at least be able to observe that, so second chairing was a great way to be able to do -- to do that, because you're involved with all aspects.

Q. How often do you interact with your attorneys on a one-on-one basis for supervision purposes?

A. Well, I'm not sure exactly how to answer that. I mean, I interact with them on a daily basis, the attorneys that -- for example, that are there in the office, or if I'm over in -- in court, and they're over in court, I interact with them. I am I think -- I actively try to talk to my attorneys and, you know, find out what's going on with them, what are -- you know, what are their issues, what kind of case problems do they have going on. You know, that being said, there are routinely times where, you know, you might not see somebody for, you know, a week, just because of the way schedules --
Q. Right.
A. -- are. You know, you just don't see them.
Q. Now, are the attorneys in your office subject to performance evaluations?
A. Yes.
Q. How often are those done?
A. The reality of when those are done initially are when they're required. And when I say, "required," when someone starts initially with the public defender's office, there's a time frame that they're going through where you're doing an initial evaluation of their work product and how they're doing, and they're with the court and with staff and following policies and things like that. Through the first couple levels of -- of being a -- an assistant public defender, there's some time frames on that, especially with the first promotion process.

After that, the time frames become more -- or at least they had been more suggested, but not -- not like a bright line. In other words, it wasn't a specific time frame. And I can tell you over the -- over the years, when there wasn't a specific time frame of something, it's very easy to go along and do stuff, and wake up one day, and you're three years down the road and, you know, trying to figure out if somebody needs to be evaluated for something. That's -- that's really easy.
Q. And -- and are -- I assume you're the one who's conducting these evaluations?
A. Yes, yeah. I'm the only person that does that --
Q. Right.
A. -- in my office.
Q. And on what criteria are your lawyers evaluated?
A. We have an actual -- there's an evaluation form that goes -- that has a breakdown of different areas. Off the top of my head, I don't remember what they are, but there's probably, oh, I don't know, eight or nine or ten of them, something like that, that describe given -- given areas. Like I said, trial skills, for example, is one -- one of those areas, but others will include things as far as, you know, client -- dealing more with things like client contact and client rapport building, providing discovery to clients, those kinds of things. Part -- some of it may involve just your review of their interactions with staff and other members of MSPD and the Courts in general and how to -- you know, how they follow policy, those kinds of things.

We do have a -- MSPD has a guidelines for representation, and the trial division has, you know, guidelines that describe what those things would be that would constitute those areas that you're evaluating, so it would give expectations of certain things that you might do. For example, in pretrial status with your client's case, meeting with your client, discussing any pretrial motion, perhaps pursuing bond issues those -- those kinds of things. All of those things are listed there. You might not do every single thing on a given case or with a given client, but it gives you examples of what those things would be.

In my evaluation process, I have to be able to evaluate as best I can how the attorneys perform under those given areas and how they -- you know, how are they -- how they are doing. Some people are better people people -- or they're better with people. You know, some people are much more -- you know, might be more research and litigation oriented type folks, but might have more difficulty interacting with, you know, clients, especially certain clients. They might have, you know, just difficulty sometimes, you know, being able to develop rapport, so it's evaluating those kinds of things.
Q. And when you're doing these evaluations, to what extent do your consider your attorneys' workloads, respective workloads in trying to figure out, you know, how to assess their performance?
A. Well, you have to try to take it into account. I mean, the reality is, if I'm looking at someone's caseload, and the expectation on someone's caseload is that they're supposed to have contact with clients -- you know, try to have contact with clients every 30 days or 31 days, and, you know, specifically, if we have people that are in jail, being able to go and see those people, you know, obviously, if they see them at day 42 or day 45, or, you know, day 51, well, that's outside of that guideline. But if I also know that that attorney basically has, you know, a caseload of 150 cases or 217 cases -- which I have two attorneys that have over 200 cases right now -- as a practical matter, I'm not going to penalize that attorney. I don't think it's fair for me to penalize that attorney for some of the things that are beyond their control. They -- they can't -- they can't control how many cases show up in Bates County. The prosecutor controls how many cases show up in Bates County.

Q. How many lawyers do you think you need in your office to -- in order to represent your clients adequate -- in order to represent every client adequately, how many lawyers do you -- do you need?

A. Well, I could easily -- right now, I have eight. In theory, I'll have nine when I get somebody hired. I could easily add -- I could easily add four or five attorneys to that, and they'd be -- they'd be plenty busy. I mean, I -- I have an attorney right now who is in Henry County who has -- who has had the highest caseload in the office, and there's been no way for me to change that. Period. Because it's a lone county. She currently has a homicide case right now, along with those over 200 cases, that involves the shooting death of an officer in Clinton.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Needless to say, could be -- it might end up being a capital case. We don't know that because the prosecutor won't say anything about anything about what he's going to do with it; although, he added another count to the case the other day. So she still has representation in that case. In other words, it hasn't gone to our capital unit or something like that. Now, we try to get help from them and get assistance in some way, but for all practical purposes, she has that case. We have a capital unit that deals solely with those cases.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. That attorney is currently having to deal with that case along with the other 200 and whatever cases that she has.

Q. And why is that as far as you know? I mean, why wasn't the case sent to the capital unit?

A. Because it's not filed as a capital case.

Q. I see.

A. It's a -- it's -- it's just -- right now, it's just a murder 1.

Q. Okay.

A. And we handle every -- we handle everything from, you know, misdemeanor -- you know, misdemeanors, probation violations, up through homicides, which include murder 1s, unless it gets filed as -- unless they file aggravators to make it a death case.

Q. You also said you have one investigator on staff; correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Is that enough for the eight attorneys that you have on -- on staff?

A. I would say no. I would say that my attorneys wouldn't have a clue as to whether it's enough.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Because I think that they -- I think because of some of the caseload, they have a hard time figuring how to actually be able to assign stuff to do for an investigator to really go and do what investigators do.

Q. How many cases would you say your investigator is actively working on right now?

A. I don't know. I mean, I -- I mean, I -- I truly don't know. The -- the reason I say that is, cases -- the way our process works is we have -- there's a functionality within our case management system called action items. Action items are a way for an attorney to assign a specific type of thing. It could be very, very specific, or it could be a more generalized type of thing, to someone else in the office; generally, that -- an investigator or a legal assistant, perhaps. And that could be everything from getting somebody's letter of incarceration from a couple of different jails because we're trying to establish what jail time they might have, you know, been in jail in working out a deal in a case. But it could also be as general as being able to give an action item to the investigator that says, I want you to review the discovery in this case. Go to talk to the client at the jail. He's got a list of witnesses already he wants you to be able to talk to. Go figure out, you know, who those people are, and then let me know what that is. That's a pretty big item. And you know, like every office, you know, some attorneys are able to make better use of -- some attorneys are better delegators than others.

Q. Are you involved at all in the process of determining which cases get that investigator and which --

A. No.

Q. -- don't?

Page 37

A. No. I don't -- I encourage my attorneys to -- whatever you think you need, you ask for it, and then we'll figure out if we can't do it. And/or if my investigator has, you know, multiple different requests coming at the same time, then she will come into my office and say, hey, I -- you know, I've got, you know, these four requests. How do you want me to, you know, organize -- how do you want me to organize this? Because like everything else, sometimes -- you know, sometimes you're able to get to the things. This is part of -- part of the built-in problem. Part of built-in problem is you're not able to effectively go and meet and deal with clients such that you are able to get ahead of investigations. So what happens is, you end up a month out, three weeks out, and then suddenly, you're trying to get -- from a trial, and suddenly, you're trying to get various kinds of investigation done, and maybe you need to get this person served, or we need to go find, you know, whoever it might be that we're trying to find. And then suddenly, you have three attorneys making the same kind of requests all in that time period. That's what creates, you know, that kind of problem. And frankly, there's times where I have my legal assistants able to help with serving subpoenas on people and other kinds of stuff, because, you know, frankly, my investigator needs go do other stuff. And my investigator also oftentimes will help people in trial with taking notes and, you know, being able to assist trial-wise, so there's time incorporated with that as well.

Q. What do you -- what do you -- in your opinion, what is the ideal ratio of attorneys to investigators, or what would it be in your office?

A. It would be nice to have an investigator -- frankly, have an investigator working with every two to three attorneys, so if you break that out, that would be -- I mean, in my office, about, at least three investigators, so having a couple more investigators.

One of the issues that we -- that we've had, and I -- and I say, "we've had." For years, I've had -- and I love having a -- the attorneys. I'll take every attorney I can get. But everywhere that we deal with, the court system, the prosecutor's office, their support staff is an inverse flip. So when I go to court or when I deal with someone's office, they have three or four support staff for every attorney that's in that -- in that office. Ours is almost just the opposite. And so you have multiple attorneys trying to occupy -- you know, carve out some niche of time with given -- you know, with given support staff. And that's assuming that those people aren't, you know, on some sort of leave, that, you know, people -- that people go on or that people leave or that people are sick or that people that have babies or the people that do other kinds of things that, you know, they're gone for a period of time.

Q. Right. How do you -- assuming it's you -- go about assigning cases to individual attorneys?

A. Cases in my office are primarily assigned two ways. They're assigned first by county. I have three attorneys that they're the only attorney in that county. And then I have the one attorney that all he did was conflicts for a long period of time. He's doing some cases in -- in Cass County as we whittle that down. But the other two large counties I have, Johnson County and Cass County, those two counties each have at least -- Johnson County has two attorneys in it. Cass County has three attorneys operating in it, which includes me. And those, we divide the cases more up by, in essence, case number. And when I say, "case number," it's a way to sort of divide out the cases such that it -- it, for the most part, fairly, you know, evens out. Every now and then, you'll have an attorney that'll -- you know, one attorney will have more cases than another attorney, and, you know, vice versa, but the way they assign the cases and stuff there, it's a way to be able to kind of divide that out.

Right now, in Johnson County, the attorney that's the younger attorney has the lower level felony cases over there and misdemeanor cases. The senior attorney I have over there has all the upper level A, B felony cases in Johnson County. The -- that same younger attorney has the misdemeanor only case -- he has a misdemeanor docket in Cass County that he does.

Q. Okay.

A. And then myself and another attorney have divided up the felony -- the felony caseload with the exception of that attorney doing A, B felony cases, which I'm not doing in Cass County, because that -- it -- from a standpoint of trying to make some tradeoff in relation to numbers versus seriousness of cases and that sort of thing, that's the way I've been able to -- to do that.

Q. Okay. Now, in addition to all of these other responsibilities, do you also do any kind of -- do you have to do any kind of administrative work?

A. Oh, yeah. I mean -- I mean, part of administrative work is, like I said, review process, because all of those things are form oriented, electric -- you know, elect -- whether they're electronic, they used to be just more handwritten forms, but -- but there's still a form process, administrative process to that.

But I also have the other administration of the office reviewing basically the invoicing that comes in. And when I say "reviewing" it, my office support assistant gathers all that stuff, she opens all the things, she documents all those. But I then have to review those because I'm the one that signs off on all those. I also review everybody's time sheets and everybody's expense reports and have to approve those. And time sheets are time sensitive. You have to approve them within a given time frame because it's through whatever the State processing is. It's called Sam something. I don't know. But -- but in any event, it's their computer system has to -- has to swing through and process it in a given time, so I have to have everybody's time sheets to me for me to be able to approve those within a given time frame. And that's twice -- twice a month that I have to do that.

Q. Do you think your office is in need of more administrative staff?

A. Yeah. Support staff, absolutely. I mean -- well, let me back up, when you say "administrative staff," meaning, like, support staff.

Q. Right. Meaning, I think you mentioned you have two legal assistants, and then one --

A. The office support is --

Q. -- office support assistant; right?

A. Correct. The office support assistant -- and I keep trying to remember that name. That designation came in this last year. It used to be what was designated as a clerk typist or a clerk. And generally, I always described it, it was the person up front that basically ran the front end of the office.

Q. Right.

A. That answered the phones, when people came in, and did other kinds of administrative stuff, getting the mail, opening stuff up, processing billing.

The legal assistants work more specifically with the attorneys and go to jails, do intake on clients, and then, like, some of the other things that I was talking about as far as, you know, it's sometimes interviewing family members, sometimes helping set up treatment programs for people, those

Do I need more of those people? Yeah. I could -- I could use a whole handful of those -- of those folks, because those people make -- when I don't have those people, then I have attorneys doing all of that. And I consider that an -- while it's important for clients and it's valuable for clients, I consider it an incredible waste of attorney time when they're trying to get, you know, things done for treatment programs to get somebody into a treatment program.

Q. How much time would you say a typical attorney in your office has to spend on administrative tasks, ballpark?

A. Wow. The best answer I can give you is it depends on the county that they're working in and how much legal assistant help they have, and here's why I'll give you that answer.

Q. Okay.

A. Because in our case management system, you, for example, can enter court dates, like, upcoming court dates and things like that; okay?

Q. Right.

A. If you're operating in a scenario where you have a legal assistant sitting there with you, like, sitting there in court, they can enter those court dates right then, and that's done; okay? If you're operating in an out county, and you don't have a legal assistant to do that, then you're bringing your caseload back, and sometimes you're doing that, and so that dramatically increases that time frame.

It also increases the time that you spend doing some of those other things I was talking about as far as trying to get people into treatment programs, trying to do other kinds of stuff. If I have an administrative -- if I have a legal assistant sitting in court, and a client appears in court, and we can tell by talking with the judge, the judge would let that client out of jail if we can get that client into an inpatient legal program, I can turn to the legal assistant who's there, and say, "Let's talk with him before he gets out of the room. Let's get some things signed. Let's get some stuff done, and we see about trying to get him into a program." And they can -- and maybe they can talk with family or whoever else might be there that can help facilitate that.

If someone is in an out county, and they don't have that legal assistant there, they're having to get ready to go up on the very next case that's going to get called, because they're the only attorney that's there handling cases, primarily. And so once they get done with client A, client B's case is getting ready to get called. Their follow-up with that is going to have to all take place after the fact, which means they have to either do it themselves, or they're going to have to coordinate with a legal assistant in the office to basically say, "Hey, I've got this guy. I need to have this done. Can you help me, you know, get this?"

So, you know, from a time frame standpoint, I don't know that I can really give you a good answer, but that gives you a description of the -- of the differences.

Q. Understood. You mentioned that you right now have somewhere between 150 and 200 -- or 120 and 150 cases. How many cases do you think you handle personally over the course of a year?

A. Oh, I easily end up assigned -- I would easily end up assigned probably over 300 cases over -- over a year time frame.

Q. How --

A. Again, I could -- again, I could -- I -- I could look at my database, and I could tell you the exact number, because I've -- I've got a screenshot that will -- that will tell me over the last 365 days, exactly how many cases I've assigned to me or anyone else. But that gives you -- my office, itself, opens anywhere from 2100 to 2600 cases a year. That's, you know, going within that time frame, sometimes down around, you know, 2100, you know, upper, you know, 2,075 or, you know, somewhere like that --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- up to 2600 cases in any given year. We obviously conflict other cases out to other offices, so that wouldn't -- you know, while we open that case, that's not a case that we end up assigning in our office, so that would come off of that number some. But generally, we've had conflict cases assigned to us, so that -- that's just --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. That's moving -- it's moving chairs around the -- around the table, you know, in the grand scheme of things. So that number, that's probably, you know, a -- 2400 would be a safe number on any given year between eight attorneys.

Q. And -- and that's -- that number is typical for over the last, what would you say --

A. 20 years.

Q. 20 years. Okay.

A. I mean, like I said, I've -- you know, I could -- I can go back, and I can look at -- look at our stuff, and I could tell you, you know, that one year we had 2,100 cases, and another year, we'll have 2700 case. But 2400 is prob -- 2300 is a probably a pretty good average --

Q. Got it.

A. -- over the last couple decades.

Q. Okay. You mentioned contact with clients?

A. Yes.

Q. How often are your -- you and your attorneys supposed to meet with clients, as far as you understand?

A. Supposed to meet with the client within seven days of initially opening the case. Once -- once they've -- you know, when someone has been approved for representation, when we open that case up, they're supposed to get met within seven days of that. On an ongoing basis, supposed to be every 30 -- basically, every 30 days.

Obviously, there's some -- you know, I would consider some exceptions to that. We have clients that are in mental health facilities. We have clients that are out on bond that generally, all you're doing is kind of waiting to see, for example, in a probation case, is the client basically going to keep doing what they're supposed to be doing so the case may get set out, you know, a couple, three months? And the idea is they're just supposed to keep things kind of on line, and then they might get continued on probation. So that one, you might not be as -- you know, looking at it and going, I -- you know, I'm worried about someone having, you know, that specific contact every -- you know, every 30 days.

Everybody that's in jail is supposed to get seen at least, in person, at the jail, every 30 days. Which is a different problem.

Q. Is that happening consistently?

A. No. And I can give you reasons for that. That -- that have -- I currently have, at one point -- and this was one of the problems I had when you had asked earlier about caseload. I had assigned myself the Saint Clair County caseload because it was the smallest caseload in the office. And I'm like, it's a small county, has the fewest number of court days, smallest caseload.

That county, as a result of -- that county also houses federal inmates in their jail. Whenever they increase their federal inmate population, because it makes them more money than our clients do, then they ship our clients out to other jails, so my Saint Clair County caseload with clients in jail are not in the Saint Clair County jail. They're currently in -- at least at one point, I had clients in four different jails. So when I'm talking about logistics of being able to go see people, it's not that just that you have to go to the Saint Clair County jail in Osceola to go see all of your clients, and you could map that out on one day, and say I'm going to go see all these guys in jail. We'll just schedule the day, and I can go see them, and they'll just bring guys in, and I can talk to all of them. Guys in Saint Clair County, Henry County, Bates County, Vernon County, and Cedar County. So when you start talking about going and seeing people, that then creates, well, now, you've got multiple places to go and multiple logistics problems with that in seeing folks.

They also had the added benefit of, even though they're housed in that county, if the Saint Clair County jail decides to go come get that person for some reason; say they're in Henry County, and Henry County, Clinton, is closer to my office. So actually, if have someone in Clinton, it might be a shorter trip for me to go see them. But the problem is the people in Henry County don't have control of that inmate. That's a Saint Clair County inmate. So if Saint Clair County decides to come get that guy, they don't have to notify Henry County. They just drive up there, and they show up at the sally port and they say, "Hey, we need to pick up so and so, and we're going to transport him back, you know, for whatever reason." Okay?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So if you've planned to go see that individual -- and I know this, and I say this because I've had this happen. You plan to go see that individual, you drive to the Henry County jail, you go there and say, "I'm here to see Jones," and they go, "Well, he's not here." And I'm like, "Well, where is he?" "Well, the people in Saint Clair County came and picked him up, so they transported him back to somewhere else." You have that kind of problem.

I currently have -- and I know this, and I can speak for another office just because I know this: We currently have Greene County inmates in the Johnson County jail. Now, I know you don't know necessarily where Greene County is. Greene County is --

Q. Springfield?

A. -- Springfield, yes. So we have people from Springfield up in Centerview, which is where the Johnson County jail is, which is basically in the middle of nowhere besides some railroad tracks. We currently have a number of Greene County inmates on a regular basis up in the Johnson County jail. I can't envision how the people from Springfield go see any of those people.

Q. And do you know -- do you know is that because the jails in Springfield are full?

A. Sure.

Q. Are they -- do you know whether they're housing federal inmates there as well?

A. I have no idea whether they house federal inmates there. I know that, in our current jails, Saint Clair County houses federal inmates, Bates County houses federal inmates. So we have that influx problem routinely with -- with them. Cass County does not house federal inmates, so we don't have that issue with the Cass County jail as far as that's concerned.

Q. How long is the -- if you know, how long is the drive from Johnson County to Springfield?

A. Let me think here. Springfield is a half hour from Warrensburg. Half hour, half hour -- at least an hour and a half to two hours to there, because it's -- I know that both my boys went to school down in Springfield, so I'm just trying to adjust where the map is. It's going to at least -- it would at least be an hour and a half at the very least, and it's probably more closer to two.

Q. Okay. So just a -- a couple of procedural questions before we kind of jump into the -- what's happening currently. But after defendants are arrested, the first time they go before the Court is for their initial hearing; correct?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Are lawyers from your office present for those initial hearings?

A. Generally, no. It depends -- frankly, it just depends on when you get arrested and what county you're in. And -- because if you get arrested close enough to a court date that we would normally be there, then they might just bring them over when we're there in any event, and have their initial appearance that -- you know, that day. Other times, in a number of these counties, they will do an initial appearance, and we're not there. They just do the initial appearance, arraign them on whatever charges they have or probation violation that they have, and then set their case for some court date where it would be the Court's normal docket for whatever -- whatever Court they would be appearing in front of.

Q. Okay. And so in instances where lawyers from your office are at the initial appearance, it's not because of any proactive steps you've taken. It's just you -- the lawyer happens to be there --

A. The lawyer is there are for the docket.

Q. Okay.

A. Now, we've -- we have had -- and my legal assistants, over the years, we have -- we have attempted to do things proactively to be able to -- you know, they -- they've gone through the jail list. They know who's been recently picked up, especially people that we have represented before that might have, you know, various kinds of things. They will attempt to go see those people prior to the court date in order to be able to at least start the application process. And when I say, "prior to the court date," prior to the court date that gets assigned. So it still may not be, you know, in -- in relation to that other initial appearance date, but in relation to an actual court date where we would be there.

I'll -- and I'll give you a for instance. In Cass County, we have court on -- this Thursdays is the associate docket -- the felony associate docket where people would initially be appearing on new felony charges that they've been arrested on. Some of those people may have appeared, you know, yesterday, or they might have, you know, appeared today in front of Judge Rumley had an initial arraignment on what their charge is. Now, the question is what court date do they get set to, to be brought up for a regular court appearance where they would expect that our staff might be there on -- or would be there normally on that docket; okay? So if we know that person's court date -- if we can look at the jail list and see that person's court date is going to be this Thursday, my legal assistant, Julie, will try to go over -- will try to go over to the jail if possible to be able to, you know, get an application, be able to talk to that person to see what we can do about trying to get that person out of jail.

Now, the flip side of that is there's a lot of that that can't take place and doesn't take place, and so -- and it certainly doesn't in, you know, rural counties -- in the more rural counties, because the legal assistants aren't out there, you know, doing that. Then what happens is that person waits until the upcoming court date in order for us to be there in order for us to do the application process at that point in court.

Q. And is -- is bond usually set at that initial hearing?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know -- and in Area 17, are the judges using bail schedules or --

A. And in fact, let me back up from that a second. In fact, here's what happens when they set their -- they -- the Court may review bond. And I should -- should correct that. The Court may review bond at that initial appearance; although, they generally don't. The bond actually originally gets set when they file the probable cause statement and file the complaint, and they'll make a bond request on that -- on that complaint. And there are various Counties that will -- just based on the nature of it, if it's a C felony charge -- in Bates County, if it's a C felony drug charge, they're going to have a $10,000 bond. That's -- that's what -- that's just what they set their -- set their bonds at.

Q. But does the judge have the authority to alter that bond amount at -- at the initial appearance?

A. If they're interested in doing it.

Q. And there's no lawyer there to advocate for them to do it; correct?

A. Correct. At that -- yes.

Q. When -- when the -- when -- when your lawyers happen to be there, are they there representing the client at that hearing, or are they just there to be assigned the case if the person qualifies?

A. It -- if our -- our practice has been, and it's the reason I tried to get our legal assistants being able to be proactive and going over to those jails, because the more that we could get ourselves with an application in hand, and more specifically, with bond information in hand for a client, then when the day that they appeared in court, we were in a better position to be able to say, you know, this person has a job. If he'd -- if we could get his bond reduced, here's where he's going to be living, all the usual bond kind of arguments that you would be able to make.

In a number of these places where you don't necessarily have that, it depends upon what I would describe as the Court's patience in relation to whether they're going to listen to that or deal with that on that given day. And frankly, what you're in the position of doing is basically then making what I would describe as the ad hoc bond argument, which is, well, my client is in jail. He doesn't have anything else pending anywhere right now. This is a drug charge. Please, let him out. And that -- and you could just fill in the name of you know, client whoever at the top of that, and basically start making that bond argument for most everybody that's in jail. And you just know that the guy who's charged with the multiple count sex case probably isn't going to get anything heard that day. But that's -- that's kind of the nature -- you're not in a situation where you're going to be able to actively say, I'm going to -- I'm going to make sure this guy's employer sends a -- you know, gives a letter or something that just says, "Hey, yeah. If you let the guy out, he's working for me."

Q. Right.

A. Or that some family members specifically show up to say -- like Grandma or Mom to say, "Yes, he's going to be living at my house." And the judge in some of these rural areas, they know those people, they know who they are, so you might be able to get that person out. That doesn't happen at those initial appearances where we're not at at all. And the ones where we are at, our problem is, if we're not able to do that, then yeah, you're not in the position to be able to do that. So at best, you're then trying to request the shortest turnaround time that you can for your client in order to then be in the position of being able to try to argue the bond situation.

Q. All right. Do lawyers ever request hearings specifically to deal with bond reduction motions?

A. Yes. The ones that are -- but they're -- there are few, and when I say, "few," the ones that are the -- the full-on bond hearing, written motions, calling witnesses type deal, those are few and generally revolve around situations where you perhaps have, you know, serious cases. They're going to -- under the -- under the Missouri Constitution, the ability to be able to have victims present at those hearings, and oftentimes -- and I know in one county in particular, the State complains every single time we make a request in relation to a bond about being able to notify somebody being there, and this might even be in a -- you know, in a drug case. Like, there isn't anybody to -- to notify in that case, but -- but that -- that's the kind of thing that doesn't generally go on. We're not in a position to be able to -- to do that.

Q. And that's a function primarily of the -- the timing of the appointment?

A. Yeah. I mean, it's a -- I mean, it's a function primarily of a number of those kinds of things, but that -- but that is a -- that's a -- a huge factor in it, and it's a factor of when the next court dates might be.

Some places are more amenable to listening to -- to oral bond motions. And frankly, I've encouraged -- I've always encouraged every attorney in my office, and I've always done it. It's like, I -- I don't care -- frankly, I don't care what the prosecutor objects to, and I don't care what the judge says they're going to listen to or not listen to. I'm going to make that request for my client regardless, because at least, if nothing else, you're going to deny it -- you're going to have to at least deny it.

Q. Right.

A. And I'm going to make that -- I'm going to make that request. And part of that goes back to what I was talking about in relation to clients to begin with. At least they know that you tried to ask for something. Even if you're not in a good position to do it, you've at least tried to do it.

Q. Are there -- are there ever situations where your office is appointed later than at the initial appearance?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. Or is that --

And two questions: One, how often does that happen?

A. It depends, and -- and I say "it depends." It's just -- it occurs for different reasons, and it -- not so much to do with the Court usually as it does with the client. Clients sometimes create scenarios where our involvement ends up being somehow at a later -- just ends up being at a later point. Someone ends up out of -- and -- and this is, you know, for people out of custody. For example, people out of custody, they've posted bond, they don't hire an attorney, they don't hire an attorney, they show up to court three or four times, the judge yells at them and then eventually says, "You go over and talk to those people over there. You know, I'm tired of the fooling around with this." So we end up with those scenarios.

I also end with scenarios where private attorneys have communication issues with their clients where then they request to withdraw from a case. They end up bailing out of a case, and then the judge goes, "Well, who are you going to hire?" And then it's, "Well, I don't have any. All the money I had, I spent -- you know, I gave to that deadbeat that, you know, I just fired." And so now, they're filling out an application for our services, so we end up with those situations. That's down the road, you know, from where they originally had something going on.

Q. Okay. You mentioned that there are -- often, there's no lawyer present for the initial appearance. Are there other pretrial proceedings where your lawyers are not able to be present for a client's hearing?

A. No. I mean, our Courts are -- are -- all the Courts that we deal with are -- are good about -- whether or not the client's there, we're there. We have situations where the client may not be there. They're either off at DOC, they may be at some -- you know, some other facility or, you know, some -- and frankly, we've had scenarios where they've had issues transporting people from a given jail, and so then -- you know, then we're, you know, trying to do things without the client there. But -- but I think from a standpoint of other proceedings without attorneys there, all of our judges, I think, have a pretty good concept of the fact that that shouldn't -- that shouldn't happen.

Q. Are there situations where the attorneys -- where you have to substitute one attorney for the other to make sure someone is present?

A. Oh, sure.

Q. How -- how often does that happen?

A. It's -- well, it's going to happen Monday. It would have happened yesterday, but frankly, I was at home sick. That's the reason it's going to happen next Monday is because one of the attorneys in my office, the one who does conflict work, has to be involved in, I think, Clay County with a judge up there who refuses to do something minus a whole bunch of things, and so we have a case where a client has posted a huge bond that we filed a motion to with -- to withdraw as counsel in the case. That's going to have to actually be heard this next Monday, and I'm going to be there in relation to that, because he's going to be in Clay County.

Q. All right.

A. But that happens on a routine kind of basis. That happens with -- you know, if attorneys are sick and out. It also happens when people are in trial, because oftentimes, I mean, we will try to substitute or try to have people stand in. In particular, if they've got people in jail, if they're in trial, and then there's some other thing that would be happening where that attorney would normally be at that docket for that person, and there's something that we could do to be able to try to facilitate getting somebody out, we'll try to do that. Because frankly, I don't want people sitting in jail just because -- just because they've got to sit in jail because the attorney is trying to represent somebody else. That being said, that goes back to what I was talking about earlier in that's great for the attorneys and -- and helping out with other people. That's one more day they don't have to do something because they're doing that.

Q. Okay. I want to skip to -- you're familiar with the recent Hinkebein decision; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about the -- the decision -- the implications of that decision?

A. To me, the implications of the decision are that, ethically, my attorneys and myself have been told that they have no -- their caseload is not an excuse for not doing things, and their option, which I remember listening to the arguments in relation to it, a suggestion that the attorney just walk in and quit, which I thought I was kind of -- well, I have a lot of opinions on that, but I'll -- I won't venture into those.

But let's just say that -- that basically, what it said -- there are two things that come from that. My attorneys have an obligation themselves to recognize that they can only ethically handle what they believe they can ethically handle; and that's not, like, a magic number or something like that. That's based on their experience, based on their logistics, based on, you know, a number of different things. They look at their caseload and say, "I think this is all that I can do."

It also tells me that I as an -- as a supervisor -- because I have a separate ethical obligation under the rules, under the ethical rules. I as supervisor have an obligation to make sure that that attorney -- that -- that all of my attorneys in my office are not violating ethical rules as a supervising manager, and so it's my duty to also not assign them cases and to tell them, "No, you're not going -- you're not going to take cases."

Q. Prior to the Hinkebein decision, were attorneys in your office permitted to refuse cases if they thought they couldn't ethically handle any more?

A. I don't think anybody knew what that actually meant. I think the reality -- the reality of that -- as I said, in January, I'll have been doing this 22 years. I don't know what the -- the day I started -- you ask about reviewing stuff. I remember this number only because I remember it from when I started. I had 166 cases the day I started with the public defender's office. But I -- I haven't known another reality. I don't know that I would be able to -- I don't know whether I would be able to effectively assess that because I'm just one of those people, I'm going to -- you hand me whatever, and I'm going to go in and I'm going -- I'm going to go do it.

Q. Well, you would --

A. That's just -- that -- that's my -- my personality. I've never had -- I've had attorneys come to me over the years stressed out, very stressed out about, you know, either their caseload, the trials they have coming up, that's usually in conjunction with caseload. Whether they're going to be able to go -- whether, basically, they're going to be punished for going on vacations. And when I mean "punished," not by me.

Q. Right.

A. Not by management, but by the caseload, because none of it goes away; it just gets continued. So when you come back, you've got the caseload you haven't done plus new caseload.

And so I've never had anybody walk in my office and say -- and cite to me, you know, well, I -- you know, I have this ethical rule that I'm not supposed to do this, and I'm not supposed to do that, and I don't think that I can do that. I don't think they would have known what it was. And frankly, I don't know that I would know what it was.

Q. How did your attorneys respond to the decision?

A. Varying degrees of panic. I think that they -- some of them felt like they've been told something that -- again, to tell people that they should just walk in and quit, these are with people with families, with student loans, with other kinds of obligations that they've put themselves in that everybody does in the course of normal life. And to basically tell somebody, well, your obligation is to basically give up your job, you know, good luck with that. They were -- they -- and then you follow that up with, I think, your stress of the reflection a few days afterwards, which is, now, they suddenly realize that every potential letter that they get, every phone call that they get is potentially the next person that is going to file a Bar complaint that could end up with them losing their license, and they've now been actively put on notice, you could lose your license for this. You could get reprimanded, you could get suspended, you could -- what -- whatever. A number of things could happen to you, but the bottom line is you could basically be -- at the very least, become marginally employable, and you might lose your license altogether. And every day you come to the office, you've still got that caseload.

And guess what? When you go to court Wednesday, there's going to be 12 people that are going to fill out applications that are going to want you to represent them, and the Court is going to ask whether those people qualify as indigent, and when you tell them, "yes," then the judge is going to expect that you represent them. And even when I tell the Court, "I don't have an attorney to assign to represent them," the judge says, "Well, I'm appointing the public defender's office to represent them. That's up to you all."

Q. Did you talk with your staff as a whole about the decision or about the implications of the decision?

A. Yes, yeah. I had a staff meeting -- I had a staff meeting -- I arranged a staff meeting the

Friday -- we found out about the decision while I was actually at a training program, and I got my staff together that Friday when I got back, and I think there was only one attorney that was not going to be able to be there because of a prior court obligation, and that attorney was actually the one that was going to end up leaving my office in any event.

But I got them all together, I printed out what those rules were, and I forwarded them the information in relation to the actual -- the -- the recording of that hearing, and I said, "Here's what's come down. You need to listen to -- everybody in this office should listen to this. Everybody. Not just attorneys; everybody in this office should listen to this. And here's what those rules are. And I want you to know what those are, and I want to you to take that in." And I told them that I was going to be immediately contacting the Courts and that, you know, whatever -- whatever happened from that point forward, this is -- this is the world that we're in.

Q. Did you get questions, concerns from your staff in response to this?

A. Oh, yeah. I mean, their -- I mean their -- you know, some of the questions are basic logistic like, well, what do -- what do I -- you know, what I do I do?

Q. Right.
A. I mean, what do I -- what do I tell the judge when I go to court? What -- what -- what do I tell a client when, you know, they fill out an application, and we're getting applications on a daily basis from the jail? Or what do I tell, you know, people's, you know, family when they call in and say, "Hey, you know, so and so got picked up. He's in jail. You know, we need you to be able to get him out. We need you to do whatever." You know, but what do we -- what do we tell those people? So you had logistics questions, and you also had, like I said, the -- what I would describe as the stress/panic questions, which are the ones of, well, wait a minute. You know, I don't -- I don't mean to thinking about me, but what about me? I mean, you know.
Q. Right. The training you mentioned that you were at, this was the management training --
A. Yes.
Q. -- that was -- that was happening at that time?
A. Yep.
Q. Does your office -- so post Hinkebein, did your office establish a waiting list for defendants?

Page 70

A. Yes.
Q. And can you talk to me about how that waiting list works?
A. I have two different things going on in the two circuits that I have. The 17th Circuit, which is Cass County and Johnson County, that circuit, a number of yeas ago, when we were going through -- the public defender system was going through caseload litigation, that circuit actually -- and the presiding young judge is there right now, Judge Collins, who's -- who's the PJ, they developed an administrative order in relation to, specifically Cass County. Now, he's taken that over now to Johnson County as well, which is a different animal.
But basically, that administrative order, for lack of a -- a better thing is this: They will take -- they developed a list of private attorneys. The judge went and talked to the private Bar and met with them and said, you know, we're going to need to start assigning some cases to you people. And what they did is they used our fee guidelines, our fee structure as the fee structure for those attorneys. So if you had people posting, you know, a $5 00 cash bond, our fee structure is, I think on a -- you know, on a number of felony cases was $375 or something like that. Basically, they were telling -- they were -- they were -- the judges were telling clients -- what we would do is we would approve someone representation-wise. Say we approve them representation-wise as indigent. The judge would say, if you've posted a bond, like one -- like the $400 cash bond or whatever, that bond is going to be assignable to the attorney that I'm going to appoint to represent you. I'm going to appoint Mr. Jones here to represent you, and if that attorney is in court, the judge, you know, will waive them over and -- and assign them the case. If the attorney is not in court, they'll say, "Here's the attorney that is going to get assigned to you. The fee for that attorney is going to be this based on that amount." If they haven't posted a bond, the judge will tell them, "You're going to have to come up with the $375 or whatever to pay attorney so and so as -- as the fee; okay? The -- that attorney is going to be appointed to your case, and they're going to represent you, and that's going to be the fee for them to represent you."

Q. Is that a fee that would have otherwise been --
A. To the public defender.
Q. -- provided to the public defender's office?

A. Yes. And I say -- and I say "a fee provided." We don't get any of those -- we're not -- not getting any of those fees up front or any -- anything like that. I mean, we enter cases, we make -- we file a fee notice with the Court saying that, you know, we ultimately are assessing what would be that fee to the individual, and sometimes, those get collected through income tax refunds with the state. Sometimes people send them -- you know, I mean, people will contact us and say, "Hey, you know, can I go ahead and pay that now?" Or, "Can my family pay that," or you know, whatever. We don't premise our representation on -- whether we enter a case based on whether they've paid that. They just know that that's the fee, unless the fee gets waived for some reason.
I have a number of cases that when we assign these cases out -- and when I say "we" assign them, when the Court assigns a private attorney to represent them under that administrative order, then what we do is I -- we -- if we have that open case on a -- on a waiting list in our office, then what we do is we close that case out, and we do not -- I waive the fee in that case, so we collect no -- we -- we don't assign any fee to that because that was going go to that private attorney --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- okay? Now, the Court is not doing that in all of those cases, but they are assigning some of our cases -- what would be our cases to private attorneys under that administrative order. They're doing it much more in Cass County than they are in Johnson County. That's partly because the associate judges in Cass County are much more proactive in basically doing this, and -- and in essence, following that kind of process.

That's all initiated by client fills out application, and we approve them as indigent, and if they're approved as indigent, then we're advising the Court, this would be an indigent person that we would otherwise represent, and the Court then is doing that under that administrative order.

Q. Now --

A. That's in the 17th Circuit.

(Martin Exhibit 13 was marked for identification.)

Q. And I'm going to hand you what I think is now Exhibit 13. I apologize I don't have extra copies of this. I'll send it across so you can take a look at it.

Is that the administrative order that you're referring to?

A. That looks like exactly it.

Q. Okay.

A. That is correct. And yep, that's signed by Judge Collins.

Q. Now you said that there is a -- a different setup in the other circuit; correct?

MR. WILLIAMSON: Let me --

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) Now, before we get to that other circuit, other than, I guess, talking with the Court about private attorneys who might be able to -- to fill in, did you have any other involvement in developing this order?

A. Well, I did originally. And like I said, this is -- this is basically a renewal of -- with some modifications to it, of the original administrative order that Judge Collins did back a few years back, whenever that was, in being able to -- it's a little bit different version of it.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. We did -- we had a different referral system -- a little bit different referral system that we did back under the original order. There were two attorneys, basically, we were dealing with at that point. One of them is actually the prosecutor down there in Cass County now. And that dealt almost exclusively with -- for the most part, misdemeanor cases, probation violations. It didn't have as much other, you know, felony cases involved. This time, there's a larger list of attorneys that -- that they're working with that have agreed to, you know, be able to take some of these -- some of these cases. And so it's not just to two -- two attorneys that you're dealing with.

Q. Okay. And what's happening in the other judicial circuit?

A. Well, in the other circuit, I actually filed our notice for conference requests under Chapter 600. The associate judge in Bates County, which is Judge Hopkins, when she initially found out -- before I had ever filed a notice, but when she found out basically that I had indicated to the attorney heading down there that we're not -- we're going to have to do something about not taking cases, she literally just started assigning attorneys in court. She didn't even -- She didn't have an administrative order. She didn't care about fees or anything. She just started naming attorneys that were in court down there on her docket and started assigning cases to them.

In Henry County and in Saint Clair County, that did not happen. The judge in Henry County, Judge Strothmann, basically gave some more time for clients; in other words, kind of what I would describe as tried to give them more time to -- a little bit more time to, you know, maybe hire somebody. Said, "Well, you need to work at, you know, trying to hire someone in some fashion."

But then it wasn't long after that in filing our request that Judge Journey in -- basically saying that based upon the -- my initial notice to them that we weren't going to take cases, Judge Journey said that -- and sent me a notice basically saying that they didn't recognize that, and he was going to order us into cases. And so he created basically a blanket form that is an order form that they simply sign in court, fill in the client's name, case number, and scanned it into their system that says, the, you know, public defender's office under Chapter 600 is being appointed to this case.

I appeared in court. I've entered a few of those cases under objection. I have now advised Judge Strothmann last Friday when I was in court, and

I advised Judge Journey, who is the circuit judge and is the presiding judge, that I'm not assigning an attorney to any case at this point. And so while he may be assigning cases to the public defender's office in general, I'm not assigning any attorney to any case, and that includes me.

Q. And are those the cases that are then ending up on a wait -- wait list?

A. Yes. I currently have -- when I had looked at it, I think there's about 100 and -- and I say, "on a wait list," there's also Cass County -- I mean, I still have a wait list of people in -- from any of these counties. The -- we currently have about 100 and -- I think when I saw it last, it was around 105 or 110, something like that, people on a wait list.

Q. How many -- do you recall when that wait list was started?

A. We started really being able to -- we've had a couple things in our -- in our case management system to try to be able to track it, and -- but I will say that we started doing that literally October -- it would have been right around whenever I had -- and you may have a copy of the e-mail that I got from -- from -- from Judge Journey indicating his feelings about my notice to them.

And I'll explain my process. After I got back, and I met with my attorneys, over the weekend, I contacted both of my presiding judges. I called both of them on the phone, and I told them exactly what we were going to do; that I was go I think to stop assigning cases to attorneys, that I felt it was a Rule 4 violation, and that I had obligations under my own supervisory ethical rules not to appoint these cases. Judge Collins asked whether -- and both of them asked whether I was going to be filing something under the Chapter 600. With Judge Collins, because they were trying -- he was trying to reestablish this administrative order, I told him I wouldn't file anything that -- if they were going try to work at doing stuff, I wasn't going to file something there. Judge Journey had no such plan with that, and so I eventually went ahead and filed a Chapter 600 motion, and that's where we stand right now.

Q. Has Judge Journey ruled on that --

A. No.

Q. -- Chapter 600 --

A. He's -- he is -- we have a conference currently verbally scheduled for the 15th, Friday the 15th. He has not sent -- he has not sent an actual order, written order out in relation to it, because I filed a number of things in my request. He's going to deny a number of those things, which we'll see where that ends up.

Q. And of -- of those roughly 105 defendants who are on the waiting list, do you know approximately how many of them are in custody?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Some of them are in custody?

A. Oh, yeah. Some of them are definitely in custody. Oh, absolutely.

Q. Okay. And to be clear, the -- the Chapter 600 motion is just an order to schedule a conference; right?

A. Correct.

Q. I mean, there's no -- no conference has happened at this point?

A. No conference. I -- again, I'll look at it in two different -- two different settings. I had a meeting. Judge Collins scheduled for all practical purposes what I would describe as a conference with myself and the two prosecutors from Johnson County and Cass County. This wasn't under me filing a motion or anything like that. This was us having this meeting. Other than talking about some of the things administrative order-wise, I basically sat through what I would describe as about three hours of meeting where I had prosecutors lecture me about work habits and whether SIS offers -- whether I expected that offers would get any better than an SIS offer and what -- you know, what did I want. So I've moved on from that. Although, I remember it.

Q. Okay.

A. Judge Journey verbally scheduled this conference initially for the 1st, and then because he hadn't issued his order, when I was in this court with him on Monday -- I want to say November 20 -- the end of November, whatever that Monday was after Thanksgiving.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. 20-something, whatever it was. It was the Monday after Thanksgiving.

Q. 27th?

A. I was in court in front of Judge Journey and was still objecting about cases, and he had -- went ahead to reschedule the hearing for the -- for the 15th. Had also asked whether I had seen the order that Judge Torrence had issued out of Jackson County. I told him that I had seen that order, that I was personally offended by the language in some of that order referring to our caseload situation, I think, as a saga of some sort, which I found offensive, and Judge Journey indicated to me that while he agreed with some of the practical aspects of the ruling, as far as what he was going to allow or not, he didn't necessarily agree with the tone of the order. I have yet to see an order. We have a meeting scheduled for the 15th. We'll see what -- what happens at that -- and yes, that is only a conference.

Q. Uh-huh. And are the judges, as far as you know, aware of the fact that you have this -- this waiting list in place?

A. Yes.

Q. When you shared your plans with the two judges prior to actually moving forward with your -- with your -- with your plan, what -- what was their response?

A. Well, like I said, I think Judge Collins has always indicated his intent to kind of reactivate or reinvigorate this -- a modified version of this order that he had. And I think that his -- my impression with it was that he was -- he had indicated he was going to talk to the Bar in both counties and try to get, you know, what cooperation he could out of them.

Judge Journey had indicated to me before he, you know, knew what our situation was. He knows the attorneys I have working there, and he knows exactly what their caseloads are and -- because I've reiterated it with him a number of times over a long period of time. The -- his -- he expressed what I would describe as, I think, more frustration with not so much us, but with the local Bar in general just because there are -- there's not going to be as much cooperation -- first of all, there's not as many defense attorneys; and second, there's just not going to be as much cooperation in -- in general in relation to what we would have out there given the numbers of what we have out there.

And there's an added complicated factor in Henry County that revolves entirely around the prosecutor there, which I could go at length, but I won't.

Q. Okay.

COURT REPORTER: If you get to a stopping point, I could just use five.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Why don't we take five right now?

COURT REPORTER: Sure.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 4:38 p.m.

(A brief recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 4:46 p.m.

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) Mr. Martin, in your opinion, did the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to communicate with their clients in the manner that each case requires?

A. No.

Q. Does that include yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. In your opinion, do the attorneys in your office have the time and recess -- resources to investigate each case in the manner that it requires?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And is it -- does that include you?

A. Yes.

Q. What's the basis for your opinion?

A. Because I think that what we've become good at is shortcuts, and rather than doing the things that you should do, you do the things that expedite things as best as you can expedite them. It's a triage process, and you look at cases, and you go, this is your average drug case, but it's got a few pages of discovery. It's got a lab report. I can go talk to my guy. I can do this or that. Done. And that's the amount of time I'm going to spend on it. And if my guy's sitting in jail, he just wants to get out. And if the prosecutor's making a probation offer, he's like, why can't we do that yesterday? I should already be out this afternoon. And nobody -- as a practical matter, nobody is going to turn and tell a client, well -- and especially if they're stuck in jail, "What you need to do is sit in the jail so I can investigate further your case." That -- as a reality, people aren't -- people aren't going to do that. If your client is out of jail, you can have a little bit different discussion with them.

But from my experience with our clients, one of the things that also happens is you're dealing with people that are indigent. They have driver's license problems, they have transportation issues, they have family issues, they have over kinds of things. And the more court dates you set, the more likely it is they're not going appear at some point, and then that runs the risk of them ending up right back in the jail, and then the case that you were trying to look at, they're ready to now -- they just want to be done with it so they can get out of the jail. And that -- you know, that -- that happens in cases.

And you -- when I say "triage," you then start looking at cases that you go, this case is a sex case. I know -- I already know in my head I'm going have to depose a number of people. I'm going to be getting school records. I'm going to be getting DFS records. I'm going to be, you know, talking to the people at Children's Mercy, and they don't like to cooperate, so I'm going to have to try to fight getting deposition times with those folks. I know the -- the level of litigation that's going to be involved in that case, and so you just start devoting resources. You go, I got so much time. I can do so much stuff. I'm going to devote this to this, and I'm not going to devote that to that.

Q. So -- and you talked earlier about the -- the level of experience among your attorneys. And you testified that there are things that those attorneys are able to manage that younger attorneys may not be able to; correct?

A. Sure, yes.

Q. And yet, even with that experience, you don't believe that your attorneys are able to cover all of their bases?

A. Yeah. I don't think their -- I -- I don't think that they can do that in the way that they should do that. I think they have to make do with what they have and what you can do. You have -- you have what you have. You -- you do what you do with what you have.

Q. So the -- their experience makes them better at triaging --

A. Yes.

Q. -- than younger attorneys?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. But triaging is not the standard?

A. No. Triaging is not a standard. Triaging is, I recognize -- I better recognize shortcuts.

Q. How often do your attorneys employ experts?

A. All of them do. I would say the vast majority of the experts that we hire -- and I say "vast majority." I don't know that I could put a percentage on it, but I just know from approving the requests for money, the vast majority of the experts revolve around mental health issues, being -- being able to have people evaluated for mental health purposes, competency purposes, sometimes NGRI purposes, but there's a lot that revolves that. Some involving other kinds of issues, but very little that I would describe as the kind of experts that people read about in the news and get all excited about.

Q. Are there cases for which you think experts or an expert would be appropriate where your lawyers are not able to retain an expert or don't retain an expert for whatever reason?

A. I -- well, there's two different -- there's two different things there. I have -- I don't think, other than asking them to clarify something that I know somebody further along the management line would want to have clarified to approve the request for the money, something within the actual request, itself, I don't think I've denied anybody's request for anything. I mean, I've basically approved those as long as they've got it structurally the way they should have to be able to get it approved. I think the real question there is, knowing what it is that you need get.

And here's the example of what I was talking earlier: When you're triaging, you're basically saying, I know I'm going to have to put the work into this case first because it's going to require the most logistics, and so I'm going to work on that, and I'll put this off until then because I don't have to. The case that you put off until then now is three weeks before trial, you're deposing witnesses, you find out something that you go, holy crap, I'd really -- I'd like love to have somebody be able to tell me if you can actually do that, you know.

Maybe I need a guy that could look at X and tell me that. Well, now, they're two weeks out from trial, and they're trying to figure out, can I actually get an expert to be able to do that? And so it -- that's how you run into the problems of, well, maybe I -- you know, can't get an expert, because then, my -- my -- my big sneaking hunch -- because I haven't seen a whole bunch of these kinds of things, my big sneaking hunch is they look at it, they think about it, then they look at the case, then they talk to the guy, then they talk to the prosecutor about maybe a different offer or some other kind of thing, and the reality is they never hire anybody to look at any of it. They basically say, well, I don't know that I'd really be able to do that anyway. I don't know what that would amount to, and so then they -- you've backed yourself into the corner of having to proceed.

Q. Okay.

A. Or you get into a really ugly fight with the Court about, well, I now recognize that I need to have an expert in this case, which the judge may grant that continuance. But now, in essence, what you've told the judge is, I didn't do anything as a practical matter to prepare this case until short enough period of time that now I know I need an expert in this case, and now, I'm asking you for time to get the expert; so now, you've lost credibility with your judge in relation to what you do in relation to preparing your case. That -- it's a -- it's a vicious cycle that feeds on itself.

Q. So in light of that testimony, in your opinion, do you believe that the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to consult with experts in the manner that each case requires?

A. I don't think they have the time to be able to do that. I think MSPD tries to encourage and provide the money available to do that as much as they -- as much as they can. And again, I've never had some request that I forwarded turned down, other than the logistics of this -- we need this clearer, or we need something clarified in this request. I think it's just the time that people don't -- they don't have, so they don't do it, or they don't recognize it, so it never gets done.

Q. How often do your attorneys take depositions?

A. It depends on the attorney. There are some attorneys that are pretty active about doing it. There are other attorneys that, you know, take some depositions. But not near as many as what I would routinely want. I -- I look at this, and I think anybody should look at this and say, if this was -- if this was me, if this was my kid, and my kid was looking at seven years in prison or ten years or fifteen or however much it is, or being registered on a sex offender list for the rest of their life, I would want somebody to do this. I'd want them to look at everything and be able to figure out what it is that they're doing and know what they're doing before any substantive thing happens that jeopardizes their case, their ability to get something done, and I don't think that they have the time to be able to do that.

Q. Okay. Do you know by chance how many -- roughly, how many of your cases go to trial in a year?

A. Oh, it's less than -- it would be less than five percent, maybe less than one percent. I mean, we have 20 -- we open up 2400 cases, ten percent would be, what, 240? So one percent would be 24. I bet we don't have 24 trials.

Q. Okay.

A. So less than one.

Q. And -- and is that -- what -- what do you think the reason is for that or reasons?

A. Well, I think there's two -- I think there's -- I think there's a couple reasons for that.

One of the reasons is, as a practical matter in some of these jurisdictions, you're only going to be able to -- there's only so many people. You got one prosecutor, you got one judge, you got one attorney. You're only going to try so many cases, even if they schedule the cases. But as a practical matter, like I said, with the logistics of -- of the way some of these cases work and things you don't find out or things that you -- you're only able to push and pursue because you're able to push and pursue them or maybe research a legal matter or have a suppression hearing that you go, hey, guess what we found out. We finally found out this, and we were able to have a hearing. You force the issue such that the case that should have either, one, never gotten filed or, two, should have been reduced to a misdemeanor or some other thing happen to it a year ago doesn't happen until a week before trial, when you've been able to basically force everybody's hand to be in a situation where they all have to legitimately look at it, and they go, oh, wow, this case sucks, and then they -- you know, and then the case goes away. So some of it are, cases aren't going to go to trial because they actually are forced to a position where they recognize that the case might not really be a good case.

Q. Right.

A. And they either offer something that makes it go away, or they dismiss it, or something else happens that changes the logistic.

I think as a practical matter too, there's a lot of resources from the standpoint of the time of an attorney in relation to getting a case ready for trial and doing all of those things that you were talking about in relation to investigating, talking to witnesses, doing requests, deposing people, reviewing discovery, all those kinds of things that you go, to realistically do all of that and do all those -- all of those things is an enormous time investment, and the reality is, you know, I think that it'll happen with certain cases, but there's a whole bunch of other cases that it isn't going to happen with.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Okay. Can we go off the record for two minutes?

VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 5:01 p.m.

(A brief recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 5:03 p.m.

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) What steps, if any, do your attorneys take to evaluate the immigration consequences that a client might be facing?

A. Basically, there -- it's simply a questioning process of determining whether someone is a citizen, whether they're a US citizen, or if they have some other immigration implication. I would say that, in our office, we're actually -- no matter how you'd want to look at it, we don't have that many clients in our office that fall into that category, simply because we don't have either the work situations or population areas where you tend to have an immigrant population where you would have a lot of that occurring. We do have it but not -- but not very often, and usually, when we do, it's -- it's pretty self-evident when you start talking with people and -- and you find out pretty quickly that, you know, they don't have -- just through our application process.

Q. Do you think your lawyers have the knowledge and expertise to -- to decipher what the consequences might be based on what the client is telling them?

A. Oh, no. Every time we have it happen, we usually are trying to consult with someone. I mean, they -- usually, they'll find their way into my office and ask me, and then I will tell them that I don't know, and that -- that we need to talk with somebody who does know, and they'll, you know, try to consult with, you know, Counsel. I know that they know someone that we actually -- someone in our office that was friends with someone who does that kind of work, and so they actually are able to contact that person and get a lot of good information without having to hire people to -- to do that.

Q. Okay. Does your office handle juvenile cases?

A. Not as a matter of course, no. Now, we do end up with them at times on a conflict basis, usually because -- it used to be that Jackson County and Clay County, for example, had juvenile situations, and when they had conflict situations, then we would end up with sometimes a juvenile out of that.

Q. Okay.

A. Which was always a frightening situation.

Q. So who handles the juvenile cases that come through Area 17?

A. Right now, we don't have any, but generally, it would probably end up being me, simply because I've done it in the past. I don't know that anybody else in our office actually really knows anything about it, and what I know is probably scary, so --

Q. All right. And is that just -- is the volume just a matter of there not being a lot of juvenile cases coming through?

A. No. Actually, what happens is -- in both of the circuits that we work in, the Courts there actually have -- they assign private attorneys to represent juveniles in cases, and they almost -- the caseload that -- that arises out there, they are not certifying individuals as adults in cases out there. They just -- they don't --

Q. I see.

A. They don't do that. So we, from that standpoint, have not actively gone in and tried to get into the middle of those. I've had the Court, over the years, contact me at times where we had cases where the Court felt like that might very well happen or that that request might happen.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Given the nature of the charge, if it was a sex charge or some kind of thing -- I know we had a homicide in Cass County a number of years ago involving a juvenile being involved in the case, and the judge basically contacted me immediately and said, you know, you guys are going to end up in this case; I want you in right from the beginning rather than, you know, later on. But -- but generally, we don't handle them.

Page 96

Q. Okay. Okay. In your opinion, generally speaking, can the attorneys in your office adequately represent all -- all of the clients on their dockets?

A. No.

Q. And does that include yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. And that also includes very experienced attorneys; correct?

A. Correct.

MR. WILLIAMSON: That's all I have.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. RAMSEY:

Q. Good afternoon.

A. Hi.

Q. My name is Steven Alan Ramsey, and again, I represent the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens. I have a handful -- a little more than a handful of questions for you if we can get through them.

To begin, do you have a sense of what percentage of criminal cases in the counties that you are over, that you represent -- so you said you brought in about 2400. Do you know total about how many there are?

A. Sure. I -- I don't know what the -- what the overall criminal numbers are, but I can give you an idea kind of how our office shapes up. So if you're looking at a place like Saint Clair County, Saint Clair County, we probably handle 90 percent of the criminal caseload out there easily. I mean, there's one or two attorneys that do some defense work, but that's -- that -- it -- it's not many. Bates County and Henry County, there's more defense bar there, but relatively speaking, we still easily -- I would say we probably still easily do 70 to 80 percent of the docket there. When you get to -- and that's probably fairly true with Johnson County as well. Cass County is a little bit different because you -- because we're -- that's near the metro area. You have a lot more defense bar involved. I don't know that I'd -- I don't know that I'd be comfortable giving you a good percentage on that, but there's a lot more defense bar there, and so the -- the overall breakdown of that caseload could be, you know, a lot closer to, you know, say 50 percent of the caseload or something like that, but I -- I -- I wouldn't feel as comfortable about that number as a percentage, but that gives you an idea of how that changes as you come towards -- more towards the metro.

Q. And when you track cases that are in your system, is it done by criminal defendant, or is it done by overall charges?

A. When you say, "tracking," meaning how?

Q. Well, so when you look to determine how many cases you have right now, is it viewable in -- by criminal defendant, or is it, you know, there are 36 felony As in this particular type, and so and so forth?

A. It's -- you can -- our -- our case management database actually is really good at being able to separate it out various different ways. I can separate it out by county. I can separate it out by type of case charged, meaning breaking it down by, you know, A, B felony, A, B felony drug, you know, A, B felony sex case, C, D, E felony, C, D, E sex case, I -- I can break them out it that way.

They are entered in our system each -- you can pull cases up by client, and then under that client we'll have every open case that currently -- that client currently has, and it will actually also show you the closed cases as well. But I mean, those aren't active cases. It will also pull up if cases are inactive on those cases, so when we have people go into a warrant status, they fail to appear for court, we put those cases in what's considered an inactive status, and they will show that way in our system as well. If they're inactive for over a year, then at that point, we close the case as inactive over a year, because, you know, that person -- something else may have happened with that person.

You can also look it up just by case number as well.

Q. Switching gears a bit, in terms of the determination of indigent -- indigency, pardon me --

A. It's okay.

Q. -- how does that occur within your district?

A. In the areas where I have legal assistants able to operate, then the legal assistants try to do that for the most part. So for example, client -- either they will -- either meeting people at the jail --

And let me back up and -- and answer this way: We get applications by people filling them out in court, filling them out at the jail, faxing or e-mailing them to us, or sometimes we will simply get a letter request from an inmate that is in DOC somewhere that says, "Can you guys help me dispose of my case?" And then we'll send an application to them, and then they'll send it back. So those are the different processes.

The places where I have legal assistants that can go actively meet with someone, I try to have them do that because it helps get the case open in our system sooner, which allows us to deal with those bonding issues sooner.

In a couple of -- excuse me. In a couple of the counties where attorneys are operating basically without that legal assistant help, the attorneys, themselves are taking the applications, generally in court, and you know, screening -- in essence, screening clients themselves in court.

Q. And when you say, "screening," so they fill out the application, the legal assistant or the attorney will look at that and say, "Oh, yeah, this person, you know, is under the federal poverty guidelines; therefore, they are eligible." Is that essentially the screening process?

A. There -- the screening process has to do with their indigency status, which in -- which can include different things. There are different things that are evidence of. If you have people, for example, that are receiving State benefits, those individuals will qualify. If -- because they've already been determined by the State to be indigent. They're receiving benefits of some -- of some sort, you know, either housing benefits or food stamps, those kinds of things, people that are on disability.

If we have -- and then we use the federal poverty guide -- guidelines as a benchmark for people who aren't generally receiving those other benefits. If they say they're employed or not employed. If they are employed, then using that and figuring out, you know, how many people are in the household, you know, as far as dependents that they would have that -- that would count towards that, what other types of things that might impact that.

Our ultimate indigency determination has to do with the ability of that person to be able to acquire representation for themselves, and we don't use that as a basis of, well, they're going to go out and, you know, try to hire the, you know, best legal team in the state or something like that to represent them on a case. What I mean is, is that person might be right near the borderline of, you know, federal, you know, poverty guideline, and maybe they didn't have to post a bond or anything to get out of jail; but because of the nature of the type of case that they have, they're not going to be able to hire somebody anywhere within a 100=mile radius for less than $20,000. That person doesn't have $20,000 to be able to do that. We routinely have that happen, for example, in sex cases and things like that, where it's like, those people are going to get quoted numbers, they're not going to be able to hire somebody. It's not going happen. And so we end up -- you know, we end up in those cases.

Q. Does your office essentially take the word of the applicant on the applications? Do you essentially take their word for it in terms of, yes, I'm -- I'm receiving public assistance, et cetera, or is there -- pardon me, I'm sorry.

A. No. That's okay. In essence, if you're asking me whether we investigate people's indigency requests, as a practical matter, I don't have the resources to represent people the way I think we need to represent them. From an indigency standpoint, I do not have the resources or the ability to do active investigations of people as to their indigency status.

But I'll answer also answer this -- this way: I do not -- in my experience, I do not routinely have people coming into court asking for us to represent them and filling out applications for us to represent them that appear to me that they would otherwise be able to go out and hire counsel. They're not pulling up in their Lexus outside, and then walking into the courthouse and filling out an application saying, I have nothing, I make nothing, and that's the way this is. That's -- that's not what occurs.

Now, we will oftentimes -- and we do have situations where we have looked at things where people will say something about a house or some other kind of asset that they might have, and we'll look into that. We'll ask the judge to, you know, hold off, set a case over that we're reviewing, you know, the indigency situation. We have situations where people post cash bonds that we will, you know, tell the Court, "This person has posted a cash bond. They would be able to use that to go hire somebody. We're going to decline representing them." I don't know how many people we decline, but we decline representation to, you know, a number of people.

Q. That was my next question, if you had a sense of, like, a rejection rate of how many people are applying and how many people are being rejected.

A. A rate, I don't know. I mean, again, it's probably something that I could find out, but off the top of my head, I don't know what it would be. I know that we decline people for a number of different reasons, which include everything from they're currently being represented by a private attorney; although, they still might qualify, even if they're represented by a private attorney because the -- the case they have might be a new matter that's totally different than the kind of matter that they have or much more serious than -- the private attorney may have been representing them on a misdemeanor case, and now, they're charged with multiple felony charges or something like that, they're not going to be able to hire that attorney to represent them in that case. I mean, we -- we have situations like that occur. We -- I'm trying to think if there's anything else I could add to it one way or another.

Q. Well, that -- that's an interesting point, that, if I'm understanding you correctly, a particular criminal defendant may become eligible if there are two or three other cases or maybe one other case that they have where they're spending resources on that, and they may not be able to afford representation in the current case, the case in chief that they're applying for the public for; is that -- am I correct in understanding that situation?

A. Well -- well, let me -- I -- let me clarify what that is. And, first of all, it's not the norm that we have happen. I mean, generally, if people are represented by someone, oftentimes, they're trying to talk to that same attorney to represent them in relation to something else they have.

The far more common occurrence, frankly, is just the reverse. What happens is not that we're representing them on one case, and the private attorney is representing them on, you know, one or two other cases. What happens is they get charged in a different case, the private attorney then bails on that case, thereby dumping all of the cases in what would be our direction. And at that point, given the nature of the case that they may have, they may be in custody at that point, so now, they're in jail, they don't have a job, they don't -- they've lost the job maybe that they had, and so they're -- at that point, they are indigent, because they've lost their job, and they're in jail, so that -- I mean, it becomes that kind of circumstance. We don't generally have circumstances where people are -- are doing the reverse.

Q. Am I correct in understanding your testimony currently is that there's no independent control or -- or check on whether someone is indigent or not; but your testimony is suggesting that you don't have people who are applying who have significantly more resources than -- that would make them ineligible? Am I understanding that correctly? I know that was a convoluted way of articulating that, and I can break it up if necessary.

A. Well, I think I understand the question that you're trying to ask. I don't believe that our office is approving individuals on a routine basis that wouldn't otherwise qualify as indigent, and I think that we do the things that we can do to try to screen people. They fill out the applications. As part of our intake process, we have a separate sheet that we use that asks about bonding information, where they're going to be living, phone numbers, type -- you know, job, their prior record, other kinds of things, mental health status, stuff like that. Those are things that, when you start asking those things, they will give you more of an indication of the indigence of that individual, because you will find out that they don't have a place to stay or that the place that they're staying at is their cousin's trailer, they don't have a driver's license, they're currently on probation, they currently have other kinds of things going on that you will find that that tells you the other information that you would -- that you would need to have in relation to that -- in relation to that person.

I have -- and I've always told the people in my office, and I think everybody in my office has always operated with the -- if they're concerned or suspicious of something, it's like, you know, there -- this guy has applied, but, you know, there's something about, you know, the circumstance, you know, people in my office will come to me, and it's like, yeah. Go ahead and, you know, do what you need to do to look at it, you know, try to check it out, see if there's, you know, something else going on that we need to know about. It's just my experience that we don't have -- we don't have a flood of -- of people coming to us in order -- let's put it this way: I don't have a bunch of people filling out applications in order to be put on a waiting list.

Q. And speaking about that waiting list -- and this will jump around a bit. Is there a legal justification for that, or is that a mechanism that was, I guess, discerned or thought up by particular district defenders?

A. Well, when you say, "a legal justification," I -- my justification is I have ethical rules that I have to comply with as an attorney, and that I'm supposed to require my attorneys to comply with. And so as a practical matter, it's just -- it's kind of the reality of what happens. People apply to us. They are indigent. I'm going to tell the Court they're indigent. I'm also going to tell the Court, as I have, "I'm not assigning an attorney to represent this individual because I don't have anyone that I think is available to be able do it because their caseloads are already too large as it is."

As a matter of function, it creates what amounts to a waiting list. And we have explained that to clients, and we've explained it to families who are, you know, frustrated and don't know what that means. And that's usually the first thing they ask, is, "Well, what does that mean?" Well, it means you're going to have to wait until I have someone that I think is available to be able to represent your kid or your husband or your boyfriend or your daughter in a manner that they deserve to be represented.

Q. Am I correct in recalling that you said you -- coming -- this upcoming January will be 20 years in the Missouri public defender system?

A. 22.

Q. 22. I apologize.

A. That's okay.

Q. In those almost 22 years, has there ever been another time where these wait lists have been utilized, or is that a pure function of the Hinkebein decision and the aftereffects of that?

A. I'm trying to remember from when we had -- there was caseload litigation that went on in the Waters decision, and -- but -- I'm trying to remember whether there was specifically -- we had a functionality to be able to do that, but that was specifically -- it had to do with certification of offices as the overall office. I -- I'm not -- I -- I don't have any kind of certification in relation to my overall office or saying, you know, my office, itself, is like, on some certification list or something like that. I've basically told the judges that I have this number of attorneys in my office, they have these number of cases that have been assigned to them over the last number of months and currently in the course of their representation that I consider them not available, and I'm not going to assign cases to them.

Q. I'll circle back to that in just a bit, or maybe I won't depending on if this ends shortly. Moving towards depositions and discovery --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- your testimony, was it that you had never personally been denied a request for a deposition in terms of funds or the availability?

A. As far as funding?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Yeah. I don't -- I don't think that -- I mean, I don't recall times where requests from the funding mechanism have been denied, other than just to try to clarify something, but not as an overall denial of, no, you're not going to get the ability to be able to do it.

Q. And you also testified that you have never -- pardon me. You have never denied a request from those who are -- who you supervise for a deposition?

A. Right. Other -- other than the --

Q. Aside from clarification?

A. Right. Other than the clarification aspect, that's correct.

MR. RAMSEY: Do we need to end?

MR. WILLIAMSON: Five minutes.

MR. RAMSEY: Five minutes. Okay.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) And the same for experts in terms of, you have never been denied funds or denied the ability to use an expert that you thought was necessary in a case?

A. I've never been denied one that I have asked for.

Q. And you have never denied one to someone you were supervising, or in your -- or at your point in the process, you haven't denied anyone that?

A. Right. That they've come and asked for me -- for one or, in essence, filled out the electronic process, that's correct. I'm not -- again, the only reason denial-wise usually has been something in relation to, from the mechanics of it, what they needed to clarify better in the -- in the request, not the general nature of a request, itself.

Q. And is there any limitation on how much -- how much a particular expert can cost? Is there any particular policy in your district that you establish or one that you know of?

A. I don't have a -- I don't have a particular policy. The request in relation to funding is particular to the type of expert you're hiring, what you're hiring them for. They have to indicate -- one of the things that attorneys have to do is indicate a per-hour cost; and generally, the indication is usually something that -- that quantifies how you're going to get to that cost.

I've been a -- I've been doing these for a long time, so for example, if I had somebody make a request that said, I need $50,000 in order to hire an expert to determine whether somebody's competent, that isn't going to happen, because I know that I don't need to approve that kind of money to get that to happen. That's -- it -- it would be an extremely out of the ordinary, ridiculous kind of request that I know would not be within the realm of what we would normally need for someone to be able to -- to get that done, the number of hours it would require, the kind of time frame. Even if we -- and -- and for example -- and it's usually amount a lot of mental health experts that we have. But for example, if someone has a long mental health history, and that -- and that expert is going have to go through lots of mental health records, they're going to have to review lots of records in order to be able to ultimately reach the kind of assessment that they need to be able to reach and have the opinion that they're going to need to be able to have in -- in a case, you might request more money for that individual, but that would be any individual, based on being able to do that kind of request. But for example, that kind of request is -- is -- is still not going to be something that I wouldn't recognize as something that -- that you go, that's within the well -- realm of what this person or anybody would be doing in relation to that kind of -- that kind of evaluation.

Q. Do you maintain a list of experts that can be utilized for your assistant public defenders, or are they expected to kind of do their own research and bring that to you?

A. There are -- well, there are certainly people that we have -- there are people that have been used before for various kinds of expertise, and so oftentimes, individuals, if they're -- it they're wanting to have, for example, a basic competency evaluation done on someone, you might look at a given area of the state and say, well, here's, you know, people that have been used in relation to that circumstance. But, you know, there might be a different circumstance that would be a -- a different kind of expert that maybe you haven't had to deal with before or haven't had to look at before. Sometimes you're contacting other offices. Sometimes you're contacting an office, for example, a capital unit or something like that, which tends to have made use of a -- a number of different experts in different -- differing circumstances. They might know who some of those people are or be able to refer you to someone for a particular type of -- of request.

My concern, which I expressed earlier, is that oftentimes, I -- I think people don't know -- they wouldn't even know what they would need to look for because they're -- they don't have the time to be able to assess -- even assess that.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Can we go off the record?

VIDEOGRAPHER: We are on the record. Today's date is December 5, 2017, and the time is 9:05 a.m. This is the video recorded deposition of Ruth Petsch in the matter of Shondel Church, et al., versus State of Missouri, et al., Case Number 17-04057-CV-C-NKL in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division. This deposition is being held at the American Civil Liberties Union of Missouri Foundation.

The reporter's name is Emily Hughes. My name is Ryan Gray. I'm the legal videographer. We are with Alaris Litigation Services.

Would the attorneys present please introduce themselves?

MR. WILLIAMSON: Jason Williamson, ACLU, for the plaintiffs.

MS. SHIPMA: Jacqueline Shipma for the MSPD defendants.

MR. RAMSEY: Steven Ramsey for the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Would the court reporter please swear in the witness?

RUTH PETSCH,

of lawful age, produced, sworn and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs, deposes and says:

EXAMINATION

BY MR. WILLIAMSON:

Q. Good morning, Ms. Petsch.

A. Good morning.

Q. How are you?

A. Good.

Q. My name is Jason Williamson. I represent the plaintiffs in this case. Have -- have you ever been deposed before?

A. I don't think I have.

Q. Okay. Well, it's pretty straightforward, but I'm going to ask you a few questions relevant to this case. You're required to answer those questions truthfully and to the best of your ability. Remember that your testimony here is under oath, so it's just as if you were testifying in court. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Your attorney may object to one or more of my questions, but except in limited circumstances, you're still required to answer the question; okay?

A. (Nonverbal response.)

Q. If you do not hear or understand my question, just let me know, and I can ask a -- a better question or rephrase the question; okay?

A. Okay.

Q. And a few things that I think will help our court reporter here today: First of all, when you are answering questions, just be sure to -- to speak clearly and loudly enough for her to hear you. Also make sure you answer each question verbally as opposed to using body movements so that she can record that for the record. And also, I'd like to ask to let one another finish before -- so allow me to finish my question before you answer. I'll do my very best to let you finish your answer before I ask you another question; okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Did you prepare for the deposition today?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you prepare?

A. Yesterday, I met with Jackie for, you know, 45 minutes, something like that. I read back over some affidavits that my attorneys had written about their case overload, and I looked -- I looked at the time frame, because in speaking with Jackie, I wasn't -- I wasn't sure -- a -- a lot of things have happened recently, and I -- and I wanted to be more clear on the time frame, because it -- if you -- it feels like they happened all at once, so --

Q. And did you -- did you bring any or all of those documents with you today?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Ms. Petsch, by whom are you employed?

A. Missouri State Public Defender.

Q. And what is your current title?

A. I'm the district defender for the Kansas City trial office.

Q. And how long have you served as district defender?

A. I became district defender in, I believe March of '11.

Q. Have you served with the MSPD in any other capacity?

A. Yes. I was assistant public defender. I started in January of 1998, and then I held the -- I held -- well, there's different levels of assistant public defender, but I was assistant public defender in one level or another until I became district defender.

Q. Okay. And the Kansas City trial office is part of District 16?

A. Yes. We -- we're all of District 16 for the most part.

Q. And I want to get this right. Do you refer to it as Area 16 or District 16, or are those interchangeable?

A. MSPD calls it Area 16. It is the 16th Judicial Circuit in -- in Kansas City, the circuit matches up with the office. We only cover one county, which is the 16th Judicial Circuit. So they get called a lot of things, but I think internally, we call it Area 16.

Q. So we'll come back to your experience within the Kansas City office, but can you describe your professional experience prior to coming to the Missouri State Public Defender?

A. As far as professional legal experience, I didn't have any. I -- I interned in the Saint Louis City office, and I did some internships while through law school, but I graduated law school in 1997, took the bar, and my first legal job was with MSPD.

Q. What did you do prior to law school?

A. Well, I was an undergrad. I mean, I -- I did a lot of catering.

Q. So you went straight from undergrad to law school?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you mentioned that Area 16 encompasses Kansas City. Are there any other counties that are part of Area 16?

A. Well, we -- Area 16 is strange in that there's two courthouses. There's one in Kansas City; there's one in Independence. So we go to both courthouses. And then I do have some lawyers that are doing some conflicts. That's dying out because we got conflict funds this year, so in some of the surrounding counties like Platte, Clay, Cass, I feel like Clinton. But again, most of that is -- since July 1, most of that, we're cutting back on because those cases are being contracted, but I do have some lawyers who do conflict cases in some of the surrounding counties.

Q. Is it your understanding that your office, going forward, will no longer be required or expected to -- to cover conflicts in these other counties?

A. Well, that's my hope. I've been with the system long enough to know that that -- that doesn't always happen. Since July 1, we have gotten a few cases from -- conflict cases mostly because we've had an attorney who already represented that client, and they had another case pop up, and they were sent to us. But yes, my -- my hope would be that my -- my office, every MSPD office is out of the conflict business, and we can focus on the 16th Judicial Circuit.

Q. How much time were your lawyers spending on conflict cases prior to July 1?

A. Well, I had one lawyer, that was his -- his entire job was to do conflicts, and I had a second lawyer who -- who probably 50 to 75 percent of her caseload was conflicts, so if you --

Q. Okay.

A. -- you know, can put that into attorney hours, but I basically had almost two lawyers devoted to doing conflict work.

Q. And were other lawyers doing cases here and there, conflict cases here and there, or were -- or were all the conflict cases being handled by those two attorneys?

A. With the exception of I rotated -- the conflicts -- the person I have had on conflicts, he -- he's been with us 29 years, so he's been in conflicts, I want to say -- he was doing it when I took over management position, so he's been on conflicts the entire time. I've rotated people in and out, so I might have had one or two other people who had sort of residual cases, but for just -- just ease of use, it was easier to have a consistent person going to the various counties.

Q. Okay. How many attorneys do you currently have on staff in your office?

A. Including myself, 35.

Q. And how many of those 35 handle felony cases?

A. All of them.

Q. How many handle misdemeanors?

A. All of them.

Q. How many handle juvenile cases?

A. I think -- one of my conflict lawyers does not, so I would say -- and I would say myself and my deputy do not handle juvenile cases. I mean, we've handled them, but right now, I would say we -- we don't handle juvenile cases, so 32.

Q. How many of your lawyers handle probation revocation cases?

A. Every one.

Q. And how many of them do direct appeals?

A. I have one -- I have one lawyer -- excuse me -- doing work at -- he kind of has a lot of the Bazell cases, which is this -- a case that came down that they did a lot of felony stealings, misdemeanors, so -- and it created a lot of chaos for a while, so he has a -- has a bunch of those, so I have maybe one who's doing that. Direct appeals are generally handled by our appellate office.

Q. Are there any other types of cases that are handled by your office that I haven't named?

A. Again, there's -- there's different levels of post-conviction for that Bazell lawyer, which I -- I couldn't even tell you what they are, but I -- I think that about covers it, yes.

Q. Now, you have -- let me rephrase.

How long has the most experienced lawyer in your office been practicing, as far as you know?

A. 29 years.

Q. Okay. And that's the conflicts --

A. Yes.

Q. -- attorney?

And how long has the least experienced attorney in your office been practicing?

Page 15

A. Since September 18.

Q. And even that attorney is carrying felony cases on his or her caseload?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you make distinctions between A, B felonies and C, D felonies when you're assigning the cases to your lawyers?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. How many investigators do you have on staff right now?

A. Well, currently staffed, I have three. I have -- I'm in the process of hiring a fourth. Full staff, we're at four.

Q. Do you have any social workers on staff?

A. No.

Q. How many paralegals do you have?

A. I don't have any paralegals.

Q. Do you have any legal assistants?

A. I do. I have five.

Q. And what -- what role do they play?

A. The legal assistants, they screen all of the clients who are in custody and a number of out of custody. So they go to the jail. We have an application, you have to qualify for the public defender's office, they fill out those. And then they open every file, so that's, you know, a -- right around -- give or take right around 6,000, 5,000 -- 6,000 cases a year, and more applications, because some of those folks are denied or some of those folks hire counsel in the meantime. We'll screen them in jail, and then their family will hire someone. And then there are also -- I have a team structure. I have four teams in the office. They're assigned to a trial team, so they do get requests from attorneys to do things like edit video, show -- there's a tremendous amount of video. Most of our -- all of our discovery comes on disk, and there's a lot of witness interviews. Most cases -- a lot of cases have hours and hours of video between witness interviews and dash cam and the like, so they do a lot of showing videos to clients in the jail.

Q. Along with the attorney, or just the --

A. Usually, just the legal assistant. Attorneys sometimes do that as well, but they -- they don't do it together.

Q. And is that because you just don't have the capacity for them --

A. Right.

Q. -- to do it together?

Page 17

A. So yeah. We'd see that as a waste of resources.

Q. Understood.

How many attorneys are on each trial team?

A. Around eight. Everyone is on a team except for myself and my deputy, Joseph Megerman, so everyone else -- and I have team leaders for the teams, but everyone is on a team.

Q. And you said the legal assistants are assigned to a trial team; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So does that mean that individual lawyers are not -- individual lawyers don't request assistance from the legal assistant, or is that -- or -- or do they?

A. They do.

Q. Okay.

A. They have -- the teams meet, and each of the individual teams sort of allocates the best use of the resources they have. So some teams have attorneys doing requests of legal assistants as part of their team structure, and some of them have set duties for the team, and it does vary -- the time kind of on votes on it and decides what's the best use of resources, so --

Page 18

Q. And each team has the discretion to do that?

A. Yes.

Q. You're not involved in that process?

A. Well, if -- if it's something that goes outside the legal assistant job duty entirely, I'd probably have a discussion with them about it, so I -- I will ask the team leaders, what are you having -- what are you having your support staff do, what are you -- you know, how -- how are you best utilizing your team members? And so I have a feel for what each team is doing at a given time or what their game plan is. Sometimes they plan things, and it doesn't come to fruition, but that's -- but that's how they divide it.

Q. Okay. So aside from the 35 attorneys, four investigators, five legal assistants, are there any other staff in your office?

A. Yes. I have -- there's one administrative assistant who acts more like an office manager, and I have four office support assistants.

Q. And the office support assistants do strictly administrative work, clerical work?

A. Yes. They -- they man our phones, they close every file, and they're also assigned to teams as well, so some of them write letters for lawyers or mail letters, but yes, all strictly clerical.

Q. Do you have a sense of what the turnover rate is among attorneys in your office?

A. Well, last year, I hired -- I had nine people start out of the 35, so I don't -- I haven't done that math.

Q. Does that mean, were those nine people who replaced nine other people who resigned?

A. Left, yes.

Q. And do you have any opinion as to what the cause of those departures may have been?

A. Well, I -- I can tell -- I do an exit meeting when people depart so I can talk about what -- a lot of people leave for private practice. A lot of -- a lot of people leave to make more money, and then a number of people leave because of the work, the grind.

Q. Is the -- is the turnover rate concerning at all to you?

A. Absolutely. It's -- I do all the hiring, and between attorneys and support staff, I -- I literally don't remember the last time I wasn't engaged in hiring, whether I'm reading resumes or I'm interviewing, or right now, I'm checking references.

I -- it -- I am constantly doing that. It's a tremendous drain on my time as well as, I have to have a lawyer what is a trainer, so we're sort of constantly training people. And obviously, trial work isn't a -- you don't walk into it easily and naturally. It requires a lot of training and it requires a lot of time and development, so there's -- it's a constant question/answer, constant -- I believe in open door, so I have a constant stream of people at my door. Most of my core work that I do, I do at home.

Q. We'll come back to that --

A. Sure.

Q. -- shortly.

Is the -- when someone leaves your office, do you -- are you generally -- strike that.

When someone leaves your office, how long does it generally take you to fill that position?

A. At least six weeks. It has to post for two weeks. I generally do two rounds of interviews, so you know, you have to give people notice to get there. And I do it as efficiently as possible. One, I fear losing -- I've lost positions before, so I'm always afraid of losing a spot. And two, that workload goes somewhere, so it's really -- I think it's really demoralizing for the staff to have people out. When someone leaves, their cases get disbursed, and you know, they -- they feel the pain instantly.

Q. And how do you handle the caseload for that six weeks or however along the intervening period is to make sure that those cases, the -- the lawyer's cases are covered?

A. Well, we reassign the cases immediately, so that means lawyers who thought they had set schedules will now get trial cases dropped in their lap and trial settings dropped in their lap that they weren't anticipating. It's -- there's a lot of things that bug the lawyers, but that really bugs the lawyers.

Q. How do you choose who gets the pleasure of having cases dropped in their lap?

A. So one of the -- and I -- Joseph Megerman does most of the assigning, but I've been the assigner in the office before. Sometimes you look at -- we have the ability to look at people's trial schedules, see and look when people have availability. You will -- obviously, the type of case is important. I'm not going to give new lawyers murder 1. And some of it is, it just has to go somewhere.

Q. Is it fair to say that that is one of the implications of -- of a high turnover rate, that you have lawyers taking on -- lawyers who are already very busy taking on additional cases, at least in the interim?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned that you are always afraid of losing a spot?

A. Right.

Q. Can you explain what you mean?

A. Well, we -- so the system, you know, we're a statewide system, so there are attorney positions. You know, they look at offices that are overload and positions -- I've -- I -- I think I've lost two, and then gained one. But positions will go to other offices who are considered more overloaded, so you'll lose someone, and then you don't get to fill it. I've lost attorney positions that way, and I've lost support staff positions that way.

Q. Are the majority of the new hires relatively inexperienced lawyers?

A. Yes. I do -- I've -- I've definitely hired transfers. I'm trying to think in the past year if I've hired any transfers. Maybe -- I think maybe two of the nine were transfers; although, one came with no trial experience, so it wasn't -- you know, I mean, it wasn't like going -- the other did come with some trial experience, so -- but for the most part, most of my new hires are brand new.

Q. Right out of law school?

A. Yes. Or this is their first legal job. I've hired some people -- I hired a guy who just worked in a start-up for a two years just doing IT stuff, but he wasn't -- it didn't help his legal acumen any.

Q. And when those new lawyers come on board, is there a period of time that they have to spend in training before they are assigned clients?

A. No.

Q. Do they -- do they receive any training as new attorneys in the office?

A. Yes. Well, I have a training person, and -- and she had a baby this summer, so it made for hectic times for the people who started this summer. But -- and then we -- I actually moved her position. She wanted to move positions when she came back. So I have a new training person. He goes to the jail with them, he goes to court dates with them until he's confident that they're able to handle certain types of things. That being said, three people start in September. One person started in August. It would be physically impossible for him to attend every dep -- every first for all of -- all of that group, so I do have training, and we do work with it, but again, it fluctuates based on training. It's not -- I can't add other trainers. I don't have the resources for that.

Q. So to be clear, the training person is not conducting day-long trainings, for example, for a group of lawyers; this person is shadowing lawyers in -- in their work on a daily basis?

A. Right. Well, he's meeting with them, discussing their cases, he'll go to the jail with them for their first client, you know, sitting in on client interviews, sort of working with them. All of our training is on the job for the most part as far as that goes. I do -- once a month, I do have a -- we call it our second Friday CLE. It's not a real CLE, but it's sort of things that we see that lawyers have issues with, and then it's generally in-house people talking about voir dire, talking about other topics, making a record things like that, to get -- but it's usually over lunch, and it's usually an hour to an hour and a half long.

Q. Is that mandatory for people to attend?

A. It's mandatory -- I make it mandatory for ones and twos, but I mean, if someone is on vacation, I'm not going to hold them. So -- and ones and twos,

APD 1s and 2s, because I just want them to have that experience, and I'm -- it's open to the whole office, and depending on the topic and the speaker, we have a fair number of people. I will also say the state has statewide training, but that isn't -- I'm not in charge of that.

Q. Are your lawyers required to attend the statewide training?

A. The new lawyers are, yes. And most lawyers want to in some capacity because it gets them their CLE hours, so --

Q. You referenced APDs -- APD 1 and 2s?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Can you just explain what you mean?

A. So a new hire is an APD 1, and you're an APD 1 -- you're eligible to be promoted after a year of practice and successful performance, and then you become an APD 2.

I write -- I personally write every review in the office, so the attorneys are reviewed, and then they become APD 2s. And you're an APD 2 -- you're not eligible to move up for two years in successful practice including trial practice. We have -- we have a form for it, and I -- I review every -- all reviews are written by me in my office, so most attorneys, unless they've not had trial experience or they've had issues that we're working on, move up to ADP 3 at about the three-year mark.

Q. Does every attorney start as an APD 1, or does it depend on your level --

A. Every attorney starts as an APD 1. Oh, well, no. I guess that's not true. There -- if we have experienced people, they can be waived in.

Q. Okay.

A. So I've -- certainly, the transfers -- with transfers, it's easy. They -- they're already at a level, and they transfer at the same level. But I have hired people with experience who were -- their experience was given weight, so they came in as twos. I just had -- I just had a lawyer who had some experience, so they -- they had me promote him six months early. Normally, you'd be eligible at a year, and I promoted him at six months, so there are some concessions made when people have experience.

Q. And can -- can you just sort of name what the other levels of promotion are after AP -- APD 3?

A. Well, there's APD 4.

Q. Okay.

A. So -- and that, again, is another two years -- you have to have at least two years of highly successful performance in A and B felony. So for me, my four standard is you should be able to take any type of case. If you got to each of the marks and got promoted in the timliest manner possible, the soonest you could reach that is five years, and that is our -- that's our top level of trial attorney. Obviously, we have management positions, but that is where attorneys top out.

Q. And in order to be a trial team leader, do you have to be an APD 4?

A. No. I -- the trial team leader is sort of my own organizational tool. It's not MSPD. Because it's basically impossible for myself and my deputy to effectively supervise and mentor 33 people. So I do interviews, I have a form, I meet with attorneys. So I've made -- I've definitely made threes team leaders before.

Q. Okay.

A. Obviously, I'd prefer a four, but when you have turnover, sometimes you don't have that many fours or you don't have that many interested fours.

Q. And does -- since it's not tied to any MSPD requirements, is it -- is there any -- is there a salary implication for becoming a team leader?

A. No.

Q. And just -- I just want to clarify one thing. You mentioned that the -- your -- your trainer shadows the -- the lawyers. So does that mean that that person is really only training one lawyer a day or a couple of lawyers a day?

A. I think it varies. And it depends -- you -- it depends how their -- their court is scheduled, so he -- I think he'll meet with them sort of informally as a group to talk about -- let's talk about offers today. But I would say -- the truth is I -- I don't know. I think there are days when he probably touches base with everybody on the training team, and there are probably days when he doesn't touch base with any of them. It just varies depending on what they have going on and what their needs are.

Q. So you mentioned that, at least at the moment, you're doing a lot of hiring?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you just talk a little bit about your -- your other day-to-day responsibilities as district defender?

A. Along with hiring, I would say I'm constantly promoting with -- with the turnover, I'm constantly, I think I've promoted 15 people this year. The upper level promotions take me 20 to 40 hours to write, I think. And an APD 1 is a little shorter, because there's not as much to look into. What else do I do? I -- I'm in charge of approving all encumbrance requests, all requests for depositions. I approve all leave, so that's probably five or six requests a day for leave. I have been carrying two probation violation dockets. I do -- I do the HR for the office, so if -- obviously, we have an HR, but, you know, I have to do whatever claims come in, whatever investigation. I deal directly with the courts, so if there are complaints that way, I'm on -- I have to -- there's meetings set up with the presiding judge, things like that. I do those things.

Q. You mentioned that you also write every review --

A. Yes.

Q. -- for your attorneys?

A. That's part of the promotions, yes.

Q. Oh, part of the promotions process?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. What is the basis for that review? In other words, are you getting reports from supervising attorneys about the other attorneys, or are you doing the initial supervision?

A. So there's a variety of things. I do talk to the team leaders about how people are doing, and I do try -- occasionally, I get to second chair somebody in trial. It's not very often, and -- but I do try if someone's in trial to get over there to catch part of their trial so that I can see their trial performance for myself. But I -- I request cases. I go through their cases. I go through their entire caseload. I check all of their client contact, whether they're seeing their clients -- we have a requirement with MSPD that you're supposed to see your client within seven days of receiving a case, as well as monthly contact after that. So for a number of files, I look at every contact. For all of their open cases, I look at first and last contacts. When I look through their files, I look for what kind of motions they're doing, general -- kind of what you'd expect a defense attorney, what -- how you evaluate a defense attorney, what their writing is, and that, for the most part, is kind of the bulk of -- looking through files. And then I do talk to team leaders and anyone who has second chaired. I ask team leaders who second chair trials, because they are -- they are -- I hope that they do a bulk of the second chairing to fill out an evaluation. Some of them are better at that than others in doing that in a timely manner, so sometimes it's sitting down with them and asking them about specific trial skills and where people are at.

Page 30

Q. You mentioned that you do carry your own caseload; correct?

A. Well, I carry a case -- I'm doing only probation violations at the time, so yes. I'm not carrying a trial caseload.

Q. And -- and why only probation cases?

A. Well, probation violations are set at more predictable times, and while they can require -- I mean, I've taken depositions. I've done real work on probation violations. They don't -- it's a more predictable amount of time that you can devote to it than trial cases, which are all over the place, and then you have -- it really, for me, I'm a resource for the office, and then trying to split up what is more valuable, being a resource for the office or my -- my legal obligations to a client when you undertake representation that way is -- especially when you have a trial case, I just -- I tried to keep some cases when I became district defender, and eventually had to assign them out because I wasn't seeing the clients and I wasn't getting any work done on it, so I found that split very difficult. But with probation violations, I can -- plus, they're -- you know, we have a lot of divisions, and it means -- I mean, when I have turnover, I don't have enough lawyers to take a division. The -- usually, lawyers have trial assignments, and then they're assigned to a division, and they get all the probation violations that come to that division. But when I run out of lawyers, I'm looking at either doubling up on some lawyers who already have too many cases, or just taking them myself.

Q. How long has it been since you've had a trial docket?

A. I think I -- probably about six months into when I took over, so 2011.

Q. And -- and when you refer to a trial docket, does that include any and all felonies?

A. Yes.

Q. And all misdemeanors?

A. Yes.

Q. Which is to say those cases could go to trial? In other words, you're characterizing -- characterizing them as a trial docket because those are cases that could conceivably go to trial?

A. Yes, correct. And I -- I should -- recently, a number of the Jackson County judges have ordered me to enter on a number of cases, which I have done so, so I guess you could say I'm entered on some cases that could go to trial at this point, but I'm also having -- other attorneys are also entering, so --

Q. And we will return to that --

A. Sure.

Q. -- in a bit.

Does the MSPD central office play any role at all in -- in performance evaluations of your lawyers -- of the lawyers in your office?

A. Yes. Well, I write them, and for APD, the one to two is based on my evaluation solely. That doesn't get run by anyone. But all the other evaluations do. So I write an evaluation, and then I send it -- right now, Ellen supervises me, and I think Joel Elmer also, he looks at -- I know he looks at all the fours. We just had a supervisor leave, so some of that is up in the air, but I've always sent it to a supervisor and then gotten feedback about sometimes add something, sometimes -- you know, or this isn't very good client contact. What can you do to motivate this person? Feedback about whether I need to change the review or work with the attorney in some way. So ultimately, I don't approve the promotions to three and four. That's -- I write them, submit them, and then get feedback, and that comes from upper management.

Q. And when you refer to "Ellen," that's Ellen Blaugh?

A. Right.

Q. How long does is generally take for the central office to make those ultimate decisions?

A. Of -- it's -- it's varied over the time I've had the position. Of recent, not -- not very long at all; although, I am not afraid to pester people, so I definitely will. Because I'm cognizant of when pay periods hit, so I -- I know if I can get it approved before the next pay period, that means that it will become effective sooner, so I tend to gently hound people to get them to look at it. Because I see my role as I also advocate for the lawyers in my office, and if I have good lawyers, I certainly want to get -- them to get promoted in a timely manner, and I try and advocate for them as much as possible.

Q. When you are evaluating the performance of any of your lawyers, to what extent do you consider their caseload in -- in assessing the quality of their work?

A. Well, it -- it's impossible not to.

Because as I say, I don't think I have a single lawyer who is meeting their client contact ever. I've never had anyone be 100 percent for -- definitely for certain, and I would say most people have a fair -- a fair number of not seeing clients on time or not seeing them regularly. So I do -- to me, I feel like I have to take that into account. You know, if you have someone with 100 cases, that's very different than if they had 30.

Q. But it's -- there's no particular formula that you can use to --

A. No.

Q. Okay. Do you -- do you manage the budget in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. So you make decisions about how much money goes where?

A. Well, I approve the expenses.

Q. I see.

A. The ultimate budget that's handed to me comes from upper management, so I don't -- I approve expenses within that budget, but I sign off on every staples request we make, every -- and I do sign off on all the trial -- we call them encumbrance requests. Although, some of them, if there above

$500, if they're on a murder, some of them go -- they're approved by the central office. I approve only my local budget numbers, so -- but I don't -- I mean, I'm given a certain amount of money. I don't -- and I keep it within that.

Q. And how do you make decisions about how to use that -- how to allocate that -- that pool of money that you have to depositions versus experts versus other things that your office may need?

A. Well, most of the depositions and experts come from the central level. And again, my -- my budget, you know, there's a supplies section. I don't get to borrow from supplies to pay for depos. It -- it's already delineated, so -- or if I -- if I have that power, I don't -- I'm unaware of it. I don't do that.

Q. So when you say that the -- so even the pool of money that you're given for your office is already itemized in terms of how much you can spend on what?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And it's your understanding that that's how it works for every district?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. How much discretion do you have in setting policy for your office?

A. I feel like I have a fair amount. Although, I'm not -- Joel Elmer was my boss my entire 14 years before I ended up taking his job, so there are district defenders who are more leery about talking to upper management. I am not one of them. So for the most part, when I'm thinking about policy, I want to discuss it with experienced people who -- who have been through it or have ideas about it. So I don't know that I've ever implemented a policy that upper management said, "You shouldn't do that. Reverse that." That's never happened to me. But I have a pretty -- I have a pretty comfortable relationship with upper management. I'm not afraid to call anybody. I'm not afraid to ask advice. They probably say I call them too much.
Q. And -- and in your opinion, why are some district defenders leery of speaking with upper management?
A. Well, I think there's -- I think there are people who think, like, I want to do it on my own. This is all mine. I'm separate. I mean, I think I've always grown up with the concept -- or grown up -- grown up through the law and grown up through the system with the concept that it's -- you know, we're a statewide system; that, you know, our goals are that everyone do well, that everything -- you know, I know with Joel and hiring, when he was -- supervised me would say, like, well, let the rural office -- you know, people who are candidates in multiple offices, let the rural offices choose first because it's much harder to fill those spots, and I really -- although, I have a lot of turnover, I generally have big pools, and I'm -- I've not had a pool yet where I've closed it and reopened, that I've found candidates that I thought would be successful in the office. But I do think that there are people who -- they want to run their own thing, and then I think there are people who are -- you know, management wants to push the envelope, wants to serve clients better, and I think when you're already overwhelmed, people see that as sort of a hostile directive to a certain extent. And -- yeah. I mean, we'd have to get deep into management theory.

But some of it is also that, you know, people really -- there are managers who really want their lawyers to like them, so they'll choose friendships with lawyers over they'll choose being client centered, or you know, like, oh, we'll let everyone leave at 2:00, or we'll let -- and I have always said, as an office, I'm going to -- and it being a big office, I have to. I have to be really firm about hours. I have to be really firm about how policies go out, and -- and I -- I really think keeping the client in mind -- I think a small office to attract attorneys will sometimes weigh to keep you, I will give you these breaks, and I don't have the option of giving people breaks, because everyone would get a break, so I -- it's complex, and it probably varies office to office.

But I know in general, there's sort of a feeling of -- there can be disconnect. And that's not true -- I mean, I certainly am friends with DDs in rural offices who have no issue. But for me, it's especially easy, because my boss was -- like, Joel was my boss forever, and I'm very -- I was very comfortable being supervised by him before. I'm very comfortable being supervised by him now. And when I have tough times, I can call him, and he's easy to talk to and he -- he's been there. He ran the Kansas City trial office for 20 years, so --
Q. A couple of other budget questions. Generally speaking, you have 35 attorneys in your office. Do you think that's enough?
A. No. No, I don't.

Page 40

Q. In your ideal world, how many additional attorneys do you think you would like to have?
A. 15 to 20.
Q. And -- and what's the -- the basis for that number?
A. Well, I think it would get attorneys down to a caseload of the 30 to 40, which I think is really sort of an optimal caseload; and again, it varies depending on type of case. We have a lot of serious cases in this -- in my office, so the -- it -- you know, I -- I don't know if you have a bunch of murders and drive-by shootings and things like that that you should -- you probably shouldn't have more than 25 or 20 -- you know, it's hard to say what that -- exactly what that number is. But when I look at getting people the caseloads, controllable caseloads, that's -- that's a number I would come to.
Q. And you have four investigators on staff. Is that enough?
A. No.
Q. So how many -- how many additional investigators do you think you would need right now for the 35 --
A. For the 35?
Q. -- lawyers? Yes.

Page 41

A. That -- I -- I think -- and I -- I don't know about an ideal world. I mean, it would be great to have an investigator per two attorneys.

Q. Okay.

A. Which is a lot more investigators.

Q. What do you -- what would you consider a reasonable caseload for an investigator?

A. Honestly, I -- it's -- that's a hard question, because I've never -- we've never even been a stone's throw away from it. Maybe 50 cases as far as, again, with -- at least the structure I have, investigators, they don't enter on a case when it comes in, so they solely work on attorney requests. So if that structure were the same, which I don't think is an ideal structure, honestly. I think having an investigator assigned to a case with an attorney as they come in would be a more ideal structure. If that were the case, you'd want to keep it to basically the level of where an attorney is at or maybe twice that if they're assigned two attorneys, so maybe 50, 60, cases, but it -- obviously, I have -- right now, we have about 4100 cases that people are entered in, so my attorneys -- or my investigators potentially, when I'm full staff, working on potentially 1,000 cases at the time, which is just -- it's ridiculous.

Q. If you had the number of investigators that you needed, do you think you would still need your legal assistants?

A. Yes. The legal assistants -- there's a little overlap, but they do a completely different job.

Q. And you have five of them in your office right now?

A. Right.

Q. Is -- is that enough?

A. No.

Q. How many legal assistants do you -- do you think would be ideal?

A. I'd say -- well, fairly similar. I'd say an legal assistant to every two lawyers, maybe three lawyers, something like that.

Q. And could you use any additional clerical staff?

A. Yes. Well, I -- you know, I have an office manager, so I don't -- I don't have an administrative assistant. I don't -- I do all of my own typing. I do all my own faxing. I do all of my own filing. I do all of my administrative work, with the exception of the office manager does -- she does -- she helps with bills, like, she codes bills and gives them to me to sign, but she really doesn't provide me any administrative support, and it's not that she's not working.

Q. Right.

A. But it's also -- I feel like the things I have her doing office-wide are more useful than having her for myself, but I -- I don't -- she does -- when I'm hiring, she does -- she does arrange interviews, so she does assist me in that way.

Q. If you had to guess, and I think you alluded to this a little earlier, roughly how much time would you say you spend on administrative work versus substantive legal work?

A. 75 percent. I mean, if you count -- I got to make tables when I write reviews. You know, if -- if I had someone who could -- a lot of what I do when I review people as far as client contact, that doesn't -- that wouldn't necessarily have to be done by me. It's a -- it's a huge chunk.

Q. All right. How many -- approximately, how many cases per year does your office handle?

A. It varies year to year, and I -- that number, I didn't look at. But I feel like we're right around 5,000 cases.

Q. Do you have any sense of roughly what percentage of those are felonies?

A. The majority of them are felony. We -- we carry not a lot of misdemeanors. We -- I don't even know if we carry 500 a year.

Q. And I know you mentioned that you're only carrying a couple of probation violation cases right now yourself?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. How many cases would you say you handle per year?

A. Not more than 100. Maybe 80, 90, something like that. It kind of depends on whatever comes up in the division. But that's loose, so please don't --

Q. No. I understand.

A. Don't impeach me with that number. I -- I didn't look at that at all.

Q. So I just wanted to ask you a few questions just about procedure, criminal procedure here. At what point is a defendant generally brought before a judge for the first time after arrest?

A. It's usually within a day or two of arrest. It's usually -- sometimes it's the next day. I mean, the -- our courts do what they call an initial appearance, which -- initial arraignment daily, so every day, they bring in whoever was arrested, and on Monday, they bring whoever was arrested over the weekend.

Q. And when does a formal arraignment happen?

A. A formal first arraignment would happen at that first court date.

Q. Okay. And is bail set at that initial hearing?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that -- is bail generally based on a bail schedule?

A. It goes judge to judge. In Jackson County, years ago, a number of people got together and put recommended bail amounts on what's called a blue sheet. It was printed out on blue sheets, and it -- a lot of judges follow that, but that was really just sort of a bunch of people's best guess. In the last couple years, the Court hired some folks to come in and do a risk assessment instrument, which they -- they put in the -- when someone is brought into jail, they put it -- the questions are derived from questions asked at booking at the jail, and some judges are better about following the risk assessment instrument than others. But it really -- individually, I mean, it's completely whatever the judge -- they also have a bond sheet where the prosecutor can write whatever they want on it, so --

Q. And the bond sheet is submitted to the Court?

A. Yes. It's filed usually the same time the -- the complaint is, and we'll list priors, and there's usually a recommendation.

Q. Can the bail amount be changed after that point?

A. Yes.

Q. Defendants are entitled to a preliminary hearing; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. If a preliminary hearing occurs, when -- when would it occur?

A. It would occur -- generally, at that initial appearance setting, the judge will set it out for a prelim setting; although, the expectation generally is not that a prelim is going to happen at -- at that time. Clients are unrepresented at that point, so there's often a request for the public defender to screen, which can we do -- sometimes we do in court that day. And then -- so usually the prelim setting is set a couple of weeks out, and then if a client requests a prelim, it's usually set within a month after that, I would say. It kind of -- it depends on availability of the Court, and sometimes the state has concerns about their witnesses or when they can bring them in. Again, 99 percent of our cases are grand juried, so the prelim setting is really just sort of a --

Q. I see.

A. -- formal --

Q. So at what point does the indictment occur -- you're saying it goes to the grand jury at some point between that initial hearing and the whatever --

A. No, not usually.

Q. Okay.

A. What happens is you go to your first prelim setting, the State sends us a list of offers. Sometimes there's negotiations; sometimes it -- it can be continued over if you're wanting to engage in a plea agreement early or at that step in the process. And sometimes it gets sent over because we're looking at whether people qualify for a diversion, things like that. But if you have a client who says, "I want a trial no matter what," and you request a prelim at that point, the judge would set it over usually about three weeks, depending on what -- what the -- sometimes a prosecutor will say, "Well, we're going to grand jury this." They grand jury every drug case. There's a whole set. They grand jury every sex case, every murder. There are sets of case they always grand jury, and then there's some -- sometimes they'll have a prelim; sometimes they won't. But for the most part, they'll request time and tell the Court they're -- they're going to send it to the grand jury.

Q. Does the timing of the prelim, or at least the date that's set out for the prelim depend at all on whether the person is in custody?

A. I do think there are some judges whose -- who do these -- the associate judges who handle this, I think there are some who -- I think they pretty standardly set it out, but I don't know for that first setting if judges do that or not. I know for continuances, they often won't continue something longer when someone's in custody. That, I don't know.

Q. Okay. Are there any other kinds of pretrial hearings that generally occur in a -- in a criminal case?

A. Like, preindictment or pre --

Q. Let's start with preindictment. Sorry.

A. Okay. We'll start with preindictment. So they have -- the judges will also set things for settlement that we've -- and I'm not sure if she's doing this right now, but we've had settlement conferences before they get indicted. So mostly, I think because judges sort of want to clear off the prelim document and sort of group these people that people have indicated might be pleas. And sometimes to give people time -- you know, there are people -- if you -- some people, if they have a DUI, if they get their license back, they might get one deal; they might get another. If they can pay back restitution, they might get one deal; they might get another. Some of it is sometimes giving clients to either make restitution payments, do things like that, get medical records, things that would be persuasive to the prosecutor to change the offer that they are initially giving.

And sometimes the Courts -- historically, they always did. Now, there's -- Missouri has judicial time standards, and most judges won't let anything set beyond three months over an associate. And then if -- you know, a client can waive, have a prelim, be bound over, and -- or be indicted, and then they'll go -- they'll be arraigned, and the judges will often then -- there's -- in that same division where they're doing arraignments, he also has a settlement docket, and he'll set cases sometimes by request, and sometimes it's cases the judge just thinks should settle that they will just set, because I have attorneys who get really frustrated about, well, I -- I just wanted to send it to a trial division, and now, I have an extra appearance. So sometimes it's cases they think should settle where they'll put them on a settlement docket before it moves. After that, it would move to circuit court, and that's when you'd have a pretrial. But the first pretrial is usually -- that's where you pick a trial date, which is generally sometimes six months -- we have judges who will set things out nine months to a year for a trial date.

Q. Is that after arraignment?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Is it possible for a defendant to plead guilty at their initial appearance?

A. We don't staff it, so I don't know if it -- honestly, I don't know if there are people who -- it's -- I would hope not, because they're all unrepresented. I don't -- I don't know if I've ever seen or heard of a lawyer doing that. Certainly, it better not be my staff.

Q. And -- and is the -- so the -- the defendants are unrepresented at that point. Are the public defenders generally in the room at the initial appearance?

A. No.

Q. No?

A. It -- it depends how and when it's done, but no. And if they are, they're not attentive to what's going on because sometimes they'll have an initial appear -- they'll do an initial appearance at the beginning of a prelim docket, but usually, public def -- if public defender's in the room, they are talking to prosecutors, they're talking to their client, they're -- they're not at the bench with clients. Except, on a rare case, you know, if we have a client who picked up a second case, there's sometimes the attorney assigned to his cases will show up.

Q. Do you think it would be helpful to have attorneys at initial appearance -- representing clients at initial appearance?

A. I think it's better for the clients.

Q. Realistically, would your office be able to staff initial appearances?

A. No. I mean, we've tried that, and it is -- when you weigh the attorney time versus -- you know, we weren't really getting bond reductions, we really weren't getting those things. That discontinued before I took over supervision. But I -- I've staffed -- as an attorney, I've staffed initial appearances before. But I -- I mean, I think it's an opportunity for bond. I think it's an opportunity for your client to say a bunch of stuff that hurts them. I think there's a lot of potentially negative things that could happen by being upper -- unrepresented at really any court appearance.

Q. So I wanted to ask you a little bit about that. What are some other things that a client could -- could say or do at that initial appearance that could be harmful to them?

A. They could admit facts of what they're charged with, and they do. It's -- all of those -- those judges don't have record -- or they don't have court reporters, but they do -- they tape it, so really, the client could say almost anything. And there is a discussion where they set bond, and clients will say, "Oh, but I could stay with my sister," or there's a discourse that sometimes happen. Sometimes not, and it really depends on the judge. But yeah, there are clients who could admit facts of their case, give up their right to remain silent.

Q. Are -- are there -- that being one of them, are there constitutional rights that -- that a defendant could waive in that proceeding?

A. I suspect there are, and again, I haven't witnessed an initial appearance in some time. But yeah. I mean, there -- there are clients who have said, "I did it." There are clients who make all kinds of admissions, which clearly is a problem.

Q. And your office is generally appointed at that initial appearance or -- let me -- let me rephrase that.

A. Well, right now --

Q. Let me rephrase that. At what point in the process is your office generally appointed to the case?

A. So it varies. Before the last two months, which we'll talk about later. Before the last two months, generally, at that hearing, they -- the judge asked the public defender to screen, so we would screen the clients. And prior to the last -- I guess maybe now it's three months, we would -- anyone who qualified, we'd enter on pretty much at -- you know, we'd take the case, open it, and assign it. Because we've had so many concerns about Rule 4, we -- we are not entering until the Court is appointing us.

Q. What is Rule 4?

A. Rule 4 is -- is the Missouri ethical rule that -- well, there's a series of them. There's .1 dash one. But -- but our main concerns, you know, we've had -- we have an attorney disciplined and -- who's on probation, and he was told that caseload didn't matter. Under the rules, we're supposed to do diligence, which means we're supposed to timely work out these cases, which is impossible if you have 100 cases. Communications, which I've already touched on in my reviews. You know, we're supposed to -- there's no set amount, but you know, is it a reasonable amount and with promptness? Which none of my lawyers are able to go to the jail promptly or respond to most clients' requests in a -- in a prompt manner. So it also covers competence, getting yourself up to speed on the law, getting yourself -- you know, if you get a case that involves shot splatter, you should be able to get yourself up to speed and work on that. Most of my lawyers have cases six, nine months before they're even looking for an expert. There's a whole host of areas that we're falling down under Rule 4.

So we had an attorney disciplined. A number of my attorneys immediately e-mailed me and said, "I can't take more cases. I'm ethically at an overload." Rule 4 also says that if -- you should stop taking cases if you can't -- if you can't handle any more. And in fact, taking on more cases is a conflict of interest for the current clients you have. A lot of my attorneys expressed to me -- and I actually ended up having a meeting with every attorney individually, and we got to a point where we -- everyone said, "I can't take more cases," at which point I wrote the presiding judge and told him I was going to put clients on a postponement list. The ethical rules indicate if -- if you are in a spot where you can't take more cases, that you should postpone representation, which I'm -- I've tried to do. Our courts have not -- are upset about us doing that and have started to appoint us on -- I think we're -- I want to say we're up to 110 appointments.

Q. Okay. So I have more questions for you about that.

A. Sure.

Q. The -- the -- when you -- when you mentioned screening the cases --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- that your office is asked to screen the cases, does that mean that you're making indigency determinations --

Page 56

A. Yes.

Q. -- at that point?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. And you're saying that the -- all of the Rule 4 requirements, to your mind, are implicated in making decisions about how many of those cases you can actually handle or -- or how many of those appointments you can actually accept?

A. Right. Well, I -- at this point, I have every lawyer in my office saying they're at capacity for what they can ethically handle. I -- so for me -- I mean, the reason they say they can't handle more cases is because of their ethical obligations under Rule 4. If -- if they enter a case, and they're already at overload, they're in a conflict with their current clients, so I would say by entering a case, I -- I would say that that's when -- at least for the individual attorneys, that's when Rule 4 is -- is -- would be triggered. I may be wrong about that. I'm not the ethics guru, but at least, that's at least the approach that we've taken; that right now, we're not going to enter on cases to keep us from being in an ethical conflict, and you know, possibly looking at issues with our license.

Q. Okay. Just a couple of other procedural questions: The -- once you're appointed to -- once your office is appointed to a case, are your attorneys always present for any preliminary hearing if it happens?

A. They're not always present for any -- I guess maybe trial, but aside from that, no. I mean, it's ideal. They try to be. But if someone is in trial, and a prelim is set, the judge is not going to move a preliminary hearing, so they will get coverage from another lawyer.

Q. And if coverage is required, does that usually lead to a continuance, or does -- do those proceedings tend to go forward?

A. If it -- if it's a prelim setting --

Q. Right.

A. -- and the state actually brought their witnesses, it will go forward.

Q. All right. Is the same true for arraignment in circuit court; which is to say, are lawyers present for those arraignments?

A. Not all the time, no.

Q. Okay. Are there times when -- would an arraignment ever go forward without any attorney present?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Okay. And it would be the judge that would make the decision to not go forward if there was no attorney?

A. Right. But I -- I would say that, you know, we have -- the arraignment docket has usually 20 people on it or more, and we probably have multiple public defenders present, so likely, if we had a client there whose attorney was somewhere else, they would step in, or attorneys arrange coverage for their cases all the time.

Q. Okay.

COURT REPORTER: If you get to a stopping point --

MR. WILLIAMSON: We can go off the record now.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 10:17 a.m.

(A brief recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 10:27 a.m.

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) Ms. Petsch, I'm going to hand you a document that I'm going to mark as Exhibit 1 for identification.

(Petsch Exhibit 1 was marked for identification.)

Q. Just have a clarifying question.

A. Uh-huh.

Page 59

Q. Do you recognize this document?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is it?

A. It's one of the local Kansas City policies from our -- our policies and procedures database.

Q. Okay. And this is an e-mail from Joel Elmer; correct?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And was this sent to all the district defenders?

A. No. This was when Joel was the district defender in Kansas City. It was sent to the lawyers in the office.

Q. Okay. And this is -- what -- what was the date of this e-mail?

A. The date is October 13 of 2002.

Q. And if you go to the second -- third page of this document --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- you'll see a document that is labeled "MSPD Local Office Policy"?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And what is the effective date of that pol -- at the top there?

A. Oh, five -- is that a -- 6/14 of '06.

Page 60

Q. So I -- do you -- what is the -- and -- and what's the date of -- it looks like the same date; correct? Of the -- the e-mail?

A. The e-mail, yes.

Q. Right. Is this -- is this a notice that was sent out when this policy was created, the -- the client contact policy was created, or --

A. Yeah. So in Kansas City, we have our own -- or our own policies and procedures database. The other one looks like it's the MSPD, the statewide policies and procedures database.

Q. Okay.

A. So my guess is Joel sent out that e-mail, added it to our local database, and then it was later added to the -- well, so Joel had sort of been on the forefront, I guess. He -- he'd had his own policies and procedures database before we had a statewide local one, so I think he added it. I'm not sure of the timing of when the local office policy database started, but my guess is that's a discrepancy.

Q. Okay.

A. There was a point when they wanted to move everything off the local servers into a statewide server, I think. Joel really would be the person to ask about the timing of that.

Page 61

Q. Okay. Thank you.
Now, you've talked a bit about client contact already.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. And you mentioned that your lawyers are not able to meet with the MSPD requirement of -- not always able to meet the MSPD requirement with respect to client contact; correct?
A. Correct.
Q. When that client contact does occur, where does it usually occur?
A. We have what we called our qualifying contact, so if someone's in jail, it should occur in jail. If you have someone out of custody, it can be by phone, by letter, office meeting.
Q. And are those meetings confidential?
A. They likely should be. I don't -- I -- it's almost impossible to have a confidential meeting at the jail. The jail is not set up in such a way that -- they have some attorney rooms. Some of them are permanently locked. They're difficult to get to. But most of the time, you have a meeting in a room close to this size. The jail has professional visitation, but it's very rare that you're in a professional visitation room alone, so --

Q. So those conversations tend to be within earshot of other people?
A. Yes.
Q. So without getting into specifics or -- or compromising any attorney-client privilege, are you aware of any situations where the representation of the client by an attorney in your office was -- was hampered by their inability -- the lawyer's inability to communicate consistently with the client?
A. Yes -- well, I -- I mean, it -- a lot of the problem is intangible, so if you're seeing a client regularly, you're building client relationship, they trust you, you -- you come back when you say you're going to come back, you follow through when you say you're going to, and if you're unable to do those things, there's a lot of -- there there's a lot of mistrust with our clients and a government lawyer anyway, so that is always on the table. And most of my attorneys sort of -- well, triage their cases. So they're working on the cases that are coming to trial. They have a whole host of people who have trials nine months out who they're virtually ignoring. You know, they're not seeing consistently. They're calling all the time. And they're focused on the clients that are coming to trial. So they're constantly -- when you have clients coming up to trial, you're seeing them more, you're wanting information, you're doing the investigation that you should have been doing all along; and some clients are okay with that, and some clients, you've already broken it. You've broken what should be an attorney-client relationship, and you will probably never repair that. So then you -- your client then won't trust you when you say an offer is good. They won't trust you when you say, I talked to this witness, and they're saying something contrary to what you think you're saying. They just stop believing you, and that happens all the time.

Q. Have you ever had such an experience yourself in -- in any cases that you were handling?
A. It's been a while since I've handled trial cases, so I'm thinking back. Sure, yes. I've definitely had clients who were -- you know, you said you'd be here next week, and it's just sort of fed into that level of distrust.
Q. And you testified earlier that part of why you stopped taking trial cases was that you felt like you couldn't provide the kind of representation that you thought was necessary?
A. Right.
Q. Would that include communication with clients?

Page 64

A. Yes.
Q. Okay.
A. Well, the clients I eventually handed over, I hadn't seen in three or four months, and I -- I really with the best of intentions thought I was going to see them, and then --
Q. And this --
A. -- and everything else filled that time.
Q. And this was an experienced attorney; correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. You just mentioned investigation. I understand this may be a little hard to -- to quantify, so I'll ask you to just do the best you can. But it -- in what fraction or percentage of -- of the cases that come into your office do your attorneys interview all of the necessary witnesses?
A. I -- I really -- it would really be a stab, but --
Q. Would you say --
A. I'm guessing -- I'm guessing people don't interview all the necessary witnesses unless they're going to trial. So last year, we tried 59 cases, so 59 of those however many thousand cases we had, I can't even say that they interviewed every necessary witness in those trials. Now, we have a number of trials that either get dismissed or get pled the day of trial, so if I were to presume that they were interviewing every necessary witness, which I can't be 100 percent sure of, you know, that's, like, one percent.

Q. How often do your attorneys depose witnesses?

A. I'm told we depose them more than other offices, but I don't -- I don't think it's more than five percent of our cases.

Q. Is that because attorneys don't have time to depose witnesses?

A. Well, I think it's -- yeah. Part of triage that they don't have time, or by the time -- you know, there's a game that's played, so you talk to the State, and you want them to produce people, and the State says, "Oh, we have these people. We'll produce them." And then you get closer and closer to a trial setting, and then sometimes, they'll say, "Oh, we can't find them. You'll have to do it," and then -- I mean, you have to give them -- you have -- there's a seven-day notice requirement, and if you want paperwork, there's a ten-day notice requirement. You you start pushing up to your trial dates. And again, I mean, it's not as if the attorneys are doing nothing while their -- you know, they're in court or -- they're very busy. These dates sneak up on people all the time, yes. And so then they get to a point where -- I mean, strategically, if the State waits, they can control whether you take a depo or not just by the timing of it and if they can sort of -- and I have attorneys who notice it up, but it also means -- noticing up a depo means you have to serve them, so it means you have to find them. Hopefully, the discovery response is adequate. We get a lot of discovery responses that the -- all these witnesses live at the Jackson County Prosecutor's Office, and -- and then it's -- you have to hope that they'll produce folks. So there's a lot of logistics to even getting a person -- having a depo set and getting a person that takes time and energy and advanced notice and advanced preparation.

Q. How important do you think depositions are to a case, criminal case?

A. I would -- given my druthers, I would have deposed every witness in every trial I ever had, and I would encourage every lawyer to do that if they have that possibility.

Page 67

Q. Why is that?

A. Because if -- there's no better way to impeach someone if they change their statement, and people change their statements all the time.

Q. Do you think there is sufficient money available for depositions if your lawyers were able to take more of them?

A. That's really an upper level call. I mean, I've not been refused a deposition. I've not -- I've not had an attorney refuse a deposition in my experience in management. I -- I don't -- I -- that would be a -- you know, Kathy Leer question. How many depositions can the -- if everybody took them, how many could the system absorb? I have no idea.

Q. Okay. Got it.

How often would you say that your lawyers visit crime scenes?

A. Not -- I wouldn't say often. I mean, I definitely encourage people to go, and certainly, if they're in trial. But again, like I said, we're trying less than one percent of our cases, and I don't -- I don't know that every lawyer -- when I second chair lawyers, I insist on it. I've drug them out to all kinds of places, but they -- I don't think every lawyer goes to visit a crime scene in every trial.

Q. Is that one of the things that you tried to do when you were handling a trial docket?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it difficult to do that on all your cases?

A. On every case, yeah. It was impossible to do on every case. But yes, I -- I definitely -- there's a lot to be learned by going to a crime scene.

Q. To what extent do your lawyers depend on investigators to identify witnesses, for example?

A. Identify them?

Q. Identify -- to -- to find witnesses that are not --

A. Okay.

Q. -- mentioned in the police report.

A. Probably to some -- investigators generally do what is requested. So, you know, if you meet with a client who says, "Here are these witnesses. Find them" -- I mean, I certainly would recommend that investigators talk to the client, because a lot of times, directions are, like, you know, the yellow house down the street from this liquor store or something. But I think -- I -- there are investigators who do, while interviewing a witness, uncover that there are other witnesses or there's someone in the house that they would sort of on their own follow through, but I would say that's a very small number.

Q. So do investigators generally talk to -- interview clients without the lawyer present?

A. I don't know about generally. They certainly can -- you know, no lawyer has ever said, you can't -- and I certainly -- when I was busy would say, "Oh, well" -- you know, an investigator would say, "I went here, this didn't work out." And I'm like, "Well, just go and talk to the client yourself and see what they have to say about that."

Q. Okay. So generally speaking, do attorneys in your office have the time and resources to investigate cases in the way that you think is required?

A. No.

Q. And -- and is that opinion based on your personal experience?

A. My personal -- my personal experience as a lawyer and my personal experience of supervising and reviewing and looking at the work that my own lawyers do.

Q. Okay. Again, without getting into any specifics, are you aware of cases in which the representation of the client by an attorney in your office was -- was hampered by their inability to investigate a case sufficiently?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that happens regularly?

A. Depends what your definition of "regularly" is. I would say -- and if we're just purely talking investigate -- you know, when someone goes to trial, there's -- you know, investigation is an aspect, talking to people, and then there's the prep that comes out of the investigation or getting exhibits that you otherwise wouldn't have. I would say that that happens regularly, that -- that attorneys go to trial not fully prepared.

The investigation aspect of it, I would probably say maybe ten percent, five to ten percent, somewhere in there if I were to give a rough estimate, and that's really just from talking to team leaders to say, like, "Oh, so-and-so hadn't talked to this person." It -- it's more feedback when I have team leaders who are like, I'm second chairing this person in trial, and I'm somewhat alarmed by the -- the lack of level of preparation, both investigation-wise, and sometimes they haven't developed a theory of the case.

Sometimes they haven't -- you know, they don't have a closing written out. They have -- you know, there's -- there's other areas on that as well.

Q. How frequently do attorneys in your office request discovery from the State?

A. Well, we always file a general request at arraignment time, which is what the rules say, and then I have other -- you know, I have other lawyers who will file further requests. I have lawyers who move for sanctions. I have lawyers who, you know, will ask for a bill of particulars, which I think falls somewhat in line with the discovery request, but probably not to the level -- I mean, there's also a lot of informal, do you have this, do you -- can you get this? And they're, oh, yeah, well, that's -- you didn't get that -- I mean, there's a lot of sort of informal talking with the State about what people do and don't have. But the -- the number of motions to compel, I wouldn't say it's a significant number, but there are definitely lawyers who -- some lawyers who do file them.

Q. Okay. I want to talk just a little bit about expert witnesses, so you testified earlier that -- I believe you testified that often, attorneys don't realize they need an expert until late in the case?

A. Right.

Q. How often do you think that occurs? And again, I understand that you can't quantify.

A. Right. Well, it's hard, because usually, you already have to be trial bound. And again, a lot of -- if you knew you needed an expert sooner, more cases might be trial bound. If -- and so this is only the cases that are already trial bound that you'll meet with someone, and you'll talk about -- you'll be looking at the case with them. And I know more than once, I've -- we've continued cases because it's like, well, maybe you need an eyewitnesss ID expert. Maybe -- you know, maybe that's something you should look at.

And with newer attorneys, some of them don't even know that's possible. They're just, I'm going to -- I didn't -- oh, I didn't realize. And then, you know, there's a scramble to find one. Experts are difficult to match up their availability with whatever the care -- Court has already set or getting the Court to set something or continue it to that availability. So I don't know the number we miss because people aren't spotting the issue that it's a possibility. But I've definitely had, in the last year, at least two people that I talked to about, as they -- I'm like, "Oh, tell me about your trial case." And as we're talking about it, "Well, have you considered this?" "Oh." It definitely happens. I can only -- and I don't -- it would be more of -- I guess I'd have to talk to my team leaders about how many times they push people toward experts.

Q. And those requests go through the central office?

A. Right. Well, they -- they get prove -- approved at a preliminary level by myself, and then generally, Ellen Blaugh approves most of the -- I think the experts. But there were certain people, we have a -- our training director has done a lot of eyewitness, so there are certain people that you talk to if you have certain issues or are helpful pointing you towards experts.

Q. Do you have a sense of over the course of a year, how many experts are retained by -- by your office, generally?

A. I key -- I keep a spreadsheet, but it -- it also -- it includes all the experts, so it includes court reporters and interpreters and people that we use all the time.

Q. I see.

Page 74

A. So I don't -- I couldn't tell you, like, specialized experts. I mean, I could go back and look at the spreadsheet and see when entries were made. But also, I get a lot of requests that people don't actually use the expert, because they'll get an offer, and then they'll plead it without ever ac -- actually engaging and using those funds.

Q. Okay.

A. But true experts, not as many as you would think with the number of cases.

Q. And would you say there are instances where an attorney will decide not to pursue an expert because they just don't have the time?

A. I believe that happens, yes.

Q. And would the failure to retain an expert be included in the -- in the sort of list of things you mentioned that hamper representation by your attorneys?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned that you don't have any social workers on staff; correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Are there resources available for attorneys to assist them in -- in locating resources for their clients?

Page 75

A. You mean, like, housing and things like that?

Q. Correct.

A. So some of our investigators end up doing -- you know, they'll have a -- a connection at the Salvation Army, they'll have something like that. Years ago, we -- well, we had a alternative sentencing expert, who I believe is a master's in social work, who I don't -- I don't -- I was -- I didn't supervise -- I wasn't the supervisor at the office at the time. I don't think he was technically on staff. He was supposed to be shared by a region, which -- and you could get him to write reports, you know, to make arguments to the judge, and we have nothing like that any more; which for the attorneys that used them, and again, that was a smaller number of people who were aware -- aware and planned ahead to use that resource, they were very disappointed when, money-wise, he got cut.

Q. Okay. You mentioned interpreters. Are interpreters generally provided by the Court?

A. When you're in court.

Q. When you're not in court, do lawyers have access to interpreters in order to communicate with their clients?

Page 76

A. We hire them, so yes. I mean, they have to request funds, and they have to set up a meeting, and they have to -- but yes. They do have interpreters, provided you can find an interpreter in the -- I mean, we have some languages where we really struggle to even find an interpreter to communicate.

Q. What's the most common foreign language that you encounter?

A. Spanish.

Q. And what are the other, if you can think of them, the other languages that tend to --

A. Well, in sign language, we have client -- we've definitely hired sign language. Vietnamese, we had a client who -- diga (phonetic). So Kansas City has a pretty -- there's a lot of people from a lot of countries. I had a Korean -- for example, I had a Korean client, and the interpreter we found was really bad, and I lucked out in that I had a law student that summer who was born in Korea and spoke Korean fluently and would tell me how horrible the interpreters were. Because there's interpreters, and then there's certified interpreters, none of whom a lot of the -- they don't understand legal terms. There's a lot of -- so you can hire someone and still have them not be very good. I know for trial dates, the Court was plan -- flying in someone from DC and somewhere else so that -- that we had qualified interpreters for those languages, but there's a variety of -- of languages. Spanish, again, is the most prevalent.

Q. Are you aware of any cases where you needed an interpreter, but you weren't able to get one?

A. Well, I think we've always gotten someone to be able to show up. A lot of people have question as to how the interpreter -- whether what they were saying was actually being interpreted or not.

Q. Okay. You said that you -- you can't recall ever having a request for a deposition turned down for money reasons?

A. Not that I recall, no.

Q. Are there other requests that you can recall having been denied for resource reasons?

A. Yes.

Q. What kinds of requests might you get a denial on?

A. So I've been denied on forensic testing because they -- our IT department has gone through different incarcerate -- incarcerations -- different -- different staffings and people with -- so I've had people ask for sort of forensic -- computer forensic stuff or phone forensics, and they've said,

"use in-house people" or things along those lines. But you have to craft your requests very specifically, so I've definitely had people turned down because they didn't craft it correctly, or they couldn't -- and then I've also had people where -- but in -- in general, I -- my feeling is that MSPD tries to get you the resources that they can, but they are going to try to do it in the most economical way possible, so -- you know, there's a list of court reporters, and we're supposed to call the cheapest one first, which can be really -- my -- my lawyers probably -- one of those things that people complain about -- upper management about because it is -- it can be very time-consuming to go through a list of three people, when you kind of know that this court reporter is always available or something along those lines.

Q. And -- and do attorneys in your office receive any guidance about when it's appropriate to make some sort of expense request, given the budgetary constraints?

A. Well, I encourage people to request -- I -- I don't really factor budget into it. I tell people to request -- if you think it's necessary for a case, I'll tell them to request it.

Q. And have you -- have you noticed any change in the -- the -- the rate at which those requests are being approved in -- in recent months?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't think so.

Q. Okay. On average, how frequently would you say your attorneys file suppression motions in their cases?

A. I think they file them pretty regularly on cases that are in the process of going to trial. I don't -- there are people who spot suppression issues that they think are sort of definitive for the case, you know, either suppressed, and you have a case -- you have an issue for trial or you don't.

Q. So when you say they're filed -- often filed in cases that are headed for trial, does that mean that the suppression motions are generally not filed early on in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And do you think that's because lawyers don't realize early in the case that a suppression motion might be appropriate, or are there other reasons?

A. Yeah. I think sometimes it's a -- they just haven't looked at all the discovery and watched all the dash cam. You know, some of it -- I mean, usually, a police report is written in a way that is more positive -- or what the police -- police officer's version of events are. And then to have -- take the time to watch the video and listen to how things are actually said. Because the police officer will just say, "he consented," and then it's like, well, but how was the timing of consent? How did -- you know, sometimes that -- and -- and also sometimes getting air tapes, because that matters too. So those levels of investigation are the details, especially on something like suppression where, is there consent, how did that happen, the time line is very important.

I think attorneys just don't have time to dig into the discovery until they have this pressure of a trial sort of looming on them. I mean, there are judges who set deadlines, as far as suppression motions should be filed by this date, and I -- attorneys will then use that as their deadline if they think they're going that route.

Q. And is -- is the same generally true for other pretrial motions?

A. Yes.

Q. Let me rephrase. Are -- how frequently would you say your attorneys file other pretrial motions aside from suppression motions?

A. I'd say the bulk of them are filed in the month of trial or the month before. I mean, there are some exceptions, but those are exceptions.
Q. And when you were handling your own cases, was the same true for you in terms of the timing of filing?
A. Yes.
Q. Again, without getting into any kind of specifics or asking you to -- not asking you to compromise any attorney-client privilege, can you think of any instances where representation by one of your attorneys was -- was hampered by their inability to file necessary motions, pretrial motions?
A. Yes. Well, that's a common client complaint, I mean, when clients call. Clients have a lot of ideas about what you should file. Some of them are on point; some of them are not. But there's a lot of -- and even sometimes bond motions. Filing motions indicates the client as a tangible sort of evidence that you're -- you're fighting that your -- you are lawyering for that client. And if the client is not seeing any of that for months and months, it certainly affects the relationship.
Q. And to the extent that your lawyers are not filing necessary pretrial motions, would you say that that's because they don't have the time or resources to make that happen?

A. Yes.
Q. You said that your office took 59 cases to trial last year?
A. Last -- in '16. I think we're -- we're down -- I have two people in trial. I think we're at around 49, 48, something, this year, and that's adult -- I mean, that doesn't include our juvenile trial, which is a bench trial.
Q. Uh-huh.
A. But -- and that's only jury trials. We don't do a lot of bench trials. But 59 in 2016, correct.
Q. And are those mostly A, B felonies?
A. Mostly, but we certainly have tried some C and D, and actually, we get the best results out of C and D felonies, but we don't try very many of them.
Q. How often to you go to trial on misdemeanors?
A. I don't know -- I don't know if we tried a misdemeanor case this year or last year. We had a felony that became a misdemeanor, but I don't -- a standalone misdemeanor -- well, we -- yeah, we had a

Page 83

DUI, so maybe one.
Q. Okay. And how about felony sex offenses? How often do those go to trial?
A. More frequently.
Q. Okay. And those are A, B felonies; right?
A. Usually, yeah. I mean, we do have some, you know, child pornography -- there's some stuff that are, but for the most part, they are serious, or in Missouri, they're unclassified, which is --
Q. Okay. To your knowledge, has an attorney in your office ever waived an opening or closing argument?
A. I'm not aware of anyone who has waived a closing argument. I do believe I've had attorneys waive opening argument before. They're supposed to let me know if they're doing that, because I discourage that, but I think there are attorneys who have done that, yes.
Q. Is that something that you ever did when you -- in your -- in your trial practice days?
A. Never. I've never waived an opening or a closing.
Q. So in your opinion, do you believe that the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to prepare adequately for trial?

Page 84

A. No.
Q. Do you believe that they have adequate resources and time to prepare for sentencings?
A. No.
Q. What kind of work might go into preparing for a sentencing in an ideal case?
A. An ideal case? Well, I mean, there are sentencing experts. I think bringing in an sentencing expert would be ideal. I mean, I would do that every time if the resources were available and -- and you could do that. I think developing a sentencing memorandum. I know a lot of federal public defenders will do video, which we -- I don't -- I don't have a single lawyer who has ever done that. But also, you know, contacting witnesses that can talk about your client's background, that can bring a different perspective to the jury, getting to them ahead of time, subpoenaing them, having time to really develop what they would actually say.
Q. And how much of that work tends to actually happen on a -- among your -- your lawyers?
A. Very little.
Q. And would you say that there have been instances where an attorney's representation at sentencing was adversely affected by their inability to -- to prepare for the sentencing adequately?

A. Yes.
Q. And you believe that some of your clients could have gotten better outcomes had their attorneys been able to prepare?
A. Yeah. Obviously, that's -- that's a prediction, but I think especially when we have jury sentencing, and we have the ability to -- I think you have a lot of opportunity -- a lot of judges kind of will decide this case deserves this, or that deserves that. But when you have jury sentencing, I think those witnesses really matter.
Q. You talked a little bit earlier about guilty pleas or offers for plea deals. How much time would you say your lawyers spend working on a case before advising a client about whether or not to plead guilty?
A. Well, that would vary. But I can tell you, the State e-mails us the offers before prelim, probably sometimes before our attorneys have met with clients. At the prelim docket, the judge will ask on the record what the offer is, so I assume most attorneys are conveying a plea offer their initial meeting. One, because it's there, and they feel some legal obligation. And two, if they don't, and the judge springs it on your client for the first time in court, your client is going to think you withheld something. So whether they even -- I mean, they're obligated to convey plea offers, but -- especially in Jackson County, the -- what is the offer is very central to what our Courts expect.

Q. And -- and do the prosecutors e-mail you those orders in all types of cases, or are we talking just felonies?
A. I would say all types -- I mean, they just go through the docket sheet, and they give you a list. Now, some serious case, they'll write "no offer," or something like that. But I mean, they -- they all get personally e-mailed to me, which I then send out to the office. But it's -- it generally -- most types of cases. Some serious -- at a prelim docket, you're probably not going to get a sex case offer, you're probably not going to get a murder offer, things like that. But you're going to get -- the felonies might -- and most misdemeanors, I would -- yeah.
Q. And do you -- is it your understanding that when those offers are conveyed by your lawyers of -- that they are explaining to clients that they have not had a chance to investigate the case up to that point?
A. I would hope that they're doing that, yes.

Q. Are -- are they instructed to do that, as far as you know?
A. I don't -- I don't know about instructed, but I -- I certainly, you know, don't encourage pressuring your client to plead on a case you've done no work on.
Q. Okay.
A. And I -- I -- I have -- I have what's called a first-time felon policy for -- that attorneys, before they plead someone to a felony who is not already a felon, they have to actually meet with me and talk to me about what work they've done. And the Courts hate it, and the judges complain about me micromanaging and the prosecutors, everybody hates it. Although, for me, I like it. As a manager, I like to see what -- what people are doing and how they're evaluating cases. But I also think becoming a felon is a life-changing event, and it's pretty important. In an ideal world, I'd meet with every lawyer before they plead anyone to any felony to have an idea of what they were doing on cases. I personally don't have time to do that.
Q. Is that --
A. So --
Q. Sorry. Go ahead.

Page 88

A. Go ahead. No. That's fine.
Q. Once that initial plea offer is made by the prosecutor's office, do your lawyers tend -- tend to take steps to negotiate plea deals?
A. I don't think they negotiate before having a conversation with the client, but I think negotiation some -- is, at times, done at that level, yes, or that stage.
Q. So assuming they've spoken to the client, there may be some plea negotiation that happens prior to any investigation in the case?
A. Yes. I think that happens a fair amount. I mean, it was one of the reasons I instituted the policy, is that I felt a lot of people were pleading people early on without any sense of -- you know, we have police officers get disciplined all the time. We have witnesses that dis -- without any sense of whether the State could actually make their case.
Q. I'm going to hand you a document that I'm finally marking as Exhibit 2.
(Petsch Exhibit 2 was marked for identification.)
Q. Do you recognize that document?
A. Yes.
Q. What is it?

Page 89

A. Well, it's an e-mail -- it's put, again, in Missouri -- or the Kansas City policies and procedures database. E-mail from Leon Munday, who, at the time, was my -- well, let me look at the date. Yes. At the time was my assistant district defender to me, which then one of us posted on the database.

Q. And this is an e-mail about the United States Superior Court decision in Missouri versus Frye?

A. That's correct.

Q. And what was Mr. Munday's ultimate takeaway regarding your office's obligations under Frye?

A. I'm sorry. I'm going to -- I need to read it.

Q. No. Please.

A. Well, he says pretty clearly that he thinks, under Frye, we have the duty to communicate the offers to our clients and to protect the attorney-client privilege unless waived.

Q. Do you recall having any further communications with Mr. Munday about this?

A. Well, it -- when Frye came out, there was a lot of discussion, because the -- the prosecutor started doing Frye hearings, which is having -- reading the offer into the record. And I -- I think they were under the impression we weren't conveying offers. I -- I -- I'm not under that impression. Every -- I'm not under the impression that lawyers in my office don't convey offers. But there were, you know, judges who would try to then talk to your client, "Do you understand that's the offer?" Or I'd hear judges say, "Oh, well, your client reacted like they'd never heard it," and things like that. So I know for us, we didn't --

We have judges who try and make records all the time. They want your client to ask -- you know, if they're in trial, and your client doesn't testify, they want your client to answer affirmatively about, do they understand their rights to -- you know, the right to remain silent and their right to -- that they're waiving their right to testify, and sort of fight this fight. The judges spend a lot of time trying to make records where our client are supposed to speak and respond to them, and it's awkward, because if your client loses at trial, they're going to be sentenced by this judge, and then they look like they aren't agreeable, and they look like they're negative, and the judge is really imposing on their rights and really trying to litigate the post-litigation stuff during their trial. And Frye is similar in that respect, that judges want to be sure that people know what their offers are.

In Jackson County, we struggle a lot. The judges are very, very concerned with moving cases and people pleading, and the feeling that the client knows their offer. And I don't think it's done out of an interest that a client might miss an offer, because we usually get offers back even the day of trial if we want them. I think it's done out of a desire for efficiency and fewer cases to move through the courts.

So I think in Leon's discussion of this, it's -- you know, went to want to protect our clients from records being made and them being encouraged to speak on the record.

Q. And was this information or guidance disseminated to the -- all the attorneys on staff?

A. I assume it was. In general, when we add something to the policies and procedures database, we send it around and say, "This has been added."

It's a big database, and quite honestly, there's some -- there's some things that are in there that are antiquated that, because I'm too busy, I haven't -- I've cleaned out some things, but there are other things that -- it's, you know, eighth on my list of things that I'd like to update.

But this isn't -- this is something that would have been sent out to everybody and accessible. Everyone has the ability to look and read this any time they want.

Q. Okay. And was any additional training conducted related to this as far as you know?

A. Well, I -- I do recall discussing Frye at staff meetings, especially when it came out. We have a weekly staff meeting where we kind of discuss what's going on. And when they started doing Frye hearings all the time everywhere in every case, so there was a lot of discussion about Frye popping up and prosecutors doing that.

Q. And are Frye hearings not happening as much now?

A. I think they are. Obviously, when the law came in -- you know, but they'll do a Frye hearing right before trial. They'll do it -- it was happening in basically every case when the law went into effect, so it seemed like more because the ones that were going on weren't current. I think -- I think they happen. Now, obviously, if there are negotiations going on, the prosecutor's is presuming you've -- I don't know, that they'd have a Frye hearing, but I don't -- I know they still happen.

Page 93

Q. Okay.
A. But I can't tell you with a great frequency. It's just not brought up. And maybe it it's just not brought up because it's commonplace.
Q. So in your opinion, did the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to negotiate plea deals for your clients with all of the necessary information?
A. Well, I think there's a -- when people get pled early, I think there's a lot of -- there's a lot of -- you don't get video, you don't get dash cam. There's a lot of things that you just don't get. So are there plea deals that happen without all discovery? Absolutely.
Q. Okay. Do you think there have been situations where a client could have gotten a better plea deal had the lawyer had the time to investigate the case first?
A. Absolutely, yeah.
Q. What steps do the attorneys in your office do to evaluate the immigration consequences for clients?
A. So we contract with an immigration lawyer, and he's sort of a flat fee to consult, and then if he's going to do more, it's a different fee. So the attorneys have to request funds in order to contract, so I -- I could look -- I mean, I have a spreadsheet. I could count that number of the times we've used that person in the last year. I don't know off the top of my head. There is a means -- and I've had that immigration attorney come to speak at one of our first Friday CLEs, mostly just sort of terrify my lawyers about if -- if you don't call him, even pleas that seem like they wouldn't effect your immigration consequences really can. It's certainly encouraged, and the resource is there.

Q. Have the lawyers in your office received any additional training on immigration consequences?
A. Well, aside from having the immigration attorney come and speak to us, I know there's -- there have been tracks at statewide training that talked about that. I don't know that I've specifically had a sit-down where I've said, so you have a client with -- you know, who isn't is a citizen where -- how does that go, aside from having that attorney come in.
Q. So do you think that, in your opinion, the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to adequately advise clients on immigration consequences?
A. I would say -- I'm sort of split there. I think -- I think there are a number of attorneys who are. I think there are some who aren't, and probably time and overload feeds into that.

MS. SHIPMA: Could we go off the record for just a second?
MR. WILLIAMSON: Sure.
VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 11:21 a.m.
(A brief recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 11:25 a.m.
Q. (By Mr. Williamson) So just one last question on the -- on immigration consequences.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. Are you aware of any cases where, because of the attorney's inability to advise their client about the immigration consequences, that the case resulted in a -- in an adverse consequence for the client with respect to their immigration status?
A. I'm not aware of a case that -- I probably wouldn't -- I mean, once the client is gone, if they get -- or they get picked up by ICE, we generally -- I wouldn't probably know, but I'm not aware of any.
Q. Okay. Are retainers generally placed on your clients -- immigration retainers placed on your clients when they're in custody?
A. Yes.

Page 96

Q. Is -- is ICE ever in touch with your office for any reason?
A. No. No, I -- I'm not aware of anyone who has ever talked to an ICE person.
Q. Do indigent defendants in your district ever undergo psychiatric evaluations?
A. Yes.
Q. Does that generally happen after your office has been appointed to the case?
A. Generally. I mean, there are Courts that order evaluations just based on behaviors they see the first time they see them in court. But generally, the bulk of evaluations are done when we're on the case.
Q. Do you -- do you or your lawyers ever request those evaluations?
A. Yes, they do. I mean, we do a number of private evaluations, and honestly, it's my preferred method. I know it's expensive and -- but, you know, clients can say a lot of things, and if it's a court-ordered mental evaluation, it's not -- there's nothing confidential about anything they're saying. So we'd had a rule for a while that we only did private mentals. That has loosened up, I think because of costs. That's not my role, so I -- I can't speak to why that loosened up. So some are done.

And Jackson County also has sort of an out-of-custody diversion, mental health diversion, so -- and they insist if your client is going to enter into that, then they have to do a court-ordered eval.

The State also has the option of not accepting our private eval, and they can get a second opinion through the Court as well.

So we do request some, and then we do get a number of our clients also evaluated at our -- at our cost.

Q. If -- if a psych evaluation is ordered by the Court prior to your office being appointed, would -- and I -- let me rephrase that.

In a case where you are actually appointed to -- appointed to represent the person, and the Court -- but the Court orders an evaluation, let's say at the initial appearance --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- what role, if any, would your lawyers play in that process in -- in that evaluation process? Would -- would your lawyer be at the file -- at the competence -- competency hearing that followed the evaluation?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

Page 98

A. They would.

Q. Okay. Would they be involved in any other capacity with the evaluation process?

A. Generally not. I mean, if we're doing a private evaluation, sometimes, you know, we set that up, we have a client come -- if they're out of custody, come to the officer. And if we want a private person to go to the jail, we have to write a letter and get clearance for that person to go to the jail. Most of the mental health folks don't want anyone else in the room, so you're not present for the evaluation. And -- and I've -- I've had lawyers try and get -- even if the Court has ordered one, our evaluations are so backed up in Jackson County, that you could likely get a private one done. They use -- they're supposed to get done in 30 days, but then they almost always ask for extensions, so it usually takes more like the 90 days for someone to get a mental health evaluation. And sometimes they'll rush people who the jail have said are -- you know, they think they're actively a danger to themselves or others, something along those limes, but sometimes they'll intervene that way.

And obviously, if it's a private mental, the results are only known to us, so if we want to --

we have the option of sharing that or not sharing that. If we want to share it or if someone comes back incompetent, you know, we'd file a motion with the Court to -- to have them found incompetent.

Q. Do attorneys in your office attend lineups that include the client?

A. I've never known anyone who did. And generally, I don't think -- generally, lineups are done before we'd get the case, so I don't -- we do have clients who come in as suspects who, I guess there's that potential. They'll say, "The police want to talk to me." In general, we tell them -- our advice is not to talk to the police, so I've never known anyone who has been at a lineup.

Q. Okay. The lineups are not videotaped, are they?

A. I don't -- we very rarely get a live lineup. There's a lot of pictures --

Q. Photos?

A. -- and there's a lot of -- here are two pictures. And there's a lot of driving by the guy as he sits in the cop car and having the witness identify him that way. I actually don't even remember the last lineup -- I don't recall anyone ever having a live lineup.

Q. Do you -- do your lawyers ever conduct Wade hearings related to these on-the-scene identifications?

A. We don't call it a Wade hearing, but yeah, I mean, they do a motion to suppress the identification and -- and have a hearing along those lines, so -- and that's what we would call it. I assume that's along the lines of what you're --

Q. Correct.

A. -- getting at.

Q. When a client -- and I apologize for jumping around here. I'm trying to make sure we get through everything but --

A. That's fine.

Q. When a presentence investigation report is created for --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- a client, does the public defender play any role in that process?

A. Generally, no. I mean, we've had it where we've had clients insist we there. They call it a sentencing assessment report. The person from probation and parole who generally goes and interviews a client, generally, they don't want us there. But I have had attorneys who were able to be there through that questioning process. The bulk of them, no.

Q. It's your understanding though that the -- the clients do not have a right to have their attorney there for these interviews?
A. That's a good question. I don't -- I don't know that I've -- sadly, I don't think I've ever thought about. I -- I mean, I think that's what -- when the lawyers are there for the sentencing and assessment report, I think that's what we're advocating, is that they do have a right. I don't know that -- I don't -- honestly, I don't know legally where -- where that stands.
Q. Do you recall ever attending any of those interviews in any of your own cases?
A. No.
Q. Okay. If you have a client who pleads guilty, but then decides that they want to withdraw their plea, what steps do the attorneys -- or are the attorneys in your office directed to -- to take in that instance?
A. Well, I don't know that there's a firm direction one way -- I mean, I think you meet with the client, you talk to them about it, and if -- in general, I think most attorneys try to file a motion to withdraw if -- if that's what the client wants. We have a lot of Courts who don't grant it, so --

Q. All right. When your cases do go to trial, is it your understanding that your lawyers will always engage in voir dire?
A. Yes.
Q. Are you aware of any situations in which they have not?
A. No.
Q. Okay.
A. I mean, I'm aware of situations where it wasn't the most -- the best or most effective voir dire, but I've never known an attorney to not ask any questions -- and I assume you're saying ask any questions during voir dire?
Q. Correct.
So at what point does representation by the trial office end officially?
A. Well, that, of course, depends on who you ask. So as far as after a trial, if you win, you win. If you -- if you lose at trial, we're expected to do motion for new trial. In Jackson County, you do motion for new trial, you have sentencing, and we're expected to file the notice of appeal.
Q. Okay.
A. And then after notice of appeal is filed, then appellate would resume those duties. After plea, you know, there's some -- we have the Courts right now telling us if we didn't move to withdraw after a plea, that we're on the civil probation violation, which I think is crazy, but some of the Courts are saying that. But we would say it's concluded after the plea.

Now, I would say to my lawyers, if there's some natural -- you know, you have a client call -- like, for example, we had a client who pled, and the judge put him on probation to accompanies, and says, we don't take that type of felony, we can't supervise him, I would say that -- you know, I would expect us to represent that person or file something for them because I think that's a continuation of the representation of the plea. And so there's some -- a little maybe wiggle room in there. But for the most part, after the plea is concluded, we're done.
Q. And you mentioned that your office would file -- or the lawyer from your office would file the notice of appeal; correct?
A. Yes.
Q. So does that mean that that lawyer is responsible for communicating to the defendant that they have a right to appeal the decision?
A. Yes. And we pretty routinely file it. And in -- what I always tell the client is that you can talk to the appellate attorney, and if you want to dismiss it, then you can always dismiss it. I can't not -- I can't unfile the -- you know, there's time lines in place for that. So I think maybe two cases, we haven't filed them, and it was because of specific -- you know, the State agreed to not -- to dismiss a case, so the client wasn't on the hook for that any more. There was -- it was for specific reasons that were discussed with the client. Otherwise, we always file it.

Q. Okay.
A. In adult cases. Now, juvenile cases are different.
Q. Excellent segue. I was going to ask you to tell me a bit about how you handle juvenile cases. So do you have attorneys in your office who specialize in juvenile cases?
A. Nope.
Q. Are there trainings that are provided for staff on how to litigate a juvenile delinquency case?
A. So there's statewide training. There's a juvenile statewide training every year, but I probably have one lawyer who goes to it a year. There is -- I've had -- I usually have specific -- so my training team leader right now is also my juvenile coordinator, so he's responsible for -- you know, paperwork is sent to him. He's responsible for going to juvenile court and second chairing juvenile trials, things like that, and he does some more informal training.

I've had -- I think at one of our Friday CLEs, I had the juvenile coordinator, who is woman who is not a juvenile coordinator anymore, give a talk on handling maybe certification, things along those lines. So I haven't done a lot of formal training.

And honestly, I think I've handed two juvenile cases in my life. It's an area that I'm not an expert in. We had a separate office for juvenile when I -- when I was a trial attorney most of the time. I don't remember what year they merged, but it was not that -- it was only a couple years before I became district defender, and I've never -- you know, I think I had maybe two juvenile case, so I would say my level of expertise in that area is very low.

Q. Are -- are juvenile cases assigned to your office in the same way that adult cases are assigned?

A. Yeah. Well, they send -- yes.

Q. Okay. And is it your office that makes the indigency determination on juveniles?

A. Yes.

Page 106

Q. How many juvenile cases, by the way, would you say your office handles in the course of a -- a year --

A. About 100.

Q. -- of that 5,000?

A. About 100.

Q. About 100. Okay.

A. A pretty low, because I know when -- there was a discussion, should we specialize or not? And given what our caseloads are, I -- I didn't have -- I remember looking at it and saying, I can't justify putting two people solely in juvenile because their caseloads would be so much lower than everyone else's, and one person would never have coverage. It would be a mess. So that number, I do know, because I -- I sort of debated, how do I deal with juvenile.

Q. And when you make a -- an indigency determination for a juvenile, what's the basis for that determination? In other words, are you looking at parent/guardian income? What things are you factoring in?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. That is -- I mean, we have a sheet on it; although, there is -- you know, if the parent or guardian is an alleged victim, that -- and truth be told, anyone we deny, the Court pretty much always appoints us on anyway regardless of what our income determination is.

Q. If there's a conflict in a juvenile case, would it be handled in the same way that your other conflicts are handled?

A. Well, historically, yes. Although, recently, no -- or well, historically, no; recently, yes. So it used to be that in juvenile court, there's a lot of firms that, it's kind of their sole pro bono hours or -- so they kind of staff different things in juvenile court for pro bono hours for the firm, so it used to be if we had a conflict, they would assign it to someone at the firm. Recently though, they've started telling us that they want us to assign them, or we want -- they want us to conflict it.

Q. Do you know why that changed as occurred?

A. I -- that, I don't know. The first time Judge Byrne did it -- or actually, the second time he did it, I went and met with him, and he just said, "Well, I think this is better with the public defender." Although, right now, our conflict cases aren't going to public defenders. They're going private counsel. So I've not spoken to him. Given the climate of all the appointments right now, it's -- the judiciary is fairly hostile, so I don't -- I don't know that having a conversation with him would matter. Although, he may be saying now, "I want the public defender to absorb the cost of conflicts in juvenile."

Q. Okay. Do you have a sense of what attorneys do -- what kind of work attorneys tend to do to prepare for certification proceedings?

A. I -- I mean, I get a sense that they'll look into some background information, arguments along those lines. When had we had a separate juvenile office, they had a social worker, one that was a much -- you know, the ratio was better, and they had a social worker who could prepare reports for the Court. I think I've had maybe one lawyer do that on a certification; hire someone to write a report. We do have hearings, and you know, they follow the law, and they -- they point out why, you know, a certain client shouldn't be certified, but they don't do the legwork that we used to do when there was a separate juvenile office.

Q. And how long ago was that, that the juvenile office closed?

A. I feel like it was '09, '10. I mean, it -- it's -- it was certainly -- I became district defender in '11, and it's certainly been closed for some years. I don't remember.

Q. And I'm -- I'm sorry. Do you have a sense of why that decision was made?

A. My understanding was all money.

Q. Okay. I know you said you -- you've only handled a couple of juvenile cases in your career. Do you -- in your opinion, is representing a juvenile in a delinquency case a -- does it require specialized knowledge in -- in juvenile court?

A. Yes. I would -- I think ideally. I know in the cases I got, I found extremely frustrating. I didn't know the language. I didn't know -- I didn't know the outcomes, I didn't know available outcomes, I didn't know alternatives. I found it extremely frustrating, and I felt very inept.

Q. Have you had any complaints from any of your lawyers on your staff now about difficulty representing clients in juvenile court?

A. I've had complaints. Largely, they've circulated -- you know, a juvenile trial is a bench trial, and it moves in about six weeks, so most of the complaints come with, I have to take these cases, it interrupts my schedule that I already have, I -- you know, I -- I haven't had anyone talk about the feeling of lack of resources that I did; although, they probably aren't aware. I mean, I saw that they had resources, and then I saw that I was -- I didn't. So some of it is just a lack of awareness of -- sometimes you don't know what you don't know.

Q. In your experience or based on your observations, how do attorneys in your office prepare for detention hearings?

A. Well, usually, they don't get a list of who's on the detention hearing until the day before, and then I think they try -- you know, I think they meet with the clients the same day. Sometimes the day they get the -- the list of who's on it and who's our client, and then they make what arguments they can make. There's -- I don't -- there's not a lot of prep. I don't think witnesses are called, generally.

Q. And without the services of a social worker, what -- what resources are available to the attorneys to identify alternatives to detention for their clients?

A. Almost none. Their own legwork.

Q. Are you aware of how often the attorneys in your office file review -- or detention review motions?

A. I don't know anyone who ever has.

Page 111

Q. Are there separate -- or I guess specific diversion options available for juveniles?

A. Yes.

Q. And are there proceedings that occur where a judge is trying to determine whether those alternatives are available, or does -- or appropriate, or does that happen outside of the -- the courtroom?

A. I think generally, they put them into diversion before. Generally, our clients -- occasionally, we get a juvenile put into diversion, but for the most part, I think they try and earmark and select those folks before they were involved, is my understanding.

Q. And once a juvenile is in a diversion program, are they still being represented at that point?

A. No.

Q. So when they -- when a juvenile in a diversion program goes before the Court for a review, would one of your lawyers be present for that hearing?

A. No. I don't know the -- the diversion at juvenile court is fairly new, and actually, when they were forming it, it was when Judge Delmuro was there, so it was probably five or six years ago, and she actually asked the public defender to be involved, and

I didn't have resources to devote to doing that. So I don't know if they have somebody from a firm that helps run that. I -- I'm inclined to think they do, and whether the people -- the pro bono people from the firms represent the clients, that, I don't know.

Q. Okay. We talked generally earlier about the use of expert witnesses.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. How frequently would you say the attorneys in your office work with experts in juvenile cases?

A. Not very often. I mean, we've -- we've hired specific experts for mental evaluations on some of our juvenile clients, and I feel like I had at least one attorney hire someone for -- for certification. But aside from that, not very often. Like, I don't think we've ever had an eyewitness ID expert or something like that.

Q. Okay. Or even an expert on what it means to be a juvenile?

A. Well, I do -- in the certification, I do think she hired someone who talked about adolescent brain development --

Q. Right.

A. -- and that sort of the thing, but I -- I think that's happened -- well, maybe it's happened twice, but I can only think of one time.

Q. Okay. Generally speaking, in your opinion, can the attorneys in your office adequately represent all of the clients on their docket?
A. No.
Q. And what is the basis for your opinion?
A. Well, my own personal experience, my observation -- observation of my lawyers, when I talk to them about cases, when I've second chaired them in trial, when I've talked to their supervisors, as well as just the sheer number. It's -- there aren't enough hours in the day.
Q. And that's true no matter how experienced the lawyer may be?
A. Correct.
Q. All right. So you talked earlier about a lawyer in your office being disciplined?
A. Well, a lawyer in the appellate office.
Q. Appellate?
A. So not a Kansas City lawyer, yes.
Q. And -- and this is Mr. Hinkebein?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So -- well, first, can you just say a word about your understanding of the -- the decision in the Hinkebein case?

A. Well, I know that his -- his ethical violations generally fell under Rule 4, the communication diligence. My understanding from reading the decision was, you know, that he missed deadlines, that he was not communicating with his clients in a timely manner, so diligence, competence, communication, things along those lines. And my understanding is -- I mean, every -- everyone -- every public defender in Missouri, I'm fairly certain, has either red or listened to the comments made by Judge Fisher saying that, you know, why didn't -- one of the things he said is, I mean, I understand he had health problems. I don't know anything about his health problems. But that he also said, I have this big caseload, and it's tough to stay on top of everything, and you know, he said, tell your supervisor you can't take any more cases or quit. I mean, the bottom line, you know, that's what -- what my lawyers repeat is, you know, tell your supervisors you can't take more cases or quit. Or be open to having your law license compromised.
Q. So I'm going to ask you a little bit more about that. But -- so prior to the Hinkebein decision, were attorneys in your office permitted to refuse cases if they thought it was appropriate?

A. No one really tried. I mean, it -- you were conditioned to such that this is what it is, so no one ever -- I certainly had plenty of lawyers telling me --
Q. Take your time.
A. Telling me they were overwhelmed. But I don't think -- those of us who've done it a while, I mean, you're always overwhelmed, so I don't think anyone ever put it in context of, I'm ethically putting myself in jeopardy, I'm putting my clients in jeopardy. But I -- I mean, I probably can't count the number of people who have cried in my office. I've had people threaten self-harm. I've had people need to leave immediately to take mental health breaks. It's -- it's a horrible thing to watch.
Q. Did anyone in your office just resign as a result of this?
A. Has anyone resigned as a result of Hinkebein?
Q. As far as you know?
A. No. Not yet. No one has resigned as of yet, but I -- I mean, within days of the decision, I got multiple e-mails saying they weren't going to take -- that they ethically -- you know, they're -- they're saying, "Well, Judge Fisher says, tell your supervisor, no, and I'm -- I'm going to tell you no." And ultimately, every lawyer got there.

Q. Do you have a sense of what the reaction was of -- from the local Bar outside of the public defender's office?
A. I don't. I don't have much of a reaction. I mean, I think -- I -- it's hard -- you know, we bring up caseload, we don't bring up caseload, everybody is sort of like, public defender is overworked, yeah, yeah, yeah. I don't think -- but it sort of dies down after a while, and I -- I don't know if people assume it got better or things resolved. But the -- I've -- I worked there 20 years in January, and the caseload has always been its own sort of crazy pressure, and it's always been relentless, and it's always -- it's always been one of those things that when people leave, sometimes it's this or that, but they -- you know, often when they're out, they talk about how it's so nice. I don't feel like I have to be 100 places. I don't feel like I dropped a bunch of balls, and just a weird -- you know, like, their own version of post-traumatic stress.
Q. How did the central office respond to -- to this -- to the decision?
A. I mean, I think they made everyone aware of it because -- and I know Michael sent out a memo, just talking -- I mean, I think -- well, I mean, I think, one, people were upset that one of their own was facing a lifetime suspension. That's frustrating. And it appeared that the Courts were fairly indifferent. You know, like, knowing budget-wise how much we struggled, and the -- I guess we all assume the Courts know how much we struggled that, you know, we didn't get funding or we did, and the governor withheld it, and that a lot of those issues weren't of our own doing or choosing. It wasn't for want of asking or wanting.

I don't know if I answered your question. I'm sorry.

Q. No. That's helpful.

Would you say that the -- well, did -- did the central office provide any specific guidance about how to move forward as -- you know, either as individual attorneys or as district offices to handle this?

A. Well, they certainly said you -- I don't think there he was a specific, you should do this; you should file this. As we requested things, you know, we certainly -- we said that -- they said that we'd be supported -- supported and that, you know, if we wanted to make assertions based on our attorneys -- I.

Mean, honestly, I didn't have a choice. My lawyers were -- were very -- and understandably so. Very adamant that they weren't taking -- I mean, I have people -- you know, they said, if you assign me a case, I'm filing a Bar complaint against you. There -- it wasn't -- for me, there wasn't wiggle room. My attorneys were like, no, I'm not -- I'm not doing that, and I don't think you can make me. So I know for me, when I asserted my office being at a point where we couldn't ethically take more cases, it's because I met with every single lawyer, and they had all been very clear that they were there. Some more adamant than others, but a number of them just -- we don't have to do this. You know, the -- the Supreme Court says I have the same ethical duties as any other lawyer, and I should not have to have this caseload.

Q. We'll talk shortly about the specific steps that your office took. But in your experience, what -- what has been the response from -- from the Courts, generally, in -- in your district?

A. They -- they don't believe it's real. They -- I mean, I've had to -- e-mail exchange with Judge Torrence where he's basically said it's a bunch of dicta, and you are either overreacting or you're pulling a stunt. They are condescending. And my lawyers will go to court, and they'll say things like, "Oh, are you going to work today?" Or "Oh, how are you feeling?" It's been largely -- it's been very disappointing. I would say that, that we really -- you know, you practice in front of these judges for a long time, and they tell you what a good job you're doing, and they are -- there's a sense that you have a camaraderie with you, and it's been no -- my understanding -- like, I talked to someone with Missouri Lawyers Weekly, and you know, report it. She'll go to the court and bank meetings, and they've joked about how we're the black knight, and they've cut her arms and legs off and --

Q. Now, you mentioned that you have been in touch with the Court --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- in your district. Are you aware of other district officers communicating with the Courts in their districts?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you been in communications with other district offices about how to respond to this?

A. Yes. Well, shortly after Hinkebein came out, we had our yearly management conference, so there were a lot of district defenders there, and it was a large part of the discussion about how people were dealing with it. And a multiple -- I mean, asserting this and staying on top of it is a full-time job on top of your full-time job, so -- and we've -- we've made efforts to get caseload relief before through the years, and it -- I mean, it's -- it's exhausting. It it's -- you have all this animosity. You work a ton of hours to litigate all this stuff on top of all the work you're supposed to be doing. So I'm somewhat understanding of district defenders who are like, oh, yeah, my attorneys have 300 case, but they think that's fine. And in my head, I'm like, that's insane. My attorneys have 100 cases, and I think that's insane. So there's -- there is a sort of a wide variety of responses. So I have talked to other district defenders, and I've -- I've talked with -- well, Anthony in Liberty. I've talked with Jeff Martin in Harrisonville.

Justin Carver, because Justin Carver is the only one has had a Chapter 600 hearing; mostly to say, like, "How did your hearing go? What did it entail?" Oh, just questions about, "What evidence did you put on?" Because all of the Chapter 600 hearings under Chapter 600.063 had never done -- been done before, so it was sort of uncharted territories. And my -- my judges aren't interested in arguments under Rule 4. They really want everything to be litigated -- well, they say they want everything to be litigated under Chapter 600.063. I've filed two motions, both of which have been denied, so how serious they are about that -- and I can tell you, Jeff City filed the exact same motion. I filed mine first, he filed his. His -- his judge granted part and denied part, and had a hearing. My judge denied it.

Q. Now, the Chapter 600 -- let me back up. You -- you're aware of the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in Waters; correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And you were employed with the MSPD at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. So that -- you were district defender at the time?

A. I think it was 2012. Is that -- yeah. I was the district defender at the time.

Q. Was it your -- what was your understanding of that decision when it came out as it relates to what we're talking about right now and what your options were as -- as district defender in refusing cases?

A. I don't -- back in 2012, we weren't -- one, we were at a very low cycle for filings. So we actually -- our office wasn't refusing cases at the time because we weren't numbers-wise there, or we didn't feel we were numbers-wise there. So I -- I was less involved in how Waters went just because my office wasn't -- hadn't been certified. A number of things -- you know, under -- back then, there were certifying offices, and you had to be a percentage overloaded on a certain scale, so -- and we would be over two months and under a month, and you had to be there for three consecutive months, so while that was going on, we hadn't met that. But there was clearly a backing off of talking about caseload and talking about the ethics of caseload, or that's what it felt like.

Q. A backing off, meaning --

A. Well, we were no longer going through -- we weren't certifying offices. I mean, my understanding was that the 063 was created sort of as a response to offices being certified and efforts to stop that, and it seemed to effectively do that.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Can we go off the record for just one minute?

VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 12:08 p.m.

(A brief recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 12:08 p.m.

(Petsch Exhibit 3 was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) I'm going to hand you a document I'm marking Exhibit 3 for identification. Do you recognize that letter?

A. I don't.

Q. Can you take a -- a moment and just review it for me?

Who is the author of that letter?

A. It looks like Bethany Turner.

Q. Do you know Ms. Turner?

A. I mean, I know of her, but I don't know her.

Q. Okay. And do you, having reviewed the -- the letter, do you agree with the sentiments in the letter?

A. Yes.

Q. And are you aware of whether similar letters have been sent by other district defenders to the judges in their districts?

A. I'm aware a number have, yes. It's similar to the Boone County letter, which I had read before, so yes, I'm aware that other letters have been sent that are similar.

(Petsch Exhibit 4 was marked for identification.)

Q. I'm going to hand you what's been marked as Exhibit 4 for identification. Do you recognize that?

A. No. I don't believe I've seen the letter, this particular letter.

Q. Is it similar to the letter that you were just reviewing?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is the author of this letter?

A. Pamela Musgrave.

Q. Okay. And Ms. Musgrave is a district defender in Area 39?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you agree with the sentiments in this letter as well?

A. Yes. I mean, obviously, I don't work in Area 39, so I can't is specifically talk to -- but I don't know a single office that doesn't have Rule 4 issues, so --

(Petsch Exhibit 5 was marked for identification.)

Page 125

Q. I'm handing you what's been marked Exhibit 5 for identification. What is that document?
A. It is -- it looks like a template for suggestions in support of writ of prohibition and/or mandamus.
Q. Who created this document, as far as you know?
A. I'm assuming Greg Mermelstein did, but I don't know for sure.
Q. And why do you assume that Greg Mermelstein created it?
A. It just looks like Greg's writing, and he has a number of motions. I think this one -- that are available for other lawyers to look at on the website.
Q. And was that -- as far as you know, was that template placed on -- is it -- is it in a database for MSPD?
A. Right. We sort of have a -- a resources -- we have a lot of databases, but one of them is a resources one.
Q. And so any lawyer in the system could go in and access this template?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And do you think that's a -- it is a -- has been a helpful resource for lawyers at the public defender's office?

A. The database?
Q. The database.
A. Yes.
Q. Has your office created a waiting list for defendants who -- whose cases can't be covered by your lawyers?
A. I call it a postponement list, but yes.
Q. Okay. And -- and how does the postponement list work?
A. We screen people, and then we enter them into a -- we have a client database. It's marked in such a way that we can tell who screened what day. And then as attorneys have come to us to say, "I can take more cases," we take whoever is next on the list. Well, historically. Now, we're being appointed, so we aren't even getting to the list because we have so many appointments coming in, but that was -- that's how we started out, and we did -- I think it took seven days to remove the first person off of the postponement list.
Q. So as of right now, does the postponement list still exist?
A. Yes.
Q. It's just that it's taking longer to get to it?

A. I don't think we've gotten to it -- I think we probably took five cases off it in order. Now, a lot of -- almost everyone that we're being appointed on is also on that list, so people are coming off the list; they're just not coming in any certain order. It is not first come, first served any more. It's just however the Courts are appointing us.
Q. And do you know how many people are on the waiting list right now.
A. Not exactly, because people are added every day.
Q. Sure.
A. But the last time I looked, which was last Thursday, I want to say it was about 250 people.
Q. And -- and this was -- when was the -- the list first set up?
A. October 16.
Q. October 16. Okay. Do you have a sense of that roughly 250, how many of those people are in custody?
A. No.
Q. You don't have a sense, or none of them are?
A. Some of them are. I don't have a -- I don't know what percentage are in custody of -- because we take applications in custody, and because the law says that we can't -- we have -- we can't -- we can't only accept or reject or promote classes of people. So they're on the list, we're taking it as they come.

Q. And people are coming off the list in order?
A. Yes. Ideally, they were, yes.
Q. So it is -- as far as the Court is concerned, it is of no moment whether the person is in custody or not when determining who's next to come off of the waiting list?
A. Well, they don't -- one, I don't think they even acknowledge my list as anything valid or real or legal, so -- and they're just appointing who they want to appoint, so -- without any regard to what the list is or anything about it.
Q. And from -- from your perspective in putting the list together or maintaining the list, how do you account for if -- if you can at all, the fact that some of -- some of the people on the list -- are on the waiting list, are they prioritized in any way?
A. No.
Q. No?

Page 129

And are you -- are you personally sort of administering this list, or is there someone else in your office that's doing that?

A. Joseph Megerman is -- is the list person, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Well, I mean, we have -- we have a way in the database that's market so that we can see how the list is kept, and then Joseph also has a spreadsheet that he's maintaining of the appointments and as people come off the list. But when people -- when we had the ability to remove people from the list, we didn't have so many appointments coming in, he would look at the list, and then assign the cases.

Q. At this stage, are the Courts in your district appointing private attorneys at all to represent --

A. Not at all. We had one judge who was, and then she was told that she could not do that any more.

Q. Okay. You're familiar with -- well --

(Petsch Exhibit 6 was marked for identification.)

Q. I'm handing you what's been marked Exhibit 6 for identification. Do you recognize that?

A. Yes.

Page 130

Q. What is it?

A. This is an e-mail and documents pertaining to assignment of cases through the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel.

Q. And can you -- you're familiar with the -- we'll call it the MCRC?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you describe what the MCRC is?

A. And again, I didn't found -- I -- I'm a cog in -- in the system, but my understanding is it's a nonprofit that's set up to get cases to firms who want to try them. I know I've -- for my part, I've helped get cases to firms. I've participated in two trainings of attorneys from the firms who are -- who -- the firms were taking cases, and those attorneys specifically were taking cases.

Q. Do you know how many firms are involved?

A. I don't. On the Saint Louis side, I have no idea.

Q. Okay.

A. I think on the Kansas City side, I feel like the number of firms that have taken cases from us is probably around a dozen.

Q. And the Kansas City area doesn't only include district -- or Area 16; correct?

Page 131

A. I don't know that -- well, I think they've taken some appeals from central. I don't know that any other office has sent cases to the firms aside from mine.

Q. Okay. So --

A. I'm not aware of that.

Q. So is it your sense that the program is really focused on the -- the bigger offices around the state?

A. I -- I -- I think the -- the program is fo -- focused on where -- the firms -- the firms who have agreed to participate are at, and it appears that it is in the -- in the cities, so I think the thought is, we don't want to have these firm lawyers who are taking cases for free to drive to Chillicothe, but I don't have a firm grasp. All I know is when they ask me for cases, I provide them cases.

Q. And what -- what kinds of cases are being assigned to those firms?

A. A variety. Everything from possession to murder.

Q. And this program has been operating for how long?

A. I think the first cases I sent out were in May. I think there was a training either in April or

May of this year.

Q. And since the program began, approximately how many of your cases have been reassigned to MCRC attorneys?

A. I would say between -- between 15 and 20. I have a couple out right now that are doing conflict checks. So not -- not a huge number.

Q. Is your office involved at all in monitoring that representation?

A. It depends what you -- I -- I don't know that I'd use the word "monitor." I -- I regularly -- I'm a resource for the lawyers. I mean, I have talked to three of them in the last three days, so they regularly call with questions, they want to talk about plea offers, they want to talk about, this is what we do in civil; is there something equivalent in -- in criminal? So some of them communicate more. There's not a requirement, I would say, about how much communication is happening or how much oversight the firms are engaging representation, and I -- I consider myself more as a resource than a monitor, if that makes sense.

Q. And the -- and the firm is making the decision about which individual lawyers are taking these cases; correct?

A. Yes. But I -- I think we've asked that all the lawyers go to our trainings, so we're meeting and talk -- you know, talking to the lawyers. But yes, the firm -- I mean, I think most of the lawyers are at the mercy of what their firm will or won't let them do --

Q. Right.

A. -- since they're using the firm's resources and working for free.

Q. And aside from the outreach that they may do to you for answers to you for answers to particular questions, the -- the supervision of those attorneys is being done by the firms?

A. Yes.

Q. And so a total of 15 or 20 cases since May; right?

A. Yes.

Q. So has the -- has the -- the MCRC program relieved your district's caseload in any significant way?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. And I'll tell you, when I assign cases, I usually -- I've done it with people who are leaving, so I was giving them clients that were already going to have a change in attorney anyway because the -- the attorneys were leaving for one reason or another, so -- and it -- most of the firms are wanting trial experience, so it's easier to tell when someone is exiting, when a case a little further along, how they -- but that -- that's been my selection process. So attorneys have enjoyed the fact that they haven't had to absorb those cases that are set for trial fairly soon and would sort of wreak havoc in their schedule, but as far as -- their caseloads aren't significantly lower or anything like that.

Q. Okay. Okay. Almost done.

I -- you talked quite eloquently about, you know, your and your attorneys' response to the Hinkebein decision, generally. I wanted to talk a little bit about the -- the sort of formal steps you took in the wake of that decision.

At what point did you first take action in court to -- to try to deal with the situation?

A. Well, I wrote the letter, I believe, October 13, to Judge Torrence. That following Monday, the 15th, you know, we had an attorney who the judge wanted to appoint a probation violation and have her handle it right there, and she asserted her ethics under Rule 4. He tried to appoint her personally, she brought up the case that says he can't appoint her personally, and then he set it for Thursday and sent an order over basically appointing and saying someone must show or something along those lines, and I handled that case. I went to court that day, so that would have been the 18th, I believe.

Q. And -- and you went before the Court?

A. Yes.

Q. And what happened at that hearing?

A. Well, I tried to make a record. I have filed a motion. A number of my lawyers were there to testify about their -- their conflicts under Rule 4. I was not allowed to make a record. I was personally appointed. It was -- it was talked over a fair amount, and -- and then we set it over so I could writ the judge.

Now, at the same time, a district defender had filed work. Leslie Hazel had filed a case that -- a writ that had gone up through I believe the southern district and the Missouri Supreme Court and was denied under the Rule 4, and there's basic instruction on the order saying that we need to file an individual case that's under Chapter -- Chapter 600.036. So our writ didn't encompass that level because we figured Courts would rule on that. It was on that personal appointment, which that western district denied.

(Petsch Exhibit 7 was marked for identification.)

Q. So I'm going to hand you what I've marked as Exhibit 7. Is that the writ that you're referring to?

A. Yes.

Q. And you're saying that this was filed -- was it filed before the Hazel decision?

A. (Nonverbal response.)

Q. It was filed after?

A. Correct.

Q. And what was the response to your petition?

A. So this writ was denied, and then I'd already entered under objection, so the case was set the following Thursday. The writ was denied in, I think, an hour's time or something. Something crazy fast for the Court of Appeals, and -- and I represented the client on this case.

Q. So do you recall what -- what you filed next? Did you -- so this was the -- the Nevels case?

A. Uh-huh. Keith Nevels. Well, I represent -- Keith Nevels was a guy who was on probation in the wrong place, so he really wasn't in any jeopardy. The judge just changed the -- the company that was monitoring him, and it was continued, so I didn't file anything else on Nevels. And then I think -- well, November 1, I filed a -- a motion under Chapter 600.063 in suggestions and support.

(Petsch Exhibit 8 was marked for identification.)

Q. Handing you Exhibit 8 for identification.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Is that the motion that you just referred to?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Do you want this, Jackie?

MS. SHIPMA: No. That's fine.

Q. (By Mr. Williamson) And what was the result of that motion?

A. It was denied.

Q. What did you do after that motion was denied?

A. I -- I think a week later, I filed a second motion under Chapter 600.063. I think that was November 8.

Q. And what -- what was the -- what was the difference between that motion and the initial motion you filed?

Page 138

A. Well, the judge's denial on the first motion was very -- I'm trying to think of a nice term for it. Scathing. And it was clear he had a lot of issues with my bringing Rule 4 into a Chapter 600 hearing, so I -- I had -- I filed a more bare bones motion, which I assumed was what the Court wanted.

Q. Okay. And how did the Court respond to that second motion?

A. He denied it and accused me of bad faith -- or actually, he found me in bad faith.

Q. Okay. So -- so you sought a conference with the Court on two occasions; both of those requests were denied?

A. Correct.

Q. Did you take any further actions in court at that point?

A. I -- well, the judges were appointing the office on a lot of things, and it was clear from my first hearing in Nevels that if I wasn't going forward, he was going to set a contempt hearing. I -- I've not abandoned any -- I think -- I think our Rule 4 issues are legitimate and concerning. However, the judge -- I also don't want myself or attorneys held in contempt. I don't think that is the route. Even under orders that I think are unlawful or against our ethics, we're going to try and comply with them.

So my office started assigning cases. Fairly quickly after that, I self-reported to the Bar, because I believe it's an ethics violation for me to be assigning cases, and it was at my direction that my deputy was doing that, and -- and then I had some attorneys who were not appearing who -- who actually wanted to be -- my understanding is they wanted to be personally appointed. On one of their non-appearances, the judge issued a show cause order for me as to why I should be not be held in contempt, and we had a hearing on that last -- was that last Monday? I think it was last Monday. It's all happening very quickly, so --

Q. Have you gotten a response?

A. Yeah. She -- she quashed her motion. I -- I got counsel, and she quashed it base -- basically based on specificity, because she didn't name me, personally. And since then, a majority of the judges are now ordering me, personally, into almost every case.

(Petsch Exhibit 9 was marked for identification.)

Q. Okay. I'm handing you Exhibit 9 for identification.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the complaint that you just mentioned?

A. Yes. This is my self-report to the Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel.

Q. And you -- you indicate that you felt some obligation to file this, to -- to self-report?

A. Yes. I'm, in fact, on a regional disciplinary council. I'm a member. But I -- I think by assigning cases to my lawyers, I am in violation of Rule 4. I'm in violation of my supervisory duties. And so if you look at what I write, I -- you can also ask for guidance, so I asked the -- I asked the Office of the Chief Disciplinary Counsel for guidance, because I -- I am not sure what I should be doing here.

Q. And this was filed on November 20?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. Did you -- have you received a response to your --

A. No.

Q. In your experience, how long does it generally take to get a response from --

A. It takes -- well, generally, I'm not the person who receives it. I'm only on a committee, so we only get sent the things that come to committee. I don't have a sense of how long that will take.

Q. But this is -- this is the same office that evaluated Mr. Hinkebein's situation?

A. Yes. And went for it and made arguments in front of the Supreme Court on them, yes, correct.

Q. Against Mr. Hinkebein?

A. Right. Against him.

Q. Okay. You -- you attach the letter that you referred to earlier, the October 13, letter to Judge Torrence?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Did -- did he response by letter to this?

A. Well, by e-mail.

Q. By e-mail?

A. He -- it was a Word document that looks like a letter.

Q. Okay.

A. But he responded by e-mail, and which I attached that -- that --

Q. Okay. So that's the October 17 letter?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. So as of right now, you -- well, hold on. Let me back up.

You also attached the transcript of a hearing where you moved to withdraw from --

A. Yeah. I just really wanted -- I wanted them to see that I really -- he mentioned the contempt, and I wanted the Court to -- or I wanted OCDC to understand that my assignment is not -- is because I -- I have a good faith belief that will be held in contempt. It's only been underlined by the fact that -- I sent -- I sent this in on the 20th, the order that came out. The show cause order came out on the 21st. I had no idea that that would be coming out obviously, but I -- I wanted them to be aware that I'm not just assigning cases because I feel compelled to under penalty of going to jail.

Q. So -- and so do you right now currently still represent Mr. Nevels?

A. I -- I don't think so. I -- we concluded the matter. He was continued on probation. If you ask the Courts, they'll probably think I'll represent him in perpetuity. I have no idea.

Q. And as far as you know, how many cases are you assigned to right now?

A. My myself, personally?

Q. Right.

A. I probably -- open cases, I probably have about 40; although, as an office, we're reassigning most of my cases just because, when I go to court, the judges are making records with me about representation, and if it -- it feels like they are trying to set up a contempt hearing. They're not doing that to the rest of my lawyers, which is unfortunate, because I would like to be more helpful, but I don't -- I'm concerned -- and I'm concerned that all of this is affecting clients and representation as well. But I'm also concerned that I -- you know, the judges are all sending the orders to me personally, so the last time I was in court, she said, "Did you receive this order?" I sent it to you personally." It -- it feels -- quite frankly, it feels like a setup. It feels like a setup to have me held in contempt.

Q. Okay. And so as of right now, you're just -- you're waiting for a response to your Bar complaint that you're self--reporting?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And continuing to accept those cases as necessary?

A. Yes. I mean, I've -- I've gotten orders that are giving me five days to enter. I'm getting orders that are saying, "Ruth Petsch must enter in fives days." I'm complying with that. I am also assigning them to lawyers because --

Q. Right.

A. I -- I'm complying because the Court is ordering me to do it. So -- but like I said before, I have cases where I'm entered, not because I'm really representing those clients, but because the Court is ordering me to do so, and I firmly believe they will hold me in contempt if I do not, so -- and I'm waiting to hear back from the Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel. That's correct.

Q. Are you doing -- are there any cases where, for whatever reason, you are actually having to do work on the case aside from entering your --

A. Yeah. Well, I mean, I was working -- so I appeared in court last Wednesday. I had multiple probation violation clients that I represented. I have a few, and -- and I have -- for the -- the probation violation docket that I'm shifting over to another attorney, I mean, I had mental done on the guy, I've arranged -- so I'm doing some representation, sort of trying to tie it up.

Q. Okay. But those are -- that's on cases that you already had --

A. Right.

Q. -- on your docket?

Page 145

A. Right. I'm not -- I'm not going to undertake -- aside from entering --

Q. Right.

A. -- I've not really been representing any of those folks. I'm just complying with the Court's orders.

Q. And -- and you're being appointed to all manner of cases; right? Not just probation?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Is there anything else that you think we should know regarding your ability or your office's ability to provide representation to your clients?

A. Not that I can think of, no.

MR. WILLIAMSON: I know we've covered a lot of ground. All right. I think that's all I have. Thank you.

MR. RAMSEY: Can we go off the record for just a minute?

VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 12:42 p.m.

(Off the record.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 12:42 p.m.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. RAMSEY:

Q. Good afternoon.

Page 146

A. Good afternoon.

Q. So again, my name is Steven Ramsey, and I represent the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens. I have a number of questions for you. Feel free at any point, if we need a break, let me know, because I know we've been at this for some time.

A. Sure.

Q. I want to go back quite a ways, back to, like, almost 9:00-ish or so and understand the district a bit more.

Right now, do you have a sense of how many criminal cases come in in Jackson County total?

A. No. I mean, there's data on that. I haven't -- I haven't looked at that.

Q. Okay.

A. But I mean, that's achievable data. The courts keep records. I think the prosecutors keep records of filing.

Q. And District 16 encompasses all of Jackson County?

A. Yes.

Q. And there aren't any differences between how your office handles a case that occurs in Kansas City versus Independence; is there's just one concerted district, or are there any, I guess, discernible differences?

A. No. I don't -- I don't know that there's -- the prosecutor's office runs differently in both places, but -- as far as how they handle cases and how they go forward. But our representation -- I mean, there may be some reaction to those changes, but, you know, we're --

Q. But the public defender's office that you're covering with your district --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- there's no discernible difference between how you would handle a case in Jackson County versus -- or I'm sorry. In Kanas City versus Independence?

A. Right.

Q. Now, this is a question as to your experience: Is there a trend of -- of crimes, of felonies, of misdemeanors that you see very frequently as opposed to crimes of potentially those who are not indigent would commit?

I can clarify that question.

A. Okay.

Q. What types of felonies did -- does your office not see frequently, if there are any?

A. Well, I -- I think there are a bunch. I mean, when I talk to rural offices, we don't have -- like, when people will shoot a deer from a car or steal cattle. Things -- we don't have really any of those. I don't -- I mean, it's hard for me say compared with the private Bar. I think if you go prelim dockets, and you look at what types of cases have more private attorneys, because they -- they set up prelim dockets by the type of case, so more private attorneys go to DUI, driving dockets, which kind of makes sense, because if you can afford a car, then you may -- and you're in risk of losing your license, you probably can afford a lawyer. I don't -- I mean, everybody gets charged with stealing. Everybody gets charge -- like, there's a lot of drug crimes. There's a lot of -- and a lot of -- in Jackson County, it's a lot of serious felonies, rob 1s, assault 1s.

Q. Forgive my ignorance. Would the -- the broad category of white collar crimes, would that ever come across your -- your purview?

A. Probably not. I mean, I know that the prosecutor's office had a white collar crime guy who per -- or prosecuted a lot of stealing from unemployment, which didn't feel very white collar to me, but we represent those all the time. I mean, not all the time, but it goes -- it seems to go cyclical how -- how many of these they file, but we certainly represent the -- the stealing by omission, as I call it, so stealing from unemployment, stealing food stamps, that sort of -- things along those like lines, but I wouldn't say true white collar. I feel like most white collar crime, at least in Jackson County, goes to the feds.

Q. In your 20-plus years of experience, have you seen a trend in -- in receiving the same types of cases, or has there been a -- an uptick in a particular type of -- of felony, or I guess over the course of your -- your time with the Missouri Public Defender system, how -- what trends have you seen just in terms of the types of cases, if any?

A. Well, I think there's more -- they say the violent crime is up, so I mean, we have a lot of murders. We have a lot more weird Internet-related things than when I -- we didn't really have much Internet when I started. But we've always had robberies. There's a lot that's consistent. The type of -- the type of possession. I mean, when I started years ago, there was a lot of crack, there was a lot of meth; and now, you have a lot more -- I mean, crack and meth are still there, absolutely, but you have a lot more pills, you have a lot more opioid, so there have been trends sort of -- the drug crimes definitely trend different ways. I can't think -- I mean, but -- guns -- well, now, we have fewer guns because carrying a concealed weapon is legal, so we have a whole host of gun cases that we routinely tried that aren't prosecuted any more.

Q. Two steps back, I remember you testifying earlier too that you had conversations with Counsel in terms of your preparation for this deposition?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Have you also been in contact with other individuals or organizations about the -- I guess about the content of this litigation or just caseloads and workloads generally?

A. Not about the content of this litigation. Caseload, workload, absolutely. I mean, there was a fair amount of press surrounding our Rule 4 initiative, and I've had -- I mean, I had counsel represent me at my show cause hearing. I've had multiple firms talk to me about public defender issues as well as things along those lines, but I've -- I've never discussed this particular lawsuit. But there's -- I mean, there's a lot of talk around sort of -- and there's a lot of stuff in the newspaper, so there's a lot of people you run into that talk to you about our caseloads.

Q. So it may be difficult because there are so many, but what types of organizations, if you can --

A. Oh, organizations? Well --

Q. Organizations, outlets, firms.

A. I don't know about organizations. German May represented me on my contempt hearing. I've certainly -- I have a lot of friends who are lawyers, so I have friends -- I've talked to people at Husch. I've talked to people at Stinson. I've talked to people at Shook. I've talked to -- I've -- I mean, part of it is I also do MCRC, so I'll drop off files, and then they'll say, "I saw you in the paper," and there's a discussion about what's going on. But as far as I -- it's -- I don't think there's been any -- you know, well, a number of people told me to reach out to the ACLU with regard to my Rule 4 litigation; however, they're currently suing us, so that isn't happening.

MR. WILLIAMSON: No comment.

A. But I don't know what -- like, specific -- I mean, I'm not -- look, I'm a mom of three kids, so I literally work, you know, a dozen to 15 hours a day, and I try to spend time with my kids. I don't -- I'm not a member of a bunch of Bar organizations. I'm not a member -- I -- I don't have time for any of it, quite frankly. So I -- yeah. I'm not a member of a bunch of organized groups. I don't -- I don't have time. And it's -- to me, that's one of the things that hurts public defenders more, is that we don't -- we're really isolated, and it's really easy for us to sort of get stuck, because we don't have -- we don't join Bar organizations. Well, a lot of my attorneys can't afford it, but I also -- they don't have the time to do it. They're going to be in trial, or they're going to be in jail, or they're going to be all these other places.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Switching gears a bit in terms of how your office determines whether a particular criminal defendant is indigent --

A. Okay.

Q. -- walk me through that process, if you could.

A. So generally, a legal assistant is going to either meet them over in court, meet them over in jail. We take walk-ins. And really, any attorney in court if asked to screen someone -- I mean, I -- when I'm in court, I screen people all the time. We have an application. We follow the federal poverty guidelines. I mean, our application is on our website. It's not at all a secret. And you fill out the application, they qualify or they don't, you mark them indigent, you let them know the determination, and you go back to the office and -- and -- and you either have a file. Right now, you might be on the postponement list, something along those lines. So it's really sort of self-reporting. I mean, a big chunk of our folks are in jail, so they're not working. If they have a home, they're not going to -- it's usually -- there's -- it's usually not very tricky in Jackson County, the poverty. I know rural offices have people who they think are hiding assets. I don't get that sense here. But it's true we don't -- we don't double check, and we don't have the resources to do that, so if someone says they have no assets, I don't run a search of their personal property tax. I don't run a search -- I don't -- that would be 20 minutes we don't have.

Q. So if I'm understanding you correctly, the screening process is the application?

A. Yep.

Q. And you all follow the federal poverty guidelines?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And if a person says, "Hey, I make under those," they will receive representation if you're able?

Page 154

A. Right. You have to be poor enough to qualify, basically.

Q. And did I hear you correctly that there are no controls for that or there's no monitoring; it's a self-monitoring type of a system?

A. It's -- yes. It's generally self-reporting. I mean, I guess if we suspected someone, we could look at it. I've certainly had clients who have bonded or something happened where I moved to withdraw based on I -- I don't think they apply -- or they don't qualify for us, that we weren't aware of funding or somehow, you know, they made a $20,000 bond, and they have the resources to hire counsel if that happened, but it generally has to sort of come up on us.

Q. Now, this may be difficult to ascertain just sitting here, but do you have a sense of the rejection rate for those who apply? And I know you mentioned that if they fill out the application, they generally come in.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. But is that close to 100 percent, bright line rule, if you're under the federal poverty lines, that you're in, that you will receive representation if the system is able?

A. Well, in general, I mean, there's -- Chapter 600 has guidelines on it, so you also take into account assets. You take into account other things. I don't know the number. I mean, I -- there -- we -- we keep the data. I have a -- I have a drawer full of denied applications. We keep those app -- you know, they get archived. They get sent places. So we certainly -- people get denied all the time. Now, that being said, the majority of our denied applications, we are then appointed -- the judge will make their own determination. A client is and allowed to appeal our findings to the Court, and nine times out of ten, even the people we denied become our clients because the judges find them indigent and appoint us anyway.

Q. Now, does that happen at a hearing? Like, do you have an opportunity to say, "Here's why we made this determination," or is that held outside of the courtroom?

A. Sometimes. Sometimes they -- generally, we're there. Sometimes the judges do it when we're not there.

Q. Uh-huh.

Page 156

A. They just say, "Were you screened?" And the client says, "Yes, and I was denied." And hen they'll say, "Do you have a house, do you have some" -- in court the other day, somebody's mom stood -- or we don't even know how she was related to the client, and was like, "He doesn't have money." Because he's like, "I'm going to hire someone." She goes, "No, he doesn't have money." And my lawyers were just aghast, because they were like, how -- they don't even who that woman is who is answering his financial questions to have him found indigent, which the judge did. The judges appoint us a lot, and did before -- even before now, where they're appointing us all the time.

Q. So I'm understanding two different tracks here. One is the determination but the Missouri Public Defender's system?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And then the second is the consideration of, even when we reject some, we'll get appointed there?

A. Yes.

Q. Focusing on the former --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- so if I heard you correctly, you all do reject applicants, and I think you said all the time.

A. Well, I don't -- I can't tell you what percent, but we definitely do. We have a drawer full of rejected applications.
Q. Okay. So there's -- and if you're unable to, let me know, and I'll just move on.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. Would you peg it at 80 percent approval -- acceptance rate or 90?
A. I would definitely say it's high. I don't know the percentage.
Q. Okay. Okay. Here's a -- a question, and it's related to what goes into the -- the determination. And let me know if this never happens. But say a criminal defendant has multiple cases --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- and in -- you know, let's say he has four cases. Out of the three cases, he has private counsel?
A. Right.
Q. On the fourth --
A. Yeah.
Q. -- he wants to have --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- a public defender represent him because

Page 158

I guess his assets have been --
A. Depleted, yeah, sure.
Q. By funding the former cases. Is that a relevant factor in whether or not the public defender system ascertains whether he would -- reaches that poverty line for -- for representation?
A. I think it's -- people bring it into consideration, but I mean, we used to reject -- anyone who had a private attorney, we rejected outright, and then there was some changes in the law saying we couldn't do that. So we definitely -- well, one, we try to get -- it's -- it's a mess. One, it's legally a mess, just because you're supposed to now -- if there's any plea that's going to happen, you have to consult with that lawyer. But I -- I wouldn't say -- it used to be a very strong factor, and it no longer is.
Q. I see. And that's due to some legal considerations that --
A. Yes.
Q. Same type of question, different scenario. Case and chief is over, and now, we're talking about probation revocation.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. So say someone had private counsel before, is that a determination that goes into whether or not they're represented during their --

Page 159

A. No.
Q. No? Okay.
A. It hasn't been, to my knowledge.
Q. Okay.
A. If people are screening that out -- you know, crazy things happen all the time, but I -- I mean, it -- we can -- it's supposed to be a civil matter. It's supposed to be completely separate. So we screen people in new even if they had a private attorney on the underlying case.
Q. And now, I'm not trying to trick you on this one.
A. Sure.
Q. I'm just trying to understand that if it's a fairly bright line rule for who qualifies for public defender representation, of these various factors, how would they have been taken into consideration?
Said another way, if I fill out the application, and I would normally -- normally would be eligible, but there are these other things going on, when does that -- when do the other things going on come into play in terms of whether you accept or reject a particular candidate?

A. Well, I think if you qualify under the numbers, you'd probably be accepted --
Q. Okay.
A. -- whether you had a private attorney on another case or not.
Q. Got it. Thank you.
Are there any situations where the public defender system will enter before they have been -- before you all have been -- well, your district, pardon me. In your district, are there situations where you all will enter before being appointed or before a determination is made for indigency?
A. Only if we're forced to enter. I mean, we're going to make a -- an indigency determination before we enter. Juvenile court appoints us all the time without any application ever being taken. And what we try and do is contact them and get an application before we have to make it a legal deal. I mean, a lot of the clients are indigent, and we're certainly not fighting representing qualifying clients. Or we haven't, just like -- now, we are because of our ethics. But before that, we pretty much took everybody, but you have to be qualified. You can't physically open a file in our computer without an application.

Q. Now, say, the system accepts a particular criminal defendant, and then after the fact, right, a prosecutor -- or it comes to your knowledge that the person may have considerably more assets.

A. Sure.

Q. And I know you alluded to this before. How does that process work? Is that upon -- is that burden upon the individual attorney who is representing the case to say, "This seems a little -- little funny to me," and to make a motion to withdraw, or how does that process work?

A. Right. So if -- if during the course of representation, people become aware that the person has assets or didn't disclose assets, something --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- they'll move to withdraw. Or a lot -- what happens most commonly is they make a large bond, which sometimes indicates that, you know, they have disposable income. But we -- we definitely have attorneys move to withdraw in those cases.

Q. Next wave, if you will, after the -- those determinations have been made --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- and the cases come to your, I guess your desk, and you're deciding how to -- to divvy them up, and I believe you said your deputy takes care of most of that --

Page 162

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- that process. Are there any local policies in place for how you divvy them up, or is it more or less discretionary?

A. It's pretty discretionary. I know historically, we can pull up individual caseloads. I do have -- I guess I do. So I have -- my attorneys are on teams, and each team has an on week so that they're not running around like crazy. So there's four teams, so each week, they -- they get a -- assigned the cases that are going to be prelimed during that week. So teams may get some of an overload because it's their on week, and then the next week, it will be a different team's on week. So we do try and do that mostly for the efficiency of the lawyers so that they can -- so that it groups their -- their prelim court dates together during a week out of the month instead of just on any given day.

Q. Concerning your particular office, and I'm speaking specifically, pardon me, of the turnover rate, and I believe you said that nine people had been replaced in 2016?

A. '17.

Q. 2017. Pardon me.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Do you have any sense for how you stack up compared to other offices within Missouri that are comparable in size?

A. There's not many offices that are -- I mean, we're the largest -- Kansas City is the largest in the state. I think Saint Louis has maybe four fewer attorneys, and then you go down to, like, 24, so I think Saint Louis has a fairly high turnover rate as well. I know for us, I'm lucky that I get to fill, because we have rural offices who have had positions open for a year that they can't fill, so I'm lucky in that sense. But I don't think I'm -- I mean, I think that 20 to 30 percent is pretty normal. It slowed down a little around, like, 2009 where there weren't any jobs, but aside from that, it's been -- it's been pretty consistent, and on the higher end.

Q. And you had testified earlier as to a number of educated guesses on what you think would be necessary to fill these positions in a sense -- in a way that would be ethical and --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- and would be reasonable. Are those determinations -- and I -- I remember you were saying that they were based upon your experience.

A. Sure.

Q. Are they based on anything else, like comparable offices in Missouri, private practice across the states, or is this -- or were those guesses your --

A. Well, I haven't -- I guess I'm -- I've not reached out to private attorneys on the number of cases they have. I mean, whenever I talk to the firms about our numbers, they shake their heads. I think it was more, okay, we have -- we're entered on 4100 open cases. If, you know, I want to get that number down to a reasonable -- it was more sort of math. But -- and that's me presuming that 40 cases is a reasonable caseload for people. I -- that's not -- I don't think 40 murders a reasonable caseload for someone, so -- or 40 all serious crimes. So again, take that with the caveat that it depends on the caseload, it depends the level on -- of the level of experience of the attorney, it depends on all of those factors. Yeah. He just said, how many would you like? And I was like, oh, I'll take that. I mean, if you gave me 100 lawyers, I'd be thrilled, but -- and I -- I think they'd all work.

Q. When you receive these cases, just another question here, do you track them by the charges that are on a particular case or by criminal defendant?

A. Well, we have multiple views in our system, so I -- most people look up by name or case number, but I can look up by primary charge. I mean, we have a lot of cases with multiple charges, so we usually list the primary charge as the most serious or one of the most serious, and so I can look at the type of case under primary charge. I can search that way. I mean, I could -- I search -- when the Bazell news came out, I searched "stealing," and I think I had 10,000 cases. So there are ways to search other things in the database, if that makes sense. There's a variety of views and search methods.

Q. Now -- so I -- I understand that the system at large has annual trainings for various defenders, and those are mandated upon particular assistant public defenders?

A. Right.

Q. In your office, you had mentioned that there are the additional trainings over the lunchtime period?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Were any of these additional lunchtime period trainings focused on workload or -- or caseload management issues, or any other training for that matter?

A. I don't think I've done an internal caseload management issue. I mean, the statewide training has a variety of tracks just with hundreds of people going. So I do think there are -- I think there have been sessions on keeping yourself organized, relaxation, you know. I mean, there's a variety of people that come and -- and talk in a three-day training. What all of those are, I don't know, but I -- I tend to be more of a law nerd, and I tend to track toward less about self-care and more about where -- where the legal issues, and those would be the tracks that I would go to.

Q. What other areas of focus in your district have you seen fit to train your district defenders -- or pardon me, your assistant public defenders in your district on? And who makes that call? I apologize for interrupting.

A. No. I understand. So sometimes new things -- so, you know, I had one of my lawyers present on Daughbert, because that's a new area of criminal law, and it's a significant shift from Frye to Daughbert. You know, the problem with our statewide trainings is, you know, someone goes to trial skills, you can start in October; you may not have trial skills until nine months in. You might have trial in that amount of time. So there's a lot of -- I mean, we do a lot of stuff that is pretty basic. Like, here's impeachment, here's -- or here are the discovery rules, and here's how to enforce them. And because we have -- you know, basically chronic turnover, we're sort of constantly -- you only hit this section, and then some of them are gone, and then new people are in.

Q. Concerning the funds for representation; right? So after you bring someone into the system, and they -- they're eligible, that's a -- is that a flat fee for the criminal defendants?

A. The fee?

Q. Yes, ma'am.

A. That's my understanding, yes.

Q. So it's not a sliding scale of various folks on the various levels of the --

A. Well, the fee is depending on the type of case.

Q. Okay.

A. There used to be more of a sliding skill about whether you took it to trial or not or whether -- but the fee is charged -- yeah. So I think an A felony is one thing, a probation violation is one thing. That's my understanding.

Q. Okay. And in juvenile cases, does the parent or guardian pay that or --

A. There's no fee for clients under -- we don't charge clients who cannot enter into a contract.

Q. Turning to the use of funds for depositions and discovery --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- and I believe you had mentioned it was the encumbrance for a fund or the encumbrance level?

A. Right.

Q. Are there any policies guiding -- any local district policies guiding how many depositions one may take if they have the time?

A. Well, I don't think there's -- there's a policy on it. I mean, in general, people discuss with their team leader, and they can discuss with me, here are the people. I mean, I've never had a trial where I deposed every single person. I would have liked to, but I also get that there's some witnesses that -- that people would consider less important or less -- you know, that a dep -- deposition is less necessary. So -- and actually, the only time I've ever seen anyone request all the people is when they're unable to contact any of them, and they think, the only way I'm going to get to talk to these people is if I subpoena them for deposition because I've not been able to get them to talk to me voluntarily.

Q. In your career up until this point, have you ever been denied a deposition that you wanted to take?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever denied a deposition for one of the attorneys who you supervised that they wanted to take?

A. I -- I have. Not very many. Although, it generally wasn't based -- maybe I've had one or two that were based on, you don't need to do a deposition there. More based on sometimes new attorneys have some sort of farfetched ideas about how things go, and it's more of a, like, are you sure you want to do this? Are you sure this the route you want to get? Or sometimes, are you sure you want to create bad evidence?

Q. Same question, slightly different topic. Have you, personally, ever been denied an expert witness that you felt was necessary for your case?

A. No.

Q. And have you denied an expert to one of the attorneys that you supervised that they felt was necessary to their case?

A. No. I don't -- I'm just the mid level approver for that, so I have seen people get denied. However, I generally punt it up if -- if there's something I -- I'm usually a "yes," and then if it gets denied, it's at the -- the higher level.

Q. And do you have a sense for why those were denied? And I know that -- the systemwide question, that's not what I'm asking you. But do you have any personal knowledge for why requests from your office for expert testimony --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- were denied in the past?

A. It's usually money.

Q. Money?

A. Well, could you get a cheaper expert, could you get someone who's local, could you -- you know, we think maybe we could do this in-house. But it's all about saving money, or that's been my impression. I'm -- I've -- I don't know everyone that's obviously been denied statewide, but if I had somebody who -- I send back requests all the time to say, this is isn't on point, or this isn't something -- I have people edit -- probably one a day, I have people edit encumbrance requests, so denials, like an official denial on the computer would be very rare. Then I do unofficial, "edit this," all the time. Probably daily.

Q. Do you have a sense for if I -- and I know you -- you had mentioned and you had testified earlier that you don't have a -- a ton of misdemeanors that you all --

A. Right.

Q. -- are handling, but is there any limitations for wanting to use an expert in a misdemeanor case as opposed to a felony case?

A. Nope.

Q. Okay.

A. I -- I say, "There are no small cases," and I say that to my lawyers who say, "I don't want misdemeanors." I'm like, it's important -- they're all important to the client.

Q. Step back, the policy procedure, when you want to -- to implement or promulgate is probably the improper word. But when you want to implement a policy in your district --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- what goes into that? Is it merely a decision based upon your judgment, and you send an e-mail to everyone and say, "Here's the new policy," or walk me through that.

A. Yes. Although, I -- I don't think I've ever implemented a policy with not -- without talking -- like I said, I have a pretty good relationship with upper management, and I appreciate their feedback and their thoughts about how things go. As well as, I don't want to -- I've not memorized every policy, local policy necessarily, and I certainly haven't memorized every MSPD policy, and it's good to know if there's a conflict. But I don't -- I've only -- aside from minor things, we're going to screen this person now, I've probably only implemented three probably major policies in my tenure. And that's first-time felon, vertical representation, I don't even know what the third would be. Maybe this -- the Rule 4. So to say that I'm implementing new policies all the time, I'm not.

Q. I guess my question is: Could you if you wanted to implement --

A. I think I probably could.

Q. Okay. And so those questions when you were reaching out to central -- to central management or upper management, that's just because you have that relationship and you want their input versus having to seek approval from them; is that --

Page 173

A. Right. I think --
Q. Okay.
A. Let me think. I know when we went forward on first-time felon, in fact, my deputy who then became my supervisor tried to make it statewide, and it didn't become a -- a policy statewide. Other people opposed it. So I have a local office policy that didn't succeed statewide.
Q. And would -- could you tell me more about the -- the first time felony policy? And I'll ask about the vertical --
A. Sure.
Q. -- representation in just a moment.
But my understanding was that if someone is going to plead to a felony for the first time, and they're not currently a felon --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- they have to have a conversation with you first?
A. Correct.
Q. Is that a -- they have to seek approval? You have to say, "Yes, you may proceed," or is it just a conversation that --
A. Well, I do have to say, "Yes --

Page 174

Q. Okay.
A. -- you can proceed." And so I have a conversation. And largely, I ask them what they've investigated. If someone's going to trial, and it's the morning of trial, and the client says, "I want the deal," and we've investigated the case, that is the client's call. What I think we can't do is plead people to felon -- well, really, we shouldn't do it on any case, but first-time felon is the only one I have a policy on that and that I check. We should not be pleading people and saying we're competent counsel when we're not. Representing theirselves as competent counsel and standing there is a problem to me. Have we pled first-time felons that we've done -- not done work on? Well, historically, many. And more recently, yes. Some -- we've had judges order people to plead people, because the client says, "I want it." What -- what we've done, generally, is if a client wants it, and we've done no work, we've asked to move to withdraw and let client plead pro se, which the Courts are really uncomfortable with; although, they're not uncomfortable with us saying we've done nothing on the case, and we're essentially a potted plant.
But that's -- the first-time felon was really to keep us from making people felons who don't -- you know, making a decision either to get out of jail or some -- because often, first-time felons get probation office -- offers, and they really want to get out, and getting the protection of a lawyer who's not really a lawyer. You know, we're not meeting any of our ethical standards there either, so --

Q. And then vertical representation, I presume that's from beginning to end --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- of a particular case that was produced to you all?
A. Right. When I started, we had docket attorneys -- we had vertical representation on serious cases only, and we had docket attorneys. So if you had a tampering case and, you know, stealing of a car, you would get a separate lawyer at prelim, you'd get a separate lawyer at the -- and "separate" meaning they represented everybody on that docket, so 20 to 30 people. So -- who you were supposed to have read their police reports and have a client relationship with, and that attorney wasn't entering. So you'd get a separate lawyer at prelim, a separate lawyer at the settlement conference, a separate lawyer at arraignment, a separate lawyer at the second settlement conference that generally happens, and then the case would be assigned after you got sent to a trial division, which -- so you would have gone through a handful of court dates, probably four months to eight months of representation without a single lawyer entering, very little investigation. Hopefully you got police reports. And so what I did is said, "You're going to assign this person from beginning to end," which is what the ABA guidelines say, and it's really the only sensical way to practice.

Q. Do you have a sense for whether most districts or any districts that you're aware of outside of District 16 follow the vertical representation as opposed to horizontal or --
A. I think all of them do. I mean, in most rural counties, you have one lawyer per county, so whether it be by intention or by convenience, that attorney is going to follow every case in that county from beginning to end. I would -- ours was one of the last offices to have docket attorneys. And that was in 20 -- I mean, we went vertical in 2012, so we've been vertical almost five years.
Q. Returning to experts, and -- and those funds utilized for them, is there a time-keeping or time tracking system for the use of experts?

A. I'm not sure the -- that we're tracking their time?
Q. Yes, ma'am.
A. Well, they are supposed to bill by the hour. When we do a request, in the request, we are supposed to put the expert's hourly rate in their estimates of hours. And if they need more hours, we are supposed to do an updated request that talks about approximate hours. The request should have their hourly rate. I mean, if we're talking about testimony, sometimes testimony is a different rate for certain experts, things like that. All of that should be in the request.
Q. And does your office -- or do you maintain a list of potential experts for your attorneys, or is that a burden on the actual attorney to research and find an expert?
A. Well, we have -- we have an expert witness database for experts we have used. Obviously, I don't -- I mean, I wouldn't recommend just pulling any old person off that, because the -- they may not have testified well. But then sometimes, I think you can contact the money people and say, "Who has used these experts?" So you can get in communication with them of whether they would be a valuable expert or not.

Q. Was there ever a time -- were you -- were you, personally, ever coerced into utilizing an expert when you thought you did not need one?
A. No.
Q. Have you ever coerced any of your attorneys into utilizing an expert when they thought they didn't need one?
A. I would hope not. I mean, I talk to my lawyers pretty much every appraisal, and almost every time, my suggestions are, you know, look into what experts are out there, because so many of my lawyers use so few experts.
Q. Switching gears again, does your office oversee the collection of funds that are outstanding, or is that a central office mechanism?
A. Fee funds?
Q. Yes.
A. No. I mean, I don't. I -- upper management, I believe, has a system. I don't.
Q. Okay. So the districts do --
A. I personally -- yeah. We don't take checks. We don't -- that would be a nightmare.
Q. In your office currently, are you all tracking time for particular tasks in -- in cases?

Page 179

A. Currently, no. Have we for years? Yes.
Q. Did you have a sense for when that began and ended?
A. No. I really don't. I mean, it's been in the last five years, I think. But I don't -- we spent years time tracking. I don't recall the -- I -- not at all.
Q. When you were tracking time -- well, two steps back: As a district defender -- well, before you were district defender, pardon me, and that -- was that 2011?
A. Uh-huh.
Q. Did you track time before that?
A. For periods, yes.
Q. Okay. And in the most recent period after you were district defender, and you were tracking time --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- do you know if that was by charge, by case, by criminal defendant, by task?
A. So when you tracked, you went in, and there was case specific and not case specific, and I think there was administrative. So if you were doing work on a particular client's case, you tracked that. If you were waiting in court at a docket, that's hard to track to a specific case. If you did administrative tasks sometimes -- some of them could be tracked to a case; some of them could not. So you'd go in, you'd select that, and then under that, you'd select, you know, whether you were doing investigation on a specific case, whether -- I mean, I did a lot of -- I have a lot of -- I mean, a lot of what I do is talk to people about stuff most of my day, so I do a lot of, like, general management that sort of thing. But some of it fairly got specific. I mean, we had to -- we had a special database we went into to track.

Q. Do you recollect if there was any, like, type of time management controller or any type of control or monitoring of how individuals were entering their time?
A. I'm not exactly sure what you mean.
Q. Yeah. Was there a dedicated position in your district in your experience to someone managing the -- the time that people said that they were doing? So in other words, was there any oversight to the timekeeping?
A. No. I -- I mean, if anything, I was always of the opinion my lawyers underreported because timekeeping was fairly arduous, and I don't know many of them said, "Well, I could be working on more cases if you didn't make me track time." So I never worried about over-reporting. I did worry about under-reporting because I felt like a lot of my lawyers were doing work that they weren't tracking because they would -- the input took a lot of time.

Q. Do you remember if that time system, that time tracking system -- and forgive me if -- if you answered this already -- if it tracked by a particular charge. So a felony A, I put -- I put in this much work on a felony A versus a felony B as opposed to --

A. I think it did.

Q. -- this criminal defendant?

A. I -- I think -- well, I think you track by client and case number, because you could do it -- you could input it, and you could also go to the client's case, and then hit the button to add hours, and it would then specifically put in that case. Now, if there was multiple counts within a case, that's a -- there's no idea what you could do, but I think you could do it both client and case specific. That's my recollection.

Q. Do you remember if there was ever a training on how to track your time, or was it a -- just something, an e-mail that was sent out that said, "Hey track your time from -- from here on out"?

A. So I've tracked time multiple times, and I don't -- and because it's -- it's been several years, I don't really remember. I mean, I remember personally with my staff having it on the overhead and saying, "What do you think?" And constantly either looking it up or e-mailing somebody and saying, "What does this count as?" What -- you know, we did this. Does that count as this? Does that count -- how do we track that? There was a lot of resource that way. I don't -- I don't recall -- I don't recall there not being one. I don't recall there being one.

Q. Within similar types of cases, is it fair to suggest that different cases have different needs?

A. Sure, yeah.

Q. So a -- a criminal -- or sorry. A felony A is not a felony A is not a felony A, said another way?

A. Right.

Q. In your personal experience, is it typical for a criminal defendant to only be charged with a single count or a single charge?

A. It happens. You mean a -- one case with one count?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. It happens. I don't know what percentage that would be. It definitely happens in some cases, but we also have, you know, cases with 18, 35 counts. We -- I mean, the opposite happens a lot too.

Q. Is it more or less likely for a multiple-count criminal defendant to appear as opposed to a single-count defendant?

A. I feel like in Jackson County, more. But I also think Jackson County prosecutors really consolidate -- consolidate as much as possible, or that's what my attorneys want to believe because they think that their cases are not being counted fairly, but when you have -- and in -- so if you have a robbery, you're going to have an ACH. I mean, if there's a -- like, the ACA is everywhere, especially if there's any sort of gun around, so I feel like more often than not, we have multiple counts. Or you know, a burglary almost always has a stealing, because that's why it's a burglary. There are a lot things that go in pairs.

Q. Turning to the budget and how the budget operates with you as a district defender, I'm recalling that you testified that you -- there are various earmarks for how much money you can utilize for certain things?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. In your experience, have you ever run out of funds during a fiscal year and had to ask for supplemental funds from -- from upper management?

A. I've definitely run out of funds, and I've definitely said, "Hey, there's this going on. What do you want me to do?"

Q. And when that occurs, is it in a particular line item, such as by encumbrances or personnel?

A. Yes. Well, usually -- well, I personnel is -- I don't have a personnel budget. That's completely Central.

Q. Okay.

A. So small encumbrances are called local encumbrances, and I've definitely had issues with that. There's certain amount of billing that comes out of travel. Attorneys, investigators, people having to drive. I feel like I've definitely gone over that. There are -- there are some things I have more control over. I mean, If someone has to drive to prison and depose people, and there's a lot of travel going on, I have less control over that than I do over ordering supplies, say, like -- or we will get the cheap pens. So -- but I -- I'm cognizant of it. I mean, I look at it, and January 1, we'll be halfway through the fiscal year, and I'll look at where we're at and how much money we have in a given -- and I -- I notice when the new budget -- they send us a spreadsheet, and I always compare it to the old one, so I look at it, and I'm cognizant of areas where we've had problems.

Q. Now, when you send the -- so your supplemental request -- and I'm unsure if that's the appropriate vernacular.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. But would that go to the controller, and she would figure out how to proceed from there, or how involved in you -- how involved are you in that budgetary process after you submit a supplementary -- or supplementary request?

A. Well, it -- it is not that formal of a process. It's more like, oh, I think I'm screwing up. How bad is this going to be? So I've never -- I don't submit a budget. It's more of an allowance to me, you know. They're like, here you go. Here's your chunk of money. Stay within that, and it's more of a, like, I don't -- I'm concerned -- in more of an alert to, like, why is our office spending more money than you thought historically would -- we would, and how will that go. But I -- there is -- I don't have -- I've never done a formal -- formal request for more funding to my office budget.

Q. How often would you say you run into that type of -- of snag, if you will, in terms of you looking at the -- your numbers and saying, I think we need a little bit more here? Is that an every year thing, or is that a --

A. I would say I -- we pretty much exhaust our budget every year.

Q. Okay.

A. Well, and, I mean, I know centrally they watch it, so if I have an overflow, that will be gone the next budget year, but it won't be -- you know, it will go somewhere.

Q. As the district defender, do you discern any type of difference between cases who are constitutionally mandated to take versus permissive ones?

A. I'm not even sure what a -- what would be permissive. I'd like to know if there was an option. I -- I mean, we -- we take criminal cases we get appointed. At my office, I don't handle -- I mean, all we handle are crimes, so have you -- if there's a permissive one, let me know. I have no idea.

Q. Speaking about the Chapter 600 conference --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- when did you become aware that that particular section existed? Was it upon passage or --

A. I -- I think so. I mean, it seemed to be part of that, which killed -- because at the time, people were certifying offices based on caseload, so -- and again, this is my understanding of it, and if legally, I'm wrong, I'm wrong. But they -- it seemed to pass to undercut that certification, because the certification was -- whole offices were certifying based on these numbers, no one in my office can take a case. In Chapter 600.063, clearly it says it can't be the entire office. I mean, it was clearly designed to sort of undercut that process.

Q. So you had potentially knowledge of the passage from that -- and I believe that was the 2012 --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- 2013 area up until present?

A. Right.

Q. Are you familiar with that statute?

A. Pretty -- I mean, I can't recite it to you, but I'm fairly familiar.

Q. Before the two motions that you filed under that Chapter --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- had you -- have you -- had you ever utilized that chapter before or that particular section before?

A. No. And honestly, I -- I'm only filing because the judges want me to. I don't think it's relevant for -- under Rule 4 at all, so I mean, I -- one, I -- I think it's a trick statute that's not meant to really provide us any relief. And two, I don't think it encompasses our duties under Rule 4. The standard is ineffective assistance of counsel, which doesn't talk about the competence, diligence, and I think it's unconstitutional. I think it's -- I think that saying that only public defenders cannot -- cannot put limits on their caseload is -- it's disgusting. I mean, to say that my license isn't any more worthwhile than yours; and somehow, there's a carved exception that allows me to not have caseload control, when every other lawyer has that -- so I'm aware of it, I think -- I don't know. Okay. I'll step off the soap box for you; okay?

Q. Was that a -- a decision that you made to not foresee it under that statute, was that based upon your experience and your understanding of that statute, or were there conversations with other district defenders, with upper management concerning whether or not you should you utilize that particular --

A. Well, Chapter 600 says it's based on caseload standards. The assertion I made is based on the rules of professional conduct and my lawyers asserting -- plain reading, it didn't seem to apply. I know the judges -- when I went around, the judges were like, well, we think this is it. And I was like, how does that encompass our concerns under Rule 4? It doesn't meet them at all. So I think I probably had multiple discussions with different -- I think -- I think office-wide, one, it's -- it's -- having filed under it, I didn't even know where to file. It just says, "File something with the circuit court." Well, is it a criminal case? Is it a civil case? It's -- it's a very confusing statute. But where it is clear is that it's based on caseload standards, which is not what I -- I've been asserting under my Rule 4 concerns.

Q. And is that understanding what led you to proceed the writing letters and communicating in other ways outside of that statute?

A. Yes. And I will say, before I sent that letter to Judge Torrence, I met with him personally and said, "Hey, if you have other suggestions, let me know." I didn't just send him a letter and be like, "Hey, we don't take cases Monday." I met with him probably a week prior in his chambers and had a discussion to just say, "Hey, I'm -- I'm reaching capacity." The only reason I wasn't at capacity is I had three attorneys who had started the month before, and were like, "No, we still -- we're still fine." I'm like, "Great. We'll assign you" -- I mean, they were getting every case because I had 30 lawyers who said they couldn't take any. So I filed well after a number of offices, because I couldn't intellectually -- I couldn't honestly say that we were at overload until every lawyer said they were there.

Q. What were some of those suggestions that were made by the Court when you went in and had that conversation? Was it, "Hey, write a letter and -- and stop taking cases on" or --

A. No. He didn't say much, other than he said, "I think this is self-inflicted because you have vertical representation. I think that's increasing your caseload." And -- and Judge Torrence tells me that he all the time. He didn't -- he didn't practice -- he practiced in the eighties, and they did -- had docket attorneys, and he felt like -- and that's what the prosecutor's office does, even though they don't have the same ethical obligations under Rule 4 I do, and he -- that's what he -- he basically was like, I -- I think you're full of it, and -- was not all that concerned about my lawyers and their ethics. Let's say that. Well, and then he was annoyed. I can't believe Fisher said that. I can't believe -- you know, he was just, you know, talking out of his rear end basically. You know, basically saying that, "No, Fisher said that on the record, and I have to -- you guys are blowing it up into something it shouldn't be, and I don't -- and now, I have to deal with it." He did not offer solutions. Let's say that.

Q. Have you in your career with the public defender system ever been judicially determined to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. No.

Q. Have any of your attorneys that have worked -- that you have supervised, have they been judicially determined to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have a sense for how many?

A. No, I don't. I -- I don't know. I don't have a sense for how many. I mean, I -- it's not

50 percent. I mean, it's probably one a year.

Q. And I apologize, I'm going to be jumping all over the place. I'm going to be doing coverage to complete --

A. Sure.

Q. Earlier, you testified that forensic testing was one of the areas where it was denied a request for --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- for an expert. Are there any other examples of, I guess, categories that tend to get rejected?

MS. SHIPMA: And you're talking about from her office; right?

MR. RAMSEY: Yes.

A. Yeah. I don't know statewide, obviously. Well, I've had some experts, specific experts that people wanted that they were like, can you get cheaper? Can you get -- I'm -- I can't think of any right now.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Now, turning to the exhibits very briefly. I'm looking at exhibit that Plaintiffs have marked as 2, and it's entitled, "Duties under Missouri v. Frye"?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Do you remember receiving this document, or did you receive this document?
A. I assume I did. It's sent to me. Do I remember receiving it? No. I mean, it was sent to me in, I don't know, 2013; right?
Q. And presumably, the last time you saw this was whenever you had presumably seen it before?
A. Yeah. Or I mean, I may have forwarded it to the office. We may have discussed it at staff meeting. I don't -- I mean, I haven't pulled it out recently.
Q. Turning to Exhibit 3, what's been marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 3 --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- it was already mentioned, but you did not draft this letter, did you?
A. No.
Q. Were you involved in drafting this letter at all?
A. No.
Q. Did you have any knowledge beforehand that this letter was being drafted?
A. No.
Q. Turning to Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, did you have any knowledge that this was being drafted?

Page 194

A. No.
Q. Were you involved in the drafting process for this?
A. No.
Q. Were you consulted in any other way in the creation of that document?
A. I don't believe so. I mean, Pamela is someone that I do know who I chat with occasionally, but I don't have any recollection of talking to her about this.
Q. Okay. Turning to Plaintiff's Exhibit 6, so skipping over 5 --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- you were not familiar with the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel's decision to draft this letter, were you?
A. The -- this, I'm not as sure. I mean, there was a point when Joel sent something out and asked for input, and I don't know -- honestly, I don't know if this is it or not. But it had to do with counsel. It may have had to do with this letter; it may not have.
Q. Have you had any other conversations with MCRC?
A. Well, MCRC really isn't -- there's -- the guy who administrates it is -- he's officed in Saint Louis, and I'm not remembering his name. I don't know if it's in here.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Sherrer?
THE WITNESS: I'm sorry?
MR. WILLIAMSON: Sherrer?
THE WITNESS: Yeah. Michael Sherrer.
A. So Michael occasionally e-mails me just, "How many cases have you sent? What stage are things in?" Shook had their first two trials in the last month, and I think I e-mailed him, you know, their first trial went this way, something along those lines. I don't -- I don't -- it's not -- there's not, like, this corporate entity that reaches out. I mean, the e-mail, itself, is from Joel Elmer, who's our deputy director, so I -- Joel communicates on a regular -- he sends me all his old E-notices almost every other day so -- so I'm not sure -- I -- I guess I don't know what you mean by, "communicate with MCRC."
Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Sure. I was unclear, but I'll move on.
A. Sure. Okay.
Q. It's not a big --
Shortly after, I believe it was the

Page 196

Hinkebein decision --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- where the district defenders met and I believe it was some type of a conference --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- or a conversation?
Did I understand your testimony correctly to suggest that central office didn't provide a -- a list of, "Here are the three or four different things you can do to manage your -- your caseload or workload concerns"?
A. I wouldn't say -- I mean, they -- I think there was a presentation about what are the coverage of a Rule 4, what are the caseloads, stuff that talks, I -- there wasn't a directive that, you have to do these things and these things. There was -- there's, like, a sample Bar complaint against Michael Barrett if -- you know, if people wanted to do that, but it wasn't -- there wasn't a directive. In 2012, when people were being certified, there was a directive of how you were supposed to do it. You were supposed to meet with judges in a certain way. You're supposed to do these things. Your numbers had to be this level. There wasn't anything like that. But was it a large part of discussions at the management conference?

Certainly.
Q. And that discussion was amongst the district defenders --
A. Uh-huh. And --
Q. Or was it across --
A. Yeah. There were -- I -- there were presentations on it. There were district defenders that talked about it. We had small groups. I mean, people were very worried and upset about it. People were very concerned, and I was -- I mean, I was -- had -- before I went to the conference, I was getting -- I had multiple e-mails from my lawyers refusing cases, so it wasn't -- there was no way it wasn't going to be talked about.
Q. Again, I apologize for jumping around. I'm focusing on the second Chapter 600 motion that was filed on your behalf or that you filed.
A. Uh-huh.
Q. After that was denied, it's my understanding of your testimony that you did not appeal that particular denial; is that correct?
A. I have not. It was just denied a couple weeks ago, but yes.
MR. RAMSEY: Okay. I believe that's it for me.

Page 198

MR. WILLIAMSON: I have two follow-ups. Did you want --
MS. SHIPMA: I have some follow-ups too.
MR. WILLIAMSON: Go.
MS. SHIPMA: But I need to get -- I had Jillian -- or Gillian print out some documents for me --
MR. WILLIAMSON: Oh, okay.
MS. SHIPMA: -- for mine, so do you want to -- I'll just go off the record and go get those.
MR. WILLIAMSON: Sure. That's fine.
VIDEOGRAPHER: Off the record, 1:49 p.m.
(A brief recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: On the record, 1:52 p.m.
EXAMINATION
BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. Okay. Ruth, I have just a few follow-up questions for you.
When Mr. Ramsey was asking you about organizations you've communicated with, I -- I -- did you communicate with NACDL, N-A-C-D-L?
A. I did. Yes, I did. Well, Judge O'Malley asked me to participate a conference call, which I did. Sorry.
Q. And do you know what N-A-C-D-L stands for?

Page 199

A. The National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers.
Q. Okay. All right. I just wanted to make sure that --
A. Yes, thank you.
Q. -- we had that on the record, because I knew you were forgetting that.
A. I was.
Q. And just -- do you know -- and if you don't know this, that's fine. I just want to ask. Do you know if there is -- if -- if failure to be -- to act diligently is the same as ineffective assistance of counsel? Are those the same standards?
A. My understanding is they're very different standards.
Q. And is that the same for not communicating regularly with your client under the ethics rules, is that the same standard as ineffective assistance of counsel?
A. No. They're different standard.
Q. Okay. Thank you.
(Petsch Exhibit 10 was marked for identification.)
Q. Now, I want to hand you what's been marked Exhibit 10. Can you tell me what that is?

Page 200

A. It's the first page of the Public Defender 18 CSR10-3.010.
Q. Flip it over.
A. Oh.
Q. It's on the back.
A. Thank you. That makes more sense. Guidelines for Determination of Indigence.
Q. And are you familiar with those?
A. Yeah. Again, I can't recite them, but if I go back to them -- and they're used regularly in my office.
Q. And who promulgates these? Are these created by your office?
A. No. Not by my office.
Q. Do you know who creates those?
A. I assume -- I guess that -- in my head, it was the legislature. I don't know if the commission does that or not.
Q. Okay. So if you don't know the answer to that --
A. I don't.
Q. -- that's fine.
Okay. But you have seen those before?
A. Yes.
Q. And you're familiar with those?

Page 201

A. Yes.
Q. And do those contain, as far as you are aware, the factors that are to be considered in determining indigency?
A. Yes.
(Petsch Exhibit 11 was marked for identification.)
Q. Okay. All right. So now, I want to hand you Exhibit 11, and I believe the sticker is on the front page of that one --
A. Okay.
Q. -- so you don't have to turn it over. Can you tell me what that is?
A. This is an application for public defender services and the promise to pay.
Q. And when you were talking earlier about determining indigency and making that determination in court or maybe it comes back to the office, is this the form that you were referring to?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Actually, I do want you to look at the back page of this document for just a moment. Do you see the section that's entitled "Acknowledgement and Promise to Pay"?
A. Yes.

Page 202

Q. And can you read the first sentence of that to me?
A. "I understand that lying on this application constitutes a crime."
Q. And is there a place for the applicant's signature and date below that?
A. Yes.
Q. So applicants know when they are filling this out that if they don't give correct information, that could result in their being further charged; is that correct?
A. Yes. They should know.
Q. At least they're put on notice of that?
A. Right.
Q. And do you believe that the people who are going over these applications with the defendants point that out to them?
A. Yes. Most of time, they read it to them, and then have them -- I mean, a lot of our clients are in cuffs, so they read the entire application and fill in the answers, and then have them sign.
Q. Okay.
A. They allow them to review it. They don't fill it out in secret or anything, but a lot of it's read.

Page 203

(Petsch Exhibit 12 was marked for identification.)
Q. Okay. Now, I'm going to hand you what's been marked Exhibit 12. Can you tell me what that is, please?
A. Instructions for determining indigence.
Q. Have you ever seen this document before?
A. I have.
Q. And what is this document used for?
A. It's basically instructions on how to figure out whether someone -- well, to take an application.
Q. And --
A. Or assistance in doing that.
Q. Is this something that's used internally rather than something that's given to applicants?
A. I don't think -- yeah. I don't -- I -- we do not give this to applicants.
Q. Okay. Look at the second paragraph. Can you read that second paragraph to me?
A. "If the applicant's income level is at or below federal poverty guidelines, there is a presumption of eligibility unless other factors such as assets indicate the ability to hire a private attorney."

Page 204

Q. And I apologize. That was my fault. I didn't realize that the paragraph I was intending for you to read doesn't really have a number on it, but it is the second -- if you look --
A. Oh, the second -- oh, not number 2. Sure.
Q. The first paragraph, not number 2. But the second paragraph.
A. "If the applicant is unemployed and receiving public assistance, he or she is eligible for services. No further inquiry need be made. This is true even if the applicant has posted bond."
Q. So that's a bright line; is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Now, let's look at paragraph number 2.
A. Okay.
Q. The one that's numbered 2 --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- that you read to me before. It -- does that implicate a bright line?
A. Well, it says other factors -- to me, it wouldn't, but I mean, it tells you what factors you can consider. If -- I don't -- I guess I don't -- if -- if you indicate -- call that a bright line or not.
Q. Okay. And then look at the paragraph numbered 3. Can you read that?

A. "An income level above federal poverty guidelines gives rise to a presumption of ineligibility" --
(Reporter admonishment.)
THE WITNESS: Sorry.
A. "An income level above federal poverty guidelines gives rise to a presumption of ineligibility unless individual circumstances such as debt level indicates an inability to hire a private attorney."
Q. (By Ms. Shipma) Okay. And I believe that that is also -- as I'm understanding these instructions, the only presumption, the only bright line presumption --
A. Uh-huh.
Q. -- is if you're unemployed and receiving some sort of public assistance, you're automatically eligible for services?
A. Right.
Q. In all other case, even if you're at the federal -- or even if you're at or below the poverty guidelines, you're not automatically presumed eligible for services. You have to look at these other factors; is that correct?

A. Right.
Q. In your opinion, with your office, do your attorneys represent many people who aren't eligible for services who have the ability to hire private attorneys?
A. No.
Q. So there isn't this rash of -- of eligible -- or of -- of people who are able to hire attorneys snookering the system and getting our attorneys all bogged down in all their cases; is that correct?
A. That's not my understanding. I mean, most of our clients think it's -- they don't -- they think we're really bad lawyers, so if they have the ability to not have us represent them, they try very hard to get out of it.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay. That's all I have.
MR. RAMSEY: I have a very few brief follow-ups, if I can.
MR. WILLIAMSON: I do, but go ahead.
MR. RAMSEY: I can wait.
MR. WILLIAMSON: No. Go ahead.
EXAMINATION
BY MR. RAMSEY:
Q. Very briefly, questions concerning

Defendant's -- or Plaintiff's 12. Where did this document come from?
A. Well, I think this was sent out, if I recall correctly -- they update the application, and they've updated it many times frequently, as well as how it should be looked at. I think it's been updated twice in the last two years. So I think it was sent out as an assistant, because it -- because some things -- there were other bright line tests that were -- like, it used to be if you maid made a $5,000 bond, you were ineligible. It didn't -- it didn't matter how poor you were or things like that. So with that, there's often sort of assistive documents that are sent out to help -- like, my legal assistants who do the bulk of filling this out, to help them come to the right conclusions, because I still have lawyers who I'm like, no, $5,000 doesn't -- that's not a -- that's not a consideration any more, but it was in our office probably for ten years. And the private attorney that we talked about, like, you -- we used to automatically disqualify people if they had a private attorney, and then that changed.
Q. And this is coming from central office?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And then just the second question and my last question, and I'll be done.

A. Uh-huh.
Q. Concerning how you would know the financial affluence of a particular defendant, how would know if there's not a control mechanism after the fact, or is that just your sense of -- of who's coming in and out?
A. Yeah. I mean, based on -- I mean, we have a number of people who are homeless who don't have phones that we can't contact. I guess they could lie about it. But we also have people who clearly haven't showered, who are missing teeth, who -- you know, I mean, we have a lot of people who, if you had funds, and you had the kind of funds that you could hold an -- have an attorney, you probably wouldn't be living your the life the way you are. You wouldn't be showing up for court. So I mean, there's some extreme poverty that people just wear.
MR. RAMSEY: I'm done.
MR. WILLIAMSON: Fewer than five minutes.
EXAMINATION
BY MR. WILLIAMSON:
Q. If the public defender's office determines that a person is not eligible for its services, can that decision be appealed by the defendant?
A. Yes.

Page 209

Q. To the trial judge?
A. Or to the -- I mean, the associates. Any -- really, any judge they're in front of, and it -- if they want us, it normally is.
Q. And is that the context in which judges end up appointing you, even to cases where you've determined that the person is not eligible?
A. Yes.
Q. Do judges make that determination even when there's not a formal appeal filed by the defendant?
A. Well, they -- they almost never file anything. They -- they walk up to the bunch, "Do you have a lawyer?" "No." "Did you apply for the public defender?" "I did, but they said I don't qualify," and then a lot of times, the judges go right into, "Well, how much money do you make?" "Why can't you afford someone?" It's almost always fewer than ten questions; a lot of times, fewer than five questions. And they almost always appoint us anyway. So I know the last time we were audited, the auditors asked me over and over, "Why did the judge even appoint you?" And I'm like, "I am not the judge. I have no idea." But we get appointed a lot.
Q. And do you ever find or do your lawyers ever find themselves in adversarial proceedings against indigent defendants who they then end up representing?

A. It's definitely happened. I mean, I -- personally, I'd move to withdraw. I was allowed to withdraw on a murder where -- we had two murder cases he bonded, and I ended up on the stand with him questioning me for an hour about policies. So it's certainly happened, and it's certainly bad for the relationship. But less so -- and I mean, I would say that our guidelines -- we have fewer bright line rules than we used to, and our guidelines don't -- you know, the bond isn't a rule any more. The private attorney isn't a rule any more, and those things probably provided more of the -- and truth be told, it -- you can say, "I have this," but ultimately, the judge can appoint you anyway. Unless you're going appeal that appointment or you're going to writ the judge on it, there's not much we can do.
Q. And does your office ever take that route of appealing the judge?
A. We writted once. We had an attorney who I think the Friday before trial hired a private attorney, and they ordered us to stay on, and we writted the judge on that, and we were successful in that writ. Mostly because my lawyer is like, I'm -- now, I'm not ready to try the -- but I don't -- I don't know that we've ever -- I -- I'm sure we have. I just -- in recent history, I don't know the last time we writted a judge on that.

Q. Final thing, you testified earlier that you've never had a request for a deposition denied?
A. I don't -- well, again, tweaked -- me, personally, have a request for a deposition --
Q. So let's start there.
A. I don't -- no. I don't think I've ever personally had a request for a deposition denied.
Q. And -- and you have never outright denied an applicant -- or a request from one of your attorneys for a deposition?
A. No. I mean, I've asked them to edit it, I've asked them to -- more information, to change things, but I've -- I've never just said, "denied" without -- I don't -- the only time -- the only denials I have are usually if they have a request that I've asked them to edit, because I'll have some denials come up in the computer, but it's generally because they then pled the case, didn't spend any money, and they did -- they didn't make the edits in a timely manner, so now, it's moved because the case is done, and I'll deny it. But I haven't -- I don't -- I have no memory of ever just outright denying a deposition request.

Q. And you -- and you've -- have personally never been denied an expert request either?
A. Not -- no. Not to my -- I don't ever remember that.
Q. And to your knowledge, none of the lawyers in your office have ever been denied an expert?
A. Well, they've had requests denied. I mentioned that forensic expert. And again, I'm -- things have been denied. It's usually due to cost. Now, the question is, did they then not get another expert that was affordable or something along those lines? And that, I don't know. If it's a flat -- I -- I assume you're saying, flat-out denial; now, I don't have an expert.
Q. Right.
A. That, I'm not as clear on.
Q. Okay. And is it fair to say that -- well, strike that.
You've also testified here today that you believe that your office ideally should be retaining many more experts than it actually does?
A. Yes.
Q. You also testified that your lawyers should be taking many more depositions than they do?

A. Yes.
Q. Okay. So is it fair to say to that there are certain -- there are a significant number of requests for experts that simply -- that would be appropriate, but that are just not made?
A. Right.
Q. And is it also true that there are a significant number of requests for depositions that would be appropriate, but are not made?
A. Right.

THE WITNESS: I do.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. MAUNE:

Q. Morning, Ms. Fox.

A. Good morning.

Q. Have you had your deposition taken before?

A. I have.

Q. I'll just cover a few basic ground rules. If you could please answer your questions with a verbal response, not with hand gestures or head shakes.

A. Okay.

Q. We'll try and avoid talking over each other. I'll try -- and if you let me try and complete the question before answering, even if you can anticipate the answer, and I'll try not to talk over you by asking another question. Does that sound reasonable?

A. That sounds reasonable.

Q. If you don't understand one of my questions, please let me know and I'll rephrase or be more specific as necessary, and if -- we'll frequently take breaks during this as we need to, and if you could please answer any pending questions prior to the break.

A. All right.

Q. All sound agreeable?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. How did you prepare for this deposition today?

A. I met with Ms. Shipma yesterday.

Q. And who else was present?

A. No one.

Page 9

Q. How long did you meet for?
A. Maybe an hour.
Q. Did you review any documents in preparation for this deposition?
A. Not while she was present, but I did look at the case management database.
Q. Okay. Did you bring any of those documents with you today?
A. I did not.
Q. Did any of those documents refresh your recollection in preparation for offering testimony here today?
A. I don't -- I already knew the facts that were in them. I was just looking at the actual numbers.
Q. Besides your counsel, did you speak with anyone else to prepare to testify here today?
A. No.
Q. And can you please state your position?
A. I'm the district defender for the St. Louis City trial office of the Missouri State Public Defender System.
Q. And how long have you held that position?
A. Ten years.

Q. And what was your position prior to that?
A. Prior to that I was in private practice doing contract work for the St. Louis city juvenile court representing parents who were facing the loss of their children in care and protection cases. And in addition doing some other legal work, mainly around juvenile court.
Q. And how long were you in private practice for?
A. So in that position I was there from 2000 until 2007.
Q. And what was your employment prior to the year 2000?
A. So from 1994 until 2006 I was the traffic commissioner for the 21st Judicial Circuit. That was a part-time job. So part of the time that was all that I was doing and another part of the time I was also handling the contract work.
And then prior to that -- or during that same time I should say I was also serving as a hearing officer for the St. Louis Metropolitan Police Department internal affairs division hearing disciplinary cases for the Board of Police Commissioners.

Q. And prior to 1994 did you have any other legal jobs?
A. Yes. From nineteen eighty -- 1981 until 1987 I was a assistant public defender initially in the Clayton office and then in 1986 I transferred to the St. Louis City trial office. And prior to that I was an associate at a small civil firm named Kanefield, K-A-N-E-F-I-E-L-D, and Mohme, M-O-H-M-E.
Q. Okay. So you said from -- you testified that 1981 to 1987 you were an assistant public defender in the Clayton office. Did you have any legal jobs prior to 1981?
A. Yes. At Kanefield & Mohme.
Q. Okay. Kanefield & Mohme. And when did you start at Kanefield Mohme?
A. Right after I was sworn in. So October 1980.
Q. Okay. Great.
A. But I was in the Clayton office and the St. Louis City office. From '86 to '87 it was the St. Louis City office.
Q. And when you were at Kanefield & Mohme did you handle criminal defense?
A. No, I did not.

Page 12

Q. What type of practice did you maintain?
A. It was civil.
Q. Civil.
A. Small civil actions generally.
Q. Which counties are included in your district? That would be area 22, correct?
A. So the district covers the City of St. Louis.
Q. Okay.
A. Prior to July of 2017 we also handled conflict cases from the surrounding jurisdictions. And we still have many of those conflict cases pending.
Q. And so after July 2017 any new conflict cases are no longer handled by public defenders in the St. Louis City office; is that correct?
A. Unless the new conflict case is for a client that we currently represent in one of those conflict counties, then we get the new case also.
Q. We'll talk about conflicts more later on. How is -- how is your office organized? How many -- we'll start off with how many district public defenders do you have in your office, attorneys?
A. So there are 30 attorneys in the office.

Q. Okay. And do you organize by case team or do you have an assistant and -- and how -- are those attorneys broken up into different teams or are they just assigned individual dockets?

A. They are assigned to cases.

Q. Assigned to cases. And do you handle that assignment yourself?

A. I do.

Q. Do -- do you have any -- an assistant district defender in area 22?

A. I do.

Q. And what does -- do you task the assistant district defender with?

A. Currently she is -- it is Sarah Johnson is the deputy district defender.

Q. Okay.

A. And she is also MSPD's director of juvenile justice and policy. So she spends about 50 percent of her time on that responsibility. The other 50 percent of her time is spent training the new attorneys.

Q. Does she maintain a docket of cases?

A. She had a docket prior to assuming this position, and she is still resolving many of those cases. The hope is that she will not have a docket once those cases are resolved.

Q. Okay. Do you maintain a docket of cases?

A. I don't maintain a docket, but I have clients who have cases.

Q. Okay. Do you know how many clients who have cases that you handle in any given year on average?

A. I would say it averages anywhere between 15 to 30. Open at one time.

Q. Right.

A. So over the course of a year maybe 20 to 40.

Q. Do all -- so that would leave 28 additional public defenders in your office; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And do all the public defenders handle felony cases?

A. Yes.

Q. And all of them handle misdemeanor cases?

A. Yes.

Q. And how do you assign juvenile cases?

Page 15

A. So Sarah Johnson was our juvenile specialist. She's been trained as a juvenile specialist. So we're in the midst of a transition. Prior to her assuming this new position the cases were assigned either to her or to another attorney who had been trained in juvenile.

We're now training an additional group of attorneys and I actually have a meeting today with those who are interested in becoming juvenile practitioners.

Q. So currently aside from Sarah Johnson, are there any attorneys that are specifically designated to handle juvenile cases?

A. Not only juvenile cases. So they would have juvenile cases, but also adult cases.

Q. Okay. And you're anticipating the number of attorneys trained specifically for juvenile cases to increase after further training?

A. Correct.

Q. And -- but you don't anticipate having any of those attorneys exclusively working on juvenile cases, it will be in addition to adult cases, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. How many of your attorneys handle probation revocation cases?

A. All of them.

Q. All of them.

A. Including myself.

Q. How many handle direct appeals?

A. We seldom handle direct appeals. There are times when there is a case that we lose at trial that we choose to keep the appeal ourself. I think we've done that three times in the last year.

Q. So normally in cases that your public defenders have handled, your representation would end after filing the notice of appeal; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And then the appellate division would normally take over the case if it were to continue?

A. Correct.

Q. Correct. Are there any other types of cases that are handled by your office that I have not mentioned?

A. We've filed several writs that have come out of felony cases.

Q. Okay.

A. We have handled some unconditional release cases and we have handled some habeas cases as a result of mental health confinement. And then we also have a few cases that we classify them as either witness or possible case where someone comes and applies for services, but a case has not yet been issued.

Q. Okay. Trying to get a feeling for the experience level of the attorneys in your office. How -- how long is the most experienced lawyer in your office been practicing law?

A. So that would be me.

Q. Correct.

A. Since 1980.

Q. And then how about after you, who is the -- I guess the second most experienced?

A. That would be Matthew Waltz, and he has been practicing for 13 years.

Q. And then how long has the least experienced attorney in your office been practicing law?

A. So we have three attorneys who were just licensed in October. Or September. I think they moved it up to September.

Q. And how do the other attorneys fall in? Would you say the majority have more -- the majority of the rest of the attorneys have more or less than ten years of experience practicing?

A. Significantly less.

Q. Significantly less. Okay. When you're assigning cases, can you go over how when new cases come in your process for assigning them to the attorneys in area 22?

A. So when an application comes in it goes to a legal assistant.

Q. Okay.

A. And the legal assistant evaluates the application and does a Case.net search to find out more information about that case and about that person. Such as do we already represent them, do we represent a co-defendant, does that case -- that person have another case in which a private attorney is involved?

And then based upon the information in the application and that Case.net search, that legal assistant makes an indigence determination. Once the indigence determination is made, the application as well as the complaint or information or indictment and the Case.net entries is provided to me and then I assign off of a rolling assignment sheet.

Q. Do you base your assignment in part on the seriousness of the charges in -- in that case?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you also base your assignment on the experience level of the attorneys in your office that are receiving the case?

A. Yes.

Q. How about paralegals, how many paralegals do you have on staff in area 22?

A. None.

Q. None. How many investigators do you have on staff?

A. Four.

Q. Do the investigators work directly for the attorneys on a rolling basis as needed?

A. The investigators are assigned to cases. So if an attorney requests investigation that is assigned to one of the investigators, and then that investigator remains the investigator for that case for any future investigation.

Q. Are the investigators assigned to the case when the case is opened or is it assigned to the case on an as-needed basis?

A. On an as-needed basis.

Q. Okay.

A. It has to be done by a request from the attorney.

Page 20

Q. Okay. How many administrative assistants do you have working in area 22?

A. How do you define administrative assistants? So I have them classified in different positions.

Q. Please discuss like how would -- how would your office, an employee that would handle administrative actions, I don't know if that's a clerk or what might have been a legal secretary or assistant --

A. So I have an office manager.

Q. Okay.

A. And then five of our support staff are legal assistants and three are clerks.

Q. Okay. So can you describe the responsibilities for the -- of the office manager?

A. The office manager takes care of all the budgetary issues in terms of approving bills for payment by the office in Columbia, does all the contact with the building in terms of maintenance, keeps track of people's comings and goings, and also does some docket management for our felony docket in circuit court.

Q. And your five support staff, how are they assigned? Are they assigned to work on cases?

A. No. They are -- the legal assistants and the clerks all have specific jobs, which include docket management if they're a legal assistant, and then secretarial support to attorneys. And then we have one clerk who does the file closing, the archiving of files and several other responsibilities.
Q. Are the -- who does the initial -- I guess if the right word is screening for indigency requirements, is that one of those five support staffs or three legal clerks?
A. It's one of the legal assistants.
Q. One of the legal assistants, okay. Are there any other employees that we have not mentioned that work in area 22?
A. No. One of our attorneys is classified as a JDMSW.
Q. Okay. What does the abbreviation JDMSW mean?
A. So he is an attorney, but he is also -- has a master's in social work.
Q. Oh.
A. So we transitioned an attorney position to that position so that we would have some social work services within the office.

Q. Does the JDMSW position carry a normal -- well, carry a caseload?
A. He carries the caseload of any of our clients who are currently in treatment or diversion court, as well as he assists the attorneys who are dealing with either mental health issues or mitigation issues for their clients.
Q. Can you describe your day-to-day responsibilities as district defender for area 22?
A. Combination of client contact, case -- personal case management, taking care of the administrative responsibilities in the office of authorizing payment of bills, approving E requests, assigning action items to investigators, speaking with attorneys concerning their cases, and working along with the circuit on circuit-wide issues.
Q. Do you attend trials or I guess observe trials for any of your district defenders for evaluation purposes?
A. I do.
Q. And do you -- are you in charge of approving encumbrance requests?
A. I am.
Q. Do you approve requests for depositions

Page 23

for --
A. I do.
Q. Do you approve leave for your office?
A. I do.
Q. I didn't hear mention, do you have a specific position as a human resources manager, or does that fall within your purview as well?
A. We have a human resources manager in Columbia.
Q. Okay.
A. But all of the hiring work that occurs in the local office, the deputy district defender and I do.
Q. Do you draft attorney performance reviews?
A. I do.
Q. And how much time do you spend on administrative tasks versus substantive legal work?
A. Can you define substantive legal work?
Q. So if you're working with clients themselves and their legal issues or working either for yourself, clients that you're handling or clients that your attorneys are handling as opposed to running and administering the office from a budgeting, a scheduling, a hiring, a performance review, that would be more administrative.

A. I would estimate 70 percent administrative, 30 percent client or legal.
Q. Do you have some discretion with respect to setting policies in your office?
A. Yes.
Q. What kind of policies do you have discretion in setting?
A. Dress code, coming and going, like office hours. Second chair expectations, things like that.
Q. Are these policies written down and promulgated to your employees or -- or in a -- in a set -- I'm aware that the public defenders office sends things out to the various offices that they want policies they want set. Do you have any subsequent set of policies that get promulgated to the attorneys in your office?
A. There's some local area policies that are available to all of the staff on the computer.
Q. And how are the policies in your office developed?
A. Through experience.
Q. If I use the term vertical representation, do you have an understanding what that means?

A. Yes.
Q. And do -- does area 22 currently utilize vertical representation for clients?
A. Yes.
(Exhibit 11, Previously marked exhibit.)
(Exhibit 12, Previously marked exhibit.)
MR. MAUNE: Produce previously introduced exhibits 11 and 12.
MS. SHIPMA: What did you say?
MR. MAUNE: I'm going to produce previously used exhibits that are marked as Petsch Exhibit 11 and -- give you a copy. And then Petsch Exhibit 12. Take a minute to review and let me know when.
THE WITNESS: Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) I'll start with Exhibit 11. Is this the -- a form that area 22 uses to screen potential clients for indigency?
A. We've altered it a little bit.
Q. Can you explain how it was altered?
A. We put a really big arrow where it says applicant signature, and I think wrote something like you must sign here.
Q. Okay.

Page 26

A. And then I believe because we receive many of our applications by mail there was information added as to how to return the application to us.
Q. Okay. You've added mailing address for --
A. Yes.
Q. How do potential clients first get ahold of this form to complete if they're seeking representation?
A. So they can download it off the web, off the public website. They can request it from the court or they can request it from a social worker at jail or they can come to the office if they are not in custody and ask for an application.
Q. If the potential clients are in custody, does the jail mail or fax these back to your office for consideration?
A. We pick up mail from the jail daily.
Q. Okay.
A. With no postage requirement.
Q. Okay. And then one of the clerks reviews this form and makes a determination --
A. Yes.
Q. -- whether or not the potential client is indigent or not indigent?

Page 27

A. Correct.
Q. And after this is completed, if they're determined to be indigent, a case would be opened?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you have an estimate of how many forms you receive that the case is determined that the potential client is not indigent or not qualified?
A. I do not have that figure off the top of my head. I would tell you that there are a number of cases that are initially denied for probation violations because the court has not yet made a due process determination, and then the person may eventually be -- the court may eventually make that determination and be accepted, but I do not have a figure for how many are denied.
Q. Does the court determination for due process violation put this determination on hold for determining indigency?
A. The indigence determination is made.
Q. Okay.
A. The eligibility determination is that they're not eligible.
Q. Okay. And do judges in area 22 assign your office to represent defendants even in cases where you've made a determination at least as to this form that they're not indigent?

A. They don't assign -- they don't appoint us on anything.
Q. They don't appoint you on anything.
A. We do have an indigence docket in which they consider the appeals of our indigence determination.
Q. And how often -- is it frequent that the indigence docket will determine that the potential defendant is -- is qualified for services from the public defenders office when a determination has been previously made that the potential client is not indigent?
A. So we have the docket about once -- we have it once a month.
Q. Okay.
A. And at each docket approximately five to ten applicants are determined to be eligible that had not previously been determined to be eligible.
Q. And on that docket or hearing of the five to ten that are determined to be eligible, how many were considered, estimate?
A. I don't understand.

Page 29

Q. How many -- how many potential cases for that docket are heard where five to ten --
A. Probably ten to 20. So about 50 percent of the cases.
Q. Okay. You previously stated you handle 15 to 30 cases open at any one time; is that correct?
A. Personally?
Q. Personally.
A. Yes.
Q. And are these particular types of cases that you handle?
A. They tend to be. I mean, there's not a preplan that this is the type of case I will get, but I tend to have the cases where there are serious mental health issues and there's questions of whether or not the person is competent to proceed, and because we have so few attorneys with experience I have a large number of homicide cases.
(Exhibit 28, Previously marked exhibit.)
MR. MAUNE: This has previously been introduced as Wallace Exhibit Number 28.
THE WITNESS: Do you want these back?
MR. MAUNE: You can keep them there. Wallace Number 28. Do you have that?

Page 30

MS. SHIPMA: Let me see. Yeah.
MR. MOORE: Thanks.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Have you seen this document before?
A. I have.
Q. And what is this document?
A. The Missouri State Public Defender caseload crisis protocol that was issued in 2007.
Q. Did you participate in this commission study in any way?
A. The 2006 study? No.
Q. I guess you didn't start until 2007.
A. Right.
Q. Okay. On page five, if you can turn to page five, it lists attorney hours available for casework, and it comes up with a figure of 1,752 average available hours per attorney per year. Would you -- do you believe this is an accurate number of attorney hours for the attorneys in area 22?
A. The 2340 or the 1752?
Q. 1752.
A. And what do you mean by accurate?
Q. Do you find that your attorneys spend more or less than 1752 average hours per attorney per year on cases?

A. Depends on where the attorney is in their stage. So if it's an attorney who is trying a lot of cases they probably spend more than that. If it's an attorney who is brand-new they might spend close to that.
Q. And so the attorneys -- how long do you think -- back up.
How long do you think attorneys in your office would be prepared or trained to try many cases? How long do you think that process takes?
MR. MOORE: I guess I'll object to the form of the question, but you can go ahead and --
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Yeah.
A. And I'm -- I'm not certain I understand your question.
Q. So from when a new public defender starts as a one, how long before they are significantly trained and ready to handle a significant number of cases where you think they might be exceeding that 1752 number?
A. How long do I think they should be trained before they're significantly ready? About a year to 18 months. How long do they practice before they begin trying cases, often less than that, sometimes that amount of time. So we've had attorneys in their first year in the office try five, six, seven jury trials. In their first year of practice also.

Q. And do you find it common for attorneys in your office to work overtime or exceed the 1750 number?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you find it's common for them to work on weekends?
A. Yes.
Q. Do attorneys in your office receive extra compensation for either overtime or working weekends?
A. No.
(Exhibit 21, Previously marked exhibit.)
MR. MAUNE: I'm going to use previously marked Exhibit 21, although we're trying to give the previous copy we used. I'll produce both. Had a typographical -- the printout didn't go well, so it's the same document, but I have a better produced copy.
THE WITNESS: Okay.
MR. MOORE: Is this all the same thing?
MR. MAUNE: Yeah. It should be.

Page 33

MR. MOORE: Is this the same thing?
MR. MAUNE: It's the same. It's just the cover.
MR. MOORE: Okay. Oh, I got you. All right.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Have you seen this document before?
A. Not in the complete form, no.
Q. Do you provide any information that gets incorporated into these reports?
A. Our database does. So we provide -- we put -- input information into the database, which is then used in these reports.
Q. Okay. I'd like to turn to page seven. It says title State Public Defender Cumulative Caseload Metrics Fiscal Year 2017. And -- and if I -- I look at -- there's a column that has District 22 listed, St. Louis City, and it states 30 attorneys. Is that accurate?
A. That's accurate.
Q. And it says -- this is for last fiscal year, right?
A. Yes.
Q. So for fiscal year '17. There were 4262 cases initiated. Does that appear accurate?

Page 34

A. It does.
Q. And has a number of new cases and then it comes up with a net case units. Do you see that? It says 89,515?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know how that number or what -- or what the term net case unit means?
A. I believe it's the number of cases initiated minus the number of cases withdrawn from within the first 30 days times the RubinBrown metric for number of hours per case.
Q. Okay. And then there's a column that says -- it's third to the last, and it says capacity, and it says 62,400. Do you know how that number is calculated?
A. Number of attorneys times a number of hours per year.
Q. And does that number at least seem accurate?
A. Yes.
Q. And finally, it has a number or percentage of capacity and it's 163.5 percent. Does that -- do you understand what that's trying to portray?
A. That we are 163.5 percent of the capacity of 62,400 hours.

Q. Do you believe that figure to accurately portray the workload for your office?
MR. MOORE: Just object to the form of the question. I think it's pretty vague. Subject to that, you can respond of course.
A. We're overloaded, so it accurately portrays that, yes.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Okay. Do you receive reports quarterly that would show the district defender this figure for their particular office?
A. No.
MR. MAUNE: This would be the first new document, so it would be Fox 32. I'm introducing what is identified as Public Defender document Bates number 0039426. It's titled Order Concerning Probation Revocation Hearing.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 32, Order Concerning Probation Revocation Hearing, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Are you familiar with this form?
A. I am.
Q. Can you please explain what it is?
A. We call it the due process order that the 22nd Judicial Circuit uses to make a -- to notify us of a determination they have made whether or not the defendant in a probation violation hearing is entitled to counsel.

Q. And did you have a role in creating this -- this form?
A. I did.
Q. And can you briefly explain how the process works for using this form?
A. If a judge has a probationer who he would like to call before him for a violation of his probation conditions, the judge makes a determination based on one of the factors included in this form as to whether or not that probationer needs counsel. And then files this form in the probationer's case and sends it to our office.
Q. And the judge that is filing this form or -- or using this form does so without at least initially the public defender reviewing the form, so the -- so the judge would have the case come in that they have a probation -- or that they want to consider revoking the probation, they would look at the facts of the case, the judge would complete this form, and then what happens to the form after that?
MR. MOORE: Also object to the form of the question. I think it's compound and vague. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. So hopefully they send it to us.

Q. (By Mr. Maune) Okay.

A. And if we have an application from that probationer and we have determined that they are indigent, then we would assign an attorney to the case who would enter their appearance.

Q. And you would only assign them an attorney if one of the boxes is checked in the upper portion of the form under label one; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. So if -- is it any -- would you only -- would the -- would you assign an attorney if any one of the boxes is checked or could there be multiple boxes checked or -- I mean, I assume it could be that the defendant does not appear to -- capable of speaking effectively and they made a timely or culpable claim. It just has to be one of these; is that correct?

A. It's usually just one, but it can sometimes be more than one.

Q. If -- does -- are there any times that you receive this form from a judge where one of the boxes is checked below, but the facts of the case suggest that the person on probation should have an attorney present?

MR. MOORE: Also objection to the form of the question. I think that's vague, argumentative, calls for speculation as well. Subject to that, you can respond.

A. So we wouldn't have contact with that probationer to know that fact. If we are representing the probationer on another case, we may then bring this to the court's attention that we would like them to make a due process determination, but if the person has just a probation revocation, we wouldn't know about it.

Q. (By Mr. Maune) Okay. So you wouldn't -- you wouldn't know about it because you wouldn't have received an indigency request from them yet or --

A. Well, we may have received an indigence request and we would -- if we did not have this form with one of the boxes in number one checked, we would tell the applicant to speak to the judge about whether or not due process requires counsel. And we would initially turn them down, not because they're not indigent, but because they're not eligible.

Q. On the first line in the first box it says (quote as read):

Defendant is currently on an SIS probation which the court may revoke.

Can you explain what SIS probation is?

A. Suspended imposition of sentence, so the court has not given the person a sentence. There's been no formal sentencing of the probationer.

Q. Okay. And then in the boxes in box two below it has the term SES. (Quote as read):

Defendant has an SES and agrees that he violated his probation.

Can you please explain for the record what SES is?

A. Suspended execution of sentence where the court has imposed a sentence but has not yet executed it. So there would be a term of years or a fine or a term of days which the court has imposed but has not executed.

Q. How did you come up with the different conditions for I guess blocks one and two?

A. I didn't come up with them. Judge Julian Bush and Judge Philip Heagney are the two who actually created the form, and they created the form based upon the case law.

Q. Has this form ever been challenged subsequently to its use?

A. No.

Q. And how long have these forms been in use for?

A. The initial one was created in 2012 after the Waters hearing. It was a little bit different at that time because at that time we were also limiting probation violation cases being accepted for other reasons.

Q. And what was area 22's policies prior to the Waters decision?

A. On probation violation cases?

Q. Of probation violation cases.

A. That if the person applied and was indigent, that we would enter an attorney's appearance.

Q. And then subsequent to the Waters decision?

A. Well, it didn't just come from the Waters decision. It came from the change in the statute in terms of what cases were eligible for public defender representation. So when 600 I think it's 046, 042 was changed, then this was consistent with that.

Q. To your knowledge, do any other areas use either this form or a version of this form in making decisions regarding probation revocation hearings?
A. I don't know. I know we have provided it to judges in other circuits when we have been asked to handle conflict cases in those circuits that were probation violations.
Q. Has the -- the implementation of these procedures with using this form and the initial determinations reduced attorney workload for area 22 public defenders?
A. So prior to the use of this form we opened approximately a thousand probation violation cases a year. After this form was implemented that number was reduced to about 500. It has slowly crept back up, and I believe now we're on pace to open probably 750 to 800 probation violations a year.
Q. And when the number of probation violation cases that you have opened this year is creeping up, do you have a sense whether that's because more defendants have a right to an attorney and according to this determination or is it just the number of cases that the courts are seeing are going up?

MR. MOORE: Just object to the form and also to the foundation, I think calls for speculation, but you can go ahead.
A. I think it's a combination of two things. One is that we've had a substantial number of experienced judges retire and the judges who are newer to the bench would rather have an attorney there, and then also because the number of cases has increased.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Do you have any way to monitor the outcome for probation revocation hearings for cases in which attorneys are not assigned?
A. No.
(Exhibit 1, Previously marked exhibit.)
MR. MAUNE: I'll introduce what's been previously introduced as Petsch Document 1.
MR. MOORE: Can I get a copy of that probation form, not now necessarily, but at a break or something?
MR. MAUNE: Yeah.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Have you seen this document before?

Page 43

A. No.
Q. Having reviewed the con -- the content of it, does this document specify the minimum client contact times promulgated by the Missouri Public Defenders Office?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you monitor client contact time for the attorneys in area 22?
A. I don't monitor on a daily basis, no. The attorneys are aware of the client contact requirements. When they're reviewed for appraisal I review their -- some of their cases randomly, but I do not look on a daily basis to see if they are meeting this requirement. If I have a complaint from a client about lack of contact, then I would review it.
Q. What do you consider a qualifying contact? And I'll start off with a client that's in custody.
A. Seeing the client in jail.
Q. And how about a client that's out of custody?
A. Seeing the client either in office or for a meeting. Sometimes we go to their home, but generally it would be in the office.

Q. To the best of your knowledge, do the public defenders in area 22 meet the expectations that are delineated in this memo?
A. No.
Q. And do you have an idea why they cannot meet these limitations?
A. Because the amount of time they spend either in court on cases that are before the court or in preparation for cases that are assigned out to trial or in other client contacts, it's -- it's not possible.
Q. Do the -- for the -- for the clients that are in custody, is there a confidential place in the jails that are in St. Louis city for the attorneys to meet with their clients?
A. There is a place. The jail has deemed it confidential, but it is not confidential.
Q. And to your best of your ability, why is that place not confidential?
A. So we have two jails in the city of St. Louis. One is the St. Louis City Justice Center. And the professional visiting booth there, you can hear what is being said in the booth either outside in the social visiting area or inside in the cell area depending on which side you're on.

So you can either hear what the defendant is saying or what the attorney is saying. There is also a space for contact visits, but the jail staff has access to those contact visit rooms and can listen in to those contact visit rooms.

In the other jail, which is the St. Louis medium security institution, the -- there are two professional booths that have been there for a significant period of time and directly behind them sits a correctional officer from the jail who can hear everything that is being said, as well as a number of other defendants who are waiting to see their attorney.

That's in the two good booths. In the other booths you're literally talking through cardboard and there can be eight or nine attorneys in there at one time. And so you can hear anything that anybody is saying.

Q. Is there a way for an attorney who is not at the jail to contact a client in custody via a phone?

A. It -- it happens on rare occasion where you can reach their social worker and set up a phone call to the social worker's phone.

Q. The social worker that's in the prison?

Page 46

A. The jail social worker, yes.

Q. Okay. Do the clients in custody have an ability to call their attorney from jail the opposite? So one is the attorney calling in and --

A. No.

Q. They don't have any way to contact their attorney?

A. No.

Q. And is that due to cost or just they're prohibited from using any form of communication?

A. The phone system is set up so it will not ring into our office.

Q. So will it ring into -- so will the phone system in the jail ring into other attorney -- private counsel office?

A. Yes.

Q. But it's -- so what you're saying is there's a technical limitation on the phone system that prohibits phone calls from either prison --

A. Jail.

Q. -- either jail in St. Louis city from ringing into the area 22 office?

A. It's not technical. It was done -- I mean, it's done technically, but it was done on purpose.

Page 47

Q. And have you communicated this issue with jail supervisor or --

A. We requested it.

Q. Oh, you requested it.

A. Yes.

Q. And what was the purpose of the request?

A. The phones rang nonstop with persons calling in with the exact same question, and it took an entire support staff person's day simply to answer those phone calls, and as a result no other phone calls could get into our office and attorneys could not use the phone system to make calls out because the phones were clogged from the phone calls from the jail. And there was no limitation in the jail as to how often a person could use the phones.

Q. Oh. So the -- there was -- there's no limitation to how many times they could call and keep calling your office, so the phones would -- before the -- the limitation was put in place would literally be ringing off the hook with or clogging all the lines?

A. Yes.

Q. While your support staff try and manage who the calls are going to or deal with the calls?

Page 48

A. Correct.

Q. Do you know if any other district defenders have implemented similar procedures?

A. I don't believe so, but I don't know for certain.

Q. If -- if a -- an attorney in your office is calling to reach a client that's incarcerated and it's set up by a social worker, is that phone call confidential?

A. No.

Q. And why not?

A. The social worker is present.

Q. Do you know if anyone else is present during that call?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know if that call is monitored at all by the jail?

A. It's not on the jail monitoring system. It's on the private line -- not a private line, but a jail line.

Q. Okay. Does area 22 have any procedures in place for dealing with immigration consequences for criminal charges for your clients?

A. So we do education on immigration issues on a regular basis, and we have contact with

Page 49

Catholic Legal Assistance Ministries, which is located at Saint Louis University Law School, and their immigration attorney provides assistance to us for our clients at no cost.

Q. How would immigration issues arise with dealing with your clients or your attorneys' clients?

A. They could have collateral consequences of deportation.

Q. And how available are these legal assistants or -- are there attorneys at Saint Louis University that help you out?

A. Yes.

Q. How available are they to help?

A. They're pretty good about returning calls, and they've also provided us with an educational document that we have available for the attorneys.

Q. How often do immigration issues arise for your clients?

A. I would probably say less than five percent of the cases.

Q. Do you have any interpreters on staff at the public defenders office?

A. No, not on staff.

Q. How often do you have a need for interpreters when dealing with your clients?

A. Not that frequently. I do have one attorney who speaks Spanish who is new to the office who I'm attempting to assign some of the Spanish speaking clients to. I would say ten to 15 clients a year are in need of interpreters.

Q. And are there any other languages other than Spanish that you encounter for clients in your office?

A. Bosnian, Vietnamese. We've had some African dialects that have been difficult to find interpreters for. Those are the main ones.

Q. And if you have a client that comes in that speaks Vietnamese, do you -- do the attorneys submit a request to -- to get an interpreter to be able to prepare the case?

A. Yes.

Q. And how often are those requests approved?

A. They're always approved if they're made.

MR. MAUNE: Okay. We've been going about an hour. Good time for a break?

THE WITNESS: Sure.

Page 51

MR. MAUNE: All right.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 9:58. We are off the record.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 10:09. We are back on the record.

Q. (By Mr. Maune) I'd like to talk about initial hearings for a little bit. At what point is a defendant first brought before a judge?

A. For the initial hearing, which is usually 24 hours after they are booked on a case. It can be longer than that if they're booked on a Friday night or Friday day.

Q. And are they -- if they are indigent, do they have a defendant representing them at this initial hearing?

A. They do not have an attorney at the initial hearing.

Q. Is bail set at this initial hearing in area 22?

A. The bail already is set at the time that the warrant is issued. So when the case is issued it is taken to the judge who is on duty to sign a warrant and to set bail.

Q. And does the judge use a bail schedule?

Page 52

A. No. There's no official bail schedule. There is some informal bail schedules for certain crimes.

Q. Can the bail amount be changed after that point?

A. Yes.

Q. And how would that bail amount be changed?

A. By a motion to review the conditions of release.

Q. And is that motion filed after the initial hearing?

A. Yes. If the person had an attorney it could be filed at that point.

Q. Right.

A. So some private counsel make requests at that point.

Q. Can defendants plead guilty at their initial hearing if they're unrepresented?

A. No. They can't plead guilty even if they're represented at their initial hearing.

Q. Okay.

A. Or they could. There just wouldn't be anybody paying attention to it.

Q. Are all these initial hearings live or are any done by video?

Page 53

A. They're all done by video.
Q. They're all done by --
A. With the exception of sometimes if there is someone who is clearly mentally ill the court tries to bring them in to court in person.
Q. Who makes the determination that the client is clearly mental ill?
A. Evidently there's communication between the jail and the court. And it doesn't happen very often.
Q. So at what point after this initial hearing does your office get involved with a case?
A. After we receive an application and determine that the person is indigent.
Q. We'll talk a little bit about discovery. Do you have any sense for the percentage of cases that your attorneys handle in which they interview witnesses?
A. I would guess 25 percent, maybe 30 percent.
Q. Interview the victim or the complaining witness?
A. Are you -- when you say witnesses --
Q. How often -- yeah, how --

Page 54

A. -- you're -- you're differentiating from complaining witness?
Q. Right. Initially the witnesses who might be witnesses, but they're not the complaining witness or victim.
A. So witnesses who are not the complaining witness, it's probably less than 30 percent then.
Q. Okay.
A. And then in cases where they're interviewing the complaining witness, I would say it's about 30 percent.
Q. About 30 percent.
A. Of the cases that have complaining witnesses. We have a large number of gun and drug case in which the only witnesses are police officers.
Q. Okay. How often do your attorneys in -- in area 22 visit the crime scene?
A. I would say fewer than 20 percent.
Q. How often do your attorneys and/or investigators identify witnesses not previously mentioned in a police report?
A. In cases overall or in cases that actually go to trial?

Page 55

Q. Cases that go to trial?
A. In cases that go to trial, probably 25 percent of those cases.
Q. How often in cases that go to trial do your attorneys or investigators investigate a client's alibi?
A. Whenever one is provided.
Q. How often do attorneys in your office investigate police conduct in cases that go to trial?
A. When you say police conduct, what are you talking about?
Q. If there's any improprieties alleged by the defendant, does your office have the ability to investigate those allegations?
A. So we do depositions of police officers --
Q. Okay.
A. -- who are main witnesses in cases on a pretty regular basis, and file motions to suppress based upon, you know, Fourth Amendment violations, Fifth Amendment violations by those police officers. We do not -- we have not been successful I should say in obtaining internal affairs reports about those officers, but we have attempted.

Page 56

Q. How often do your attorneys conduct depositions in cases that go to trial?
A. Oh, the cases that go to trial, I would say 80 to 90 percent. And when you're talking about that 25 to 30 percent, are those for cases that go to trial in terms of talking to the witnesses or complaining witnesses or just in all cases?
Q. Well, if you give both, so in all cases was that less than 30 percent and greater than 30 percent for --
A. Significantly greater than 30 percent in cases that go to trial.
Q. Okay.
A. I would say we don't have a case that goes to trial where there is a nonpolice officer complaining witness where that person has not either been interviewed or deposed.
Q. How often -- in cases that do not go to trial, how often do your attorneys take depositions?
A. We did 300 depositions in fiscal year 2017 and had 150 cases sent out to trial. So percentage wise, I don't know, but about a hundred, 150 depositions in cases that did not go to trial.
Q. And that's out of roughly --
A. Well, it's not out of that number because that number includes cases that can't go to a jury trial.

Q. Right. Do you have a sense out of the -- I guess the 4,262 cases that were initiated, what percentage of those are -- can go to a jury trial?

A. So you would subtract probation violations and juvenile cases.

Q. Okay.

A. And then you would also have to subtract the cases where we withdrew before adjudication. And I would guess that those three figures come to 1,200 to 1,500. Probably closer to 1,200. About 3,000 cases left.

Q. Of the cases that go to trial, how often do your attorneys utilize expert witnesses?

A. Not often. We've utilized iden -- eyewitness identification experts and mental health experts. I think we have secured some medical experts and some fingerprint analysis.

Q. When you say not often, is that -- is there a reason why experts are not utilized?

A. They don't add value to the case.

Q. Besides eyewitness identification experts and mental health experts, are there any other types of experts that your attorneys would -- could utilize on a case?

A. So we've -- we have utilized also medical experts, so in shaken baby cases, for instance, or child death cases. DNA, we've had cases reviewed for DNA analysis. We have had hired experts to look at handwriting.

We've hired experts to look at ballistics and we have hired experts to look at fingerprints. Those are the only ones that come to mind. And then mitigation is another area, which could involve a mental health person or could involve other type of expert.

Q. For a mitigation expert, would that utilize a social worker?

A. A social worker or someone who's in the community, those are used most often in juvenile certification cases or in Miller cases.

Q. Do you have a specific budget for area 22 for the hiring of experts?

A. The system comes up with a budget, but the money then goes through the Columbia office. So it's not a budget that we keep close tabs on. I think there were different budgets. There's one for homicide cases and one for nonhomicide cases.

Q. Do you have to approve the hiring of experts for cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there a monetary amount or is it for all experts?

A. For all experts. Some of them then require second-level approval if they are over $500 or if it's a homicide case.

Q. And who approves the secondary -- second-level approval for those types of cases?

A. The division director.

Q. Have you had cases where you've requested experts that require secondary approval that were denied for some reason?

A. Yes.

Q. And what were the reasons stated for those denials?

A. Generally they're in the mental health area, and it's usually a request to look for an expert who is not as expensive. There's fortunately -- in St. Louis there's a number of experts available, so we try and use the ones who do not cost as much. And sometimes it's because of a lack of a clear reason for the mental health expert.

Q. Do you have a list of experts for your attorneys to use?

Page 60

A. The system has a database of experts.

Q. And who comes up with the experts that are in your system?

A. So once somebody has used somebody they're in the system.

Q. Okay.

A. We've gone beyond what's in the system when there's no one in the system that meets what we need.

Q. Does the system provide any details on the quality of the experts or is it just a --

A. No.

Q. -- contact information?

A. Just contact information.

Q. How frequently do you request -- do your attorneys request discovery from the state in your cases?

A. In a hundred percent of the cases with the exception of probation violations.

Q. How frequently do your attorneys file discovery-related motions?

A. All of the cases other than probation violations.

Q. In your opinion, do your attorneys have the time and resources to obtain and review the discovery in the manner each case requires?

A. No.
Q. And what is the reason they don't have the time?
A. The number of cases that they're handling, and in addition so many of the cases now have electronic discovery, such as jail phone calls or cell phone data, both of which are very time-consuming to go through.
Q. Do your attorneys review camera footage from police cameras and police vehicles?
A. If we receive it and if we do not receive it and believe it exists, we -- we have requested it.
Q. Are officers in St. Louis city wearing personal body cameras?
A. I don't think so. We're not getting any -- any data from them.
Q. Okay.
A. There may be a few who are experimenting with it.
Q. At what point in a case would attorneys request the hiring of an expert? How long before trial?
A. Generally once discovery is received and reviewed. So it takes a long time for a case to get to trial in the city of St. Louis. So it could be a year before trial. It could be six months before trial.

Q. Do you have a sense how long before trial discovery is received from -- from the state?
A. So it's supposed to be received within ten days of arraignment. Full discovery usually occurs throughout the course of the case.
Q. Do you believe it's the case that your attorneys decide against using an expert because of the time required in working with that expert?
A. I think there are not enough attorneys with experience to understand when an expert could have value to their case.
Q. You previously testified that you have four investigators in your office; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. And that those investigators are assigned to cases, but only when requested by the attorneys; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Do you believe that based on your experience that your attorneys have the experience necessary to fully utilize the abilities of their investigators?

MR. MOORE: Also object to the form of the question. I think it's kind of vague. Subject to that, you can respond.
A. I think some of the more experienced attorneys do, but we have a large number of inexperienced attorneys in the office, so the majority of the attorneys do not.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Do you believe you have the -- an adequate number of investigators to handle the cases that are staffed?
A. No.
Q. Do attorneys in your district regularly seek continuances?
A. Yes.
Q. And if so, what do you think is the reason?
A. The general reasons are discovery is incomplete. Defense investigation is ongoing. Competence of defendant is being evaluated or the attorney's trial schedule is such that they do not have time to prepare the case for trial.
Q. Are these continuances often granted by the courts?
A. And I'm sorry, can I add one more?

Page 64

Q. Go ahead.
A. The -- the case was recently transferred to the attorney and the attorney has not had time to meet the client. Yes, the continuances are regularly granted.
Q. What is the impact of these continuances on your clients?
A. Our clients are confined a very long period of time before they get their case to trial, and in a large number of the cases that we do take to trial we have success in which the person is either found not guilty or the case is dismissed, yet they've had to sit in jail for one to three years waiting to get their case to trial.
Q. What is the impact on these continuances on the trust the clients have with your attorneys?
A. It diminishes it. And it makes the -- the attorney caseload more complex because if you're going to meet a client every 30 days and the case lasts for six months, that's six visits. If the case lasts for three years, that's 36 visits. With not much happening for most of them.
And there are many cases that proceed to trial that by the time the case goes to trial it's the second, third, sometimes fourth attorney assigned to the case.

Q. Talk about traveling. How much time do your attorneys spend in traveling for conflict cases currently?

A. So currently we have three attorneys who handle conflict cases. One of them handles Jefferson County and St. Francois County. So that person spends a significant amount of time traveling to those jurisdictions.

One of the persons handles Franklin County, and again, that's about a 40 to -- minute to an hour drive each way. The third person handles St. Louis County and St. Charles County. So that person travels, but not as frequently because those jurisdictions are closer.

Q. How long does the person who's handling the Jefferson, St. Francois County on average, how long is their travel time?

A. From the city to Jefferson County is about an hour. From the city to St. Francois County is about an hour and a half.

Q. And have all new cases that -- new conflict cases been assigned to contract attorneys since July 1st of 2017?

Page 66

A. With the exception of those where we already represent the defendant in another case.

Q. Okay. How often do your attorneys file suppression motions?

A. Generally in any case that is going to trial. And in a small percentage of the cases that do not go to trial.

Q. Are there times that you believe a suppression motion may be warranted, but your attorneys did not have time to investigate or draft such a motion?

A. There are times when I believe it is warranted, but the attorney did not have the experience to realize it was warranted and did not seek out assistance.

Q. How often do your attorneys file other types of pretrial motions?

A. We file discovery motions to compel on a pretty consistent basis. And we file motions to review conditions of bond on a consistent basis. Other motions are as the attorney deems necessary.

Q. Other than we just discussed suppression motions, are there motions that you believe -- pretrial motions that you believe your attorney should be filing but did not have time to investigate or draft such a motion?

A. There probably are, yes. I'd have to know the specifics of the case to know what motions.

Q. Regarding such motions, aside from suppression motions do you believe there are motions that your attorneys -- motions that may be warranted by the case, but your attorneys did not have the experience to realize that such motions may be warranted?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have a sense for how often in area 22 your attorneys take noncapital homicide cases to trial on an annual basis?

A. We probably try ten to 15 homicides a year.

Q. And for A/B felonies, not including homicide?

A. Well, we try 90 -- 90 to a hundred cases per year, and I would say 50 percent of those are homicides or serious felonies and 50 percent are what we would label gun or drug case or misdemeanor. And other jury trials.

Q. And out of those 90 to a hundred cases, do you have an estimate how many are juvenile cases?

A. So juvenile cases don't get a jury trial.

Q. Don't get a jury trial.

A. Many of them, however, are 17-year-olds, which in most of the country are juveniles, but in Missouri they're automatically transferred to adult court.

Q. How many juvenile cases per year do your attorneys assist in?

A. I believe about 300 was the fiscal year 2017. It has decreased this year significantly.

Q. Do you have an understanding of why that number has decreased?

A. Juvenile court has stopped issuing as many cases, so we litigated pretty heavily in fiscal year 2017 and many cases resulted in a finding of no guilt or dismissal, so I think they've reevaluated what they issue.

Q. Is that the prosecutor's discretion to bring less cases or is that the court's discretion to --

A. In juvenile court?

Q. In juvenile court.

A. It is -- it is the juvenile officer's discretion. So the juvenile officer is represented by legal counsel who is not the prosecutor for the

Page 69

City of St. Louis.

Q. In your opinion, do your attorneys have the time and resources to adequately prepare for trial?

A. They do if that was all they were doing.

Q. What are the other -- what are the other things your attorneys are doing, is it preparing for other cases that are not going to trial?

A. Right. So we have attorneys who on a pretty consistent basis have a trial set every week for a period of five or six weeks. So if they're spending the time they need to prepare those cases for trial, they're not paying attention to any of their other clients.

And when they should be preparing for next week's trial they're in trial this week. So if you just took the number of cases we took to trial and gave us responsibility for those, we would have plenty of time and resources.

Q. If -- how often do you have second-chair attorneys participate in trial?

A. Our policy is first misdemeanor jury trial, first two felony jury trials, first sex offense jury trial, and first homicide jury trial. We have not been able to meet that requirement consistently this year because we haven't had enough attorneys who have had trial experience to do those second chairs.

Q. How does your office prioritize having second trial, is it by the seriousness of the charges?

A. You mean how do we prioritize who gets the second chair?

Q. Correct.

A. No. It's generally the place that we are lacking is in the more serious cases. So to get an attorney to second chair a homicide case makes sense that you've tried a homicide case, and we don't have enough attorneys who have done that. So sometimes the second chair has been a person who themselves has never tried a homicide case. And the same -- same issue with sex offenses.

Q. How much time do your attorneys spend working up a case before the attorneys advise a client of whether or not to take a guilty plea?

A. So the attorney should have had an initial meeting with the client, and that would usually be before the attorney had any discovery, and then the attorney would have a second meeting with the client after they've received discovery. So that would be the minimal time before a case would be resolved with a plea.

Q. And do you have any local procedures for counseling your attorneys prior to accepting -- to discussing the case with you or a more serious -- experienced attorney in the office before counseling that client on accepting a guilty plea?

A. So the newest attorneys meet with the deputy district defender, and one of the purposes is to discuss their cases that are coming to resolution and get advice on whether or not it's a good resolution.

Q. How are plea offers communicated with your clients?

A. So in our jurisdiction there aren't very many plea offers. Most pleas are open pleas where the range of punishment is available to the court and based upon evidence presented by the state and the defense the court makes a decision. If we receive a plea offer, then they're usually communicated in person. Sometimes through letters.

Q. In your opinion, do your attorneys have the time and resources to adequately negotiate plea deals and counsel their clients on whether or not to accept a plea?

A. No. In large part because negotiation has not occurred. So there's literally no one in the office who has experience negotiating plea deals because they've all been open pleas.

Q. Is that -- has that been consistent since you started as the district defender in 2007?

A. Yes. Yeah. There is a new circuit attorney as of this year, and she has informed the court that she intends to move towards pursuing negotiated pleas, but it hasn't happened in her first year in office. But as a result, those attorneys have to prepare a lot more cases for trial in order to be able to determine what's a reasonable resolution.

Q. Do your attorneys request psychiatric evaluations for your clients?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these private evaluations?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Do your attorneys attend lineups?

A. If it is a person that we are already representing and we are informed of it, yes. And if it's in juvenile court, we do.

Page 73

Q. Are the lineup's videotaped?
A. No.
Q. Are they live or are they picture?
A. They're live. Usually.
Q. Do your clients ever participate in interviews for presentence investigation reports?
A. Very rarely.
Q. And do attorneys in your office represent clients for such interviews?
A. I think there's been maybe one or two occasions in the ten years I've been there where an attorney participated.
Q. Are there attorneys notified of these proceedings?
A. They're notified that an investigation is going to happen, but not when it is going to happen. So the burden is on the attorney to find out when it's going to happen and to let the investigator know they'd like to be present.
Q. If one of your clients decides to withdraw a plea in the rare cases that pleas are available, what steps do your attorneys take?
A. To withdraw a plea?
Q. Yes.
A. You'd have to demonstrate some manifest injustice. So you would have to file a motion to accomplish it.

Q. Would an indigent defendant represented by your office ever withdraw a plea without legal representation?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Have your attorneys for area 22 ever waived or skipped voir dire during trial?
A. No.
Q. Who will notify a defendant of his or her right to an appeal after trial?
A. The trial counsel.
Q. We've covered a lot of these, so I'm just going through. How are indigency determinations made for juveniles?
A. In juvenile court, the court makes a determination that the child needs counsel and notifies us. We go ahead and enter an appearance and then the attorney will look to see if there is a concern that the child is not indigent, but in the last three years I can't think of any case that we asked to get off of because the child was not indigent. In ten years there's been maybe four or five.
Q. Do you know if they use the parents' income to make that determination?

A. In juvenile court in St. Louis city the court's position is that every child is indigent.
Q. Have your attorneys expressed any concerns with representing clients in juvenile court?
A. Can you be more specific?
Q. Have your attorneys expressed any concerns with their experience or training with representing juveniles in juvenile court?
A. No, because we've had a juvenile specialist, and the attorneys who are now being trained are being mentored through the process.
Q. How do your attorneys in your office prepare for detention hearings?
A. Meet the child. We obtain the petition, the probable cause statement, what's called the juvenile summary, and the juvenile detention alternatives score sheet, and make contact with family if able to.
Q. What resources are available to your attorneys to identify alternatives to detention for juvenile clients?
A. I'm not sure what you mean. We generally advocate for release from detention and that release would either be to parents' home or to another relative's home. So that would be the investigation that we do.

Q. How do your attorneys in your office prepare to advocate for informal adjustment?
A. We do not handle informal adjustments.
Q. And why is that?
A. They're not eligible under the Chapter 600.
Q. Okay. Are attorneys from your office present at all diversion conferences for juvenile clients?
A. What do you mean by diversion conferences?
Q. Are there -- are there conferences in St. Louis city for diversion from -- diversion programs for juvenile clients?
A. So there was a drug court in juvenile court, so we would have been -- we would have been present at that, had been part of the conversation, disposition of the child's case.
Q. But there's no longer a drug court in St. Louis; is that correct?
A. At the end of the year it's ending.
Q. Do you know why it's ending?

Page 77

A. It was a terrible program. No child succeeded and it was a program that was created for adults and didn't work with children who were smoking marijuana.

MR. MAUNE: Talk a little bit about the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel.

(Exhibit 6, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Mr. Maune) Handing you a document that's been previously marked Petsch Document Number 6. Have you seen this document before?

A. I have.

Q. And what is it?

A. It's the notification of case assignment to a volunteer attorney through the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel.

Q. And can you tell me a little bit about the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel program?

A. So an attorney who was retiring from Armstrong Teasdale I think spoke to the director of the public defender system about providing assistance to the public defender system by involving private attorneys from large civil firms to give the public defender the benefit of additional counsel and to give the firms the benefit of getting their associates trial experience. And the Missouri Coalition was formed and we have participated in it since it has been formed.

Q. Do you know how long ago it was formed?

A. The initial training session was in April 2017. So it was formed right about that time. There were meetings about it prior to then, but I think it had to be chartered or --

Q. Do you know how many firms participate in the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel?

A. I do not have the number of firms, no. I think we have about 60 to a hundred attorneys maybe signed up.

Q. Do you know how many cases are referred to pro bono attorneys as part of the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel?

A. So from our office we have referred 36 cases.

Q. And those 36 cases are all since April of 2017?

A. Correct.

Q. Are there particular types of cases that are assigned to the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel?

A. We try to find cases that we believe will go towards jury trial, but they've ranged from low level felonies up to homicide cases that we have assigned out.

Q. What type of training is done for the pro bono counsel that are handling these cases?

A. They're -- the public defender system put on a two-day training for the initial group in January -- I mean -- I'm sorry, in April of 2017 in St. Louis.

Then there was another training in October 2017 in Kansas City as well as a half-day training here in St. Louis at the same time. And then there's another training coming up in January. And the training involves the skills necessary to handle a jury trial.

Q. Do you anticipate having to -- strike that.

Who from your office conducts the training?

A. I have participated in the training. Rick Kroger, who was the deputy district defender, participated. Megan Beesley and Erika Wurst and Matthew Mahaffey, who are all assistant public defenders in our office, have been involved in the training.

Q. Do you anticipate continuing this initial training on an annual basis for private counsel?

A. I don't know if the ones who have already been trained will come back, but I know that there's training for new attorneys in January.

Q. Right. And aside from St. Louis and Kansas City, are any other districts looking to implement a similar program?

A. So St. Louis County also participated in the one --

Q. Okay.

A. -- that St. Louis City was involved in, and then some of the attorneys, the volunteer attorneys took appellate cases. So some of the appellate offices have sent cases to them.

Q. How -- what has been the impact of the MCRC program on attorney caseload for your office?

A. It hasn't had a significant one since we've only sent out 36 cases. The benefit that we have seen, though, is that most of those 36 cases were cases from an attorney who was leaving the office, so that keeps an attorney in the office from inheriting a stale case and having to prepare it in a shorter period of time.

Q. Have any of the 36 cases that have been assigned to pro bono counsel gone to trial?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have an idea how many?

A. Two. Two went to trial to a jury verdict. Three went to trial and were dismissed at the time they were sent out to trial.

Q. Are the rest of the cases still pending?

A. No. There are I believe eight or nine cases that either plead or are now participating in diversion court.

Q. How are resources -- I'll be more specific.

How are experts compensated for these types of cases, do those expert -- those requests for funding for experts still go to the public defenders office?

A. I believe they can make that request, but I think there was also a hope that the private firm would take care of that expense when possible.

Q. Do you know if that's occurred to this point?

A. I know the private firms have paid for their own depositions through the assistance of

Midwest Litigation. I know they have -- they have hired their own investigators in some cases. At times they've asked us to assist them in serving subpoenas or finding witnesses.

And I don't know that anyone has hired an expert witness, although I take that back. I think we had a case recently where a mental health expert was retained by one of the firms to present mitigation evidence, and I believe the firm paid for that.

Q. How about for the use of social workers, do such firms have access to that type of experience?

A. In the case that I'm thinking of where they wanted to present mitigation evidence they spoke with our social worker, and then I think the social worker put them in connection with services in the community.

Q. Okay. And do you monitor the disposition of those cases after they're assigned to the pro bono counsel?

A. At the conclusion of the case they are supposed to send a document back to the contracting office in Columbia who monitors that. But the ones that are in the city of St. Louis, they generally tell me what happened.

Q. Do you anticipate the number of cases being assigned to pro bono counsel in area 22 to change over the next several years?

A. I would like to see it increase.

Q. Talk a little bit about training and development of your new attorneys. You said you have several new attorneys in your office. What type of training do those attorneys first receive when they're hired on?

A. So we've hired 15 attorneys in this last year. So 15 of our 30 attorneys have been there one year or less. And when they initially join the office they are placed on what we call the green team because they are the green attorneys, and once a week they meet with the deputy district defender.

The previous deputy district defender was a more informal discussion about cases. The current deputy district defender is trying to create a curriculum so that as attorneys cycle through the office we'll have the curriculum prepared and they'll have access to it.

Q. So these 15 new attorneys that you've hired in the last year, are they all new attorneys right out of law school?

A. No. So one of them is a transfer from another office. One is a former prosecutor. One is a former public defender. One worked at Lewis Rice. One had worked in Missouri government, but not really as an attorney. I think more as a policy person.

And the rest would be right out of law school. Some of them did a clerkship for a judge before they came to us, so they may have gone from law school to clerkship to our office. I think that was two of them.

Q. And does the Missouri State Public Defenders Office offer training for new attorneys --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that they go to?

A. Yes.

Q. How often does the Missouri State Public Defenders Office offer that new training for their attorneys?

A. So once a year there's training called new defender training, and once a year there is a trial skills training. There's also a new employee orientation.

And then once a year there's a system wide training that the new attorneys would also attend. So in their first year they could attend four trainings. But if you get hired immediately after one of those trainings, you have to wait a year to take it.

Q. If -- if a attorney is hired right after the Missouri State Public Defenders Office has hired new -- or has handled new attorney training, how does that impact your assignment of cases for that attorney over the year till they can get that training?

A. It doesn't. They -- they generally get new cases their first day on the job. Or they get cases that already exist and the previous attorney left are transferred to them their first day on the job.

Q. What are your policies and procedures for -- for supervising these new attorneys that have started in your office?

A. I don't know that we have any formal policies. I mean, other than if they take a case to a jury trial they need a second chair for their first misdemeanor and first two felony trials, first sex and homicide. But hopefully that wouldn't happen in their first year. And they're evaluated at the end of that first year.

Q. Do you have any mechanisms for attorneys to raise concerns about their caseloads?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you please describe those mechanisms or policies or procedures that you have?

A. We've met with all of the attorneys in the office and discussed their ethical obligations and informed them of their duty to bring their attention -- to bring to our attention if they believe their caseload is too high. And I also monitor their caseloads on a regular basis to see if I believe there is concerns with it being too high.

Q. Can attorneys refuse cases because they believe their caseload is too high?

A. They could. They have not had to because any attorney who has requested that they not receive new cases, that request has been honored.

Q. And what happens to the case if it was refused by an attorney because their current caseload is too high?

A. It goes to another attorney within the office at this point.

Q. What have -- have there been any changes in policy that you've implemented in light of the in re Hinkebein decision?

A. We had individual meetings with every attorney to evaluate their caseloads and to find out from them whether or not they felt their caseload was too high, and if they did, then we added additional information to the case assignment sheet to stop them from receiving any new assignments until that changed.

Q. In your experience, what has been the response from the courts in -- in your district with respect to this decision?

A. I've spoken to the presiding judge who is very empathetic with our position and who wants to make certain that our caseloads remain reasonable. I've spoken to the -- what we call the criminal assignment judge who manages the criminal docket. He's been less empathetic, but is willing to talk if we get to the point where we have to put people on wait list.

Q. Do you currently have a wait list?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever had a wait list in your previous ten years?

A. Back in 2012 we had a wait list, I believe.

Q. And in 2012 who decided what clients would go on a wait list?

A. I did based upon an administrative order that was issued by the court.

Q. How did clients get off the wait list for representation?

A. I don't remember the specifics of how it worked, but my recollection is that the wait list ended when the public defender system decided to not use the certification protocol. And I believe -- and I would have to double-check this, but I believed we used that indigence docket also as a way for cases to come off the wait list.

Q. Have there been any changes in the number of attorneys in your office that helped alleviate the need for a wait list?

A. We actually took on a heavier caseload during the last several years so that we could free up a position for another office. So in -- when I began in 2007 we handled first-level conflicts for St. Francois County, Jefferson County, and St. Louis County, and second-level conflicts for Franklin County and St. Charles County.

We took on first-level conflicts for Franklin County and St. Charles County, which is basically a position. And St. Louis County lost that responsibility. So we didn't change the number of attorneys, but we changed the responsibilities, and I think that happened in 2011 or '12. I think maybe that happened in 2013.

Q. Have you drafted or I guess sent any memoranda to the courts concerning the in re Hinkebein decision?

A. No.

Q. Has there been a reaction to the best of your knowledge from the local bar association in your district regarding this decision?

A. No.

MR. MAUNE: It's a good place for a break.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 11:06. We are off the record.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 11:15. We are back on the record.

(Exhibit 5, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Mr. Maune) I've handed you what's been previously marked as Exhibit Number 5 Cardarella. Can you please take a few minutes to review this document, let me know when you're ready to proceed.

A. Okay.

Q. Have you seen this document before?

A. I have -- I believe it's in our litigation, but I'm not positive but I've looked at it. It's in our litigation board.

Q. Do you know what it -- what it is?

A. It is a proposed writ for an attorney who wants to be able to withdraw from a case and the court will not allow them to.

Q. Have any attorneys in area 22 utilized this sample writ?

A. No.

Q. Is this example available for your attorneys to use if required?

A. I believe it's on the litigation board. They -- they know the litigation board exists. I think if we got to the point where one of them wanted to withdraw, it would be going through me as opposed to them as an individual.

Q. Let's talk about turnover in your office for a minute. You said you have 15 new attorneys start in your office as of this year; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And was that due to 15 openings that happened in your office previous to them starting?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that number of openings in a single year unusual for area 22?

A. It's higher than it has been I believe in ten years, but it's generally between eight and 12 a year.

Q. What do you believe is the cause for this turnover rate?

A. The high workload, the high trial calendar -- or difficult trial calendar in the city of St. Louis. And the low pay.

Q. Can you expand on what you mean by a difficult trial calendar in the city of St. Louis?

A. So our office tries more cases to a jury trial than any other office in the state, and that's consistent with our circuit. Our circuit does that more than any other circuit in the state.

And because there are no plea negotiations, many more cases are prepared for trial and then resolved at the time the case is sent to trial or dismissed by the state at the time that a case is sent to trial.

So in addition to the -- about a hundred cases that are sent out to trial and go to trial, there's an additional 60 a year, 50 to 60 a year that are sent out to trial and the state dismisses them after you've spent time preparing the case for trial.

And the way the trial docket is set up, if you are suddenly available and have another case on that trial docket, you could then immediately be sent out on a second case. So we've had attorneys sent out to trial on multiple cases within one week. It's difficult to do that.

Q. Do you have an idea of how -- the highest number of cases a single attorney has had to prepare for in say a given year?

A. I can tell you the highest number of cases that a single attorney has tried in a given year is 18 felonies. But in addition to those 18, that attorney would have prepared probably an additional 20.

Q. In your -- from your previous experience as a public defender I believe in Clayton County; is that correct?

A. In St. Louis County and St. Louis City.

Q. During that time, were there plea arrangements in St. Louis County or St. Louis City?

Page 93

A. In St. Louis County there have always been plea negotiations. In St. Louis City plea negotiations ended when Jennifer Joyce became the circuit attorney, and I believe that was 2000. Shortly after she -- she took office.

Q. And has the lack of plea arrangements --

A. I'm sorry, can I correct that? I'm wrong.

Q. Yes, go ahead.

A. She took office in 2000, and pursuant pleas stopped happening after she took office because her recommendations were so high. I think she did not stop making recommendations until 2012 or 2013. But even when there were recommendations, most pleas were -- were open.

Q. So when you say her recommendations were so high, does that mean that the -- the penalties were very high for those crimes?

A. Yes. And higher than the court thought was appropriate.

Q. And what has been the impact on your office from St. Louis City stopping plea negotiations on your attorneys' workload?

A. It means that you -- it is much more difficult first of all to gain your client's trust, that they can plead open in front of a judge they have never met and their case has never been in front of before and that you can accurately predict what that judge will do with their case.

So when they're entering a plea of guilty they have to state that they know the court has the full range of punishment in front of them, and the attorney has to be able to counsel them on what they believe the result will be.

And generally we're right, but obviously it requires a lot of trust for someone to believe that you're right in that situation and to decide that a plea is in their best interest.

Q. What are the kind of problems for your office are caused by such a high turnover rate?

A. We don't have enough experienced attorneys to try the serious cases. So I have -- some of those 15 attorneys that were hired this year already have homicide cases assigned to them. I -- this year we had two attorneys we labeled APD2, so that means they had been with the system for more than one year, less than three years, who both tried murder first cases this year.

Now, fortunately both of them obtained a not guilty verdict, but that's a lot of -- that's a very serious responsibility to give to an attorney with that little experience.

So we generally have 60 plus homicides pending at any one time. And currently in the office we have five attorneys who have tried a homicide. Six, I'm sorry. Six.

Q. Do you -- do you know where the attorneys who are leaving your office, do they go into private practice?

A. Some go into private criminal practice. Several have gone to civil firms. Some have transferred to other public defender offices and some have left the practice of law.

Q. And when someone -- when an attorney leaves your -- your office, is their position filled right away?

A. We have to go through the hiring process, so it takes probably minimal three months to get filled.

Q. How does your office advertise its open attorney positions?

A. That's done through the HR office in Columbia. I think they use some of those computer websites, but I don't know which ones specifically.

Page 96

Q. Has -- has area 22 ever lost positions because they have not been timely filled?

A. No.

Q. Is that a possibility if a position is not filled in a sufficient number of months that the position would be moved to another office?

MR. MOORE: I'll just -- sorry. I'll just object, it calls for speculation, but you can go ahead.

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. (By Mr. Maune) Since you've been the district defender, are you aware of any cases in which one of -- a court has found that one of indigent defendants have received insufficient --

MR. MOORE: Ineffective.

Q. (By Mr. Maune) -- ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. Yes.

Q. And how often has that occurred?

A. There have been two cases that have come out of my office to -- to my knowledge. One was for lack of investigation and one was for conveying incorrect information.

Q. After the in re Hinkebein decision, have your attorneys expressed concern regarding this decision?

A. They've discussed it, yes. They're concerned. They were concerned for Mr. Hinkebein. They were concerned for what it means for themselves.
Q. Is there anything else you think we should know regarding your office's ability -- strike that.
A. Excuse me.
Q. Do you believe you have a sufficient number of investigators?
A. No.
Q. Do you have an idea how -- what the ratio of attorney to investigator should be?
A. No, but I can tell you that trying a hundred plus cases a year, we never have an investigator at the trial. The investigators are continually interviewing and investigating future cases and/or serving subpoenas. So when an attorney goes to trial, they do not have an investigator with them.
Q. So -- so how do the investigators receive feedback from the trial as to the effectiveness of their investigation or --
A. Hope the attorney has enough time to send a nice e-mail or to stop by and tell them.

Page 98

Q. How about administrative staff, do you have sufficient --
A. Excuse me.
Q. Do you have sufficient administrative staff?
A. We are pretty well staffed administratively. And I say that, but -- but at the same time our attorneys still do a lot of their own work. So while our staff, our administrative staff do our initial pleadings, get our discovery, scan the discovery in, anything beyond that, any motion that's created beyond that the attorney is creating it themselves, filing it themselves, sending letters to their clients themselves.
So it's not like any of us have a support staff person who is available to do all of those tasks. So if I'm sending letters to my clients I'm typing them, I'm creating an envelope, I'm placing them in the mail. So I think where I'm just so used to it I don't even realize that we don't have enough administrative staff.
Q. Is there -- is it a -- for the administrators that you do have, is it more of a pool situation that you look for who is available or are they assigned to --

A. They're assigned to --
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. -- attorneys.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) And do you know what -- is there -- what the current ratio, I guess, if it's five administrative staff; is that correct?
A. Well, no. It's one, two, three, four -- there's four who are assigned just to attorneys. There are others who have other responsibilities and/or assigned to attorneys. So for instance, the legal assistant who have done our indigence applications is also the secretary for several attorneys.
The legal assistant who manages our front office and handles all the incoming people and phone calls also is assigned to certain attorneys. The legal assistant who handles our juvenile docket also has certain attorneys. So there's only two support staff who do nothing but have attorneys.
Q. So it's roughly -- roughly seven to one, seven attorneys for each assistant, but it's not directly correspondent because some are assigned solely for juvenile?
A. Correct.

Page 100

MR. MAUNE: Okay. I should be done. I just want to go off record for a minute and let's make sure I got everything cleaned up and then we'll be done.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 11:30. We are off the record.
(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 11:32. We are back on the record.
MR. MAUNE: I'm handing you -- handing the court reporter a document that's entitled State of Missouri Public Defender Commission Fiscal Year 2017 Annual Report. That will be marked as Plaintiffs' Exhibit Fox 33.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 33, State of Missouri Public Defender Commission Fiscal Year 2017 Annual Report, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Please take a look at it.
A. I have seen it before.
Q. You've seen it before?
A. Yeah.
Q. Okay. If you could turn to page 82 of the report.

Page 101

A. Okay.
Q. And I'm looking at the box in the center where it says St. Louis City cases assigned, and it starts with fiscal year '08 and it goes to fiscal year '17. And it looks like it starts with over 6,600 cases assigned in the beginning and then there's a pretty sharp I guess reduction in the number of cases starting in '13 continue -- continuing through '14 and '15, and then beginning to rise again. Do you have an idea why the number of cases sharply went down and then maybe why they're coming up again?
A. So fiscal year '12 was pre-Waters. When Waters came out our circuit had a meeting as Waters directed and the court issued an administrative order to assist with caseload relief. So fiscal year '13 reflects that change -- those changes in part. Part of fiscal year '13 was pre-Waters and part of fiscal year '13 was post-Waters.
So fiscal year '14 and '15 pretty accurately reflect the reduction in caseload as a result of the administrative order, and then fiscal year '16 and '17, it's a combination of we took those additional conflict responsibilities and probation violations began to increase and more change in the judges who are handling the misdemeanor cases so that more misdemeanor defendants were coming up and applying for our services.

In fiscal year '14 or '15 there was a misdemeanor judge who appointed private counsel on some of those misdemeanor cases that then in '16 and '17 came to us. So if you look at our case numbers, '14 and '15 pro revs and misdemeanors go down. '16 and '17 they go up.
MR. MAUNE: Okay. I'm handing to the court reporter a document that's an article in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It's entitled "Public defenders in Missouri say caseloads have them overworked and discipline has some scared." It will be marked as Fox 34.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 34, St. Louis Post-Dispatch article, was marked for identification by the Court Reporter.)
MR. MOORE: Do you have another article by chance?
MR. MAUNE: I will get you one.
MS. SHIPMA: We can share.
MR. MAUNE: Yeah.

Page 103

THE WITNESS: Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Maune) Have you seen this document before?
A. Not in this form. I saw it when it was in the newspaper.
Q. Okay. Were you interviewed for this article?
A. I was.
Q. And are your statements to the reporter accurately captured?
A. They are. I'm sorry.
Q. As we stand here today I guess a little over a month -- almost a month later, do your opinions remain the same that are portrayed in this article?
A. Yes.
Q. All right. Is there anything else that you think we should know regarding your office's ability or your attorneys' abilities to provide effective representation?
A. Nothing that's coming to mind.
MR. MAUNE: Pass the witness.
EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Very good. So my name is Justin Moore.

Page 104

And earlier I said I was for the Attorney General's Office. That's not exactly correct. Can you hear me okay?
So earlier I said I was for the Attorney General's Office. That's not exactly correct. I'm from the Attorney General's Office, but I represent the State of Missouri and the Governor.
So I'm just going to be following up on some of the questioning that's been taking place today. Let's just kind of go through and fill in a little bit of the background information. So if you could please just tell me about your educational background, where did you go to undergrad and then law school?
A. Undergraduate, Saint Louis University. Graduated in 1976 with a degree in urban affairs. And law school, Saint Louis University School of Law, graduated in 1980.
Q. Okay. Are you from the St. Louis area?
A. I am.
Q. Where did you go to high school at?
A. Incarnate Word Academy.
Q. Oh, very good. Private schooler. Very good. Okay. So let me see. And did you go straight through high school, undergraduate, law school, or did you take some time off in there to work?

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Did you go straight through education or did you take any time off in-between to work a job or anything of that nature?

A. I worked between college and law school.

Q. And what did you do in-between?

A. Initially I had a job as a writer for a public relations firm. And then I worked as an administrative assistant for LIFE Skills Foundation, which was a social service agency that served developmentally disabled adults.

Q. Okay. And how long did you serve in those roles?

A. So in the public relations firm I believe I was only there maybe three or four months. For LIFE Skills I worked there until I started law school, and then I remained there through my I think -- I think through the second year in law school, and then I took a legal job for the summer after second year.

Q. Okay.

A. And then stopped third year.

Q. And so do you know like what kind of period of time you took off between undergraduate and law school?

A. A year.

Q. Oh, it's one year. Okay. And you worked at a -- I think you said a private firm of some kind. I'm looking for the name of that firm whenever you first got out of school; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. What was the name of that firm again?

A. Kanefield & Mohme.

Q. Okay. And what kind of work did they do?

A. Civil.

Q. Just like civil litigation or family stuff or what kind of --

A. It was a little small firm, did a little bit of everything. I -- I can't remember to tell you the truth what I did it was so many years ago.

Q. Okay. How big was that firm?

A. There was Kanefield and Mohme and there was me.

Q. Very good. So outside of that one private firm, have you worked for any other private firms in the St. Louis area or anywhere else?

A. No.

Q. Okay. So during this deposition you kind of expressed some concerns, I guess, about public defender workload and caseload, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Who all have you spoken to other than the people we've already talked about about these concerns?

A. Well, I speak to the attorneys in my office on a pretty regular basis. I've spoken to Mr. Patrick from the Post-Dispatch. I've spoken to management within the public defender system. And I've spoken to the judges within the circuit.

Q. So question for you is how do you define a case or a matter in your system?

A. When the state initiates a proceeding against a person. So if it's -- if it's one count with three co-defendants, it would be three cases. If it's one defendant with three charges, it would be one case.

Q. Okay. So it's kind of like by defendant for each matter?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Is there a situation where one case could become two different cases?

A. It does not generally happen that way.

Q. Okay. Can you think of a situation where it would happen that way?

A. The court could sever and assign a new case number to part of the case, but I've -- I've never seen that happen in ten years. I think the court has the authority to do that.

Q. How about for charges that are filed subsequent to you guys already representing a particular client, would that be a different case or the same case?

A. If it's the same events it's the same case.

Q. Okay.

A. If some new crime happens or new charges occur that have nothing to do with the first case, then that would be a separate case with separate discovery.

Q. Okay. Have you noticed any recent trends in how your district is defending cases, for example, trending towards more depositions, more experts, less plea deals, anything of that nature?

A. We have retained an eyewitness identification expert this year in several cases, and I don't think we had ever retained an eyewitness identification expert prior to this time.

The number of trials and number of cases that get resolved by plea have remained relatively consistent. There have been a larger number of cases that have been sent out to trial in which the state has dismissed the case this year.

Q. Any other trends that you've noticed?

A. Nothing I can think of off the top of my head.

Q. Okay. So tell me about this eyewitness ID expert, any particular reason why this person or set of persons is being utilized more than in the past?

A. Because of the change in the law in terms of eyewitness identification. Missouri's case law saying eyewitness identification experts are not allowed in was made in 1988, and that law has changed throughout the states since that time period and as a result we are pursuing that issue.

And the Missouri Supreme Court issued an eyewitness identification instruction which did not previously exist. So the expert testimony is consistent with the eyewitness identification instruction.

Q. Okay. So it has to do with the change that took place in the law, not a change to the defenders' budget or anything of that nature; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. You talked a little bit about how you guys track cases in the public defenders office. Is there any kind of mechanism, any other mechanism we haven't discussed that you guys would use to track your cases or to monitor your cases?

A. So everything is contained in Lotus, which is our database. From Lotus I sometimes create other spreadsheets. So I have created a travel spreadsheet that shows which cases went to trial and what the verdicts were in more detail than what the Lotus notes show.

So for instance, it may show guilty and not guilty in the Lotus database and in our spreadsheet it might show not guilty of murder first, guilty of trespassing. So it would demonstrate that it was not just a half guilty, half not guilty, but a very successful half guilty, half not guilty.

Q. Very good. And so when you're looking at Lotus, what all is included in there is just the case disposition or is there other stuff in Lotus that you can look at?

A. In terms of what?

Q. So as like a case tracking system, so like a live case you would be able to pull up Lotus and look at what's going on or is it simply some kind of mechanism where you can look at statistics on cases that have already been closed?

A. No. It's a case database, so it would show the case, any pleadings filed in the case that were -- where Lotus was used. Letters to the client, notes from the attorney.

Q. And you would be able --

A. Hopefully the discovery would be scanned into the electronic file.

Q. Okay. Sorry to interrupt there.

A. That's all right.

Q. So you'd be able to pull those documents up directly in Lotus if you wanted to, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Are there any public defenders on call 24 hours a day for like emergencies?

A. No.

Page 112

Q. So we talked about -- a little bit about determining indigency for defendants, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And is there any mechanism in place to kind of revisit the determination of indigency later on in the case to make sure that, you know, you guys aren't being bamboozled or kind of fooled by defendants who maybe want to get representation but might not be entitled to it?

A. Yes.

Q. And what kind of safeguards are in place for that?

A. So there is section 600.086 that allows counsel to file a motion in front of the court to have the defendant determined to be not indigent. So for instance, one time a client canceled an office appointment because they were going on a cruise, so we filed a motion and asked the court to determine that the person was not indigent because if they could afford a cruise, they could certainly afford private counsel. And the court granted the motion.

Q. Oh, very good. That was a section 600.086?

A. I believe it's 086, yes.

Page 113

Q. Okay. Now, you've cited one example of such a motion being filed by your office. Do you happen to know like how many of those motions typically get filed in a year?

A. Very few. Maybe five. And it usually has to do with something much less obvious such as posting a very large bond or hiring a private counsel in another case.

Q. Okay. So your attorneys just kind of keep an eye out for things that stick out to them and if they notice it, then that's when they'll consider filing the motion?

A. They'll come to me and we do all that sort of motions at the indigence docket once a month.

Q. Okay. Do you know if they perform any kind of independent investigation as to the indigency determination other than just kind of things that pop out at them?

A. Well, the legal assistant reviews the application. If the person indicates that they own a house, then she'll go on the assessor's website to see what the value is of the house. If they indicate they own a car, then she'll look for the Blue Book value of their car and take those things into consideration.

Q. Okay. And let's say somebody applies and they don't, you know, list that house to raise that red flag, is there still somebody kind of looking into whether they have these assets prior to the determination being made or is it kind of taking at face value whatever they put on the application?

A. If they do not indicate they have a house, we do not do a search to see if they own real estate.

Q. Okay. That would only be if something tips you guys off is when you would do that investigation?

A. If it's brought to our attention, yes.

Q. So we also talked earlier a little bit about the procedure for obtaining discovery and experts in your cases, right? For the record, you have to --

A. Yes.

Q. So have you ever had a request for a deposition been rejected because of financial reasons by the office?

A. No.

Q. And have you ever denied any of your defenders the -- not the right to get a deposition, but the request to get a deposition on the basis of like financial reasons?

Page 115

A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of that happening for any other public defenders having their request to take a deposition being denied because of financial reasons?

A. I only know it's in my office. I don't know about the other offices. I haven't heard of that, no.

Q. Okay. Are any of your depositions taken outside of the state of Missouri?

A. We have depositions where the witness may be outside of the state of Missouri, but we do it with the attorney here and the court reporter where the witness is via video.

Q. Okay. So that's my next question. So I think --

A. And actually, I misspoke. Via phone.

Q. Via phone?

A. Yeah.

Q. So I think you stated that those depositions do take place sometimes if the witness is out of state, but if it is required it would be done via telephone, right?

Page 116

A. That's how we've done it in the past, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Usually through an agreement with the prosecutor's office.

Q. Okay.

A. I mean, they've agreed to produce the witness out of state if we agree that the attorneys can remain in St. Louis for the deposition.

Q. Okay. Are there any policies or procedures that guide or limit, you know, how many depositions can be taken for a case?

A. No. I mean, there's -- there's policies as to when to take a deposition and what information is necessary.

Q. Uh-huh. But there's no rule like you can only take three depositions per X type of case, right?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. It's pretty much just, you know, do what you have to do to get the case ready for trial, right?

A. Take the depositions that you think are necessary.

Q. And are there any policies mandating a certain amount of depositions or investigators be used for certain types of cases?

A. No.

Q. Now, we talked just a little bit about obtaining experts and situations where experts have and have not been approved, right?

A. We talked about experts, yes.

Q. Okay. We can start off there. That's fine.

A. Okay.

Q. I think you said earlier that there have been a couple times where there's like a higher level of review that comes after your approval of using an expert, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And sometimes at that level there has been kind of a second look at which experts are being used because of financial reasons, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Has there ever been a situation where you said we need to have an expert for this case and the people above you said you can't have an expert of any kind for that case?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Because it seems like they have tried to just find more fiscally conservative methods or fiscally conservative experts, I guess, but they've never denied you using experts; is that right?

A. I don't recall ever being denied an expert, no.

Q. And have you ever heard of, you know, any other defenders having their request for an expert denied based on financial reasons?

MR. MAUNE: Objection, calls for speculation.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Just what you've heard of, not speculation.

A. Not that I've heard of.

Q. Okay. And we may have gone over this ground already, but are you aware of any policies or procedures that state like when and how much experts can be appointed or not appointed in cases?

A. Well, they're not appointed. They're -- they're retained by us.

Q. Right.

A. So yes, there are -- there are policies and what information you need to provide to request an expert. Generally we -- before an attorney in the office is going to request an expert, we would vet the case and discuss it and discuss what value the expert would bring to the case before they would ever submit any request.

Q. Okay.

A. So by the time they submit an E request we've already pretty much decided that that would bring value to the case.

Q. Okay. So yeah, I guess what is the procedure for requesting an expert, you mentioned an E request?

A. Yes.

Q. So what -- how does that process work from start to finish, I guess?

A. Within the case in Lotus the attorney submits a request stating what -- who they are asking to retain, what the anticipated cost is, and what the reason is that they're asking for the -- to retain the expert.

That's submitted through the database system. I either approve or disapprove, and if I approve and it's over $500, which most experts would be, it then requires division director approval.

Q. And you also mentioned that some kind of conversation would happen before this request goes through, right?

Page 120

A. Generally, yes.

Q. Okay. And that would just kind of be like a sit-down meeting with your associates to discuss the case and why it needed an expert?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. So I think we discussed earlier about when a trial would be and would not be assigned a second-chair attorney by your office.

A. Yes.

Q. Is there like any kind of a rule that you're aware of in your office for a, you know, we must have a second-chair attorney here for these types of cases or is it more like a discretion of management?

A. No. There is a rule, and actually I forgot one category. So you need to have a second chair for first misdemeanor trial, first two felonies. Now mind you if you have your first two felony trials before you have your first misdemeanor trial, then you don't need an expert -- a second chair for your first misdemeanor trial.

Q. Okay.

A. And then a second chair for your first sex case. So case in which it's allegations of sexual assault. And a second chair -- you got me stuck on experts. A second chair for your first homicide case.

Q. Okay.

A. And also a second chair for your first juvenile court certification hearing or transfer hearing.

Q. Okay. And that's like an internal policy of the MSPD; is that right?

A. That's a local area 22 policy.

Q. Okay. But that's not based on any like statute or case law or anything of that nature; is that right?

A. It's based upon the -- the public defender requirements of how to run a public defender office and on the ethical obligations to, you know, provide sufficient supervision.

Q. Okay. And so -- so are you saying there's particular ethical rule that discusses like the second chair assignments?

A. No, no, no.

Q. Okay.

A. No.

Q. There's just -- there's a general ethical rule about adequate supervision, and so the public defenders office in attempting to comply with that has made their own rule regarding second chairing trials, right?

A. So again, this is my personal office policy. It's not an MSPD policy.

Q. Okay.

A. And it's because we try a large number of cases, and sometimes people would try a lot of drug cases and then suddenly have a homicide case and they would not have a second chair, and there's a significant difference between defending a homicide case and defending a drug case.

Q. Okay. So yeah, this is my misunderstanding of the rule. So this is a rule that you put into place for your district, right?

A. Correct.

Q. It's not a rule that the whole public defender system has in place, right?

A. No.

Q. And as far as you know, that's not a rule that is embodied in any like statute or like specific ethical rule anywhere that you have to second chair these types of cases or anything, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Do you track your time?

Page 123

A. No.

Q. No. Does anybody in your office track their time?

A. No. We track it through time sheets. We don't track it per case.

Q. So tell me specifically what you mean by that.

A. So each employee is to record daily how much time they spent working.

Q. So they just kind of put in a chunk of time like eight hours or something like that, right?

A. Or whatever amount of time they spent working.

Q. Okay. Has there ever been a time when you guys have tracked your time in smaller increments like five minutes or by tenths of an hour or anything like that?

A. Yes.

Q. And when was that?

A. I don't remember when it began. It ended October 1st, 2016.

Q. And there's much celebration I'm sure, right?

A. I actually enjoyed it. It made you feel you had -- you had been productive during the day when you could look back and see exactly what you had done.

Q. I've never heard an attorney say that they enjoyed billing by tenths of an hour ever.

A. I wasn't billing. I was only tracking.

Q. Oh, that's the difference I guess then. Okay. Fair enough. So it ended October 2016. Can't really recall when it started, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And I'm guessing that was in connection with some particular like a study that was going on; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. And which study was that?

A. I couldn't tell you which one it was.

Q. Okay. But in any event, you're not --

A. It was connected to the RubinBrown study.

Q. Okay. Good. But you guys aren't currently tracking your time in those increments anymore, right?

A. No, we are not.

Q. Do you recall like what kind of period of time you had to track your time?

A. If I was going to guess, I would say it was 2014 to 2016.

Q. Like a couple years?
A. Yes. And then there was an earlier period of time tracking, but it was before I was with the system.
Q. Okay. Now, prior to that had you had any experience, you know, billing your time in that manner?
A. Back when I was with Kanefield & Mohme.
Q. Back in the day?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay.
A. 1980.
Q. Okay. And so other than those two instances, I guess three, you mentioned another one, any other times when you had to bill your time in that manner?
A. Actually I did when I did termination of parental rights cases in juvenile court. The court would pay per statute by hour. So I did have to track my time in those cases --
Q. Okay.
A. -- in both the trials and appeals.
Q. So I guess tell me a little bit about when you were keeping your time in those increments.

Page 126

Whenever you started doing that for the public defender, was there any kind of a training about how you should bill your time. For example, like the way you write the entries or tasks that you bill for and don't bill for?
A. So we -- it was I believe presented at one of our training workshops as to how to use the system.
Q. And so as I understand it, this study was performed by like some third-party researcher; is that correct?
A. What study?
Q. The one that you were tracking your time for, 2014 to 2016?
A. So was the RubinBrown study done by a third-party researcher?
Q. Right.
A. I don't think they were researchers. I think they were accountants.
Q. Okay. But it wasn't done by like -- it wasn't a study that was prepared by the public defender, right?
A. The -- RubinBrown is the person who created the report, but the public defender participated in the input of information.

Q. Right. And so my question is basically just like who put on the training for how to bill your time, was that a public defender or did some third party put the training on?
A. So the public defender put on the training on how to track your time. We never billed.
Q. Okay. Right. But the public defender had not really tracked their time previously; is that right?
A. No. I think the training was on here are the categories, here's where you click. This is how it will show up in the database. Here's how you can read it if you want to know.
Q. Okay. And if you can recall back to that training, I mean, did they tell you, you know, there's your task that you can't bill for or was it all pretty much just track whatever you're doing and put the time in?
A. It was learn the categories and see if your work that you were doing fits into one of those categories and track it as the category. If it's not in those categories, then it's probably not work because the categories covered everything.
Q. Okay. So have you done anything as a district defender to kind of prepare your offices for what I think you testified earlier was kind of a higher caseload?

A. To prepare them for a higher caseload?
Q. Yeah, or to prepare your office, you know, for the -- this high caseload?
A. I'm -- I'm not sure I understand your question.
MS. SHIPMA: I was just like -- don't have the microphone, but I object. I think that question is vague.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I'll go ahead and strike that one. That was vague.
Have you held any training sessions on managing dockets for your attorneys?
A. So my attorneys don't have dockets. They have cases. So the city of St. Louis court system is set up differently than most of the other courts in the state of Missouri. So we do not have dockets.
Q. And I guess --
A. We have dockets. Just not dockets that you're thinking of.
Q. Change the word dockets to caseload --
(Court reporter interruption.)

Page 129

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Do you have any training sessions on -- for your attorneys on how to manage their caseloads?

A. So I mean, most of the training is on how to represent your client and what the law is, so by learning those things you learn how to manage your caseload. I'm just confused. I'm not sure exactly what you're asking me.

Q. So I imagine there are trainings on like the substance of law and sort of pleadings and things that they'll be filing as they represent these defendants, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Is there any training more on the administrative side where you say you're going to have a lot of cases so here's the way that you manage them all? You do this task and this task or you don't do this or that, stuff like that.

A. Okay. I understand now. Thank you. I think it's more informal. We sit down with attorneys when they begin and talk to them about calendaring so that they make certain that they make all their court dates and how to keep track of them.

We explain the trial docket that happens in the city of St. Louis so that they can learn when their cases will be right for trial and when they'll be probably able to obtain continuances. And then we work with those who -- who need it on just being more organized.

Q. Okay. Now, do you provide any resources concerning their ability to like deny further cases if the caseload becomes too much at those initial trainings or conversations?

A. So we've always talked at office meetings about if you feel like you have too much, come see us. In an office meeting after the Hinkebein decision came out we let the attorneys know that we were going to be meeting with each of them individually.

We provided them with information on their ethical obligations and on the supervisor's ethical obligations, and then we had individual meetings with every attorney to see how they felt and whether they felt that they were not meeting their ethical obligations.

Q. So did the way that you trained change post-Hinkebein at all or is it pretty much the same that you were doing pre-Hinkebein?

A. More formal post-Hinkebein. Pre-Hinkebein it was -- it was more my watching to see if I felt like somebody was slipping behind too far and my taking the initial action and now I think the attorneys are comfortable that they can take that initial step and come and ask for assistance.

Q. Okay. Are you aware of section 600.063?

A. Sure.

Q. And what is that?

A. It's a statute about asking for meeting with the presiding judge concerning caseload.

Q. Okay. Have you ever utilized that particular statute?

A. So I have spoken to the presiding judge about that statute and the way the statute is written, and I don't have it in front of me, but is that the one that talks about an individual attorney?

Q. I believe so, but I -- I think you have the right statute.

A. Okay. So I have told the court that there are times when I have stopped assigning cases to an individual attorney and I have asked the court do they want me to bring that to their attention under 063 or not bring it to their attention unless it becomes an issue that we cannot take any more cases in the entire office?

Q. Okay. And so I guess you've never reached that point where the entire office cannot accept more cases; is that right?

A. Correct. Well, I think we reached that point back in 2011 and '12 prior to the Waters decision.

Q. Okay. But you know, since then haven't filed any of these kind of motions 600.063?

A. The circuit put in caseload crisis intervention actions which have remained in effect since 2012, so it's been more informal with the judges of the circuit.

Q. Okay. But you haven't filed any such motion --

A. No, I have not.

Q. -- because it hasn't been necessary, I guess, right? Have you ever been judicially determined to provide ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. Personally? No.

Q. I think you mentioned a couple times where you have had that take place with attorneys in your office -- or your district, right?

A. Correct.

Page 133

Q. One time was for lack of investigation and one was for conveying incorrect information?
A. Correct.
Q. So without going into too many details I guess for the lack of investigation case do you recall generally what the -- what kind of investigation was omitted?
A. The attorney did not obtain the dispatch tapes from the police vehicle and the dispatch tapes showed that the police officer's testimony was not credible.
That case had a co-defendant and co-defendant's counsel did obtain those dispatch tapes and the case was I think -- I believe he went to trial and was found not guilty. So at that point the post-conviction attorney filed a post-conviction action raising that point.
Q. And do you recall if the co-defendant was represented by the public defender?
A. Co-defendant was represented by a volunteer attorney who was an associate at Thompson Coburn who was placed in our office for one year.
Q. Placed in your office for a year. What do you mean by that exactly?
A. During the recession, 2008, 2009 when the private firms could not afford to bring their associates on --

Page 134

Q. Ah.
A. -- they placed some of their associates at a lower salary in either judicial positions as clerks or in not-for-profits, and we benefited from having one of those attorneys in our office.
Q. Okay. So this was an attorney who was actually working in your office just like any of your other defenders would have been working in your office with the same resources and access to staff and everything as the other defenders, right?
A. Except that he had a significantly smaller caseload and only handled misdemeanors.
Q. Okay.
A. Because he was only going to be there for one year.
Q. Okay. But it sounded like he was -- you said it was Thompson Coburn, I think?
A. Yes.
Q. He wasn't like at Thompson Coburn's offices working with their staff and their resources on these cases, right?
A. No.
Q. And as far as the attorney who was found to have rendered ineffective assistance of counsel, is there -- was there a reason given why these tapes were not obtained, if you can recall?

A. I did not attend the post-conviction hearing, so I can't tell you what he testified to, but I think my recollection is that he just -- it wasn't something that he did in his cases in terms of pretrial investigation.
Q. Just as a matter of course, it wasn't a step that he took for his cases --
A. Correct.
Q. Didn't have anything to do with like a lack of resources or anything for why he didn't obtain those tapes; is that right?
A. I think it was because he had so many cases that it wasn't a step that he took on a regular basis. At that point he would've had a caseload of probably over a hundred cases, most of which would have been felonies.
Q. So is that speculation or do you know for certain that's why he didn't get the -- didn't get the tapes in that case?
A. I don't -- I don't know that it's -- I don't know that it's for certain, but I don't think it's speculation. It's based upon conversations with him about the case.

Q. Okay. And how about the other ineffective assistance case involving conveying incorrect information?
A. Correct.
Q. Do you know in a general sense what that had to do with?
MS. SHIPMA: I'm going to object to any kind of recitation of communication between the attorney and the client.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) That's fair enough. I'll just ask, did it have to do with like incorrect legal analysis?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. And do you know if that had to do with any claimed lack of resources or anything or was it simply just an incorrect legal analysis on an issue?
A. Well, again, that was an attorney who at that time had over a hundred cases, so I don't know exactly why he provided that information.
Q. So you don't know for sure, but nobody has told you that it was because of like a lack of resources or anything, right?
A. Correct.

Page 137

Q. So I believe there's a statutory section 600.090.2 that authorizes public defender to file a lien with the court in order to recover payment for their services. Does that sound familiar?

A. Yeah.

MS. SHIPMA: I'm going to object. Do you have a copy of that that you can show her if you're going to ask her to testify about the contents of the statute?

MR. MOORE: No, I don't, but I just asked her if she was familiar with it. I think you said yes, right?

A. I know we can file a lien. Is it in -- is it in 090? That doesn't sound like a statute that I read on a regular basis, and I read a lot of 600 on a regular basis.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) We can forget the specific section by the way.

A. Okay.

Q. The bigger question is whether you're familiar that there is a statute out there --

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Are you aware that there is a statute out there that authorizes the public defender to file a lien with a court in order to recover payment for their services?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Now, do you file such liens in every case?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Unless we opened up the case and then we discover after opening it that a private counsel has entered before we had an opportunity to do any work on the case other than opening it.

Q. And so why would that change whether you filed the lien?

A. Because we didn't do any work on the case.

Q. Oh, okay. Fair enough. Otherwise, you say that you file such a lien on every single case, right?

A. Yes. There's a few circumstances where a person doesn't get a lien, such as they died in the course of the representation or their mental health keeps them from being competent, we do not file liens on those cases. And we do not file liens in the cases of juveniles or applicants with adult cases who are under 18.

Q. Okay. Now, you stated earlier I think that you have about 30 attorneys or so in your office?

A. Correct.

Q. And are all their caseloads pretty comparable or is there kind of discrepancy or difference between some attorney's caseloads versus other attorney's caseloads?

A. There's a big discrepancy right now because two of the attorneys just started within the last two weeks, three weeks. And four of the attorneys started like maybe a month or so before that.

So their caseloads are building up. And then there are attorneys who have been there longer whose caseloads are larger, and then there's attorneys who have very serious cases. So their case numbers may be lower, but the case severity is higher.

Q. And for the attorneys who work in the more serious cases, what kind of discrepancy would you be looking at as far as caseloads are concerned?

A. Maybe five to ten fewer cases.

Q. Okay. Do you guys ever do limited entries of appearance for defendants in order to represent them at bond hearings?

A. No.

Q. And why is that?

A. Because we request bond reductions for our clients with a full entry of appearance.

Q. Okay. I think you testified earlier that there's no wait list currently, right?

A. Correct. Yes.

Q. Can you talk to me a little bit about the procedure for closing cases? How does that go and is there ever a situation where case is pretty much done but stays open?

A. There shouldn't be. So when the case is resolved the attorney puts the file with a closing sheet that we have created with the appropriate disposition code in the closing clerk's box so it may remain open a week or so as he gets through them if there's a large number, but the attorneys are supposed to close them quickly and I monitor their cases.

If their caseload is extremely high I look to see if they have open cases that should be closed. The one exception is the conflict attorneys are often not in the office physically for a period of time, so their cases may close and they don't bring them back to the office until they physically get back to the office.

Q. And how long could it be before they show back up to the office to close the file out?

A. Like a week or so.

Q. Okay. Do defenders ever attend trials not as a second chair, but just to kind of spectate, kind of watch the trials?

A. No. They may stop in for a closing argument or we may send a new attorney to observe a voir dire, but they don't just sit around and watch trials, no.

Q. So are there circumstances where a closed case could be reopened?

A. Yes.

Q. What kind of situations would that be?

A. Where it was closed because a private attorney entered and then the private attorney is allowed to withdraw and the court makes a determination that the person is indigent and we accept the case back.

Q. Okay. And so when the case is reopened does it count as a new case or is it just the same case?

A. No, it's the same case.

Page 142

Q. Okay. As far as like the statistics or whatever, would it still be counted as a new case that gets opened?

A. No.

Q. So I think earlier we talked about a coalition -- I forget the name of the coalition now. But it's kind of a group of private attorneys who are assisting the public defender on some criminal cases, right?

A. Correct.

Q. What is the name of that coalition?

A. Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel.

Q. Okay. Are there any kind of similar groups out there that also provide those kind of services for the public defender and their clients?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. Okay. Have you ever tried to collaborate with the prosecutors in your jurisdiction on, you know, the caseloads and kind of determine if anything can be done in a cooperative manner about caseloads?

A. When we had our Waters meeting in 2012 after the Waters decision, the prosecutors attended and participated.

Page 143

Q. Okay. Anything else since then?

A. We've asked them to stop issuing cases that they can't win.

Q. Very good. And anything else other than that?

A. Nothing I can think of.

Q. Okay. So earlier we talked a little bit about how some of your attorneys are kind of inexperienced, I guess; is that right?

A. Are kind of inexperienced?

Q. Inexperienced.

A. Yes.

Q. Right? And as a result of that inexperience they sometimes don't like recognize when to use experts; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. So it's not that they're being denied experts because of financial reasons, it's simply that they are unable to recognize when they need them, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And so is there any kind of training whenever they start out to help them identify when they would need to consider getting an expert?

A. Yes. So generally the expert that a new attorney would see the need for on their cases would be a mental health expert. So there is training to help them identify the signs of a person not being competent to proceed to trial.

Q. And so all the new attorneys receive that training, right?

A. Well, the most recent group hasn't yet. That -- that's part of the problem is that there's always new attorneys and they don't come in in one large group. They trickle in on a regular basis.

Q. And there's just the four annual trainings, I guess, that we discussed earlier?

A. There are some other trainings the training department puts on, but the ones that the new attorneys attend are the two for new attorneys and then the new employee orientation, which I think is more administrative and it's just a day long.

Q. Okay.

A. Like here's how to do your time sheet, here's how to request leave.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Those sort of things.

Q. Okay. So as far as, you know, training on when to use experts, I mean, is that something that could be done via like a brochure or some kind of new attorney packet whenever they each answer them and they kind of leaf through and apprise themselves of the way the cases are kind of run?

A. I don't think a brochure is going to educate an attorney. An attorney just has to gain the experience to be able to evaluate the case and know when it's good.

Q. Okay. And these new attorneys, they could -- they could always come and ask you, you know, if they -- you know, they think an expert would be required, right?

A. Yes, and they often do.

Q. And they could go ask some of the more senior attorneys whether they thought such an expert would be needed as well, right?

A. Right. The issue isn't their ability to go ask. The issue is their ability to recognize that they need to go ask.

Q. Right. And we talked a little bit earlier about continuances in the criminal cases. Do you recall that conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you said that they are often requested and they're regularly granted, right?

A. Correct.

Page 146

Q. Now, getting continuances in a case is pretty typical of the legal process, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you have any kind of awareness of how private criminal defense attorneys operate?

A. In terms of getting continuances?

Q. Yeah, we'll get to that too, but just generally speaking do you have a general knowledge of how private criminal defense attorneys operate?

A. Generally.

Q. And they ask for continuances too, right?

A. Sure.

Q. And so it's just kind of part of the legal process, not really anything specific to like the public defender, right?

A. Well, except that a large number of our continuances are because we are not yet prepared. We either haven't reviewed the discovery provided to us by the state or haven't had an opportunity to do independent investigation. So those continuance requests generally are related to the fact that the attorneys have too many cases.

Q. But the fact that you're getting a continuance is no different from, you know, any other private practice's attorney asking for a continuance, right?

A. So if you look at the docket in the city of St. Louis what you'll find is that towards the top of the docket the old cases are the public defender cases that are heading to trial that they have not yet had time to prepare for trial.

Q. Are you saying --

A. So we're still asking for continuances.

Q. Sorry to interrupt.

A. That's okay.

Q. Are you saying the public defender asks for more continuances than private attorneys or are you just saying that --

A. I can only speak to the city --

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Mr. Moore) That's okay. You can go ahead.

A. I can only speak to the continuance request that I see in the city of St. Louis, and the private attorney generally asks for a continuance until they are paid and then they resolve the case with a plea of guilty.

Q. Okay.

A. So the continuance request reasons are different.

Q. Uh-huh. But the fact of just getting a continuance, you wouldn't say that's atypical of how, you know, cases -- it's not atypical in criminal cases, right?

A. To get a continuance?

Q. Right.

A. No.

Q. And I don't do criminal work, but does the city utilize a rolling docket for the criminal stuff as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So that's the docket they'll just keep putting up for trial every 30 days and then you'll kind of move your way up the docket, correct?

A. It's a little bit different than the civil -- civil docket.

Q. Okay.

A. So in the criminal docket there's one criminal assignment division. The cases are on a six-week rotation and the motions are heard in the criminal assignment division as opposed to being sent out to the equity divisions.

Q. So you're saying that the same division will hear the motions as it administers the docket?

A. Correct.
Q. Okay. So I think civil they split that up?
A. Correct.
Q. Which I -- never mind. Okay. But is the rolling docket every you said 60 days?
A. Every six weeks.
Q. Six weeks, okay.
A. Every six weeks minus any nonjury weeks.
Q. Okay. Now, we discussed earlier, you know, particular motions. And I think there was some speculation about when time or experience would have kept defenders from filing motions. Do you recall that?
A. Yes.
Q. Are you aware of any specific instance where a defender said to you I was unable to file this motion because I didn't have the time or experience to do it?
A. No.
Q. It's just kind of guess -- guessing based on your knowledge of what you believe to be the caseloads and things of that nature, right?

Page 150

A. No. I mean, I've had specific instances where I've talked to an attorney about a case after it's resolved and discover there may have been a suppression issue that they didn't litigate. There may have been a speedy trial issue that they didn't litigate or a docket issue that they didn't litigate.
So it's generally because they didn't recognize it as an issue. Or it's because the defendant wanted to just resolve the case with a plea of guilty because they couldn't make bond.
Q. Okay. Not necessarily because they didn't have time or the financial support to file those motions, right?
A. I don't know if time would be the reason. Financial would not be the reason, but it's -- it's more the experience issue.
Q. Okay. And the experience issue has to do with the amount of turnover in the office, I guess; is that right?
A. But the turnover has to do with the caseload. So because people have so many cases and so many cases have to be prepared for trial you can only keep up with that frantic pace for so long and then people move to other jobs.

Q. That may be true. My question was more just about you said that the reason these motions wouldn't get filed is because they didn't recognize sometimes that they should be filed, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And that would be based on like the experience of the attorney and how some of them are inexperienced and new to the job, right?
A. Correct.
Q. Do you have any awareness of like what turnover is like in private firms or other governmental agencies that employ attorneys?
A. I have no idea.
Q. Do you know whether the amount of turnover in the public defender system is any different than those private firms?
A. I don't know.
Q. So it could be just the same as any other firm, you just don't know for sure; is that right?
A. So most of the criminal defense firms in the city of St. Louis are one-person firms.
Q. Uh-huh. Like --
A. So they don't have turnover amongst themselves.

Page 152

Q. Well, and -- like just private firms, so civil included in that, right? Do you have any --
A. So I have no idea what their turnover is.
Q. Okay. I think you were talking earlier about like the amount of juvenile cases that are coming through in the last couple years, right?
A. Yes.
Q. I think you said something like there are less juvenile cases getting filed because public defender was successful in 2017 in winning those cases, right?
A. I think fiscal year 2017 is what I referred to.
Q. Okay. But that's -- that's correct, right?
A. I think that was one of the factors that played into the lack of issuance of cases.
Q. Okay.
A. During that time was the first time we had a juvenile specialist in juvenile court.
Q. Okay. Talk to me a little bit about the open pleas. Is that what they're called?
A. Yes, open pleas are blind pleas.

Q. Heard a little bit about that. Again, I don't do criminal practice. My understanding is that, correct me if I'm wrong, but you just kind of show up at court and your clients are agreeing to plea guilty, right, but there's not really any plea deal on the table, right? Maybe it's wrong. Just tell me how it works.

A. No, I'm just laughing because you don't just show up in court. I mean, we don't get to the point of where you're in front of a judge for a plea of guilty until you've had communication and counsel with your client and your client has determined that it's in the decision they've made is to enter a plea of guilty to the charge.

So it's more than just showing up. You're not the first person who has used that phrase, and having done them I can assure you it's a lot more than just showing up.

Q. Fair enough. Fair enough. Just tell me how this blind plea stuff works exactly, I guess.

A. So in court -- let's just talk about the in-court procedure.

Q. Okay.

A. You would have notified the court that you want the case assigned to a judge for a plea of guilty. The court would assign it to a judge. You would schedule it within a week's time period because they're assigned by weeks.

And then you would appear before the court, and each judge does it differently. Some will meet with you ahead of time and the prosecutor and want to hear the facts of the case and what both sides are asking for. Some will take the bench and start the on-the-record proceedings.

So as the attorney in those cases, you need to be able to navigate what judge the case is going to be in front of and you need to be able to advise your client what the possible outcomes are and what the probable outcome is, and that's the really hard part is advising somebody what the probable outcome is because you can't read a judge's mind. And you may think you know what's going to happen, but you don't always know.

Q. And that -- the whole open plea thing is as a result of a policy by the St. Louis City prosecutor's office; is that correct?

A. It is a result of the recommendations that the circuit attorney's office makes on their cases and their refusal to provide timely recommendations or any recommendations on cases.

Q. Okay. But the issues with the open pleas and all that sort of thing, that's not as a result of any like lack of funding to the public defender or time of resources. The issues inherent in that process appear to be as a result of this policy by the circuit attorney; is that right?

A. But the result, which is more important in my mind, is that it adds an additional burden to the attorney. So whereas in a different jurisdiction you may be able to say to your client the state is recommending this sentence if you choose to enter a plea of guilty --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- would you like it or would you not like it, case resolved, you go to court.

Q. Okay.

A. That what could be 30 to one hour conference now could become two to three or four meetings with a client to get to the point where the client trusts you that you know what you're talking about and to get the case in a position where you can get it in front of a judge and get a reasonable outcome.

Q. Okay. But you said it was a burden, an initial burden, right?

Page 156

A. Correct.

Q. And that would be a burden that was imposed as a result of this circuit attorney policy, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And I think you said also that they're maybe going to change that policy with a new circuit attorney that had come in; is that right?

A. That was part of her campaign promise, but it's not yet been fulfilled.

Q. Okay. It's coming down the pipeline probably?

A. We're a year in already.

Q. Okay. And so as far as the resources your attorneys have in the office to work their cases up, I understand that they have access to Westlaw?

A. Correct.

Q. And are there any limitations on Westlaw that are really cumbersome or onerous that you're aware of?

A. There's a couple things. You know, whenever you want to click on a -- a larger article, you can't get it. It's always not in our subscription. I don't think -- is Missouri practice

I don't think is in our subscription. All the stuff over on the right is not in our subscription.

Q. Okay. The stuff on the right. So other than in those limitations, I mean, are you aware of anything else that's really, you know, onerous about your access to legal resources, legal research resources?

A. Westlaw -- no Westlaw is easily accessible.

Q. Okay. And do you have any kind of internal servers or anything where prior pleadings or examples would be stored?

A. Yes.

Q. And all your attorneys have access to those prior pleadings and examples?

A. They do.

Q. Any other resources that your attorneys can utilize whenever they're working these cases up other than of course, you know, investigators and experts and things we've already discussed?

A. I would say those are the main ones. We also have what we call an area 22 database where somebody does something that we think will need to be used again, we try to preserve it in there.

Q. And so that's like another database with like pleadings and examples of things that --

A. Not pleadings, but you know, if there's -- somebody has attended a training and there's information they think would be helpful to others in the office, we keep it in there.

Q. Okay. And this is something that all the public defenders in your district would have access to no problem, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Tell me again why the -- you said the St. Louis City trial docket is different than other divisions, right?

A. Correct.

Q. So why is it so much higher than other divisions?

(Court reporter interruption.)

Q. (By Mr. Moore) Why is it so much different than other divisions in your opinion?

A. Well, it's a combination of things. One, it's a rolling docket as you described. So you're -- every six weeks you're required to appear to request a continuance if you're not ready.

The other thing is that you're not assigned to your trial division until you're assigned out to trial. So if, you know, I'm preparing a case in front of judge A and I know judge A will rule a certain way on things and judge B won't, I don't know who the judge is until I get there. So it affects -- that can affect your preparation. And because we have been successful more cases go to trial.

Q. So the rolling docket -- strike that. Is there like an informal time for criminal cases, where you can go in for informals?

A. You can always show up in Division 16 if there's a judge there. You can do an informal.

Q. Okay.

A. It's not -- it's not like the civil docket.

Q. Okay. Would there be anything preventing the public defender from just en masse filing a motion to continue all at one time at some informal docket if they know like a certain batch of cases isn't going to go to trial the next docket?

A. So the -- the docket call for the criminal trial docket happens every Wednesday morning, and so any continuance request is made at that docket.

Q. I'm saying could you just, you know, show up with a bunch of requests to continue for a period of, you know, 90 days or something instead of showing up at the docket every six weeks or whatever the -- or every Wednesday you said?

A. No, because you don't know which case is going to be ready until you show up at that Wednesday docket. So the first question is is the state ready? Or is the state asking for a continuance.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So you need to be there with the state. You can't ex parte the judge for a continuance request. You have to have the other side there. And then the court wants to hear the reasons and the court makes the determination as to whether or not to grant it. So there's also continuances that are denied.

Q. Right. Could you coordinate with the prosecutors' office to get a joint continuance in advance of that Wednesday hearing for a period of time that was greater than like the week, the rolling docket?

A. Generally not because the attorneys are always in court. I mean, there's times that that happens, but if you want a continuance on your case you should be there Wednesday at the trial docket, and I handle the continuances for our office. So every attorney from the office isn't there. I'm present.

Q. Okay. So it sounds like it would be possible to kind of -- kind of like a joint continuance on file instead of showing up at the dockets, but it's just not something that you feel is really feasible?

A. No, it's not possible. Maybe I'm not explaining clearly, but if you want a continuance on your case, you need to be at the Wednesday docket.

Q. You actually have to appear?

A. Someone on your behalf. So as I said, I appear on behalf of our attorneys.

Q. Okay. So --

A. Could be like the Monday morning civil docket in Division 1. You need to appear.

Q. We talked earlier about how your office doesn't have any paralegals, right?

A. Correct.

Q. But we also talked about how you do have sufficient administrative staff, right?

A. We have good amount of administrative staff, but I'm not sure it's sufficient. It's sufficiently -- we're operating the office based on what we have, but the attorneys are doing administrative work.

Q. Okay. I just think earlier you -- I think you used the word sufficient administrative staff. I guess my question is what would a paralegal do that the administrative staff doesn't do? Like what would a paralegal add to the office?

A. I would think they could do legal research. So we often utilize interns for legal research. So if we had a paralegal that would add some consistency to legal research.

Q. Okay. Any other tasks that you feel a paralegal would do that the current staff can't or doesn't do?

A. I think they could draft pleadings. I don't think our support staff could draft pleadings right now other than form pleadings.

Q. I'm sorry, you said your staff can draft pleadings now?

A. No, they use form pleadings. So an entry of appearance or a request for discovery.

Q. And so you think paralegals would be able to draft like substantive like legal motions and things of that nature?

A. I think if they did legal research they could also probably assist in preparing, you know, files for trial. So when the attorney general goes to trial you would have well-prepared binders and you have a paralegal who is there with you and has your exhibits organized and available to produce on screen. When the public defender goes to trial they show up with cardboard box and a lot of paper.

Q. So that goes for like preparing the -- the, you know, materials and organizing the materials that are going to be taken into trial. But it sounds like the administrative staff that you have could probably do the same thing, right?

A. I don't think they have the legal knowledge to do it. Most of our administrative staff does not -- do not have any advanced degrees.

Q. So they couldn't like just print the exhibits out and like organize the exhibits and put them in the binder you don't think?

A. Not unless you marked them all and told them what they were. I mean, they -- they haven't worked the case up with you.

Q. Okay. Are there any other tasks that you feel a paralegal would be able to do that the current administrative staff cannot do?

A. Nothing that's coming to mind.

Page 164

Q. Let me see. Let me talk to you quickly about a couple of exhibits that were cited earlier. Exhibit 32, this is the order concerning probation revocation hearing. It is 32, right?

MR. MAUNE: Yep, Fox 32.

Q. (By Mr. Moore) So you're taking a look at the exhibit and you're familiar with the exhibit that we'd like to discuss?

A. I am.

Q. So tell me a little bit more about your role in preparing this order. I think you said earlier that you had assisted in the creation of the order; is that correct?

A. Right. So when the initial conversations occurred in terms of caseload relief, probation revocations, in which the court was just intending to continue someone on probation was an area that we looked at where a public defender did not need to be involved.

Q. So I guess tell me a little bit more about the history of this document. You're saying there was a group at some point convened that discussed these issues and then generated this document?

A. So the Supreme Court decision in Waters directed the courts to meet with the public defenders and the prosecutors and to come up with resolutions for the case crisis.

Q. Okay.

A. Pursuant to that directive the 22nd Judicial Circuit had a meeting, and this was one of the things that came as a result of those meetings.

Q. Okay. And so you -- did you actually like yourself draft the documents or like --

A. No.

Q. -- approve it or anything like that?

A. I think Judge Bush is the one who drafted it.

Q. Okay. Do you feel there are any constitutional issues involving this document?

A. Constitutional issues?

Q. Uh-huh. Or issues generally, just anything wrong, like with this -- this order that was generated as a result of the meeting?

A. No.

Q. All right. Very good. I'd like to look now at -- I might mispronounce this, Petsch, is it Petsch 1?

A. Okay.

Q. This appears to be an internal memorandum amongst the public defenders regarding certain policies for public defender office; is that correct?

Page 166

A. I think it's an e-mail within the area 16 district office.

Q. Okay.

A. So the attorneys listed were all area 16 attorneys, and it's from the person who at that time was the area 16 district defender.

Q. I remember. This is not an e-mail that you were personally sent, right?

A. No. I wasn't with the public defender system in 2002.

Q. Okay. And you didn't have any participation in like drafting these policies that are mentioned in this e-mail, right?

A. No. No.

Q. I believe you said earlier I think that you did agree that -- you did agree with the policies that are contained in this e-mail; is that right?

A. I agreed that the visitation policy of the public defender system is that you are to have contact with your clients within seven days of assignment and thereafter at least every 30 days.

Page 167

Q. Okay. Very good. So the seven days, that's fine. As to the 30-day --

A. Unless you're the person sitting in jail for seven days without a lawyer.

Q. Just like to talk about the 30-day contact requirement, right?

A. Okay.

Q. So the public defender actually requires a physical visit every 30 days to wherever the defendant is kept; is that right?

A. If they're confined in the local jail, yes.

Q. Only if they're confined in the local jail?

A. Well, so if they're in the Department of Corrections that contact can be by phone call.

Q. Okay. So the contact doesn't necessarily need to be physical, it can also be via telephone?

A. Only if they're confined in the Department of Corrections.

Q. Okay. And so in your experience have the public defenders been able -- have your defenders been able to comply with this requirement?

A. No.

Q. They're not able -- they're not able to make a telephone call every 30 days to their client while they're in jail?

A. That's not what I said.

Q. Okay. Fair enough. What manner are they not able to comply?

A. They're not able to meet with all of their confined clients within seven days of assignment of the file and they're not able to meet with all of their clients thereafter at least every 30 days.

Q. Okay. Just speaking to the 30-day requirement, though, they're able to make a phone call to them, right? It doesn't have to be an in-person visit?

A. No, you cannot -- you cannot call somebody in jail.

Q. I thought you said they were able to make a telephone call as opposed to visiting in person for the 30-day contact requirement?

A. No. So if a person is confined in the Missouri Department of Corrections --

Q. Uh-huh.

A. -- so the Missouri penitentiary system, they've been sentenced on something else, they're in prison as opposed to in jail waiting trial.

Q. Okay.
A. Okay. So if they're in the Department of Corrections and they as a result of that could be anywhere within the state of Missouri.
Q. Uh-huh.
A. Or if they're in a federal penitentiary, which could be anywhere in the country, or if they're in a state penitentiary in another state, you do not have the ability to get to all of those locations throughout the state and the country.
Q. Okay.
A. So in that instance your contact can at some point be by phone.
Q. Okay.
A. But you can't only meet a client by phone and then be prepared to represent them at trial.
Q. Right. Just as to these requirements, so they're able to do the telephone every 30 days for Department of Corrections and federal penitentiaries you're saying; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. Now, the ones that they're not able to complete would be when they're in local jail, right?

Page 170

A. Those are the ones that are more difficult, yes.
Q. Okay. And you say you can't make a call into the jail?
A. You cannot.
Q. And is that in relation to the defenders' policy earlier where they cut off that access or is that something else?
A. Our clients don't have phones in the jail. So there's no number to call them.
Q. That wouldn't have anything to do with like public defender resources or whatnot, this has to do with the way the jails are administrated or the resources of the jails I guess?
A. But it has an effect on public defender resources because as a result we need to go to the jails to see our clients and that usually takes quite a bit of time between waiting for the client, seeing the client, and if it's one of our jails that is not next to our building, driving to the jail.
Q. Now, as far as the 30-day contact requirement in this e-mail, do you know what that 30 days is based off of, that policy?
A. The guidelines for representation that are -- the public defender system has.

Q. Is it based on any kind of like constitutional decision or any statute or anything?
A. No. Other than the ethical obligation to communicate regularly with your client.
Q. Okay. Do you know whether it's typical to meet with -- in person with your client every 30 days in other types of cases?
A. I missed the first thing you said.
Q. Do you know whether it's typical in other types of cases to meet in person with your client every 30 days?
A. Do you mean like in civil cases?
Q. Yeah, civil cases or --
A. I have no idea.
Q. -- other -- any other kind of legal matter?
A. I don't know. I can tell you in cases that I represented people in that were not criminal we met on a pretty regular basis.
Q. Do you think it's necessary to meet in person with criminal defendants every 30 days?
A. I think it is essential to have regular consistent contact with your clients especially if they are confined so that you can create a relationship in which they trust your counsel and in which they accept your counsel.

Q. Do you think that like a status letter to your client every 30 days would suffice?
A. No.
Q. And why is that?
A. Because they want to see you. They have questions. And your status letter can't answer their questions.
Q. Well, I mean, in theory I guess if the public defenders' phone lines were opened up and they could ask the questions, then you could respond --
(Court reporter interruption.)
Q. (By Mr. Moore) In theory, right, if there was -- if the public defenders' phone lines would allow the inmates to call their offices, then they could ask you their questions and you could answer those questions over the phone, right?
A. If the phones could accommodate it.
Q. Right.
A. And if there was some sort of way to get the persons actually through to their attorneys.
Q. Right. Do the public defenders have like a voicemail for each defender?

Page 173

A. We do.
Q. So the inmates, if the phones -- if they were allowed to, they could call and leave a voicemail for their defender --
A. That was another problem is that voicemails got filled by one person and then other persons could not leave voicemails.
Q. Right. But just in theory if the phone lines were opened up, then the inmates could -- the defendants could call their attorney, leave them a voicemail, and that attorney could send a letter replying to their inquiries, right?
A. Correct.
Q. But that's not possible now because the public defender cut off that line of communication due to the burdens involved in the multiple phone calls, right?
A. Correct.
Q. Do you know if the defendants have any access to like e-mails while they're in jail?
A. No, they don't.
Q. Are they able to send letters while they're in jail?
A. Yes, they are. And without postage.
Q. Without postage?

Page 174

A. To us without postage, yes.
Q. Okay. Also distinguishes clients from trial caseload clients, do you see that?
A. I did see that.
Q. What does that mean exactly? How -- how does it determine if a client is a trial caseload client versus not a trial caseload client within I guess whenever you get assigned a case?
A. I think this referred to dockets that existed in Kansas City back in 2002 that don't exist anymore.
Q. Okay.
A. I think at that point they had -- cases went to two different types of dockets. One was called something, I don't know what it was called, and the other one was called a trial caseload or trial docket. So I think that's what he's referring to, but I don't know for certain.
Q. Okay. But in your opinion it would be all clients, they would all get the initial in-person visit in seven days of assignment; is that right?
A. Correct.
Q. Would there be any exceptions to that requirement for any other -- you know, any other cases like probation violations or things of that nature, low-level stuff?

A. No. They're supposed to meet those clients also.
Q. Okay. What if there's just nothing going on in the case except for just typical discovery, people are sending documents and things back and forth, do you think the 30-day in-person meeting would still be required?
A. Yeah, because you don't know what's going on with the client. I mean, the client could be having some issues that they need to discuss with you.
Q. I'd like to ask you a couple questions about the fiscal year 2018 supplemental legislative budget request document, and my version I was given doesn't have the exhibit number.
MS. SHIPMA: It's Exhibit 21.
MR. MOORE: Okay. Thank you.
THE WITNESS: Is it this one?
MR. MOORE: 2018, yeah.
THE WITNESS: Mine doesn't have a number on it either.
MR. MAUNE: It's a replacement for one previously marked.

Page 176

THE WITNESS: Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) Very good. So I think the questioning kind of centered on page seven. So would you turn to page seven? Whenever you're ready we can just kind of go over a couple things on there.
A. I'm ready.
Q. Okay. So we were looking at this chart on page seven, and you were kind of citing off the way that some of these columns were calculated, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And I did not quite catch the formulas. So I think the first one was net case units. That's the 89,515 figure. Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. What's the formula that you had cited for calculating that one?
A. So you have to go back to page --
Q. It's contained somewhere in this?
A. It's not in here. You need to go back to the RubinBrown study and the RubinBrown study gives case units to different case categories. Then you would multiply the number of cases times that case unit. So if you had 300 felonies and felonies got a 14-case unit, that would be 300 times 14.

Q. Okay. So this is all based off of the RubinBrown study then?
A. Correct. That's my understanding, especially since it says RB up at the top.
Q. Very good. Then we also looked at the column third from the right that says capacity, right?
A. Right.
Q. And I think you had a formula for that as well?
A. I think it was number of attorneys times available hours within the year.
Q. And that -- those metrics would also be based on the RubinBrown study and its conclusions, I guess, right?
A. I think so, yes.
Q. And percent of capacity?
A. That's just a calculation.
Q. Same kind of deal based on RubinBrown statistics?
A. No. I think percent of capacity is just a mathematical computation.
Q. Okay. So do you have any background in like statistical analysis or sociological studies of any kind?

A. No.
Q. Do you have any opinions or are you able to give any testimony today about whether the RubinBrown study and its methodology are accurate?
A. So I've always complained that the RubinBrown study does not take into consideration the number of cases that get tried in the city of St. Louis. So we're always towards the bottom of the list, but I don't feel like that accurately reflects the case overload crisis within our office.
Q. Okay.
A. So it's made for the system and I think it needs to be, you know, changed for individual offices for specific issues.
Q. Okay.
A. So for instance, a felony gets the same amount of time and a lot of our felonies are assault first degree.
Q. Okay.
A. And a lot of our felonies are, you know, four, five, six counts in one case.
Q. Okay.
A. But that only gets 14 hours credit. So I don't feel like the RubinBrown gives us enough credit for the type of cases that we handle, the severity of the cases, and the number of cases that have to be prepared for trial and the number of cases that go to trial.

Q. Okay. Any other issues you have with the RubinBrown study or --
A. No.
Q. No. But you again are not really familiar with like their methodology for collecting the data or analyzing the data in that study, right?
A. I was around when they did it. I mean, I know basically what -- how they did it.
Q. Fair enough. But like you don't have a background in statistics you said, right?
A. No.
Q. So whether they're using the correct metrics or formulas or whatever else, you wouldn't be able to testify about that, right?
A. No.
Q. And as far as the data collection, do you have any knowledge about how they collected all of their data in the RubinBrown study?
A. Just general.
Q. Okay. So you wouldn't be able to say specifically if like they did everything correct as far as the data collection was concerned, right?

A. No.
Q. I think you said that you put data in for this; is that correct?
A. Well, the data comes from our case database.
Q. Okay. Just tell me a little bit about how -- how that worked.
A. So you create a case, it goes into the case database. The case code is in there, so it tells you what type of case it is, which would impact the net case units, and the -- whether you withdrew or conflicted the case out within the first 30 days would go in, which would impact the third row minus cases withdrawn.
Q. Okay.
A. And the number of attorneys you have would also go in. And the -- the number of attorneys does not reflect -- I guess this is one other complaint. The number of attorneys does not reflect the reality of number of attorneys you have.
So while I have 30 attorneys assigned to the office, I am fully staffed right now for the first time in I think a year and a half, and I have an attorney who's leaving at the end of the month.

Page 181

So I've never really had 30 attorneys.
Q. Okay. Okay. And so if I'm understanding correctly, this was -- you would be inputting this data into some kind of computer program or something?
A. Right.
Q. Okay. It was like a case database --
A. Right.
Q. -- is that right? That's not Lotus, though, right, it's some other thing?
A. Right. No, it's Lotus.
Q. Oh, it is Lotus, okay. So the RubinBrown used the Lotus data as far as you know to generate their statistics and stuff?
A. Part of it, yes.
Q. Okay. I think I have just a couple more. So I think you testified earlier that there's a high turnover and that you hired a bunch of new attorneys who just graduated the bar in October, right?
A. Correct.
Q. Do you recall how many of those there are, like the really fresh ones?
A. There's three who just -- just were licensed.

Page 182

Q. Okay. And then you said there were some other ones who had worked in other capacities prior to joining the public defender, right?
A. Correct.
Q. Kind of walk me through their backgrounds a little bit more.
A. You talking about the 15 that were hired this year?
Q. We'll go through them, yeah.
A. Okay. So we'll start with December last year. Attorney number one was a new attorney in December and hired. Attorney number two was a new attorney in December and hired. Attorney number three was a new attorney in October and hired in February.
Attorney number four had passed the bar in October and I think we were first place he was hired. So he was hired in March. Attorney number five passed the February bar and was hired in April. So he was a brand-new attorney at that time.
Attorney number six was a new attorney this year and we hired her. Attorney number seven had passed the bar the year before but had been working in document review for one of the larger firms. Attorney number eight had been an associate at Lewis Rice, so had several years' experience in civil litigation and came to us.

Q. Do you know how many years' experience?
A. I want to say two to three. Attorney number nine was -- passed the bar in October and came to work for us. Attorney number ten passed the bar in October and came to us. So actually I was wrong, there were more than three.
Attorney number 11 passed the bar about ten years ago and did policy work and just came back to St. Louis and came to us. Attorney number 12 was a transfer from the West Plains office. Attorney number 13 --
Q. Oh, sorry, the transfer, how long -- were they a new attorney or they had been doing it a while?
A. No, no. He had been doing it for a while.
Q. Okay.
A. Attorney -- he had been there for two years.
Q. Okay.
A. Attorney number 13 was -- was I already on 13?
Q. Yeah.

Page 184

A. So this is attorney 14.
Q. Oh, I think we --
A. Are we on 13?
Q. I think we're on 13.
A. Okay. We're missing somebody in there. Attorney 13 was an attorney in our Springfield office and then went into private practice and moved to St. Louis, and I recruited her to come back to us. She came back with experience.
Q. Okay.
A. And attorney 14 was a prosecutor in the circuit attorney's office who left that office and joined us. And there's one more person who I feel terrible I've forgotten.
Q. We'll just keep this transcript private. You don't have to worry about hurting her feelings. Okay.
So in any event, it sounds like you do have some fresh faces, but also some faces that have been out and they were practicing law for a number of years, and I think you said one had like ten years of experience, though not in criminal law, right?
A. Not in law. He was doing policy work.
Q. For the entire ten years or --

Page 185

A. Yeah.
Q. Do you know how long the prosecutor had been out practicing as a prosecutor?
A. She began as a prosecutor in 2008 or '9.
Q. Okay. Very good. So as to the -- the really new ones, right, they all went to a law school and passed the bar exam, right?
A. Yes.
Q. And as part of their law school curriculum they all, you know, took criminal law and evidence and did all the things you're supposed to do in law school, correct?
A. I hope so.
Q. Right. And the, you know, ethical obligations and requirements for a new attorney aren't really any different than for attorneys who have been out there for 30 plus years, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And I think, you know, as a new attorney you're still deemed to be competent just like an attorney of 30 plus years when it comes to, you know, the services you're supposed to render to your client, right?
A. Correct.

Page 186

MR. MOORE: Sorry, you're going to --
MS. SHIPMA: I don't know that the rules of evidence deem you competent just because you're an attorney. They say you have the obligation to be competent, but the rules of evidence don't deem someone competent.
MR. MOORE: Okay. That's fair enough. RubinBrown study.
MS. ROSCA: So Justin, it's one o'clock and Mr. Reynolds is here. So I just want you to --
MR. MOORE: No, that's good.
MS. ROSCA: You've been going for over an hour and a half.
MR. MOORE: This is going to be it, I think.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) And so these are people that also went through the interview process with your office, right?
A. Correct.
Q. And they met all the requirements you would expect for someone to work in your office and they were hired, right?
A. Correct.
MR. MOORE: I think that's all I have.
MS. SHIPMA: Okay. Mary, I just have some follow-up.

Page 187

EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. I have a few follow-up questions. I think I'm going to go backwards just for the fun of it. I won't speak backwards. I'm just going -- so you were talking about the RubinBrown numbers and I believe you said in your opinion they're not fair to your office. I don't think those were your exact words, but that was the meaning that -- that you gave that they don't --
A. Correct.
Q. -- accurately reflect the reality in your office?
A. Yes.
Q. Now, is -- does that mean that the RubinBrown numbers appear to place your office at a lower percentage of capacity than you think is fair?
A. Yes.
Q. The attorneys from Thompson Coburn that are -- that you had, you had talked about having an attorney --
A. Yes.
Q. -- from Thompson Coburn, did that attorney have a lesser caseload than the other public defenders in your office?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know about what his or her caseload was?
A. I believe he had about 30 to 40 misdemeanors at a time.
Q. Do you remember when the RubinBrown study -- when the report came out?
A. 2016, '15.
Q. And I believe you said that in your memory that the public defender system was tracking their time from 2014 to 2016?
A. I don't remember when it began. I know it ended October 2016.
Q. Did the ending of it coincide with completion of the RubinBrown study?
A. The RubinBrown study was completed, yes.
Q. Did the -- did keeping time continue for a period after RubinBrown was completed?
A. I don't know the answer to that question.
Q. All right. Of the cases that are handled in your office during a year, a typical year, what would you estimate the percentage of cases that utilize experts to be?

A. Probably under five percent.
Q. And the same question for depositions, what would you estimate the number of cases that utilize depositions to be?
A. Well, we -- we've asked for 300 depositions in fiscal year 2017.
Q. And that was about 4,200 cases; is that correct?
A. Correct.
Q. Now, if there are no rules that limit the taking of depositions, to what do you attribute this low number of depositions?
A. That the cases are being prepared quickly and resolved quickly.
Q. And the same with the use of experts, why -- why are only five percent of cases have experts?
A. I -- I attribute that more to our lack of experience and attorneys able to determine when an expert would add value to the case.
Q. And in your experience, are defendants out there bamboozling the system to try to get public defender representation?
A. No, not at all.

Page 190

Q. And I know --
A. The people we represent are very poor.
Q. I know you gave a couple of -- you gave an example and then said maybe five times when your office has gone back to court and said we don't think this person -- you know, because the person was going on a cruise or whatever.
A. Right.
Q. But that in your opinion, do you see that -- do you believe that that's happening more often than your people are catching?
A. No. And usually if the person posts a high bond, which may cause us to question their indigence, it's a family member who has posted it for them.
Q. So doing further investigation on the financial means of these folks wouldn't result in a substantial decrease in the number of cases handled by the -- or by the public defenders office; is that correct?
MR. MOORE: Sorry. I'll just object, calls for speculation. Subject to that, you can go ahead and respond.
A. I doubt it if it would decrease it at all.

Page 191

Q. (By Ms. Shipma) And you talked about how a case or a matter was defined?
A. Yes.
Q. To your knowledge, is the -- the description that you gave, is that consistent throughout the public defender system or is that -- does that just apply to your district?
A. It's how I was trained as a district defender to do it, so I would assume so, but I haven't looked at other people's databases.
Q. I believe Mr. Moore asked you a question about who you've spoken to regarding concerns about your caseload without giving you a time frame for that, and you answered you talked to the attorneys in the office, the Post-Dispatch, MSPD management, some judges. What time frame were you giving your answer for?
A. For the last several months. So since the Hinkebein decision came out.
Q. You said that you have three attorneys right now who handle conflicts?
A. Correct.
Q. Is that all they handle --
A. Yes.
Q. -- conflicts? And is that --

Page 192

A. One of the attorneys has a few St. Louis City cases.
Q. And has that been your practice to have attorneys who handle conflicts only handle conflict cases?
A. Generally because they have tended to be experienced attorneys, they've also had maybe a St. Louis City homicide also.
Q. You've spoken a couple of times about someone not being eligible as opposed to not being indigent. I took it that's what you were meaning. Can you explain the difference in those two terms, if there is a difference?
A. There is a difference. So there are indigent people, which is a determination based upon their income and assets, and then there are eligible cases. So you can be indigent and not have an eligible case. So if you're indigent and you're charged with municipal code violation, you would not be eligible.
Q. Thank you. When you said that you have 15 to 30 open cases, I wasn't certain because you had been asked about the number of clients that you have as well. And so I just wanted to make sure that we get the -- the answers correct. How many open cases do you have right now?

A. Currently right now, 20.
Q. For yourself?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you know about how many clients that represents?
A. One client has two cases. So 19.
MS. SHIPMA: That's all the questions I have.
MR. MAUNE: I have nothing further.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:
Q. Just one last question. As far as like use of experts and amount of depos you guys are taking, would you say that you pretty much do whatever the case requires to the extent that you're able?
A. We do what the attorney thinks is appropriate, the assigned attorney.
Q. Right. So I mean, not every case is going to require an expert, right?
A. Right.
Q. And any cases that require an expert may be the case that it gets plead out or doesn't reach that stage where an expert becomes necessary, right?

A. Correct. But -- but you would have already retained the expert even if it results in a plea.
Q. Depending on where the case is at, right --
A. Yeah.
Q. -- wherever -- and the same thing with, you know, depositions and other types of discovery, right?
A. What was the question?
Q. The question was you do whatever like amount of discovery or consulting with experts or retaining experts that is necessary for the cases, but sometimes just because of the way the cases get resolved there are times whenever those -- you don't quite get to those steps where you would then be retaining the expert or be doing the deposition; is that fair?
A. Correct. Yes.
MR. MOORE: That's all.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MS. SHIPMA:
Q. Now I have a follow-up. Mary, in your opinion are there instances where cases could have benefited from the use of -- of an expert, but an expert wasn't requested?

MR. MOORE: Call for -- I'll object. It calls for speculation, but you can answer.
A. Yes.
Q. (By Ms. Shipma) And the same with depositions, are there cases where there should have been depositions taken in a case but they were not?
A. The case would have benefited from depositions.
Q. And what is -- in your opinion, what has been the reason for these either experts not being used or depositions not being taken in those cases?
A. Lack of experience of the attorneys, lack of continuity of the attorneys in the office, and lack of time.
Q. Every case that comes through your office, is it fully worked up to the extent it should be?
A. No.
MS. SHIPMA: Nothing further.
FURTHER EXAMINATION
QUESTIONS BY MR. MOORE:
Q. And just to clarify, you also discussed another reason for not doing the discovery of the experts, which was that sometimes the case gets resolved prior to the stage in the litigation where you would be retaining the expert or doing a discovery, right?

Page 196

A. Yes, but when the case gets resolved early you want to know why? It's because the person is in jail and we have not been able to get together the resources to do a bond reduction to get the person out of jail.
Q. Or they got a good deal, right?
A. No, because we don't get any deals.
Q. No defendant ever gets a plea deal of any kind in the city?
A. Very seldom.
Q. So it does happen sometimes, though?
A. It's beginning to happen.
Q. Okay. And I know it may be a little hyperbole or whatever else, but I mean, there are -- plea deals do take place and defendants do plead guilty in exchange for, you know --
MS. ROSCA: Objection, calls for speculation.
Q. (By Mr. Moore) I'm asking whether this does happen. They do make deals or whatever else whereby they plead guilty and then they receive a reduction in the possible sentence that they could receive, right?

A. Right. Yeah.

Q. And sometimes that happens before you would get to the stage where experts are required, right?

A. It could.

Q. Has that happened? I mean, does that happen?

A. I can't tell you a specific case off the top of my head, no.

MR. MOORE: Okay. I think that's good enough. Done.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 1:14. We are off the record. This concludes our deposition of Mary Fox.

COURT REPORTER: Signature?

MS. SHIPMA: Yeah, just like before I'm going to read and sign.

COURT REPORTER: And counsel, can I just get on the record that everybody is going to duplicate transcript orders from the last time we had depositions in October? Is that a yes?

MS. SHIPMA: Yes.

Page 198

MR. MOORE: That's a yes for me.

MR. MAUNE: Yes.

(WHEREIN, the deposition was concluded at 1:14 p.m.)

Will the attorneys present please introduce themselves.

MS. WILCOX: My name is Gillian Wilcox for the plaintiffs.

MR. RAMSEY: Steven Alan Ramsey for the State of Missouri and Governor Greitens.

MS. SHIPMA: Jacqueline Shipma for MSPD defendants.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: Will the court reporter please swear in the witness.

ANTHONY C. CARDARELLA,

of lawful age, produced, sworn and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs, deposes and says:

EXAMINATION

BY MS. WILCOX:

Q. Mr. Cardarella.

A. Good morning.

Q. Hi. Could you state your name for the record and spell your last name?

A. Sure. Anthony Cardarella. Last name is spelled C-A-R-D-A-R-E-L-L-A.

Q. Thank you. Have you ever been deposed before?

A. Yes.

Q. How many times, do you think?

A. Oh, probably no more than a handful, maybe.

Q. Okay. Is it safe to assume you have taken depositions?

A. Not nearly enough, but, yes.

Q. Okay. Do you remember the last time you were deposed?

A. I might have been deposed for a postconviction relief hearing, in all likelihood. If not, it would have been even farther back than that when I would have been the deponent. I think we were suing a bank, but that was not work related.

Q. Okay. So over five years ago?

A. At least, I think so.

Q. Okay. So you know these rules, but I will very briefly go through the ground rules, partly so I remember them as well. Verbal responses.

A. Yes.

Q. "Yes" or "no." We will try not to interrupt each other.

A. Okay.

Q. It's probably more important for me than for you.

Unless you're instructed not to answer by your attorney, provide an answer to the question, even if there is an objection. If you don't understand a question, let me know. I will do my best to rephrase or we will move on.

If you need a break -- if anyone needs a break, just let us know, but make sure it's not when a question is pending.

A. Okay.

Q. Did you review any documents in preparation for today's deposition?

A. I took -- I began to take another look at the petition. I wasn't able to finish it entirely, but I think I have -- once I received it much earlier, I probably read the entire thing, I think.

Q. Okay.

A. But in terms of prep for the deposition, I would have reviewed portions of the petition.

Q. Did you look at anything else?

A. Not in preparation for this deposition, no.

Q. Did you bring any documents with you today?

A. Not with me.

Q. And besides your attorney, Ms. Shipma, have you talked to anyone else or met with anyone else in preparation for today's deposition?

A. Other than telling people I was going to be deposed by the ACLU, I don't believe there's anything in addition to that.

Q. Okay. And who would you have told?

A. Oh, probably a long list of people. My co-manager would have been one of them, probably secretaries in terms of having to cancel things that were over-calendared. I'm sure I told my wife. The list is probably longer than that, but, really, it's inconsequential. I didn't tell anybody at a retail store or anything.

Q. Okay. We'll talk about education and employment. Tell me about your current employment, where you work, your title, and how long you've been there.

A. Okay. My title is district defender. I'm employed by the Missouri State Public Defender Trial Division. My office is physically located at 234 West Shrader in Liberty, Missouri. We cover more counties than the county that that resides, which is Clay.

And if there was more to that question, I've already forgotten it.

Q. How long have you been the district defender?

A. You know, I was trying to think about that this morning because I figured that would be one of the questions. I'm going to say around 15 years, but that's an estimate.

Q. And does your district have a number?

A. 07.

Q. Do you also call it Area 7 sometimes?

A. I think the system does, yes.

Q. Okay. So today we may refer to it as District 7 or Area 7.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. How long have you worked for MSPD, total?

A. I started in August of 1989, and with the exception of being out of the system in private practice with a law firm for approximately 24 months, the entirety of my career since that date, time frame.

Q. When was the two-year period when you were in private practice?

A. I was with -- I started in August of 1989. I was with the system for four years and 11 months. I know that because I didn't plan my vesting very well. I was away for 24 months and then came back. When I returned, I was into management.

Q. Okay. So let's talk a little bit, then, about what other roles you have been in with MSPD before you were district defender.

A. Okay. That would have been my first approximate five years with the public defender system. I began in appellate/post-conviction relief where I did three years and two weeks, not that anyone was counting, before I transferred over into the trial division. And both of those were in the Kansas City, Missouri location. I remained, like I said, just shy of five years before I went with the law firm.

Q. And when you came back from the law firm, what position did you start in?

A. After two years with the law firm, I returned to the public defender system as a manager, district defender in Area District 5, Buchanan County, St. Joseph, Missouri, where I remained for about six or seven years.

Q. And from that position, did you take the position in District 7 as the district defender?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. And what district is Kansas City?

A. 16.

Q. So you worked at three different districts?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Trial and appellate in Kansas City. Just trial in Areas 5 and 7.

Q. Okay.

A. As management.

Q. And not as management in Kansas City in the appellate and trial?

A. Never.

Q. Is there a central office at MSPD?

A. Yes. The central office is now in Columbia, Missouri, as I understand it.

Q. And who runs that office?

A. Our director, Michael Barrett.

Q. Who do you report directly to as a district defender for Area 7?

A. Well, we have a hierarchy of managers. Most recently the assistant trial division director retired, and the public defender system did not fill that position, so it's the head of the trial division, Ellen Blaugh, would be who I report most directly to now.

Page 13

Q. And you did report to the person who retired?

A. She had an assistant, Leon Munday, who had recently retired, so I would typically go to her assistant, or I may just e-mail both of them. I considered, obviously, both of them my managers.

Q. And where were their offices located?

A. Ellen Blaugh, St. Louis, Missouri, and Leon Munday, Kansas City, Missouri.

Q. Okay. And do you know why the positions were not filled when those people retired?

A. It's just the one person that retired. The assistant trial division director, Leon Munday. I don't have personal knowledge as to why it was. I can only speculate, but I'll choose not to do that.

Q. What direction, if any, related to the work you do as the district defender, do you receive from the central office or from the people that you reported directly to?

A. I'm not sure I understand your question.

Q. I assume you have a lot of discretion in your office for how things run, but did you receive directions as to how your area -- the work should be done in your area from anyone in the central office?

A. I do have a lot of discretion. I'm not sure what you mean by -- if I spend money, if I do something that I believe requires management review or approval, I always contact them, so I just -- in terms of day-to-day, no.

Q. Okay. So there are certain things that you would go to them for. Those are things that you understand that you would go to them for based on your experience as the district defender?

A. That's correct. Or perhaps legal advice if I know that one of them has a specialty or something like that or has dealt with something recently or may have as a result of them supervising the rest of the state.

Q. For either a case you're working on or someone in your office?

A. Correct.

Q. You said that District 7 has several counties, one of them is Clay County?

A. Yes.

Q. What other counties are covered?

A. Our three primary counties remain Clay County, Platte County and Clinton County. Clay County is 7, Area 7. Platte County is Area 6, and

Clinton County is a part of the 43rd Judicial Circuit. There's another trial office that handles the majority of the remaining counties of the 43rd Judicial Circuit.

Now, that being said, those are our three primary counties. That's where we are responsible now as of fairly recent. Prior to that, we were -- we probably would, at any given time, have those primary counties, as well as anywhere from 10 to 12 to 15 additional surrounding counties, some of which were not very close in proximity.

Q. How recently did that change?

A. Oh, boy. Probably inside of a year, I think.

Q. Do you know why it changed?

A. My understanding is that the public defender system utilized funds that were part of its budget to assist trial and appellate offices dealing with conflict counties. And by "conflict," that necessarily or often necessarily meant that it would be greater distances to cover, jails that were farther away, prisons that were farther away, courthouses that were farther away, defendants that were farther away, so to lighten the load, if you will, was the goal.

Q. And if those -- when you said there were a lot of other counties that you had been covering --

A. We still do because of attrition. We still will until they, by attrition, you know, those cases are settled, dismissed or resolved some other way.

Q. Okay. And if those counties are in other districts, do you share the workload with public defenders, say, in District 6 or in a district that also covers those counties?

A. Well, probably the best way, easiest way I can explain it would be by example. The Kansas City Trial Office, Area 16, and our office, Liberty, we will share. If two young men are accused of a crime and they wind up being co-defendants and there would thus be inherent conflicts, we would send our second young man to the Kansas City office to represent him. If they had two folks charged with stealing a car, for example, they would send their second one to us. That's the way it went on for years and years and years, frankly, as long as I've known it, until recently, approximately a year.

Q. How would that be handled now?

A. Now, instead of conflicting out -- and this is all electronically through a form on a computer, you know, so things can be kept track of, now, instead of sending it to Kansas City, we send it to the transfer agent and they locate, contract public defender attorneys who have -- who are interested in providing criminal indigent defense to people accused of crimes.

Q. Are these people who work for the public defender system like you do or are they private attorneys?

A. They are private attorneys who, for whatever reason, have agreed to do that for whatever duration and for whatever selected counties.

Q. Do you know who pays them or if they are paid?

A. My understanding is the public defender budget pays them.

Q. What judicial circuit is District 7 in or if it's in multiple circuits?

A. I should have been more clear on that. Clay County is Judicial Circuit 7 and Platte County is Judicial Circuit 6.

Q. And Clinton County is 43rd?

A. 43rd, yes.

Q. So you now work -- your office works in these three counties, you said, as of recently, that's your main area?

A. Those have always been our main area. They are now the only cases we receive indigent applications from, but we still have a large amount of remaining conflict counties that we have a caseload with.

Q. Okay. How big of a geographic area is it where your office currently takes cases from?

A. Well, Platte County is -- the courthouse is not too far from the KCI airport. The downtown Liberty Courthouse is where -- our Clay County cases, and then Clinton County is in -- the courthouse is in Plattsburg, Missouri, if that describes anything.

Q. Maybe the easier way to do this -- so your office is in Liberty?

A. Yes.

Q. Which is where the attorneys are based?

A. Yes.

Q. How far of a driving distance is it to get to the respective courthouses?

A. Approximately 30 miles.

Q. To each one?

Page 19

A. Approximately.

Q. Okay.

A. That might be slightly -- might be slightly farther for Clinton County, Plattsburg, Missouri. It's more rural, so not really a direct route, if you will.

Q. Do each of those -- if you have a case in one of those counties or courthouses, is it likely that then your client is going to be in custody near that courthouse?

A. Well, unfortunately, let me begin, it's far more likely that our clients are going to be in custody. It does not necessarily mean that they're going to be in custody close to our home office of Liberty, Missouri, or in the jurisdiction where they're charged.

For example, for quite -- for quite a few years the people who are charged with crimes in Clinton County, where the courthouse is located in Plattsburg, Missouri, are not -- they have an archaic jail in the bowels of their basement which probably house, I'm told, you know, a dozen, 15 people, maximum. And I use that term "house" generously because it's not fit for -- it shouldn't be used. But because they have far, far more people accused of crimes and far, far more people in custody, they farm them out -- "they," Clinton County, farms them out to other jurisdictions. And for the last several years they farm those inmates out to another city, another county, Andrew County, so we have to drive quite a bit farther north to see an inmate in custody.

Q. Whose hearings will actually be in Clinton County?

A. If they're lucky enough to be brought to court, yes, if it's not by, for example, you know, video court.

Q. Okay. And I'm going to touch on that in a little bit.

A. I'm sure you are.

Q. So just to make sure I understand, your office is not currently covering conflict cases by assignment?

A. That's right. And we hope that to be the case forever and ever, amen.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't have any confidence in that.

Q. And you say you hope that to be the case because it is --

A. It provides a miniscule amount of relief.

Page 21

Q. Got it. As to your workload, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. How many attorneys work in your office?
A. Including myself, a total of 12.
Q. Are you currently fully staffed with 12 attorneys?
A. The phrase I prefer to use is we're currently fully understaffed because I don't think we're properly staffed, but, yes, of the full-time employees that are allocated to the office I manage, we're fully staffed.
Q. How many attorneys do you think your office would need to be what you might call fully staffed?
A. Under my definition?
Q. Yes.
A. Twice as many.
Q. With your current caseload --
A. Well, yeah.
Q. -- right?
A. That's presumably part of the question, yeah.
Q. Is there a high turnover in your office for attorneys?

Page 22

A. I mean, statistically, I haven't done the math. I know that we keep track of, gosh, no one left recently, and every day that that happens, that's a day to celebrate.
Q. When is the last time you had to hire a new attorney?
A. Probably approximately 12 months ago or so. That's the best of my recollection. Might have been slightly longer.
Q. 12 is -- I don't want you to go through every one, but is there a way that you could tell me, maybe, the average level of experience the attorneys in your office have?
A. Well, that changes with transition, but I can tell what -- you know, approximate what it is now.
Q. Sure.
A. We have probably -- I can think of one attorney with probably an extensive amount of criminal defense experience, 15 to 20 years, I'm estimating, and we have another attorney with about 10 to 12 years of experience, another attorney with probably that same amount of experience, my own experience, as I've already detailed, and I think we have about -- I think the last time I thought about that with any degree of seriousness, we have approximately half of us, so I think six attorneys that are relatively -- what I would call relatively new to criminal defense.

Q. When an attorney does leave your office, how are that attorney's cases transitioned to someone else?
A. Well, I mean, more times than not, they're absorbed. That's not always the case. By that I mean redistributed to the existing full-time attorneys that remain. It always creates a burden, and it's an unfair reality to any of the clients that are losing their attorney.
Q. I guess let's go back to the last position you filled when an attorney left. Was it easy to find someone to fill that position or was it difficult?
A. Well, understand I barely had time to come here, so we really despise having to list positions and take time out of an otherwise incredibly busy week to stop everything and review applications, schedule interviews, conduct interviews, do the things that we're required to do in order to document the interviews, conduct second interviews, check references, et cetera. It's a huge amount of time commitment, so I'm happy when that doesn't happen. I prefer working with and attempting to train the attorneys that we presently have, but sometimes, you know, I get the notice anyway.

Q. Are you solely responsible, in your position, for filling the -- if someone leaves, you do the interviewing and the hiring involved with a new attorney?
A. I involve my assistant, my co-manager, to a great extent, so...
Q. If you could give me an explanation of what other staff, besides the 12 attorneys, work in your Area 7 office.
A. Sure. Everyone is full time. The attorneys, of course, are full-time salary, so that slightly creates a different predicament. Then we have two full-time investigators. We have one full-time legal assistant, and then we have, I believe, four office specialists that we used to call them clerks for decades, so, frankly, I can't even remember what they're called now.
Q. A position that's not technically a paralegal or legal assistant, but provides support to the attorneys in the office?
A. Absolutely, yes.

Page 25

Q. You've been at your office for over ten years?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you talk about how the size of your office has grown or not grown over that time?

A. I think since I came to the Liberty office as the manager, transferring from the St. Joe, I think the office was -- has been given, I think, another two or three full-time attorneys. There's been some transition with the positions over the years. There was a period of time where we had no investigators, and those were instead, by attrition, legal assistants for a brief period, and then we -- yeah, I convinced management to have some investigators again.

Q. I think I know the answer to this, but do you believe your office is sufficiently staffed?

A. Of course not.

Q. And just explain a little bit of why not.

A. How much time do you have? Well, I mean, it's a pretty simple equation of the law of supply and demand. The supply is endless, it is absolutely endless. As many cases that prosecutorial authorities can file are filed. There's no limit.

And the prosecutorial discretion is absolutely unfettered, so with that hypothetical number and with the population and economy with a greater number of people not being able to afford expensive attorneys, our numbers have skyrocketed. And you take that, and legislators that continue to pass more onerous provisions, continue to make additional acts illegal, create mounting and duplicative punishments and extended punishments for periods of incarceration in our adult prisons and juvenile facilities, the stakes have just risen. And the courts rely on the public defender system to put it all on their back like a burro, and it's not working.

Q. I'm going to go through a list of resources, and first just tell me whether they're available to the attorneys in your office.

A. Okay.

Q. Maybe with a yes or no, and then after that, we can talk about the process of how they're available.

A. Okay.

Q. The ability to locate witnesses?

A. And this part of your question is whether or not it's available to the attorneys?

Q. Yes.

Page 27

A. Well, with a ratio of 12 attorneys to two investigators, I don't know that that's always available. I mean, it is in theory, but get in line.

Q. Right. Do you ever use outside investigators?

A. It is -- I can think of only one occasion where we did something like that. It's so rare. It was a unique circumstance that involved a conflict. I think that's about the only time I can think of having ever used that.

Q. And if that is used, that's an additional cost, correct? Because the investigators you have are on staff, and paid a salary?

A. That's correct.

Q. So if you have to go use an outside investigator, then that's an additional cost that's being spent on top of the salaries that are already --

A. It necessarily would be, sure.

Q. Are there social workers available?

A. I'm not -- honestly I don't know whether they are social workers. I know the public defender system had looked into a program or had begun one or two interns in the system. I think one may have been located in Columbia, Missouri, but I'm not certain of that. I haven't heard anything about the social workers, anything recent, so I have no reason to believe that we have a division of social workers, none that we rely on.

Q. Your attorneys are not regularly using social workers that are available to you?

A. We sometimes joke and say that we are the social worker, too.

Q. What about experts in cases?

A. Assuming that an attorney had some time to think about what expert, there would be a mechanism by which he or she could request funds, justify the use of them, because it's the taxpayers' money, and then lay those things out for a funding request. So it is, in theory, available.

Q. And I'm going to get back to the time that it takes to think about that.

A. Sure. I just don't want any of my questions and answers being taken out of context. That's probably why you're not going to get a "yes" or "no."

Q. That's fair.

What about taking depositions?

A. Same thing. We have the funding available with the funding requests, specific details, different levels of review before the money is finally released. It's available.

Q. Okay. In theory, again?

A. Everything is available, in theory, because there's not time to do it, nor is there sufficient staff.

Q. Okay. What about the use of translators?

A. Well, we have -- of course, the court pays for the translators in the courtroom, so unless there's a glitch, the court should have the appropriate translator there for the person accused of the crime who are, quite often, in custody, more often times than not.

Independent of the courtroom setting, the attorneys in our office and our system have the ability to seek funding for a translator in order to communicate with their client. You know, it's cumbersome, but it can be done.

Q. So if a defendant needs a translator to speak with their attorney, that attorney, in order to go meet with their client, say, in a jail, would have to request the funds for a translator, schedule the translator to go have the meeting; is that an accurate --

A. Sure, sure. I mean, the attorney may not do that himself or herself but, yes, that's how it plays out, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Probably ask a support staff member to help do that, but the attorney -- he or she will request the funding, and the funding has to be approved before you can utilize the resource, of course.

Q. Do you approve or reject expense requests in your office, or does that go to someone else?

A. I approve or review them for approval, and then, you know, if they need to be clarified, obviously, that occurs, and then it's passed on for further review. I don't -- I'm not quite sure how much monetary approval I have, independent of my supervisors, but that really doesn't create much of an issue, I mean, if there's a need to clarify, that obviously has to happen.

Q. So someone other than you has the final say of whether --

A. On most things, yes.

Q. Okay. Is there ever a reason -- if an attorney has the time to decide they need an expert, has the time to find an expert, and makes a request, is there ever a reason why that might be rejected by -- if you're not making the final decision, I guess, then whoever you pass it on to?

A. No, that's never been rejected.

Q. Okay. So the reason that an expert wouldn't be utilized more often than not is not because the request would be rejected, but because there wouldn't be time for the attorney to even get that far?

A. I thought -- I understood your question to relate to translators, so I may have misunderstood you, so could you state that part again?

Q. Yes. My question was actually broad, and that probably is what made it confusing.

A. Okay.

Q. So the question is if there's an expense request, which is a broad question.

A. Sure.

Q. So if it helps, I can narrow it into the different categories. What I'm trying to get at is it ever -- is an expense request ever rejected for lack of funding?

A. I don't think so, no. I mean, you know, there's clarification that's sought.

Q. Okay.

A. And there may be -- ultimately, my supervisor has the last call on that, but I don't think it's based on funding. I'm assuming it's -- I assume that part of what is considered is the wise use of funds, but that's speculation on my part.

Q. Do you encourage attorneys in your office to think about the budget or the funding before they make requests for the types of resources, experts, taking depositions, using a translator to visit a client?

A. I encourage them to use resources, but the reality is they don't have time to do that so, I mean, I'm not going to insult their intelligence.

Q. Okay. But you would never instruct them to not request it because of budgetary reasons? If they feel like they need it for a case, you would support their request for it?

A. Oh, absolutely, sure, certainly. Because if the system didn't have the funding, should we reach that point, then we seek relief from the courts.

Q. You touched on this, so I would like to talk about it a little bit, the use of investigators. So there are two investigators in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. How does an attorney utilize the investigator? You made a comment "get in line." So if you could just kind of give maybe an example, a day-to-day example of how that plays out in your office.

A. Our procedure is in order to track and monitor workload and progress in a case, action items are initiated through the software of our computer system, action item to Investigator A or Investigator B that spells out what you want him or her to do with a theoretical due date. And, obviously, the task could be multiple variety, so it may well be just running someone's criminal history or maybe trying to locate a witness. Those are going to be something that's more in flux. Sometimes it could be scene investigation, could be schedule a meeting, and then be present when the attorney is conducting an interview, for example. So, I mean, there's endless number of things that we would use an investigator for.

Q. Is it up to the investigator to schedule and prioritize the requests that come in?

A. Well, every action item is given a due date by the attorney assigned, and the way we like to do it in our office is if the -- now, it's not a perfect system because everybody is too busy, but what we like is if the due date for the action item needs to be extended or monitored, I would like for them to come to me so that we can see. I want to make sure that there's not one attorney hogging all the investigators, and there's not, but, you know, not everything can be done in two days because you think it's an emergency because, frankly, it may not be.

Q. So given the capacity of the in-house investigators you have and the number of cases your attorneys have, are there times when an investigator -- where it would be helpful for them to do something, but they just can't get the task accomplished?

A. Well, each investigator -- each of the two investigators I have, they're not salaried people, so they only are allowed to work 40 hours a week, so, I mean, that's -- even the most industrious folks are able to accomplish so much, so many tasks, even in the most efficient manner, in 40 hours.

Q. Does your office have standard litigation practices?

Page 35

A. Can you tell me what you mean?

Q. Is there anything in your office that maybe would be, like, a written standard litigation practice or a manual that attorneys would refer to?

A. The only thing, theoretically, I could reference would be the Guidelines for Representation by the Missouri Public Defenders System, but I'm certain -- I'm virtually certain there's no attorneys who have done anything except, perhaps, glanced at that. You know, they are -- they are the ideal. They're a good set of what things that should be done, but with the workload, that's an impossibility. With the workload, i.e., especially with the existing resources, people, it's an impossibility to do everything you need to do on a case.

Q. And we're going to move into workload now, so we're going to start talking more in detail about those issues.

Can you describe your role as district defender, your -- this is going to be a hard question to answer, but your day-to-day responsibilities?

A. Well, I'm not proud of this, but I think the first thing a lot of what the managers do, including myself, is to put out the next day's fire, and that could be practically anything.

Q. Is it fair to say that you're responsible for managing your office, assigning cases and managing the budget? Are those three things you're responsible for?

A. At least. And it's not an exhaustive list.

Q. If you were to add other things to that list that could be generally --

A. I have a caseload.

Q. Yes. And we are going to get to that.

A. Okay.

Q. Yes. And maybe -- maybe you explained this as well as you can, but you do manage the budget in your office, to some extent? Does that fall on you or does it usually fall on someone -- a supervisor of yours?

A. As I understand it, the comptroller allocates the budget to the individual offices, so we're given notice of that. I have a longstanding clerk assistant who was, frankly, doing that long before I got to the office in terms of keeping track of the money spent on the funding for professional expenses, for translators, things like that, for purchasing office supplies so, I mean, I do not -- I do not sit and subtract -- when we get an order of staples, subtract it from the budget. I don't do that, but she'll track that for me.

Q. Okay.

A. And does a good job of it.

Q. And you've already said that your office does not have the staff it needs and the support it needs. Is there ever a time when there's not enough money to meet the demands that your office has now, if that's a question you can answer?

A. I'm not sure I understand it. I mean, it could be -- that could be broadly interpreted to mean funding, and I'm sure that's not your question.

Q. I understand you need more attorneys. Is there -- working in the budget that you have right now, have you ever made a request for your office of something -- like, a position to fill or something that normally is paid for, and that has not happened because of the budget?

A. I'll give you an example. I mean, I could, the first thing I do every morning is shoot an e-mail that says please give me more lawyers. But I don't do that. I think that's presumed. Everyone across the state would be sending out the same e-mail, I presume. If what you're saying is have I asked to utilize funds, and been told no? No, I haven't been turned down.

Q. Can you talk a little bit about the day-to-day responsibilities of the other attorneys in your office who are not managers?

A. Well, each of the attorneys, the 10 are not -- that don't fulfill a management role, have a caseload, of course, of their own, so as any -- their responsibilities would mimic any attorney with clients, specifically criminal defense clients, so they spend an inordinate amount of time in court, some of them an inordinate amount of time getting to court for far, far away places, visiting clients at jails, communicating with clients through letters or phone calls, if not personal visits, opening the file or opening the electronic file or the physical file, and reviewing discovery, creating to-do lists and then, you know, as it goes. If it's creating action items to investigators, of course, a large amount of time is going to be utilized in negotiating with the prosecuting authorities. It's a large number of tasks and it would -- a lot of those would be consistent, whatever file you pick up, but some of those, depending on what the nature of the charge is, it might be more limited or it may be more expansive.

Q. How much time would you say is spent on administrative tasks versus substantive legal work, by the attorneys?

A. Again, we're talking about nonmanagement attorneys?

Q. Let's talk about them separately.

A. Okay.

Q. Talk about the line attorneys first, nonmanagement.

A. Well, they would -- they have daily time sheets, they have expense reports. Anytime any funding is requested there's a -- you know, there's a form for that, as the phrase goes, in order to make sure we're closely monitoring our expenses. There's action items for any requests that they want staff to do. You know, outside of hey, would you copy this or make three copies of that, there's going to be a form that asks an investigator to do something or a legal assistant that asks for a letter of incarceration or to contact and get -- go to the jail, get a medical release from this client, go to the provider, get an estimate for the dollars so the attorney can then ask for the estimate of the dollars to be approved. I guess some of those are administrative because we have to account for, you know, guardians of the taxpayers' funds, so in order to just get the ball to roll, those steps have to be made.

Q. Could you say how much, you know, if a hundred percent of their day, what percentage of it is spent doing that type of work, on average, for an attorney?

A. I would be guessing.

Q. Okay.

A. And it would differ from attorney to attorney because, frankly, some of them are better at filling out their time sheets than others are. Some of them are better at filling out the request to do a depo than others are. Some of them are still learning.

Q. How much time do you think you, personally, spend on administrative tasks versus substantive legal work?

A. Not enough and yet too much.

Q. If your office had more support staff, would that alleviate some of that work for the attorneys?

A. Of course.

Q. Can you describe or explain how cases get assigned to the public defender system and then, specifically, to your office, how that process works?

Page 41

A. The statutory scheme is that an indigent accused of a crime fills out an application for an attorney from the public defender system. That may be a judge or a judge's clerk handing it over to someone who is being read their initial charges. It may be someone who is arrested in a facility, and asks for an application, but it -- everything commences with that application for -- application and affidavit of indigence.

We receive those through a variety of mechanisms. Could be through the mail, we pick them up from the jail, some jails every day, some jails not every day. And then those are processed. Those people that are deemed to be indigent, files are created, attorneys are assigned, and then the commencement of the pleadings begin.

There are times, obviously, statutorily, the applicant has the right to appeal our finding to the judge, so the judge may appoint us, so we'll get it post-appeal, if you will, where a person accused of a crime that filled out an application then says, "No, I really don't have enough money. I know they said that I don't qualify, but I don't have any money. I've got this rent, I've got that bill, I lost my job," et cetera. And then the judge considers and appoints us, in a lot of cases, so -- and I probably didn't finish my answer, but I'm not sure what -- does that generally address your question?

Q. Yeah.

A. Okay.

Q. So the applications for your -- for Area 7 are processed in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. How do you decide which attorney takes a case? How are they assigned to attorneys one someone is either, I guess, appointed by the court, if there's some appeal of the finding in your office, or your office just decides yes, they qualify?

A. Is your question how do we know which attorney is going to be assigned?

Q. How are the cases assigned?

A. I assign them, and there's a scheme that we use to assign them, and that may be impacted by jurisdiction, experience. So that's the way it works.

Q. Is it a scheme that you've developed in your office or does it come from a command at central office how to do it?

Page 43

A. There's no commandment on that and, frankly, there couldn't be no more than I can have one set scheme because if I lose an attorney with 20 years' worth of experience, I better hope I get another one. And that doesn't always happen.

Q. What is your personal caseload right now?

A. I don't have an exact number. If you're okay with approximations, we can deal with approximations.

Q. Yes, please.

A. Frankly, it may be -- it may be more than the last time I looked or it my be slightly less because, again, part of the limitations of not having sufficient resources means you don't have sufficient resources to keep an accurate count of those things that should be closed, and I don't think it's a mischaracterization to say it's approaching 400.

Q. What types of cases do you have in that 400?

A. Everything from speeding to murder.

Q. In your time at District 7 as the district defender, have you always maintained your own caseload?

A. I've also had a caseload, yes.

Q. Is that by your choice, as a manager in that office, or something that comes from the directive of someone above you?

A. I'm certainly not told what to do in that respect, I mean, I have, over the past -- it's been years and years, but I have been -- it's been suggested to me by supervisors to reduce my caseload in order to, you know, do more of the administrative things. That's not a bad suggestion. It just -- in my estimation, it wasn't a practical one because -- again, because there is no maximum number of caseload that judges feel that we just have an endless amount of supply and endless number of shelves and endless amount of time.

There are people who are going to be accused of crimes who properly qualify and, under the constitution, have the right to an attorney. And if it's not me representing them, it's going to be another person perhaps with as much experience or Lord forbid, somebody without any experience. And I don't mean on the speeding ticket.

Q. Right. Do certain attorneys in your office -- because I know we talked about there are, I think, you said, at least three attorneys who have a significant amount of experience so -- and I know the scheme changes how you assign cases, but are there attorneys in your office who handle more felonies? Are there some attorneys who don't handle any felonies? Could you kind of describe how that works, or maybe it's always changing, and you can't.

A. It does change from time to time and, frankly, it -- I like to tell the attorneys when they come in or when I interview them, they may not even be made an offer at some point, but is that we try not to throw them in the deep end without some sort of training. That's the goal. That's not always the reality.

Now, we're not going to have them defending the serious cases the minute they come in the door. Even if they want them, they don't get them, but, I mean, invariably what happens is the attorney starts with a slow caseload, and then we percolate it up by necessity, and then they finally get the -- I think they finally begin to wonder and realize the warning I've given them because invariably during an interview with an attorney applicant, they'll ask, "What's your caseload?"

And I'll say, "Whatever you think it is, it's higher than that. It doesn't matter what number I give you."

Page 46

And part of that is because if they're a new attorney, I'll go so far as to say they really don't have any idea how much work would be involved in one file, much less many, many more than that.

Q. Does your office handle any appeals?

A. Part of the scheme is we don't. Those are given to appellate offices.

Q. Okay.

A. I mean, there may be an extraordinary writ or something, but in terms of -- it's rare.

Q. Okay. But, like, direct appeals and then post-conviction relief, those go to the appellate office?

A. Different departments, yes, yes.

Q. If you can, can you approximate how many cases the other attorneys in your office have?

A. Not really, I mean, without -- no. As I'm sitting here, I won't be able to do that. It varies.

Q. Okay. Are there other attorneys who have a number close to yours?

A. No.

Q. Do you have the most?

A. I do.

Q. Are there other attorneys who might have 200 cases?

Page 47

A. Yes. Oh, yeah. That's not to imply the other attorneys have a soft workload.

Q. I have an exhibit that will help that, I think, that will clarify workload that I'm going to get to in just a minute.

So given that you have your own caseload of 400 cases and you're also the managing attorney in your office, can you talk about how you are able or not able to supervise the substantive work of attorneys in your office?

A. It's virtually impossible. I mean, we do the best we can. "Hey, I've got a question" is usually the way that's dealt, or possibly an e-mail, but it's usually -- I mean, more often times than not, it's, "Sorry. Do you mind if I interrupt your lunch?" And I never mind.

Q. Are they -- do you have performance evaluations of the attorneys in the office, annual evaluations or such?

A. Yeah, we do that. I mean, it's hard to find time to do that, but we do that. We target it so that if they're there for the appropriate amount of time to merit review and to -- and if their performance is there, then we recommend the promotion, but reviewing for review sake, we don't have time for that, honestly. We should, but we don't.

Q. So you review, like, for a promotion?

A. Yeah, earmarks in the calendar, sure.

Q. Okay. What kind of a promotion?

A. From an APD, Assistant Public Defender I to II, III, IV. Those are the four levels.

Q. Is that the same in all the district offices, do you know?

A. That demarcation, yes.

Q. Okay. So as a public defender, you start at I?

A. Yes.

Q. The highest you can get to is IV?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And beyond that would be someone in a manager position?

A. Correct.

Q. And you said you have a co-manager. What's that person's title?

A. It's a deputy district defender.

Q. Okay.

A. I reference her as my co-manager, Ara,

Page 49

A-R-A, Bailey Brown.
Q. Okay.
A. And I think she's been with the public defender system 10 to 12 years, I'm estimating.
Q. And she also maintains a caseload?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you have any idea how big her caseload is?
A. Not off the top of my head. I know it's too much. Other than that, if you're looking for a number, I can't give it to you.
Q. Does the central office perform any evaluations on attorneys, that you're aware of?
A. They -- probably the most direct answer is not that I'm aware of. For example, if we have recommendations for promotion, then we go to our supervisor, and he or she -- at the time, it was he or she -- would review, and if they had any questions or sought any clarification, that's the way that would work. I mean, we don't have the final approval for that. Our supervisors do.
Q. Okay.
A. So they may ask you to do some additional case reviews, case file reviews, for example, if you've done X, they may want more. It just depends.

Q. But they're not actually performing the evaluation?
A. Usually not.
Q. Okay. Do you, in your office, gather your own statistics on workload, attorney workload? Do you keep -- I mean, I'm sure there's a way to figure out --
A. There's views on our computer, but, I mean, that's just not my expertise.
Q. Okay.
A. I think I know where to find them, but I would probably need a translator for that, or at least some assistant or someone that's more familiar.
MS. WILCOX: All right. I have the first exhibit I'm going to use, and we are trying to consecutively number exhibits from the last deposition that was taken, so these are going to come slightly oddly numbered, it's going to seem. This one is going to be Exhibit 14 because I think at that last deposition we left off with 13.
(Exhibit 14 was marked for identification.)
Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): So I'm handing you what's been marked as Exhibit 14. I will hand a copy to all attorneys in the room.

Page 51

Can you identify what this document is?
A. Well, the schematic of what it is I've seen before, you know, and it's -- obviously, the time frames differ, but it's titled "Missouri State Public Defender Cumulative Caseload Metrics."
Q. So you've seen a report like this before?
A. Sure.
Q. Okay. And this shows, just to confirm that I'm correct, a date range of 4/1/17 to 6/30/17?
A. It does.
Q. And it looks like -- and you can correct me if I'm wrong -- that these cumulative caseload metrics show a three-month window. Is that common?
A. That's what I interpret it to be.
Q. Okay. And can you see Area 7?
A. I'm looking.
Q. About halfway down, a little before that.
A. I see it now.
Q. Okay. And if you follow it over to the almost second one it says percent of capacity. And tell me if we're all reading the same column. It says 273.1 percent.

MS. SHIPMA: No.
Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): Is that what we think or am I reading the wrong one? 253.6 percent.
A. Yeah, I believe my eyes are going over to Rank 14, and it appeared to be percent of capacity as you detail it, yeah.
Q. Everybody agrees that that is the correct one, 253.6 percent.
So if I understand this correctly, that means that your office is over capacity at 253.6 percent?
A. I think whoever loads these metrics, that's their opinion, yes.
Q. Okay.
A. Sure feels like a lot more than that.
Q. How long do you think your office has been working above capacity?
A. From memory, my honest recollection, I believe Area 7, Liberty, has been over capacity for as long as these metrics have been published, but I don't know when that started, so I just know it's been a lot of years.
Q. Do you feel like you've been over capacity the entire time you've been working in

Area 7?

A. You know, I thought you might ask when things started to heat up, and I'm going to guess around 2005. Now, that's not a -- to be fair, I also read portions of your petition, and it reminded me of events, telltale events, many of which I didn't like to think through again and remember, but if I'm going to put a general calendar year on there, that's -- I think that's as fair as any others.

Q. And then you've been working above capacity since 2005?

A. I think the system has, but, you know, for example, I don't know how -- I can't tell you exactly -- have a personal opinion about the other offices because I just -- other than what I believe, but I don't work there. I don't know what sort of experience level they have. I'll leave that to the deference of those individual managers.

Q. Yeah, we'll talk about your office.

So is it a fair summation of what you said that the number of cases currently handled in your office is not manageable?

A. Oh, it's absolutely not manageable by manageable in any definition of the word "manageable." And it's certainly not fair for the person accused of a crime.

Q. How do you monitor the caseload for attorneys in your office --

A. Not sure what you mean.

Q. -- if you're able to?

A. Well, first off, there's only so much utility in monitoring it, right, because it's really, as your petition indicates, it's just about rationing the justice. We don't -- we don't ordinarily have a way to tell -- to tell anyone, "We have enough, thank you, you know, pass." That's not an option.

So I'm cognizant of the relevant experience level of the attorneys and try to have some -- try to monitor the degree to which they're likely to go into further hysteria if I give them more things. My goal every week is not to lose -- not to lose anyone, especially an attorney, I don't want anyone to leave, support staff either, but in particular anyone with a bar number. So we take extreme measures to try to make that goal.

Q. Okay. And we're going to touch on recent events later, so I don't think we need to get to that now.

A. I understand.

Q. But is there -- from what I understand, the cases come in and they get assigned. That's why everybody is above caseload. Is that a fair way to say that? You're not turning away -- you have not historically been turning away cases that come into your office?

A. As a general rule, well, I mean, there's been a period with the public defender system where that's been attempted, of course, your petition mentioned that, but as a rule, no.

Q. Okay. Is there a way that an attorney can raise a complaint about their caseload, or is it informal?

A. Of course, they can. They can report me to the bar. They can report any of their supervisors to the bar. I think they could probably report the judge to the bar, if you're just talking about could they. Now, whether or not they know that, you know, I don't know if I knew that when I was a year or two out of law school. Probably didn't.

Q. Is there any mechanism within your office that when you hire people they're told, you know, if you have a grievance or complaint about your work experience or your caseload, here's the process of how to make that known?

A. When they're hired? No. I just give them unadulterated warning that the caseload is beyond belief, and it's not fair to the clients and it's not fair to the attorneys and it's not a 40-hour workweek. I don't want them coming in and then leaving because that's a disservice to the clients that they represent that I assign to them, a further disservice than already exists.

Q. And with the caveat that we're going to talk about recent events, your letter, later, if an attorney -- and maybe this has never happened, but if they come to you and they say -- I am guessing this has happened -- "I can't manage my caseload. I have all these cases. I can't do it," what can be done? What do you do in that situation if that's happened?

A. Oh, it's definitely happened.

Q. Can you give an example of how that plays out?

A. Well, sometimes they resign. Sometimes they resign shortly after that. Sometimes they resign in that same meeting. Sometimes, depending on what the -- what my ability is able to do, sometimes I'll say let's look at your caseload to see if I can give you any relief. It's really -- it is just -- it's not any relief at all except to that one particular attorney, so there's only so many things we can do with that, assuming that everyone else is overburdened, which is always the case when you consider their experience level.

Q. And if you're giving relief to one attorney, that burden is going to fall on another attorney; is that right?

A. It depends on what kind of relief it is. It may be something -- it may be more complicated than take these 10 cases and give them to that attorney. It may be shifting of a docket so that it opens up a pocket of time for them to do jail visits or something like that.

I usually -- I like to -- I tell the attorney, "I'm not necessarily going to be able to do it, but what do you think might help you the most?" And they have -- sometimes they don't have an idea; sometimes they do. I know that in terms of retention, it's probably going to do -- I'm going to try to -- if it's possible for me to do what they think is best, I'm going to try to do that if it's doable. It depends if it's doable. I might just lose the lawyer.

Q. How often do lawyers in your office raise concerns about their caseloads?

A. Well, they're a pretty resilient group. I mean, if they don't have a sense of humor, they don't work for us. All the time. But, I mean, you know, it's not woe is me, it's woe is the client.

Q. Uh-huh. But -- so it's fair to say that everyone has too many cases --

A. Yes.

Q. -- your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Everyone is aware of that all the time?

A. I think that's accurate.

Q. Is your personal caseload now higher than at any point since you've been district defender?

A. I believe it is.

Q. And would you agree that the caseloads in your office by other attorneys are higher now than at any other point that you've been district defender or that you've been at MSPD?

A. Well, I mean, we're talking about different level of crisis, but each one of those is a crisis, so I don't know how you want me to split hairs with that. And that with the caveat that we're going to talk about most recent events in the future, I'm not comfortable about dealing with that in a vacuum.

Q. Okay. Then we'll just touch on it again when we get to that.

We already talked about the discretion you have in your office kind of generally. Do you have discretion setting policies in the office?

A. Somewhat, sure.

Q. Okay. What kinds of policies do you set as the district defender?

A. I mean, it could be anything in terms of, you know, where the paper cutter -- what room that goes in, where the copier is. These are high-level command decisions I make. Can also be, for example, investigators are not assigned tasks without using the action item through the software. If there's a measure, and there is, a mechanism by which you call in sick or seek annual leave, you know, that's a policy --

Q. That you set in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Yeah. But, like, the amount of leave, those policies are set by MSPD?

A. The amount of leave certainly is, yeah. That's through the public defender system.

Page 60

Q. All right. I'm going to move on. Now, we're going to talk more about how the court system itself works.

A. Okay.

Q. So starting with initial hearings. Describe to me or explain what happens after an indigent is arrested, typically. And what I'm going to get to is at what point are they first brought before a judge?

A. As I understand it, there's an initial arraignment before a judge. I don't know if that's necessarily -- I have no reason to think that's necessarily always in person, but probably very often through video presentment, and initial bond is set.

Q. So the initial arraignment, the judge goes over the charges with them?

A. That's my understanding.

Q. Okay. And you just said that's when bail or bond is set, at that hearing?

A. That's my understanding.

Q. Is there an attorney present at that hearing from your office with the defendant, or have they not yet applied?

A. If they're doing video arraignments in the court, we may be present in the courtroom. We're not involved in that defendant -- in that accused case.

Q. That person has not yet applied for your services?

A. I don't think they've been told they can apply. I mean, I'm assuming it's pretty fresh, in terms of the arrest.

Q. Okay. And is the judge who normally does an arraignment the same judge who sees the case through to the end?

A. I have no reason to think that that consistency applies, especially in a jurisdiction where there are many judges.

Q. Does your jurisdiction have associate circuit courts and circuit courts?

A. Both Platte and Clay does, and so does Clinton.

Q. Correct me if I'm wrong about this. Sometimes is a case assigned to an associate circuit judge, and then it will be transferred over at some point to a circuit judge, depending on decisions that are made about how that case is going to move forward?

A. If it's a felony, it could start in an associate or circuit.

Q. Okay.

A. If it's a misdemeanor, it will begin and conclude in associate.

Q. So bail is set at this initial hearing when an indigent defendant is not represented because they have not filled out an application?

A. I assume that is true, even if they're not indigent.

Q. Okay. The bail is always set at the first hearing. Can a bail not be changed after that point, and how is that done?

A. Through a pleading, oral or written bond modification effort.

Q. In your area, is it difficult to have bail reduced after it's been initially set?

A. I mean, it happens. I mean, if you back up a minute, I think most of the bond amounts are unreasonable, by definition, so I don't know -- I don't know how much the timing affects that, is what I'm saying.

Q. Is the prosecution involved in the initial bail setting or bond amount?

A. I don't know if they're in the room. Again, if they're in the room, they may be -- of course, if they're going to a judge with a warrant, that sort of thing, they may be -- they may have that exchange outside the courtroom, maybe. If -- I don't know if they're always there.

Q. Okay.

A. Yeah.

Q. Is there a certain point in a case when a defendant can move to dismiss charges against him or where they would have to do that?

A. Many of them think that that's such a motion.

Q. And it is not, is that what you're saying?

A. It would be a rare motion where that would be filed. There may be strategic reasons to do that.

Q. Is there a certain point in the case putting aside that maybe you haven't gotten an offer yet, which would preclude this, but when a defendant can plead guilty? Is there any time that's too early for a defendant to plead guilty or too late in the case? I mean, I'm sure you see it up until trial they can plead.

A. Well, let me try to explain. I think -- you know, we've seen -- I've witnessed before where people are being initially arraigned, and the person accused, perhaps before the judge has warned them that they have the right to remain silent, they have the right to an attorney, will blurt out something about -- and it could probably be summarized about how sorry they are and how they want to plead guilty. So I suppose, technically, that's what they've done without counsel, without sufficient early warning by the judiciary, but I don't think that's really your question.

Q. Well, it is, kind of. Have you seen that happen where they've pled guilty that early?

A. Well, you see -- no, they don't plead guilty that way.

Q. Okay.

A. The judge will say, "I'm going to enter a plea of not guilty for you."

Q. Okay.

A. But, you know, the problem is they would have blurted something out.

Q. Are there any defenses, in your experience, that have to be raised at a certain time, or they could be waived?

A. Boy, that's a loaded question. I'm sure you'll come to it later. Well, waived procedurally or waived because they're not practically available anymore?

For example, waived procedurally, unless we miss a time limit, that's probably not going to happen, but waived from a practical standpoint, you know, a case gets -- a case gets stale, it takes too long to get a lawyer, it takes too long to do the investigation, you lose any real chance of getting any kind of alibi defense, memories fade. And then years later you're in a courtroom, and the prosecutor says, "So this is the first time you've told anybody this."

And, frankly, it's never the first time they've told them that, or not likely, but the prosecutor attempts to characterize it as this long, protracted delay, and sometimes it's due to no one's fault except the criminal justice system and the lack of funding. This is assuming the lawyer is not retained privately and, you know, and has a caseload ratio of one to one.

Q. No. All these questions are assuming that these people are in your office. So it is possible that a defense -- so let's not call it waived, but an opportunity could be missed to raise something because of workload because something just isn't done?

A. Of course, yeah, absolutely. Yeah, absolutely. It could be overlooked because someone is untrained, could be overlooked because someone is too weary because they're overworked. It could be because there's not a sufficient communication link set up so that the client really understands what it is you're discussing. Yeah, could be a lot of reasons.

Q. So if I understand you correctly, the defendant may not bring something up, and if memory fades, it's hard to go back and get that information, even if the attorney can find the time to try to get the information?

A. That's one scenario, sure.

Q. Okay.

A. If it sits on an attorney's shelf long enough, too long, before -- before it comes to the top of the pile or because it's going to go to court next week for pretrial motions or whatever, sure, all those things could be. It's hard to resuscitate old evidence, is what I'm trying to say --

Q. Yeah.

A. -- old testimony.

Page 67

Q. And at what point does the defendant waive any claim, like, a constitutional rights violation claim? Has that happened?

A. You have to be more specific. I'm not sure.

Q. Why don't I tell you my understanding of it.

A. Sure.

Q. And then we'll see if you agree with that.

So from my experience, my understanding is that -- and I've seen appellate cases that say, you know, you have to raise this at the earliest possible time, and if it wasn't raised at the earliest possible time, it's waived. Is that a fair understanding of how --

A. That's more of an appellate scheme than trial scheme, but, yes.

Q. So if it's not raised by an attorney in your office, it could be waived later?

A. I mean, you're mixing apples and oranges. If it's not raised in the motion for a new trial, it won't be raised later in the appellate sense, but I'm talking about in terms of pretrial litigation. My head is usually in that realm, but, you know, right to a speedy trial would be a good example.

Q. How often do your clients want you to file a motion for a speedy trial?

A. Pretty often.

Q. And how often can you do that for them?

A. I tell them they don't have a right to a speedy trial from a practical perspective in the State of Missouri. And I always try to tell them, depending if they're still listening, what the case law -- how the case law talks about that because there's really two elements of bad news when it comes to that. The case law is such that, if I'm recalling accurately, it can go as long as 16, 17 months, an insane amount of time, and the courts have found that not to be a violation of a speedy trial. But from a practical standpoint, when you're represented by an attorney whose workload is far, far too excessive, you don't get a right to speedy anything.

Q. How do your clients take that when you have that conversation with them?

A. Well, I try not to have it just like that. I try to explain to them that they can have a speedy trial, but all that means is they'll have probably an underprepared or totally unprepared counsel, and I try -- in each and every instance, try to urge them that's probably not the right thing. You know, quick result is not always the result you're going to want. And some listen, and many, many clients file pro se motions for a speedy trial.

Q. Even while they're represented, right?

A. Of course.

Q. You said defendants in your area often attend hearing by video; is that correct?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Okay.

A. It depends. Probably more Clinton County than Platte or Clay.

Q. So they're in a jail facility, and they just appear on the video. Is there an attorney present in the courtroom, usually, on their behalf?

A. That's why I don't prefer the video -- Polycom is what they call it, but the State of Missouri is starting to do it because it saves money, like that should be the guidepost.

But, for example, in Clinton County -- I don't want you to get the belief that this happens all the time, but it's not unusual for in Clinton County for there to be -- 43rd Judicial Circuit -- for there to be a Polycom where the client is in custody in a jail facility, sometimes a prison, and they're brought, ushered, just like I am, before a camera here, and then their case is called, and there's some exchange. Now, it may be something as simple -- it could be something as simple as saying your attorney has requested a new docket call, we're going to call you on the next law day, or it may be something more complicated like the guilty plea itself or, Lord forbid, the sentencing, so...

Q. That has happened on video, though?

A. I think so.

Q. Even when someone is represented by someone in your office?

A. I think so.

Q. Who makes that choice of whether it's going to be video or in person?

A. That word choice is a loaded question.

Q. Who decides?

A. Again, a loaded question. The judge may encourage that, and then I think, I want to say that it's endorsed so much by the court system, I think there's an OSCA form that waives -- official form that waives presence. I don't know the number, of course, and it's all in the name of saving funding and travel and mileage and everything else.

Q. That the state pays for. So the state is trying to save money because they --

A. State court system. I don't know who is saving money. I frankly don't care. I think it's wrong, but, yeah.

Q. So if you're an attorney on a case, and there's going to be a video hearing, does that -- do they run that by you first, or do you sometimes show up in court, and find out that your client is not coming in person?

A. Well, if you're familiar with the jurisdiction, you may know that's probably what's coming. It may be called a Polycom day, and then you figure out that's what -- that's all that's going to happen that day. They may interrupt court proceedings to bring in the Polycom unit and have that happen. Sometimes I guess it could be a surprise. Sometimes you know. It's a rare instance where it's really a good idea, I think, but...

Q. Yeah. But sometimes -- I mean, if I'm not familiar with the jurisdiction, and I have a client who is in custody, I might show up, as the defense attorney, well, thinking my client -- obviously, I can talk to them in person because they're going to come here, and we can have a little conversation before the hearing.

A. Right.

Q. Then I might show you up, and that might not be the case, but I had no way of knowing that ahead of time?

A. Right. I think that does happen.

Q. Okay. Because you're saying in your office, you might know, but that's based on experience, knowing the judges, knowing the jurisdiction?

A. Right. Once you're shocked by it the first time, if someone hasn't told you about it, yeah.

Q. Not because you're agreeing to it ahead of time by some formal mechanism?

A. Well, there may be. I mean, again, you're encouraged to agree to it, so -- and there may be an outcome determinative reason why you would.

Q. Is it hearing by hearing decided for a person, or do you maybe agree all pretrial hearings could be by video?

A. If a judge encourages you to proceed in that matter. You might decide whether or not you're going to keep that judge, or if you have an alternative.

Q. But they might want --
A. You're probably -- probably going to pick and choose between clients, probably.
Q. But a judge might want every hearing up until trial to be by video?
A. Conceivably.
Q. Okay. Can you just describe for me what a preliminary hearing is and when that might happen?
A. Sure. In the instances where your client is charged with one or more felonies, you have the right to a preliminary hearing, and it's -- I equate it with a probable cause hearing, explaining to clients that not all the evidence has to be in or is likely to be presented, but just a portion enough to convince a judge that some felony has occurred in some connection, linking you to one or more crimes. And that's the -- in a nutshell, what a preliminary hearing is.
Q. How often are they held in your -- where you practice?
A. I don't know that the question makes sense. It's a -- what we have -- well, I'll give you -- our three primary counties, Clay County has a grand jury, so when a county has a grand jury, they never have to allow a client to have a preliminary hearing. And that confuses clients because you tell them they have the right, the judges tell them they have a right, and then it's swept away with a grand jury so Clay County has a sitting grand jury, so you could conceivably never -- could conceivably never have a preliminary hearing. Sometimes they allow it, sometimes they decide to agree. There's reason even -- some reasons why a prosecutor might be okay with it, or it might be their idea.

Platte County, most recently, has had their grand jury stripped away from them. Historically they didn't have one all the time, and then most recently they were allowed to have one. I think that was found to -- I don't know why, I don't know why technically it was taken away, but I'm just glad it was because now -- because some jurisdictions abuse it. So if someone is charged with a felony in Platte County, they get to have a preliminary hearing unless it's waived.
Q. What might a circumstance be where it would be waived?
A. There are a lot of different reasons you would waive a preliminary hearing, some of which clients understand sometimes. Sometimes they get it, sometimes they don't. Sometimes they're overly confident that a witness won't show up, and the case will be dismissed, but without revealing too much strategy, a preliminary hearing allows an alleged victim another opportunity to see your client and perhaps better be able to describe physical features, any conceivable physical feature.

Additionally, the case law is such that if a preliminary hearing is held, there's the concern that later, down the road, if that witness is unavailable under the legal terms unavailable, their testimony would be allowed in front of your jury and, really, at that point in time, you probably have not had enough chance or certainly not much opportunity to investigate the case or depose the alleged victim, et cetera, and then that strong one-sided evidence comes in in front of your jury. So a lot of reasons to waive, some reasons to have. That is a case-by-case basis.
Q. Okay. After your office is assigned, so someone applies, they qualify, is assigned to your office, does an attorney from your office attend every hearing after they're deemed indigent?
A. If you mean the same attorney, no.

Q. Talk about what you mean with that.
A. Okay. For example, if I've got -- if I've got Clay County cases assigned to half of our 12 attorneys, if that's the layout, then the attorney assigned to a gentleman's case doesn't necessarily mean that that attorney is going to be at every one of their docket calls because they may be -- they may be out sick, they may be sick, they may be on approved leave, they may be conflicted from a calendar perspective, and be somewhere else, they could conceivably be in trial. But there would be some other assistant public defender, if not myself or the co-manager, present for that proceeding, so they wouldn't be without an attorney, but they might likely be without the attorney that technically represents them in the filing, in the pleading.
Q. Okay. Let's -- I think this next question is going to be better with an example because it involves how much you prepare for initial hearings, and I'm guessing that varies, depending on the kind of hearing you're showing up to.
A. Sure.
Q. That's fair, right?
A. That's totally fair.
Q. So let's say you have an early hearing where you're going to seek to reduce bail. How much time would you have -- would you prepare for that hearing?

A. Well, it depends. You know, the question really is how much time you might wind up preparing or choose to prepare or forced to prepare because sometimes it's the client, you're shoulder to shoulder, they want a bond hearing. Sometimes, depending on where you are, you may be in front of a judge that you know is going to entertain that oral bond motion. You also may be, likewise, in front of a judge you know is never going to entertain that with that sort of warning notice.

Likewise, same thing with the opposing prosecutor. You may know that that jurisdiction is never going to allow that sua sponte addressing a bond. Sometimes you look at the individual case and see if it's a case that has an alleged victim. If they do, then, statutorily, frankly, the other side is obligated to give them notice or see if they want to attend, that sort of thing. So there may be obstacles created by statute that preclude the judge and the prosecutor to take up that bond. But you may still say -- request of the judge to see if they would be willing to take up bond, for a variety of reasons, even though you may know they're not going to.

Now, conversely, sometimes you have witnesses that you're going to subpoena to a bond hearing. Those are the ones where you've had some time to think. Those are the ones where what you have to say might make a difference or you hope might make a difference. Sometimes it makes zero difference. So it varies, but, quite honestly, probably in the majority of our cases, we don't do much except find out about the client's self-divulged criminal history, which is not always accurate. Sometimes through dishonesty, sometimes through actually misunderstanding or not understanding that that was a conviction or "I forgot about that, it was so many years ago." And sometimes that's honestly their mistaken recollection.

So because of the workload, it's all too often not very much preparation at all in terms of the information that you would really like to present, assuming the client had the type of criminal history that you might find to be favorable for a modification of bond, and assuming the client had ties to the community, employment lined up, transportation available for court, a lack of a failure to appear to court appearances, that sort of thing. But you really need to know all that in order to be well-armed, even if the investigation yields a prediction that the bond is probably not going to be touched.

Q. When did you -- and maybe you need to do this in two different answers -- but you and the attorneys in your office typically first meet with a client?

A. That probably varies. Some attorneys are better at it than others, and not better because they're more experienced or capable or have a better car. It may be because of what jurisdictions they represent. And this -- usually, I'm talking about people who are in custody.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. You know, people who are fortunate enough to be free, either on bond or released on their own recognizance, we encourage to make an appointment, you know, see us as early as you like, assuming our calendar is available. And sometimes that can be a challenge. But in terms of custody clients, we don't see them soon enough. I mean, the public defender guidelines have a theoretical mandate for how quickly to see them. Sometimes -- I mean, in many instances, that's not possible.

Q. What is that theoretical mandate?

A. I think it's within seven days of being assigned the case.

Q. What --

A. I think that's the way it's phrased.

Q. What percentage -- this is going to be an approximate percentage, but of your -- the current clients that your office represents are in custody right now?

A. I'm going to say I don't think 75 percent would be a gross misrepresentation. I think that's probably about true. It could be higher.

Q. So how often will an attorney meet with a client within seven days of getting a case?

A. I'm going to suppose probably not very often.

Q. Okay. Does client contact, initial client contact, ever happen at the first court appearance that an attorney from your office attends?

A. It could, I mean, it probably would be -- might be more times than not by accident, if you're going in and the judge isn't on the bench yet, you're going and you're talking to the folks in custody, and you're trying to figure out if they've applied or "Are you Alfred?" or whatever. And you may just have some human contact with them, and then that happens if there's time, if the court hasn't come out on the bench.

Q. Do you think that you and the attorneys in your office meet with your clients enough?

A. No. I mean, I know I don't, and I'm not faulting my attorneys that I supervise. You know, it's kind of -- it's hard to blame them when I'm giving them too much to do.

Q. Right. In a perfect world, how often would you want to meet with a client?

A. Depends on what they're charged with.

Q. Felony.

A. Depends on what felony, too. Depends on the client, too, regardless of their charge because some need -- some need more assistance and continuation of communication than others, so just depends.

Q. Is client contact most often done in person or do you sometimes have over-the-phone with clients in custody?

A. Clients in custody routinely call all the time that they are allowed to call from the jail facilities. You know, there's lockdowns and silly rules all the time. I could go on and on about that. But we have both types of communications, you know, clients that are able to call during business hours and jail visits.

Q. Are the jail visits and the phone calls that you have, are they confidential, to your knowledge, with all your clients?

A. Well, jail settings are certainly confidential if you visit them in the attorney-client area, I mean, where there wouldn't be anywhere else to visit them. You don't use the -- one facility has a family phone visitation. You don't use that because they record it, so you can't visit in some of the other rooms because they're recorded surreptitiously, but -- and in terms of the clients calling from the jail to our -- those are understood to be confidential and not recorded.

Q. Okay. Is it common for your clients in custody to remain in custody until their case is resolved either by a plea or trial?

A. Far, far too often, yes. And that's assuming they're going to get out of custody, yes, but out of the custody of the jail, yeah.

Q. Right. Do you feel like you have the time and resources to communicate with your clients in a manner that each of your cases requires?

Page 83

A. Of course not.

Q. Do you have any cases where you feel like you can communicate with them in the amount and time that the case requires?

A. I have clients who may call a lot, purely by accident, you know, that I wind up talking to them with some frequency --

Q. Okay.

A. -- but other than that, no.

Q. And do you think that's the same for the attorneys in your office?

A. I would presume. I'd have to be -- I'm forced to presume it would be the same because of the workload they have, and commitments.

Q. Without getting into specifics, if you can and, obviously, not compromising attorney-client privilege, can you think of a time when your representation of a client was hampered by the lack of time you had to communicate, if you could give an example, or for someone in your office?

A. Sure, I could probably give an example that we try to use as a learning tool. Former assistant public defender trying, quite honestly, to do the best job that they could, used a -- a client in custody, used a communication method because the jail visitation rooms were tied up, because that's one of the many problems with having clients in custody is because they don't have sufficient visitation hours or facilities to visit with your attorney. And it may have been -- it may have been during a trial or it may have been right shortly before some court proceeding, but that attorney, out of a sense of emergency, there was some urgency for communication, communicated with a client through the family visitation phone thing, and that was recorded, and I don't know if there was a whole lot of forethought about that. There clearly wasn't. But I think the prosecutor wound up mentioning it or bringing it up in some fashion. Now, whether or not it impacted the resolution of that case, I don't know, but it was a learning experience for everyone.

Q. If you can -- I know that these are hard approximations, but in the percentage of your cases, if I give kind of a list of things that you feel like you're able to do, could you tell me, like, what percentage of cases, so the first example is to interview the victim and other witnesses?

A. Are you talking about me, personally?

Page 85

Q. Yeah. A lot of these questions --
A. Sure.
Q. -- are you, personally --
A. Okay.
Q. -- and then the attorneys in your office.
A. Sure. You're going to find some similarity in the responses. There's not enough time to do that, so, no, it doesn't get done in a routine fashion.
Q. How about visiting a crime scene?
A. Same answer.
Q. And you're saying the same answer for you and the attorneys in your office?
A. Yeah. I have no reason to think it's different, I mean, on an overall basis. Obviously, if one of us is -- me or the attorneys I supervise are targeting a case while everyone else, you know, waits in the wind, then that person is really getting first class service for that period of time when it finally comes to the top of the pile.
Q. How often does that happen?
A. The top of the pile? Not very often because there's only one top.
Q. So some cases will never make it to the top unless -- or will they if there is an important hearing then, obviously, that will rise it to the top?

A. Well, I mean, we have clients every day that plead guilty to -- plead guilty to things that they didn't do because they see the workload and the lag.
Now, they may have been convicted of those things they didn't do because there may be evidence sufficient or there may not be. You just don't know until you try it to a jury, right? And sometimes they plead guilty in an effort -- we call it pleading to daylight when they're kept unfairly on too high a bond that nobody can make, and then the probation is offered, dangled outside of their cell, then they're probably going to yield to the pressure and say yeah.
Q. So they're pleading guilty to get out of jail?
A. Every day.
Q. Okay. How often, if at all, are you able to identify witnesses not mentioned in a police report?
A. Well, our investigators do a good job of doing that on the cases, you know, if it's possible, right, talking about a neighborhood canvas, going and interviewing a clerk on the alternate shift. I mean, in terms of how often we're able to do that, I think probably not very often because we're not -- the caseload is such that we're not having the investigators do that sort of thing.

Q. Okay. Same question for investigate an alibi.
A. Well, that's an even more essential question because the timing of the alibi is so critical. You're going to lose alibi witnesses and you're going to lose credibility of the alibi witnesses if you don't -- because you have a prosecutor that will cross-examine them in front of the jury, this is the first time you mentioned that. And what they don't say is "Because your attorney had 400 cases" or "because people kept quitting because of the low pay and high workload" or, most recently, "the fear of being disbarred."
Q. How often can you investigate police conduct?
A. Well, that's probably only going to be done -- most likely going to be done through deposition, so that's the obstacle we face with being able to examine the file enough to know what pressure points we're going to make on that file and who to investigate and the timing of the depositions of the officers and the scene visits and witnesses interviews or other witness depositions so it all falls into the same category of not enough time, too much stuff to do.

Q. Okay. Are there -- are there things in cases that you see repeatedly coming up that you wish you had time to do that, frequently, you and attorneys in your office don't have time, like, the majority of cases, you wish you could take depositions, and you can't, or you wish you could find an expert, and you can't? Are there certain things that pop up more frequently as things that you just don't have the time or resources to do?
A. Sure. Most things, but, I mean, I could think of -- I would like to be able to -- of the -- and we try to do this, but then we get interrupted because life happens or, more accurately, work happens.
If you have a catalog of depositions of law enforcement officers from a certain jurisdiction, in a perfect world, we would have a brief bank of those depositions so that we would be able to know the things that they did. I can think of one particular case where the dash cam video, snapshot of the dash cam video, I believe, shows -- and it was not my case. It was one of the investigators that uncovered it as a result of a request from the assigned attorney -- where the car stop was conducted because the vanity light on the rear license plate was out.

Well, it wasn't out. The dash cam showed that. Had that attorney not looked at that -- and we have lots of cases like that. Well, lots of cases where the vanity light is out, too, and lots of cases where the police officer doesn't -- is trained, I believe, or comes to the conclusion maybe they shouldn't turn that dash cam on yet so the defense counsel will never be able to see that it was lit.

So if you're going to negotiate it with the prosecutor, that's a powerful tool. If you're going to file a motion to suppress and try to seek judicial intervention, that's a powerful tool. If you've got a cop that has done that, what I would like to do, but never would have enough time to do, would be to be able to -- in a perfect world, I would catalog that, I would make sure my entire office knew about it, and I would make sure surrounding offices knew about it that deal, from a conflict, sometimes with that officer because that's plain and simple untruthful testimony and a bad stop.

Q. So you're saying that in a perfect world, you would like to do that, but in your current world, you're not able to do that?

A. Not even come close. I'm not even sure I've told enough people about that.

Q. Okay. How often do you think, if it's ever happened that attorneys in your office have the time to work up a case in the manner that the case requires and that that attorney would want to work up that case for a trial?

A. I think they all want to to the extent they have the experience to know what the next steps would be. Part of the obstacle will be the inability -- because of the workload, the inability to mentor them as to what to do. A lot of them have great ideas themselves, but they may not know how to put those -- procedurally, how to make that happen. But, you know, this doesn't mean every one of our clients gets poor representation. If you pick somebody out, and you ignore everybody else, that person is going to get class A representation. But it doesn't work like that because you have dockets and you have your inbox with more cases coming in.

And even though that attorney may make the effort to work on that client's file every weekend, from a practical standpoint, that just -- that's not a workable solution, and it's not fair to the other -- all the other remaining clients.

Q. So it's fair to say that certain things, the things we've been talking about, visiting the crime scene, identifying witnesses, the alibi, investigating police conduct, are not done because of time management, not because they're not necessary for the trial? The decision is made that there might be not time to do it, or resources, even though an attorney believes that, in a perfect world, it should be done?

A. Right. I agree with that in a general sense. Now, part of the problem is if you haven't visited the scene, you don't know, really, what you might have missed, so I may characterize that as something I don't -- now, what I can do is conclude they have sufficient amount of evidence no matter what I find at that scene. I could conclude that, so I'm probably not going to visit that scene. But if the scene is important, the scene is important enough to be visited, and it's not getting done.

Q. Okay. Does the -- in your area, is the discovery that the state is required to disclose frequently disclosed when it should be?

A. Oh, boy. Short answer, no. It's a slow drip, and it's not timely. Let's just say it that way. It's not timely, it's not complete and it's -- if it weren't about people's lives, it would be comical.

Q. Does it depend on the type of case or is it routinely the same across the board?

A. To a certain extent, it depends on the type of case.

Q. Do you have an example of what you're -- without getting into too many specifics?

A. Sure, right. With the experience that you develop, you probably have a feeling for what's likely to be being held back, what testing hasn't been done, what testing isn't going to be purposely done until later. And in some cases you know that that's never going to be within the realm of the evidence, so it's not coming now, it's not coming later, they're not withholding it. It may be slow, but that just may be because of their insufficiency, not purposeful.

Q. How often do you, in your cases, request discovery from the state, make formal discovery requests?

A. In every case from the speeding ticket to serious crimes.
Q. And is that the same for the attorneys in your office?
A. Yes.
Q. How frequently do you file discovery-related motions?
A. Can you be more specific?
Q. Yeah. Do you ever have to -- you know, like a motion to compel to seek something you've asked for that you're not getting?
A. We do it with some frequency. I mean, it depends on the jurisdiction and, really, the opposing prosecutor. Part of what you may want is you're more -- you're more interested in getting the information because you may still need to negotiate the file, so you may not want to put it in quite as an adversarial position as you might. Just depends on when you're going to pull the trigger.
Q. So kind of an overall question. In your opinion, do you and the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to obtain and review discovery in a manner that each case requires?
A. No. Not in a timely manner, no. Not in a complete manner, no.

Q. And do you have -- can you provide any examples of when the inability to do this, because of time and resources, has hampered a case for you or someone else in your office?
A. I can probably give you a general example which has happened, and will happen from time to time. Because of the -- if you have too few people, too few resources, you know, ideally what you want to do is inventory the information and when you get discovery in case there's a discovery dispute down the road. And sometimes that's a pretty challenging thing to do because it comes in spurts, and sometimes it comes in through duplication efforts. So you'll get -- you know, I'll have attorneys all the time that say, "Look, I got 50 more pages, but only three pages were new." Happens a lot and, quite honestly, it's just easier for the other side to do it that way. I mean, it takes time on their end and personnel on their side to keep track of what they're going to give, but if they know they can just dump everything on you, and it's going to work, and the case law is going to succumb to that discovery violation, then that's the way they're going to do it. They're not going to change.

But in a short sense that the timely inventorying of discovery, when we get it and what we get, is something I wish we could do so then we could actually challenge it when it comes up new during a trial or shortly before a trial. But it's got to be thorough or the judge is never going to find -- you're not going to have any credible way to explain that and prove it.
Q. Okay. Back to expert witnesses. We talked about it briefly, but how often do you use experts in your office, you and the attorneys?
A. From time to time. I don't know how -- not every case, obviously, needs it, but the key is they have to have -- the attorney has to get into the file early enough to know, and that means reading the discovery a couple of times to be able to figure out what they need, maybe to confer with a more experienced attorney, maybe to question would this help, would this toxicologist help, would this firearms expert help? If you get a file with DNA doesn't mean you need a DNA expert. If you get a file with fingerprints, it doesn't mean you're necessarily going to need a fingerprint expert. It depends. And needing them, sometimes you're just consulting with them. You may never call them at trial. But it is a way to educate the defense team if it becomes an integral part of the state's theory of prosecution. You know, so the key is we're not early enough into the discovery in order to prepare the next step which would include, among many things, the expert.

Q. So because of time management, there are cases where you might want to gather the information, but just can't?
A. Just hasn't been reviewed sufficiently enough in advance of -- early enough in the case, no.
Q. Are there cases where an attorney thinks an expert might be helpful, but then doesn't have time to actually engage in consulting an expert?
A. I really wouldn't know that, the answer to that.
Q. Okay.
A. I mean, because by the time I would have learned of that, I would have been talking through whether or not they need one with them.
Q. In your current caseload, are you using experts in any of your cases?
A. Any?
Q. You don't have to tell me, like, what the cases are.

Page 97

A. Sure, sure.
Q. How many do you think?
A. Understand there's some files I haven't touched, so none in those, but I may come to -- and one we're going to be seeking funds for soon, so it just -- just depends. I mean, the key is until you digest the contents of the file, you don't have any idea what you might need. And it's that lack of time to digest the contents of the file that's key to the -- that's the key to the disadvantage that our clients are at.
Q. Okay. And when you do engage an expert, do you believe that you and the attorneys in your office, once that expert has been engaged, have the time and resources necessary to consult an expert in the manner that the case requires?
A. Well, I mean, there's always the challenge of coordinating calendars with experts. They're really busy. They may be doing a lot of other things. And then trying to get back with the attorney who may be -- well, necessarily is in court a lot so, I mean, that's something you can work -- that's not our greatest obstacle, by far.
Q. Once you've gotten to that stage?
A. Right. The question is getting to that stage, having sufficient information and investigation of the contents of the file to get to that stage.

Q. So I've been asking for a lot of examples. Do you have, like, a learning example of when a client could have been helped by the use of an expert, but because of time management, one wasn't engaged, and that that hampered the case?
A. Not a specific example, I mean, not a specific example other than just generally a client's desire to -- you know, whether it's to go home or sometimes to go to prison because they hate the jail, you know, but that's hard to -- there are those examples, but it's hard to tell someone to be patient when they see what's going on with all the other people in the jail because they know it.
Q. Uh-huh. Do you and the attorneys in your office regularly seek continuances in your cases?
A. Yes.
Q. And if so, is there kind of a common theme to why those are sought that you can discuss?
A. Usually, two main categories. One is because we haven't had enough time to deal with the discovery that we've referred, and then the other most common would be discovery that's received late.

Now, how those are interrelated is as follows: If you -- and this happens all the time. If you don't get into the file early enough and create an inventory of those things you can tell are missing because they say please refer to file report number, and when you're done with the pile, it's not there, and you shoot the prosecutor an e-mail or a note that says we're missing this and this.
If you haven't had a chance to do that then, quite honestly, the prosecutor, he or she may not even know that they don't have it, right? And invariably what will happen is when they interview their witnesses or police officers for trial, they'll bring the file, and then they've got files -- they've got reports that they don't have, and then they'll tell us, "We've got new reports."
You know, that may not be anyone's fault, but if we would have had the adequate resources to digest that, the existing discovery, in a timely manner, we could have asked for that a lot sooner. And we're talking -- we're not talking days here. We're talking months or years here.
Q. And are those months or years often when someone is going to sit in jail?

Page 100

A. Almost everyone is in jail. So they're either going to remain in jail or they're going to plead guilty because they're in a rush, or plead guilty to something that there may not be a submissible case for.
Q. Are there any guidelines to when an attorney should move for a continuance or is it more of a case-by-case decision?
A. Well, I mean, I will tell you a phenomenon that I deal with and have for quite awhile is because of the attorneys' workloads, they know their limitations and they know there's always more cases, so what I'll find is somebody just got late discovery, and then they're hampering around, trying to get ready for trial, when that is absolutely not the proper thing that they should do.
They should -- easy for me to say -- make Father Time stand still, file a continuance request detailing why they need it and when they got it and that sort of thing, and what other investigation they need to do as a result of that. But they also know that if they do that, it may not be granted, and they're forced to go to trial with three to five hours' less preparation because they've been working on the silly continuance motion.

And they also know that the next Monday and the Monday after that and the Monday after that they may have a trial scheduled, so I have had attorneys that tell me, "If I'm not going to be able to work on it now, what makes me think I'm going to be able to work on it in six months or three months from now if the judge boots it over for three months?" Because they see how tied up they are, and they know what their weekly life is like, and most of which a lot of times in court and in jail.

Q. And not doing -- not in their office, able to do substantive legal work?

A. Right.

Q. That's a good segue, actually, because I want to talk about how much time is spent traveling to court and to jail.

A. Okay.

Q. So this is hard, too, because I know there are 12 attorneys, but is there a way to kind of average how many times in a day an attorney might spend just traveling to and from court and then just traveling to and from jail?

A. Not really. I mean, the only thing that's of any quantitative value would be the expense reports. Attorneys are going to log their miles, and all that will tell you is how many miles their car has traveled. It won't tell you how long they waited in a courtroom for their case or cases to be called or in a jail for their client or clients to come to the room. I don't know how to quantitate that.

Q. That is another question I have, so I will just jump to it.

How often do you and attorneys in your office go have a scheduled visit with a client who is in custody, and still have to wait for that client to be made available to you for a visit?

A. All too often, yeah. I mean, we're happy when it doesn't happen. We're usually bragging about it when it doesn't happen. The norm is that there's, yeah, and that's -- it's worse in some jurisdictions, right?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And there's also, you know, instead of -- there's no way there's no room at the inn. There's no room at the jail. If they got too few visitation rooms, you're not just competing with -- you're not just competing with your other public defender that you have an office down the hall from because that's your competition for that room. It's also any private lawyer. It's also any probation officer. It's also any detective.

Q. Some jails only have one room; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Clay County?

A. Some only have one. Clay County is not -- well, Clay County has one contact room, and then four to five noncontact rooms you visit through the glass.

Q. Okay. Which could still be confidential, but you can't actually look at something with your client?

A. Well, right, I mean, you can pass through the paper. I mean, it's -- it's a microphone system that's not very efficient, but it beats nothing. It beats not being able to -- it beats waiting in the waiting room, waiting to see your client, so -- but Platte County, for example, only has one visitation room. They do have a secondary -- they built for an arraignment, video arraignment, that they allow you to go down the hall and use that where you have face-to-face contact with your client. So that's a total of two, and there are lots of times where I go or my other attorneys go, and there's no room. You'll have to wait.

Q. What's the longest you've had to wait?

A. Well, you don't have to wait. You wait, you mark it, and you leave because you just can't have that kind of time to kill. So I'm probably less patient than most. I'm usually trying to get names and talk to judges before that happens.

Q. And if you leave, then you just don't see your client?

A. Of course. Not only that client, whatever other client you were going to see that time. It happens.

Q. Is time spent on travel, would you call that an ongoing issue for you, personally, as far as resources and getting your work done, time spent on travel and waiting for clients?

A. It's really not that big a burden for me, but for some of the attorneys that I supervise, it's an incredible burden because they may have to drive for hours to try to facilitate one file, and then hours back. Now, that's the sort of thing that we hope to have some relief from, continued relief from, some day.

Q. Okay. And how would you get relief?

A. Well, the -- without being too specific because I don't want to speculate, we've recently had -- been afforded, like I said, a miniscule -- I don't want to sound like I'm not grateful for it because I am. The allocation of the public defender system's budget that allowed contract public defenders to be utilized for conflict surrounding areas saves us that travel.

Q. Because those might be further away than the --

A. They absolutely are further away, yeah.

Q. Okay. I see. So, then, you can focus on the cases that are in an area that's closer?

A. Primary counties, yeah.

Q. Okay.

A. And sometimes still be driving way past them to go see the inmate, of course, like Plattsburg because you drive to Andrew County.

Q. How frequently do attorneys in your office file suppression motions?

A. Again, they do it. They'd probably do more -- I know they would do more if they had more time to get into the file early. We just know that because we're always discussing things and bouncing ideas off each other's head and stuff.

Q. Can you think of a time when maybe that window passed where you -- by the time you really get into something and figure out that --

Page 106

A. Oh, sure.

Q. -- maybe you should have filed a suppression motion, but now it's too late for one reason or another?

A. Sure. If you haven't taken that deposition or conducted a scene visit or done a witness interview until later in the game, if you have a -- assuming your client is in custody, they're really not going to be inclined to want -- to wait for you to start working -- start working on their case. Now, sometimes you slap something together, but everything you do takes time.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. You know, if it's the kind of motion where it's your burden, you're going to have to subpoena witnesses. Just depends on what kind of motion it is.

Q. Are there other pretrial motions that you frequently see that you think could be helpful, but there just isn't time --

A. Sure.

Q. -- to work it up?

Can you just give me examples of ones that you've seen in your day-to-day practices?

A. Sure. There's some precautionary pretrial motions that might deal with, for example, from a procedural standpoint, going to trial, you don't want the prosecutor to mention in the voir dire or opening statement or witness testimony dealing with evidence of other uncharged misconduct. Unless you take the time to file that pretrial motion, you may have an issue at trial. And sometimes you do it to signal to the judge to alert to them this is coming. It, frankly, gives the judge more time to think if you have a judge that you think this judge might -- has a chance of ruling in our favor, or they may rule against us, and then the appellate lawyer, if the client is convicted, has something on appeal. Because you're always thinking about preservation for appellate error. That's one thing.

The other things would be, you know, with expert -- talk about the subject of expert testimony. With the landmark cases of Frey or Daubert, you know, I've got cases right now, files of mine, that I know that I've got to file a Frye or Daubert motion, and I just -- I shutter to think when I'm going to have time to do that. I know I'll go back and I'm going to save a lot of time because I'm going to go back to one I filed years ago, and dress it up better, but in order to do that, first, I've got to read the newest edition of -- the Daubert case that everybody is talking about, and I haven't read that.

I'll give you a perfect example. I talked to a private attorney who used to work for us. He's read the article, and I haven't. That's the difference.

Q. How frequently are cases -- and I can divide this into categories if this helps -- taken to trial --

A. Okay.

Q. -- in your office?

Does it help if I divide it into categories?

A. Probably makes more sense.

Q. Okay. So start with noncapital homicide cases. And maybe a better way to answer that is how frequently do you see those cases, and then of the ones you see, how frequently are they taken to trial?

A. Well, it depends on the jurisdiction, of course, too, because the venue -- the venue is going to decide what sort of fair population cross section of a jury panel we're going to get, and in many instances that's going to play a role in the decision and, perhaps, advice of what we give to a client to do. Obviously, it's always the client's decision, but in terms of if there's advice to be given and taken, then that may -- so the jurisdiction matters.

Also, quite honestly, there are some jurisdictions where if it's that type of case, noncapital homicide, the offer is never going to be -- never going to be reasonable, or anywhere near reasonable, so you know it's probably going to go to trial. That doesn't create more time for you to work on it. Just because you see a file and you've got the gold sticker on it and you know it's a murder in such and such jurisdiction, you're never going to get an offer. And that's -- that's regardless of whether or not you've had a chance to digest the contents of that file in order to see whether or not there's investigation to be done or a plausible defense.

Q. Do you see charges -- noncapital homicide charges frequently in your district?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. So then -- so it is common, then, that they would go to trial, like, because of what you're saying you know you're never going to get an offer?

A. Depends on the jurisdiction and many go to trial, yeah.

Q. Okay. Is there a way to average how many in a year might go?

A. Not really.

Q. Okay.

A. I mean, how many a year should go or how many a year do go?

Q. I guess both. Yeah, I mean, because I imagine the more serious the case, often the longer it would take to get it to a trial; is that common?

A. That truism, I believe, is true, but there's also things that don't involve a decedent that's extremely complicated, right? There may be an assault, where all that means is, frankly, there's more witnesses.

Q. So after homicide cases I have, how about for A/B felonies?

A. Depends what sort of case it is. I mean, it's -- those could include rape or kidnapping, or it could be a possession turned into a -- somebody with a -- somebody with a severe record that's got an incredible amount of exposure. So it may be not really a whole lot of drugs, but it may involve a sale or a transfer, a hand to hand or a series of those.

Those typically aren't necessarily the kind of cases that are going to scream a great deal of investigation because, frankly, they have professional witnesses, law enforcement officers, and that -- I mean, it is what it is. You'll still need to listen to the tapes, if there are audiotapes, and that sort of thing. You'll need to chase down any leads your client gives you, but sometimes it's more of a how much negotiation you're going to be able to spend trying to approach the prosecutor to try to get some resolution that doesn't, you know, eat up the rest of your client's life.

Q. So is it fair for me to understand what you're saying that the more serious the charge or the more serious the consequences for a defendant, depending on their maybe history or what was going on, those are more likely to go to trial?

A. No.

Q. They're not?

A. That just plays a role. I mean, we could have -- I'll give you an example. We've got more than one case where there's -- it's a misdemeanor file, right, and depending on when we get the discovery and how much we know about it, we may give it to the relatively newer public defender attorney, and then all of a sudden they come and say there was a dead body involved in this. This was a fatal accident and that sort of thing. And it started out as a misdemeanor, and it may end up that way, but we've got to treat it as if it might not. So that isn't pled. That's slowed down. That's not going to be like the -- it was on the traffic docket, so you can't treat it like a traffic case where the client just wants to get their license back and plead guilty, or whatever the situation may be, go to alcohol training.

We also have -- and that's not the only case where we've got it's a misdemeanor and there's a dead body in the file. So we've got to be concerned about -- because sometimes the prosecutors are planning their method of prosecution or they're just waiting for additional evidence, whether it's an autopsy or uncovering more witnesses.

Q. Do misdemeanors -- I know there are other cases you're talking about that might be an exception. Do misdemeanor cases often go to trial or are those cases more often pled?

A. It just depends. Overall, I would probably say they're, more oftentimes than not, resolved by resolution other than trial.

Q. Okay. How about for felony sex offenses?

A. It just depends. You're probably -- you're probably -- you're certainly going to work it up like it's a trial and assume it's going to be a trial because the offers are not going -- it just depends if your client has a history because that's probably going to control whether or not it's going to be resolved by mutual agreement with the other side.

Q. Does your office handle a lot of juvenile cases?

A. We do not at present.

Q. Can you explain that a little bit further?

A. Sure. Since the Waters -- since approximately the Waters cases.

Q. So around 2012?

A. Roughly.

We had -- our management, the public defender management, met with the judges, and as a result of that, I believe our two major counties, Clay and Platte, sort of eased off on the juvenile cases, and assigned them to private attorneys on their list. And so for Clay and Platte, knock on wood, we don't -- we don't do juvenile. There's a couple exceptions in there where we might have got briefly involved, but, for the most part, no. The courts afforded us that relief. Clinton County did not.

Q. Do you know what -- are you familiar with how Jackson County appoints --

A. A little bit.

Q. -- for juvenile?

It's any attorney can be on the list. Is that the same for Clay and Platte County?

A. I think Clay and Platte -- no, I think it's different for Clay and Platte because they don't have the major behemoth law firms to draw from. I think -- I think Clay and Platte looks for volunteers that want to be on the list. They may get a nominal fee, with the hope of picking up other cases and expanding their clientele, maybe, but I don't think it's the same way as Jackson.

Q. Okay. And part of what I'm getting at is that do you think -- do those attorneys usually have some criminal defense experience that are getting appointed to take those cases?

Page 115

A. We talking the juvenile?

Q. Yes.

A. You know, I don't know, but I'm assuming that they probably have some juvenile exposure which, quite honestly, may be sufficient because of the familiarity with the juvenile prosecutors, staff, that kind of thing.

Q. Okay. Has an attorney in your office ever waived opening or closing argument at trial? And if so, do you know why they would have done that?

A. I know I have.

Q. Okay.

A. I presume -- I'm certain other lawyers have, but as far as why they might, I assume it's a case-by-case basis. I mean, there's perfectly valid reasons to do that.

Q. What's a reason that you have done it, if you can share? And if not, we can move on.

A. Well, I can't talk about this particular client's case.

Q. Right.

A. It's strategic.

Q. Does that happen often in your experience, that you can speak to?

A. It depends on the case. Because it's guided by strategy, there's really no way to put a number on -- you know, it's on the case, it's on what I think the government's case is going to be, it's on whether or not your client is going to testify, it's on whether or not that's a certainty or not.

Q. Okay. You know there's been a theme to the answers, so I know I'm asking questions that probably I know how the answer is going to come, but in your opinion, do you have the time and resources to adequately prepare for trial?

A. No.

Q. And do you think the attorneys in your office have the time and resources?

A. I know they don't.

Q. For any of the cases?

A. Well, again, the devil is in the details. If you have one case, and you prepared the heck out of it, and you pled 99 other people or they've decided to plead because they see by the time you come to us, I can't sit here a year and a half. I mean, we've got specific examples of clients in jail, I mean, they're there together, they see what happens. They go to court very often together to the same docket calls, and they see how many lawyers there are available. They can do the math, and that sometimes frustrates them.

Q. So if there's time to work on one case --
A. You may do an absolute superb job. It's kind of like having a favorite pet, right? That doesn't mean you're -- if you single somebody out, but it's to the detriment of everyone, that's why there's a concurrent conflict of interest because how do you choose without being unfair to the people you haven't chosen?
Q. Is that the same for sentencing proceedings, too, about having the time and resources to adequately prepare, and if you do find the time and resources for one case, that necessarily is a detriment to other cases?
A. Well, I would like to -- can we talk about the sentencing, then take a break?
Q. Yes.
A. And the reason I give the 2005 line of demarcation is not just a random number, but I think that's when -- I could be wrong about the year. I could be off a couple years -- Senate Bill 5, I think, was passed around there, might have been '03, not certain, but that was a huge, huge piece of legislation. And it did a lot of things, but I think chiefly, what I remember it doing, is bifurcating criminal proceedings where otherwise they weren't bifurcated.

So, for example, your misdemeanor shoplifting or your misdemeanor drug possession, if it went to a jury, and your client were convicted, it would go immediately into the sentencing phase, just like a capital case, although I don't do capital, so this is all from magazines I read and friends I have, but -- now, when Senate Bill 5 passed, there was, to my knowledge, zero -- absolutely zero dollars allocated, additional dollars, allocated to the Missouri Public Defender System to deal with that enormous burden that Senate Bill 5 passed upon the criminal defense bar. Because what it meant was you have -- the jury is waiting. If you plead your client guilty, the judge is going to set sentencing off so you have some time to gather some additional information, witnesses at a future date. You got a jury waiting, that's never going to happen. Judges are not going to do that. Whenever your jury verdict comes back, your sentencing is going to start. If it's late one evening, that judge may continue on or it may start up first thing the next morning, but you've got to be ready. And you're no longer talking about -- then you're looking for leniency of a jury which means a whole lot of things, including experts that you might conceivably want to utilize, including family members that you might want to utilize.

What I'm saying is the public defender got zero additional dollars to deal with Senate Bill 5. No more -- to my knowledge, no more funding to have mitigation specialists, no more funding to have sentencing advocacy specialists, anything like that. Instead, over the course of the years, the alternative sentencing unit, as well as the juvenile unit, had to be absorbed because of the enormity of the other burden on the remaining cases. I don't know -- I'm not disagreeing with that call. I'm not saying I would have made a different call. It's a different -- it's a difficult call.
Do I miss the -- do I miss the juvenile unit? Do I miss the alternative sentencing unit? Yeah. But does that mean that one of the trial offices got another lawyer? Probably did. It probably would have shifted -- I mean, I know that's what happened, whether appellate or trial got another -- got some kind of relief. But day-to-day functioning of the trial offices on Senate Bill 5 -- and it doesn't affect -- well, doesn't necessarily have its firsthand -- an impact on the appellate side of things. And capital was already like that with the bifurcated, I mean, we can't even compare ourselves to capital. But the trial side, when you have a client that's been convicted, they go to jury sentencing, you have to have had all that lead time in preparation what are you going to now present to the jury in terms of leniency to try to mitigate your client's ultimate punishment.

And I remember my first jury trial which was after Senate bill 5. I know what my preparation consisted of. It consisted of an elevator ride in a Platte County Courthouse. And had he not been acquitted, by luck, had he not been acquitted, we wouldn't have had a whole lot. There was nothing planned for the sentencing phase, nothing, but I bet there was on the other side, so -- and there's been cases on appeal about that. In cases some clients have gotten relief on that. Trying to think of my client's name that got relief because of that, as he should have. But that's a perfect example of, you know, additional legislation pushing down on one side of the teeter-totter, and no relief to the other side.

Page 121

THE WITNESS: Yeah.
MS. WILCOX: Okay. Go off the record.
THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're off the record at 11:26 a.m.
(A brief recess was taken.)
THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at 11:40 a.m.
Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): I think before we took the break, we had just finished talking about prep and time for trials and sentencing.
A. Okay.
Q. We concluded that. I'm now going to move into guilty pleas.
A. Okay.
Q. I have the same list of kinds of cases that we talked about before for -- starting with noncapital homicides, but I think I'll just -- we'll see how this works, but I'll start going through them.
A. Okay.
Q. How much time do you think it's necessary to spend working up a noncapital homicide case before you would advise a client whether to take a plea?
A. It depends on the charge and -- you know, depends on the charge, depends on the discovery, whether or not it's complete yet. I'm never going to allow a client to plead without -- if I think there's some discovery that's missing that's obligated to be given. Some clients will disagree with that. Some judges, in theory, might, but it doesn't matter until you have all the discovery. And by "discovery," I deal with that different than investigation. That just means show me what you've got and what you're going to have by way of evidence. Until I have a way to measure and monitor that, I don't know what sort of investigation this case might merit.

Q. And this takes us back, actually, to something we talked about. I imagine this is the same across the board, so correct me if I'm wrong, but if you're saying you need to look through the discovery, is it also true that that falls, then, on your time management issues that if you have to look through discovery and make sure you have it, you then can't even consider whether to look at the plea until you've had the time to do that?
A. Right. I mean, it's not unusual for me to shoot out an e-mail that asks for a plea. I just do that if I'm, you know, as a matter of course because it's just if I'm there and my hands are at the keyboard, that's what I'm going to do because I want it in writing, et cetera. But until I've digested all of the discovery and satisfied myself that we have all the discovery that there is; that they've complied with their duty, I'm not going to allow a client to accept a plea. I'll convey the plea if they're asking, but I'll say, you know, here's what we don't have, the lab report, this officer's report is, you know, not in there.

Q. Is that the same for all kinds of cases? I mean, from my list it's noncapital, and A/B felony, C/D felony, felony sex offenses and misdemeanors.
A. The incomplete discovery never yields guilty plea in my book.
Q. And how about for the attorneys in your office that you know?
A. Well, yeah, I can do better than know. They know that's my rule.
Q. Okay.
A. Now, the difference may be before electronic discovery, the prosecutor would actually bring a file to court, and if you didn't have the police report, and your client's offer was probation, you could look in the prosecutor's file, read through their discovery, and if you're satisfied, I think they have a submissible case, they're going to be able to satisfy their burden, client wants to plead guilty, and there's no investigation that is going to make a difference in the case, that's different. But that's only with a client that's anxious to get -- we're still going to try to shoot for a bond reduction to see if we can get them out to have more time to think about that, but you're in a jurisdiction, depending where you are, you may know what the answer to that is going to be. But, you know, we have told judges the plea offer is probation. I haven't had a chance to look through this. I haven't met with them, that sort of thing, and try to use that as a catapult to get a lower bond to get the client more time to think.

Clients are sometimes, quite honestly, in a hurry, in a hurry to make a good decision or a bad decision. I don't know. If I haven't examined the file, I don't know if it's a good decision. They may know something that I don't or, worse yet, they may think they know something that I don't, which happens sometimes.
Q. You said you will ask for a plea offer?

A. Uh-huh.
Q. Do you kind of do that across the board on all cases, early in a case?
A. Almost all cases. Murder cases, I may not, because I don't want to create the wrong impression on the prosecutor.
Q. Okay.
A. And also because I know what their answer is always going to be, something horrible.
Q. Do they often present you with a plea offer before you ask, is that common?
A. Prosecutors, for the most part, act as if they're surprised every time we ask, like, "Oh, you want a plea offer?"
Of course we do. Everyone you meet does. Every attorney on the planet does. But they do that to slow down the process and to not, in my mind, not to do work and to prolong the client's captivity if there's going to be a probation offer.
Q. Can you -- and maybe this is impossible, but can you give me kind of a percent of cases that you have in your office where you get a defendant that wants to take a plea just to get out of jail, how often that comes up, whether they take it or not, how often that comes up?

A. Sure, sure, absolutely. Well, I'm generalizing, but it's true, I have circumstances, cases now and cases in my past. Clients from the department of corrections all want to plead guilty to concurrent time. They probably have an out date or know that they're going to have an out date, and more times than not, not never, but more times than not, that's an unrealistic idea of what's probably going to be offered by the state voluntarily. So what that means, that creates an environment where the client is mad at you for not resolving it immediately especially if you deliver the news that they're probably not going to offer you concurrent time. And you say that from experience. It's not like you're rooting for one side or the other like I know them, I know the judge, they think it's a free case, that's not happening, so instead you say let me talk to them and we'll see, and that kind of stuff.
Q. Explain to me what you mean like concurrent time for something that they're already --
A. Right. If they're in the DOC --
Q. -- serving?
A. Yeah, if they're in the DOC, serving a sentence, and they've just hit parole, but more times than not they've filed a disposition of detainer and they're writted to the jurisdiction, what they don't want is to serve the remainder of that case they're serving, and then commence this new one because they'll wind up with an overall greater length of incarceration.

Q. Okay. Are you and the attorneys in your office able to spend the amount of time on a case before you advise a client about taking a plea that you feel is necessary?
A. I mean, I can only tell you what I do and what I hope the others do.
Q. Uh-huh.
A. What I fear the others do is try to juggle an over -- overly burdensome workload, but I know that, ethically, they're resolved and obligated to do otherwise.
If I see a file and there's not sufficient notes or not notes, I'm going to -- and, again, I don't have much time to do this, but it should be what I'm doing, as a manager. If I go and I look at the file and I see some insufficiency, I'm going to put a note on the file, give it to the attorneys, put on it their chair and say, "Give me five minutes."

Q. What would -- because I think what you said is you don't have time to look at all the files like this to review them, so what would -- when would you do that, or is it kind of a one off you just randomly pick files to review sometimes of the attorneys?
A. For me -- well, we have file reviews for purposes of promotion.
Q. Okay.
A. And then the other thing would be if a client calls with a question or a client's family member, that probably precipitates me looking at the electronic file in our computer or maybe pulling the physical file and looking. It's kind of hard to notice if there's not what you expect to be in the file. Or if a client calls and they want a copy of their file, and they're looking, it means there's a closed file, perhaps, why there isn't what I think needs to be in there.
Now, it's hypocritical of me to be too hard on the lawyer who I've given too many cases, right? It's like saying why aren't you seeing everybody in seven days? And the answer is because I know where you've been. You've got a perfect alibi. I'm sending you all over the place.

Q. What -- so aside from asking for an offer and then looking through the file, to some extent, to figure out whether there's something else you need to do, are there other steps that you always take before -- or while you're negotiating on a plea?

A. Typically, what I do is, you know, you take the steps in order to get the discovery in the file. Automatically, you get a copy to the client. In my review of discovery, I'll look to see for completeness or anything that's missing. That's the first thing I do. I may jot down some notes or highlight some things that are critical that I know are going to be really good or possibly openings for a possible defense. I may also highlight some innocuous things, too, that don't have anything to do with either, but that's the way I begin the file.

And many times that will happen before I even have any meaningful meeting with the client or have ever met them. Quite honestly, many of them now are phone calls and nothing more than that.

Q. Do you and the attorneys in your office always communicate a formal plea offer to your clients?

A. When it exists, sure.

Q. When you get a formal plea offer, you always communicate that, even though your advice might be don't take the plea?

A. Oh, absolutely, it's always communicated. Now, how timely it is is a different issue, right?

Q. Talk about that a little bit.

A. Sure. Prosecutors like to put deadlines on things sometimes. What I immediately -- my response to that is -- and if we haven't, and we've made records of this, which is, you know, an offer is expired, it doesn't happen a whole lot, but we're not going to let it go unpunished.

If a prosecutor sets an artificial deadline to it, and we have things that we really just haven't been able to do that, or whether it means going to visit the client or having a good phone number for the client if they're fortunate enough to be released to come in and to talk to you because, frankly, they may have been picked up on something else, some traffic violation or something, costs, and be whisked away to another jurisdiction. So you haven't been able to communicate it, offer expires, there's case law that supports they can't do that, and that's the position I take, or at least an argument can be made that they can't do that.

Q. That it can't expire before you can communicate it?

A. Well, under the Frye and Lauffler cases, I think -- I think I would like to draw an analogy between failing to provide the plea offer and trying, but through no fault of the client, you haven't been able to, so they could have gotten this whether it's reduction or more lenient sentence, et cetera.

Q. So is it typical for the state to offer a plea or give you an offer that will expire? Do they often put deadlines?

A. It depends what mood they're in. Most recently I've gotten some, but I pay no attention to the expiration date, I mean, because I know the judges. The judges are not going to punish an overburdened public defender's office. They're just not.

Now, the problem with that is sometimes, because of unfettered prosecutorial discretion, they get to -- if their offer -- I have offers right now where, "Plead to this. If not, I'm going to file a felony."

Well, the judge has no control over that, so I do have to -- I do have to pay some attention to that deadline. Now, whether or not I'll be able to meet it, your guess is as good as mine.

Q. How common does that happen where they file charges for misdemeanor, and then it gets -- that kind of offer, "Plead to this" --

A. And that's why you say what's your caseload, it's an artificial number because there are -- depending on the jurisdiction, there are a lot of instances, and I do mean a lot, where clients are charged with misdemeanors, and if they don't fold and take what is accepted, the threat is we will file a felony or we will file additional charges.

It happens all the time. So you have that -- and I've got to be mindful of that or attempt to be mindful of that when I'm assigning cases, too, right, because all of a sudden this misdemeanor, I won't necessarily know what the client's criminal history is, it's not an exposure for up to 12 months in jail all of a sudden or maybe four in prison, it could be a lot more than that. So the attorney assigned needs to be able to deal with a burden like that.

Q. Do you always try to communicate plea offers in person or you were saying that sometimes it probably necessarily happens over the phone?

Page 133

A. I mean, I prefer in person, but, I mean, quite honestly, there's a science, I think, I found to plea offers. If I have a plea offer, I'm almost never going to communicate that unless it means get out of jail, but many of my plea offers are not you get out of jail. It's how long you're going to prison. I'm usually not going to communicate that in the first visit. And it would be such an offer that would not expire, obviously.

Q. Right. Any formal offer that's going to -- has some expiration date that you think matters, you would relate?

A. I would attempt to comply with the deadline, but I can't guarantee that I would be able to.

Q. And it's a deadline given by the prosecution --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- that they make up?

A. They make up, but if it means elevating charges, it's not an idle threat.

Q. So in your opinion, do you and the attorneys in your office have the time and resources to adequately negotiate plea deals and counsel your clients on whether to accept a plea?

Page 134

A. It's pretty time-consuming, depending on the jurisdiction that you're dealing with. Some prosecutors prefer to be courted in person, and some prefer -- are okay with e-mail, so one being more time-consuming than another.

Q. This is the same question, without getting into the specifics or compromising attorney-client privilege, can you think of an example for you, personally, or someone in your office, where there could have been a better plea deal if there had been more time and resources?

A. Sure. I can't think of an example, but I can think of circumstances where sometimes, at least my philosophy is, if the prosecutor, if they know they're going to have to work harder, they might give a little bit more back. That's not absolutely true, you know, sometimes if you take a deposition, they're going to pull a plea offer. They just will, yeah.

Q. What other conditions might -- have you seen in your practice that the prosecution puts on a plea deal, like, what you're saying if you -- it's not really a condition, but I guess if you know there are cases where if you want to take a deposition, they're going to pull the plea.

Page 135

A. Sure.

Q. Are there other examples you can give like that?

A. Sure, sure. We are all the time or frequently, depending on what it is, depending on which prosecutor it is, depending on how we deal with them, I have attorneys that ask the prosecutor, "If I file a suppression motion, are you going to pull the deal?"

Some will say, well, yeah. Some will say no. It's the same thing with the preliminary hearing. If you request a preliminary hearing and they have a grand jury, justice is going to be affected.

Q. How do you communicate that to your client?

A. It causes a lot of frustration when you explain something like that. Well, I mean, my particular way, it just depends on the client and their level of intelligence, probably.

Q. But you do try to -- I mean, you have to convey to them that I have this plea offer?

A. Oh, sure.

Q. But I also think you have a legitimate suppression argument to be made, and here are the consequences that I'm facing, and you have to try to communicate that to your client?

A. Sure, sure.

Q. Do you and the attorneys in your office -- I guess talk to me about how you visit with your clients about immigration consequences of criminal charges.

A. I would probably say poorly. We ask if you're a U.S. Citizen. That's about as deep as it gets. Beyond that, we delay a case in order to try to get additional information. We have one or more attorneys, I think, that the public defender system has worked out an agreement to take our questions. I have a friend I went to law school with that I sometimes burden or will give his name to some of the attorneys I supervise.

I mean, it's a commonplace issue because we have a lot -- for example, a lot of DWIs where -- this is sort of beside the point, a translator is often involved. What that does is make it more cumbersome, from a time perspective, and protract things, but then to have the time to be -- actually be able to figure out what the ICE hold is about, and overcome the obstacles of that, because it's cumbersome. And you just don't want to -- I mean, so, really, what the client often is told is this may impact whether you're deported or whether you're ever able to return. And that's about the only advice they ever get. Nothing more specific than that.

Now, it's a real complicated subject. I don't pretend to be an expert on it, and I know most of my clients aren't, but there's -- you know, sometimes what that does is cause us to set a DWI trial for jury trial to buy time to look into it or with the hope that the prosecutor might do something. Or if ICE is involved, that ICE happens before they get this conviction because if you have the discovery, you probably can be able to assess whether or not they're going to be able to carry their burden which with the blood alcohol level, they're probably not going to need anything else.

Q. Are there -- so are there any formal steps that are taken within your office or that you know of with MSPD that are required for -- you know, besides asking, "Are you a U.S. citizen?" And maybe that's just an office policy.

A. Well, it's the result of a landmark case. That's what caused it, that additional inquiry and precaution.

Page 138

Q. Okay.

A. And it was only because of that case, the name of which escapes me now.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. The case?

Q. How long have you been asking, "Are you a U.S. citizen?" formally?

A. Since that case law came down.

Q. But you don't remember exactly when that was?

A. I can't remember the name of the case or the year that case came down, but it's the landmark case.

Q. Okay.

A. It may come to me before the end of the day. If it does, I'll blurt it out.

Q. Is there any -- and then so you'll reach out to any resources that you have about who might know something about immigration law, is what you're saying?

A. Right. And sometimes if the clients, whether they're in custody or out, the communication may include, "Do you have an immigration attorney?" because sometimes they're working with one, not very often, but sometimes, or sometimes I've got a fellow who is fortunate enough to be on bond. He actually has consulted with some or sought to, but couldn't afford it, you know, et cetera.

Q. So he knows more about --

A. He seems to know more than the afternoon person about it.

Q. Okay. Have you ever seen any special training offered or required to identify immigration consequences for attorneys in your office?

A. I'll say this about training: The training within the public defender system, they seek to do a good job. The challenge is creating the time to attend those things is really pretty impossible.

Q. Have you ever seen trainings offered on immigration consequence?

A. I think I have.

Q. Okay.

A. Yeah, I think, in fact, the friend that I mentioned I think even presented at one of the MSPD functions. I look at the syllabus and I see it, and I don't have time to attend it, but I see it.

Q. So in your opinion, do attorneys in your office, including you, have time and resources to adequately advise your clients on immigration consequences of the decisions they're making in their criminal case?

A. Not to an extensive extent, no. Not to a sufficient extent, I don't believe so.

Q. Can you think of any examples of where maybe someone didn't have time to do the work or didn't understand the consequences, and had a negative result?

A. We probably wouldn't necessarily be aware of the negative result because, frankly, that might not happen till years in the future if it involves re-entry. I just don't know. And if there's an ICE hold, that's usually a bad sign. But, again, I don't know if that means there's defenses to that through immigration, appointed attorney or not.

Q. Okay. How often do you see competency proceedings happening in your area?

A. Well, let me back up and say that we do a lot of -- we spend a lot of resources and consult a lot of expert concerning competency under 552 and 552.02 and .03. It's an enormous, as you might imagine, time drain because it's so complicated and involves an expert, whether it's the state's expert or privately retained expert, hired through the funds available under the MSPD, and it impacts the negotiation and defenses, but we see it a lot. I mean, there's -- mental health is huge in our caseload, mental health issues.

Q. Could you give it, like, an approximate percentage of cases where either competency becomes an issue whether or not, I guess, it ultimately results in a proceeding?

A. In the higher level cases, I can't give you a percentage, but it frequently comes up where there's an independent examination that's requested. We look at it and, frankly, even the lowest level of criminal events, we look at it in terms of mitigation or negotiation with the state, hoping that they see some leniency side of things.

Q. Does the state ever request psychiatric evaluation?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Not as frequently?

A. Certainly not as frequently as we do privately, no.

Q. If someone has been arrested and charged and is in custody, and then deemed incompetent, I guess, at that time, what happens to them? Where do they go?

A. I think they go to the Department of Mental Health for a stay of six months until another report or update is given to the judge, is the way I understand 552.

Q. And every six months, they would be reassessed to see if they can continue with the case?

A. That's the way it's supposed to function, yeah. I think that -- my understanding is the Department of Mental Health, because of either perhaps legitimate budgetary constraints, takes longer than that or needs longer than that. That's what I've heard.

Q. Okay. Do attorneys attend an evaluation, a psychiatric evaluation, with a client?

A. Typically, I don't believe so.

Q. Okay. Are line-ups common in cases you're handling, police line-ups?

A. Photographic or in person?

Q. I was going to ask both.

A. Okay.

Q. So please talk about both.

A. We have a lot of our cases where there are photos arrays, and also show-up IDs that are involved.

Q. What's a show-up ID?

A. Where the clerk is brought to the person that is arrested around the corner or where the person around the corner is brought to the retail store, and the clerk is -- you know, those are not preferable by either side I don't think.

Q. And they just bring in the one person?

A. Yes.

Q. And say, "Was this the person who committed" --

A. Well, I think that's what they say if it's on a tape, yeah, or they might word it a little more strongly than that.

Q. Do those typically occur early in a case?

A. In the case investigation?

Q. Yeah, how far after charges are filed and you're, I guess, get a case would something like that happen?

A. Well, it would be before we're involved or we have the right to be involved.

Q. That makes sense. So then you're not showing up at those, that's just the --

A. Well, you have to understand when you say "photo array" or a "line-up," those -- I assume you're talking about those that involve a case investigation before someone is charged or the magical words "person of interest." So precharges were not involved in any of that. We don't -- we would have no reason -- we would have no reason to have ever received an application, for example. Now, whether or not those folks, when or if they're ever advised to the right of counsel, I wouldn't know unless I had a chance to look at the reports.

Q. Okay. Presentence investigation, I guess, or PSI reports, are those common before sentencing?

A. Yes. More recently they've changed their name to sentencing assessment reports, so from a PSI they went to an SAR, same things only they're not as long.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't know if that's good or bad, but it's common to have that sort of thing. And sometimes that's part of the negotiation, and sometimes there are judges that prefer the involvement of the SAR. Some judges don't care, some judges won't resolve a matter without having one. Now, what that means, from a practical standpoint, is if your client is offered probation, and you're in front of a judge and they're in custody, if they're offered probation, and they elect to plead guilty to the charge or charges, and the judge, if you're in front of a judge that insists on a SAR, and they remain in custody, that's going to take another probably six weeks before their sentencing. If they're released, it will delay it by six weeks.

Q. So it's always the judge that would request it, or would it be requested by a --

A. Judges like to -- some judges insist on having one, and won't accept to be bound by the plea without the SAR. Every now and then you get judges that do that, but in order for it to be waived, the judge has to be comfortable that everybody is involved in waiving it, elects to waive it on the record.

Q. Who participates in the assessment besides the person being assessed and the person assessing them, is the attorney -- is anyone else present?

A. You know, it's funny you mention that. I had never participated in one or attended one in decades of practice until a recent client that I had. And I advised the probation officer I wanted to be present, and then -- well, one thing led to another. Eventually I made it up the chain of command, and they provided me the policy they have, state probation and parole, where they suspend the constitution of the United States and say that an attorney is not to be involved in that. So it's just crazy. It's just one of their silly rules, but I have it in writing. It's one of their rules. It goes to show you not every rule is a rule.

So -- and I really wanted to be present for one, I had one particular reason because of the nature of the client. It was a murder client that -- long history to it, and she knew why I wanted to be present. So I attended, but I complied with their silly rule of noninvolvement. I didn't interrupt him. I know I could have. It might not have resulted in -- he probably would have taken it out on the client so, once again, someone with an associate's degree in command of the criminal justice system. So usually don't attend those.

Q. So you just learned about this policy?

A. Yeah, but I could care less about their policy. If we had time, we would attend them all.

Q. Okay.

A. Absolutely. We would love to be able -- if we had time, we would attend them all. I'm not saying we would have the interest to attend them all, but there would certainly be a legitimate reason to attend them all because the clients really could benefit, I think. More clients than not could benefit because many are undereducated. And, quite honestly, the reason they don't want you there is because then they've got a witness. So if they're willing to videotape them, I don't need to be there, but I would still probably be there.

Q. But they don't videotape them?

A. No, no, goodness no.

Q. Have you asked them to videotape?

A. No. I just now thought of that. That's the first time I ever thought of those two things, those two worlds colliding.

Q. Who does the assessment?

A. State probation and parole officer of some sort.

Q. So who is normally in the room, just the probation/parole officer and your client?

A. Well, like, for example, when you go to the jail, they'll be on the phone lines and you'll see them, and that's the way they're conducted, or they may come into the -- they may tie up the only room they have to visit our client doing them, too, doing the interview.

Q. Do you know how long they usually spend, or does it totally depend on the case and the person?

A. Well, I mean, I've heard everything from -- they're not thorough. When I tell you they went from a PSI to an SAR, same number of initials. Less thorough. It's really pretty useless.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't know how long they take. I've heard of circumstances where they are they just drop off the forms to the client, "Fill this out, and I'll come back for it," so I'm not sure that they necessarily have a face-to-face exchange in each and every instance. I wouldn't know.

Q. Why do you think judges find them so helpful?

A. Cover. And sometimes they actually do provide some useful information about the -- you know, for those judges that are inclined to, you know, exercise leniency in those cases that are deserving of it, they could theoretically be useful for that purpose.

Q. But more often than not, in your opinion, they are not useful or helpful?

A. Depends on the judge.

Q. How often do clients represented by your office want to withdraw a plea?

Page 149

A. It comes up. I don't know. I can't give it a -- it doesn't come up so frequently that I would say, oh, that happens a lot.
Q. Okay.
A. But there are circumstances where it does.
Q. What steps do you take if that happens?
A. Well, if I'm aware of it, it's because one of the attorneys have come and said, "Hey, so and so wants to withdraw their plea," and then we talk about -- I try to walk the attorney through why and what's the reason and what stage the case is at and that sort of thing, so -- and then we look to the rule.
I'm of the opinion that they don't have the right to withdraw their plea unless, under the rule, there's a manifest reason to do that. And sometimes, quite honestly, we've got to be concerned with the client shooting themselves in the foot by doing that because it may -- you may be in a jurisdiction where the judge says, "I'll not just withdraw it, I'll withdraw it with pleasure." And when they do, the prosecutor elevates the charges.

So, you know, it's all about protecting the client and trying to educate them at the same time.
Q. When does your office's role and representation end, I mean, is there -- just at sentencing, when that is done, is your office done with representation? Does that question make sense?
A. Sure. When it's a plea, it's when the judgment and sentence is concluded, the sentencing hearing. When it's a trial, then there's the obligation to have -- most clients want to appeal. You presume that's the case, you know, after a trial. Every now and then you find one that doesn't, but you can always withdraw that later. We prepare a motion to proceed in forma pauperis along with the proposed order to present to the judge at sentencing. After the judge sentences, we present that, and then we coordinate with the appellate division. Trial side, typically, files the notice of appeal.
Q. So you advise your clients about their rights to appeal separately, and does the court usually do that as well at a sentencing?
A. Well, the right under 24.035, the judge does because they've pled guilty, and that's part of the proceeding. After a trial, it usually -- you know, it usually is part of the explanation you make to the client in terms of if you filed a suppression motion or a motion in limine, to talk about -- I always talk about trying to -- if the trial is not successful, protecting them, and giving them all appellate points that are possible to preserve. How much of that they understand, I don't know, but in terms of, you know, will you be my attorney on appeal, then you explain how the process works and how we're going to file this, and then it will be up to the appellate office to assign you an attorney.

Q. So you help them get there, though?
A. Right. We sort of serve it -- we tee it up. We tee up the appeal through the notice of appeal.
Q. Okay. And how -- I'm told I'm using this term correctly. Elocutions done in your district, is that something that you're attending and participating in with your client?
A. I'm pretty sure that's just a phrase at the sentencing, in my experience.
Q. So you're there, and it's just --
A. We're there when the judge says that word.
Q. Okay. And then so as far as post-trial, you would file any post-trial motions in your office, or that would happen before the notice of appeal and you kind of handed it off?

A. The post-trial motion typically would just include the motion for new trial after a jury has convicted then a sentencing date set, you attend that sentencing date, argue the motion for new trial, it's typically overruled, of course, and then the sentencing occurs. It's at the conclusion of that that we file the motion and order to appeal in forma pauperis, and then within 10 days is, I believe, the due date for the notice of appeal for the court of appeals.
Q. And because we already -- your office is not currently taking any juvenile cases unless there's a special circumstance?
A. Clinton County, we do.
Q. Okay.
A. And those are not really special circumstances, it's just whenever the judicial judge in the 43rd Judicial Circuit involves us.
Q. Then I will go through these questions.
A. Okay.
Q. And when you say -- so Clay and Platte

Page 153

County, that's a judge decision that they decided --
A. They afforded us that relief around the time of Waters.
Q. Okay.
A. One of them sort of one -- one of them has been continuous. Platte has been more continuous than Clay, but both, right now, we are relieved of that obligation.
Q. How are those cases assigned within your office, the ones you do get from Clinton County and then I guess --
A. I primarily have one attorney, and only one attorney, covering Clinton County cases, so the attorney that I have covering Clinton County cases is assigned their juvenile cases.
Q. And then also covers many other cases, other dockets, as well?
A. Goodness, yes, and other counties, too, sure.
Q. Okay. How is indigency determined for juveniles?
A. My understanding is, frankly, every juvenile qualifies unless they have some trust fund that we're going to stumble upon, they're going to qualify. We're not going to find them to be ineligible because of the wealth of either or both parents.

Q. Okay. Are they often held in custody and kept in custody in the cases that you see?
A. Yes.
Q. Where are they held?
A. Glad you asked. From our experiences, those juveniles that are charged in the 43rd Judicial Circuit, the portion, the tiny fraction of the 43rd Judicial Circuit that we cover, which is Clinton County Courthouse in Plattsburg, Missouri, those young men and women are generally housed in Kirksville, Missouri.
Q. How far is that from where they might live?
A. Well, I don't know where they live, but it is hours and hours away from the Plattsburg courthouse.
Q. Which is where they need to show up for their hearings?
A. Yes, and where our lawyers are, yeah, so we drive half a day away and back again for the juvenile cases.
Q. Why are they sent there, is it just because of the facility that --

Page 155

A. I have inquired of the Clay County juvenile chief detention officer about that because in a conversation with the judiciary, I expressed my frustration over that, why so far. Because I was thought -- I was led to believe perhaps there was a possibility that they would -- that those juveniles could instead be housed within walking distance from our office at the Clay County Juvenile Justice Center, but the communication was made and, apparently, the 43rd Judicial Circuit contracts with the Kirksville facility, I'm told.
In my mind, still not good enough reason to make my staff waste their time because, frankly, they could drive them a shorter distance to the Clinton County jail, juvenile jail. They have specific -- an entire building dedicated to juvenile justice.
Q. In Clinton County?
A. Clay County.
Q. Clay County. Sorry.
A. Clinton instead transfers them to Kirksville.
Q. Hours away?
A. Hours away.
Q. Okay. So if you are an attorney who is assigned this case and wants to visit a client before a hearing in person, they would have to drive --

A. I have had my Clinton County attorneys, over the course of the different attorneys that have covered Clinton County, drive to Kirksville.
Q. And so that -- I mean, that's an entire day just for a visit?
A. Yes.
Q. If your office is conflicted out of a juvenile case, where does that case go in Clinton County?
A. Since we only do Clinton County conflicts in juvenile, I don't know that we've done that. I can't say that we've done that. It's happened in Clay or Platte, but those have been years and years ago, so I'm not quite sure where that would go, how that would be handled.
Q. Would a juvenile -- because assuming they would all qualify for representation -- ever have to attend a detention hearing without an attorney?
A. Yes.
Q. What's the circumstances that that would happen?

A. The rules require it to be within -- I forget the number of hours, maybe 20. It's relatively short. Might be a little longer than that. And sometimes that occurs prior to their application, I think. I have more familiarity with Clay County than anything else and, like I said, we've been fortunate enough not to do that for a number of years, but I think there's a possibility that the juvenile in Clinton County would have a detention area without an attorney, but I don't know if that's the normal practice or not.
Q. And that's just because of how quickly it happens and they don't have -- they haven't applied or they don't have an attorney assigned?
A. I mean, they're usually -- of course, the only source they have, generally, is either the judge or the juvenile officer to tell them, usually speaking to the parent, probably, you have the right to fill out an application, so...
Q. Are they usually told that, in your experience?
A. I'm not sure. Juvenile, especially in the 43rd Judicial District, is a shroud of secrecy. It's unlike anything you see on American TV.

Page 158

Q. Okay. So that judicial circuit is just particularly its own situation, in your experience, I guess?
A. In a word, yes.
Q. Okay. Are there frequently certification proceedings for juveniles that your office sees?
A. There have been in the past. I don't know that recently we've had any certification hearings in the juvenile cases that we handle.
Q. Is it common for the attorney who handles the cases to line up alternatives for detention for the juveniles?
A. I'm sorry. Let me go back to that first question. I guess it wasn't all that long ago that I handled a juvenile certification hearing in Jackson County because, as you mentioned, Jackson County has the list, and it was during the transition of the relief afforded our trial offices with contract conflict counsel, and the special way that Jackson County does their juvenile through the private attorney list and law firms assistant, that sort of thing, but there was one lingering that was sort of caught in between where our office was involved. I handled it, frankly, because I -- all my attorneys were -- there's no way that I could cast them into -- have that additional burden, too, and so we had -- that was pretty time-consuming, but we had the hearing down there in Jackson County.

Q. What type of preparation comes -- do you do for a certification hearing?
A. Well, on that particular one, again, he happened to be at the top of the pile which is -- you know, you create the pile. It's not first come, first served or last in line. It's the triage method. And there was sufficiently interesting information in the discovery that we received that we wound up subpoenaing probably half a dozen officers.
Q. But that's not always the case?
A. Not typically the case.
Q. So, then, I guess now we're going to jump back to alternatives to detention. Are there resources available to the attorneys in your office to identify alternatives, or is this just something maybe they know about because they do this type of work regularly?
A. Are we still talking about juvenile?
Q. Yes.
A. Okay. Other than -- I think, as far as I know, the only alternative to detention would be one of the parents or family members.

Page 160

MS. WILCOX: Okay. Can we go off the record for a second.
THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're off the record at 12:27 p.m.
(A brief recess was taken.)
THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at 12:30 p.m.
MS. WILCOX: All right. So we're talking about alternatives, I believe, is where we left off.
Could you read back the last question and answer.
(The record was read by the Reporter.)
Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): So if a parent and family member is an alternative to detention, that's something that the attorney would argue for -- would go to a hearing and argue that the child be placed somewhere other than in a detention facility?
A. That would be the argument, yes.
Q. How often is that granted?
A. In the setting of Clinton County, I'm going to -- I think it's safe to believe probably never.
Q. Okay. And so, then, those juveniles are housed is Kirksville, pending some outcome of their case?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that where they would stay if their sentence involved a period of time after, like, a conviction or a plea? Do they stay in that facility?

A. It's a special juvenile facility so, yes. That could be where they wind up if they were serving juvenile detention after the case is concluded.

Q. Does the attorney in your office ever work with expert witnesses in juvenile cases?

A. I don't have any firsthand knowledge of that, I mean, I'm sure there was a time when we did more juveniles that, perhaps, that came up probably in the Jackson County setting.

Q. Okay.

A. But I don't remember approving any use of those in the Clinton County. That's where I -- that would be my gatekeeper, right, because I didn't approve, so I'm assuming it wasn't utilized.

Q. Are social workers utilized in the juvenile context?

A. I don't believe so. I know we don't.

Q. These are kind of summation questions, so bear with me because they are things you've said, but I would like to just kind of ask a final question.

Page 162

A. Sure.

Q. In your opinion, can the attorneys in your office, including you, adequately represent all the clients on their docket?

A. No.

Q. And what's the basis for your opinion?

A. Excessive workload and insufficient resources.

Q. And does your opinion stay the same no matter how expert or the amount of experience an attorney has?

A. It may be impacted by the amount of experience necessarily because, quite honestly, an inexperienced attorney, wherever they work, wouldn't necessarily know what they're missing.

Q. We talked -- we've touched on the Waters case --

A. Yes.

Q. -- from 2012. So you were in your -- the current employment?

A. Yes.

Q. How did the attorneys in your office respond to the Waters decision?

A. Well, the lead-up to the Waters decision, because this is -- I've got a file at the office just of the opinion, but it's been years since I've read it. Leading up to that and the effort to create -- to impact the workload and create a caseload cap, there was a certain degree of optimism.

After Waters, there was legislation pending that sought to privatize the public defender system, and it was received, frankly, with some hysteria on the part of attorney and nonattorney staff members for fear of the system -- that wasn't everyone, but that was a lot of people, for fear of losing their jobs and their income and their health care and that sort of stuff.

Q. How did the judges in the district respond to the Waters decision, was there any change?

A. Well, like I said, Clay and Platte, as a result of the meetings that my supervisors held with Waters -- in connection with the Waters, they continued the relief through the juvenile cases, and we didn't -- sparing us of that obligation. I don't know how else to explain how they impacted -- how they effected it. When the prosecutors file the cases, the judges really don't have any control over the number of cases that are charged.

Q. Do you think that your office continually exceeded its caseload capacity for any period of time that spans three months at a time before and after Waters? Has that been ongoing?

A. Our overcapacity, there's no doubt, has been continuously ongoing.

Q. Since at least 2005?

A. '05?

Q. That was kind of the year we were talking about?

A. Sure, sure, sure. Well, I mean you're talking about that's the Anthony assessment. You're talking about metrics in Exhibit 14, so I don't know -- you're talking about what it feels like as a manager and what I believe we were going through with the then period of transition and lack of investigators and relative -- a lot of novice -- new experienced attorneys, yeah. I mean, I don't have any reason to think that in 2005, it's not a good time to begin to say things were beyond -- began to get beyond control.

Q. And have stayed that way, and gotten worse?

A. They've gotten far worse.

Page 165

Q. Okay.
A. Worse.
Q. Can attorneys in your office -- let's talk about before Hinkebein. Am I pronouncing that correctly?
A. Karl Hinkebein.
Q. Hinkebein. Before that, in the recent events, was there a way for attorneys to refuse to take cases in your office?
A. Before the Karl Hinkebein case opinion was rendered, no one -- we never really discussed about refusing cases. There was never any discussion of that. There was always a constant discussion of too many cases, and -- but that was the extent of it. I mean, refusing as in -- frankly, the refusal was -- I'm assuming that was with attorney resignations. And I don't know if it's accurate to characterize that as a refusal. It may have been -- frankly, may have been, unfortunately, been -- and I'm not proud of this -- a surrender. Or they may have left for other reasons. They may have left because their student were such that they couldn't afford to pay them, you know, or some combination thereof. But refusal, that's a magical term that comes from the Karl Hinkebein case.

Q. Okay. So why don't you tell me about the case, and describe the best you can, I guess, and without going -- and briefly, like, but what the decision was and what that held, what that means for your office.
A. Well, I have some experience with the office of chief disciplinary committee as a result of nonmanagement as well as nonmanagement duties. I'm certainly not an expert on that. But over the years, there was always discussion at management meetings that, you know, clients were making bar complaints. And there was never -- there was never an issue with -- unless someone legitimately did something wrong, affirmatively did something wrong, it was never at the forefront of anybody's concern, but the Karl Hinkebein case took an overworked public defender who also had medical issues, according to the published opinions, and faulted him for not being able to perform. And, essentially, what that did, in my mind, was faulted him for not being able to overperform with a grossly excessive caseload in the appellate setting, which is different than a grossly excessive caseload in the trial setting because there's different duties involved, vastly different. But having worked in appellate for awhile, I do understand there's a lot to be done and a whole lot of preparation and a whole lot of research and writing.

But, essentially, my assessment of the Karl Hinkebein case was that the Office of Chief Disciplinary Committee made an issue of specifically making excessive caseload not a defense to the attorney, regardless of whether or not the attorney is a private counsel, and purposely took on too many cases, trying to become a profiteer, essentially, or somebody like Karl Hinkebein, who's been a state employee, undercompensated, overworked for decades, someone who had their supervisor bring them work to the hospital bed to continue to work for their clients.
And the Office of Chief Disciplinary Committee made it a point, because it's a point in their brief, to make sure that the Supreme Court did not carve out an exception to public defenders specifically no excuse that you don't have any control over the number of cases that you have an obligation to ethically and zealously defend.
It's a mathematical calculation that I could never agree with. It just doesn't make any sense. And it sent shock tremors through the public defender system, especially after listening to the oral argument, and I went as far as to read the appellate briefs on either side. It was very disturbing, and we drew a line in the sand.

Q. When did that decision come down, within the last two months?
A. Well, I think my letter went out October 2nd, so it was shortly -- probably took me a week, only because I was so busy, not through lack of interest, to complete the letter --
Q. Okay.
A. -- my version of the letter. And as soon as the opinion came out, I sent word to my attorneys that I would be doing everything I could to protect our bar licenses, and I encouraged them to do the same thing, and to listen to the opinion and educate themselves, not just what we were talking about in the lunchroom or, you know, over the watercooler, if we had one.
Q. How did the MSPD central office respond to the decision?
A. Well, I believe it was a supportive response, at least that's the impression I got from the direction I've seen taken by our director, and he, I think, directed a memo or a letter out, I haven't read that in quite awhile, educating us about the opinion and that sort of thing.

And then thereafter, myself and my co-director, Ms. Brown, as well as our director, Mr. Barrett, scheduled meetings with the presiding judges of Clay County and Platte County, I think it was on the same day, and then inviting any other judge with, albeit, short notice to come to wherever we were holding those meetings, you know, in the relative jurisdiction of Clay and Platte, to discuss public defender concerns. And that meeting was held on that day and, you know, things were discussed that could possibly try to address the workload concerns.

Q. Did you talk to your staff about what you felt like that decision meant and what maybe precautions they needed to take before you got a memo from the central office? Did you have discretion, you felt, to do that, just based on your role as the district defender?

A. I didn't think I needed discretion. I've got a bar license, and I did it before I got the memo.

MS. WILCOX: All right. Since we're talking about it, I'm going to hand you what's going to be marked as Exhibit 15.

Page 170

(Exhibit 15 was marked for identification.)

Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): Can you identify this document for me?

A. Sure. Exhibit 15 is a copy of a letter dated October 2nd, 2017, that I directed out to the presiding judges of Clay, Platte and Clinton County in relation to the Karl Hinkebein decision.

Q. Can you summarize what you're telling the judges, what it says?

A. Well, let's see. Probably no way to quickly summarize that. It's pretty detailed, but --

Q. And we can read it, so, yeah, I don't want you to --

A. I think -- the only thing I was trying to convey to the judges was how, as a result of the Hinkebein decision, at least as far as I was allowed to proceed, we were going to try to defend our law licenses any way that we thought we needed to.

Q. Have the judges that you directed this letter to continued to appoint public defenders?

A. Well, I should note that I carbon-copied all the other judges and a commissioner in Clay and Platte and Clinton, so not just the presiding judge. So there have been some -- there have been some judges that have continued to appoint the public defender in both Clay and Platte. Insofar as Clinton County is concerned, I did not hear back from that judge.

Now, in defense of that, I'm not accusing him of anything. We only cover a tiny fraction of the 43rd Judicial Circuit, and I believe communication was through -- for the Clinton County judiciary was made through, I'm presuming through the Chillicothe trial office that handles the remaining seven, eight counties, the majority of those, obviously, all but one, so -- but because we cover that one, it was my duty to notify him, too. So I haven't heard from that presiding judge. I have heard from some of the other judges in Clinton County and 43rd, but not the presiding judge, so -- but, yes, we have continued to be appointed by some of judges in those jurisdictions, after my letter.

Q. Are you aware of communications between other district -- public defender district offices and courts throughout the state regarding the Hinkebein decision?

A. Somewhat aware, I mean, I don't know if I'm aware of every communication that was made, but I've talked to friends and seen the letter directed by the district defender out of Columbia, Missouri. I think that's the only other letter I've seen, but I can't be certain of that. All I can recollect right here. I remember I saw that letter before I composed mine.

Page 172

Q. And have you gotten any word from people you've spoken with about what other judges who have maybe been alerted to the situation and to the concerns of the public defenders office are doing if they're continuing to appoint attorneys?

A. Well, I think there's been newspaper articles about it, so it's no secret. The 16th Judicial Circuit has not taken it well, and I think the reaction by the presiding judge, who shall remain nameless in my videotaped deposition, characterized the public defender antics as horse shit, if my recollection serves me.

Q. I think that's correct.

Have you, internally, to the extent you can discuss it, have you guys been talking with other offices about the decision and what it means for the attorneys?

A. I know I've had conversations with other managers, but it's just been probably more about the Hinkebein decision than anything else.

Q. Do you know anybody who has resigned because of it or know anybody who has resigned because of it?

A. No one in my office has resigned yet because of it, but every Monday morning is a teetering edge, so -- and I have every reason to believe that's going to happen, but I'll take it as -- I'll take continuity as long as I can. And I will say this about -- to be fair, some members of the judiciary in Clay and Platte have attempted to be cooperative and considerate.

Q. And you said you met with the two presiding judges for Clay and Platte?

A. Shortly after the letter went out, myself, my Deputy District Defender Ara Bailey Brown and our director, Michael Barrett, met with the presiding judge, Judge Sutton and Judge Van Amburg, and any of the judges that were available in the courthouse there that, you know -- and, again, it was short notice, so there was just one or two available in each jurisdiction in that meeting. There was a full discussion about our concerns and the Hinkebein decision and what the judges could do to help and that sort of stuff.

Q. What's your takeaway from that meeting? What did they say they could do to help or what has been done in your opinion to alleviate?

A. Well, it was made clear that my concern would be not only would we be in the situation that we are now, and it's no secret the judges see that our cases linger forever. They're the ones granting continuances. They see -- I believe they genuinely see how hard the attorneys are working. They certainly see the parsement of numbers compared, in a totality sense, to the public defender attorneys that are practicing before them, so I think they're mindful of the fact that my concern is with resignations, and then we will all be in a worse position than we are now, which is a pretty dire position.

Q. Did they have any concrete suggestions of what could be done?

A. Well, each Clay and Platte are -- attempted to contact -- sort of sent messages through the private bar to seek out names of attorneys in the private setting that would be willing to take on pro bono -- some pro bono public defender indigent cases, perhaps even at a reduced fee, so I'll say pro bono/reduced fee.

Q. Do you know who would pay the fee, where that would come from, if you know?

Page 175

A. I really don't know. I would be speculating. I think the emphasis was on pro bono.

Q. Not a long-term solution, but kind of a -- it sounds like it was more of a short-term fix to, right now, alleviate the caseload that you have so that you hopefully don't lose all the attorneys you have in your office?

A. That's probably fair.

Q. I have this document that was previously marked as Exhibit 5. Have you seen this document before or heard of its existence? And can you kind of identify what it is that you're looking at?

A. Sure. Exhibit 5 is titled "Suggestions in Support of Writ of Prohibition and/or Mandamus." I think -- I'm not positive, but I think I've seen this on a database, so if I would have viewed it it, in all likelihood, would only have been electronic. I don't know that I have printed it out.

Q. Okay.

A. But I'm not even certain I've seen it.

Q. Okay. So it looks like it's a form from the public defender system of a writ that would allow someone to object to an appointment. Is this something that's ever been filed in your office or by someone in your office?

A. No, not my office.

Q. Okay. All right. I have another exhibit that is going to be not previously marked, and this is now going to be exhibit --

MS. SHIPMA: 16.

MS. WILCOX: Thank you. 16.

(Exhibit 16 was marked for identification.)

Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): And if you could just identify what it is, it's a similar form document --

A. Sure.

Q. -- and let me know if you've seen it before.

A. Sure. Exhibit 16 is a motion to withdraw due to excessive caseload.

Q. Have you seen this document before, to your recollection?

A. Again, I may have. It's possible I saw this on the electronic database but, again, I'm not even sure I printed it.

Q. So to your knowledge, has an attorney in your office ever filed this kind of motion, motion to withdraw due to excessive caseload?

A. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. We have talked about this, I think, in a lot of your other answers, but we're going to focus on what I'm going to call the triage of cases, so if an attorney in your office spends the amount of time that he or she thinks is necessary to zealously prepare a client's case, what happens to the other clients?

A. Nothing except they're probably put at a more disadvantageous position than they already are. Conceivably, their witnesses disappear. Conceivably, their alibi goes away. If they're in custody, they're suffering loss of liberty longer if they wind up not bonding or being, you know, continuously placed in loss of liberty. Nothing good.

Q. I think you used the term "triage" earlier. Is that something that -- a word you would use for what attorneys in your office do with their cases?

A. It's a dirty word we use, yeah. We've been using it for decades.

Q. Explain to me what you mean when you say things are triaged.

A. Well, the analogy is often made to a MASH unit where the sick and wounded come in, you deal with them as they come in best you can, and usually there's a waiting period. And people are not getting better while they're waiting while they're not being treated. So the triage -- it's also could be -- it's the fires that we put out every day and, significantly, it's also the waiting at the dockets for hours and the probation violation and the traffic dockets. Because while those attorneys' times are tied up with that, they're not investigating the cases that might have an alibi. And I say "might" because they haven't determined it yet because they probably haven't read through the discovery. And they also have clients who are sitting in jail whose bond motions may have never yet been filed, certainly not investigated, probably not investigated, and hearings that haven't been held.

Now, from an optimistic sense, maybe they -- maybe the judge reduces their bond, maybe their family locates some money and they're able to have pretrial detention out of custody. And it's always better for any client, I believe, to work with his or her attorney in an out-of-custody situation. You know, pointing through the glass and trying to demonstrate things, not good. It's always better to have the client -- it's critical to have the client out of custody if it's possible.

What happens when you don't is what you, essentially, have is you're creating documentation for the prosecution because clients are making recorded phone calls and writing. There's no privacy in visiting with family. All of that is recorded in the jurisdictions that I'm aware of and accessible, fully accessible, by the prosecuting attorney's office. So what we're left with is we get some late discovery on a client that has been making some jail calls, possibly incriminating information, possibly not. It may be neutral, but we wouldn't know until we take time to listen to them. And if you're going to get them the Thursday before your Monday trial, that's not really fair. But you haven't really filed a motion to make sure that they comply and give that to you in a timely, consistent, within, you know, 48 hours of their recording. You haven't done that because you've taken the one case at the top of the pile, and you're working it and you're providing -- that client is not getting first class service. That client is getting service that every client deserves, one lawyer, not a team of lawyers, one lawyer. And that's what the constitution guarantees.

Page 180

Q. Do you think that the current circumstances with caseload and resources are causing violations of the rules of professional conduct in your district by lawyers?

A. Can we take a break?

MS. WILCOX: Sure.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're off the record at 1:00 p.m.

(A brief recess was taken.)

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at 1:09 p.m.

Q. (BY MS. WILCOX): I'm going to rephrase the question I asked you.

A. Okay.

Q. In the letter you sent to the court on October 2nd which -- can you remind me the exhibit?

A. 15.

Q. 15. It's on the second page. In that letter you say that you've instructed the assistant public defenders in your office to notify you or your deputy district defender if they believe accepting new cases would materially limit their responsibilities to existing clients so they can ensure compliance with the rules of professional conduct.

Page 181

That's true that you've asked the attorneys in your office to do that?

A. That's true.

Q. Okay. And then can you just tell me what -- how have you been assigning new cases that have been coming in since this letter went out?

A. Since the letter went out, I think it was -- it may have been within a week of the letter going out. Trying to think. I think it probably was the letter cutoff date.

Well, there's a period of time that we created a waiting list. Immediately after the letter, October 2nd, 2017, there was a waiting list that was created or begun to be created, and understand with a limited staff, that took a lot of resources and redirecting them to creating the waiting list because we still had to process applications and find whether or not they were deemed indigent, et cetera.

And then there was a short period of time where we directed out letters to those folks who were on the waiting list, and after a relatively short period, some of the prosecuting attorney authorities began to file -- either provided me with a sample or actually filed a motion to -- the state's motion in opposition or to show cause, and I think what they were doing is voicing their belief that the letter that I had sent out, perhaps others, was not within -- not in compliance with the statute Chapter 600, and instead sought the court's relief to order us to file entry in the case. And there was a groundswell of information that came in informally through other managers I've talked to and, frankly, the other attorneys throughout the different offices, and it was clear that some -- one or more judges, their intention was to hold somebody in contempt. They were clearly itching to do that.

I decided to eliminate the wait list, and continue to assign Clinton County cases to the single attorney that I've assigned to Clinton County duties and clients, and those entries of appearances have been modified. I can't remember the exact language, but it, I believe, said something along the lines of entry of appearance under duress and in the unintentional violation, contraindication of Rule 4, I think, or words to that effect.

It's a form motion. It is, I believe -- with the exception of clients that we -- if we represent John Doe now, and John Doe picks up a new case, we enter in that case because we already represent John Doe's interest, but absent that single exception, all of our other entries of appearances are made under duress and in the unintentional violation of the Rule 4. So everyone that was on the waiting list is now assigned to me, and my entry of appearance under duress was made. And then, of course, there was a period of time, since we weren't making the waiting list, still people were applying. They were found to be indigent or they were found to be nonindigent, and appointed by the court, and those were also personally assigned to me under duress. That's why I have nearly -- approaching 400.

Q. So there is no wait list right now. You're just doing the entry under duress?

A. There is technically no wait list. Clients are waiting for me, but they're not on a wait list.

Q. Okay. When they were on a wait list was it informal within your office, or maybe formal? Informal is not the right way to describe it.

A. Well, I mean, we had a running list on a database, and I think we might have provided a copy of that list to one of the associate circuit judges that, I think, asked for it. It was no secret. You know, they just wanted to know. I think they were concerned with the count, maybe. I'm not sure what their concerns were but, yeah, I mean, it existed. It no longer exists.

Q. How long do you think that it must have --

A. I mean, there was -- we had letters that were printed that never went out. That's how short duration of a waiting list we had.

Q. Okay.

A. But yet some of them got it, and clients told me no, I'm on a waiting list. Well, you were for a brief period of time.

Q. Anyone who was on it has since now -- some entry of appearance has been filed in that case in your office, waiting, but has been assigned?

A. Or they represented themselves, proceeded pro se, or they hired private counsel.

Q. Okay.

A. There's probably a fraction of those that did that.

Q. So the -- in your district, the private bar appointments, are they happening yet or that has not happened yet, that was just a discussion?

A. There's -- we have a list from the

Clay County and a list from Platte County, and my staff is told that when people apply that are not -- people apply that are not qualified, we provide them a list, and explain, number one, that they have a right to appeal our finding; to have the court consider whether they're going to appoint us under the statute. And if you're interested, here is a list of lawyers who have voluntarily put their name on the list that either represent pro bono or at a reduced rate.

I didn't change the list as it came from the courts or the court's clerk. If it said "pro bono" on it, I didn't tinker with that language. If it said "reduced rate," I didn't tinker with that language. I didn't tinker with anyone.

Q. But you're saying these are for defendants who your office has found don't qualify for your representation?

A. Right, yeah. Because we can't turn them away and say hey, call pro bono. I mean, under the statute, they have the right to apply. We're obligated to process them to deem -- to see whether or not they fall within the indigent guidelines.

Q. So to date, there is no refusal of cases from your office to the court?

Page 186

A. When I last left the office, there wasn't any refusal of cases. We've been here awhile.

Q. Are you familiar with the Missouri Coalition for the Right to Counsel?

A. I've heard of it.

Q. Okay. Do you understand it to be in existence?

A. I don't know anybody that's affiliated with it.

Q. Okay.

A. So other than having read the phrase, the title, I don't --

Q. So that program is not alleviating the amount of cases you have in your district; is that fair?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm not even sure what it is. Let's just say this: It's not alleviating it enough.

Q. Okay. That is bringing me to the conclusion. If there's anything else that you think we should know regarding your ability or the ability of your district to provide effective representation, I would open it up for you to share that with me, but I have no other questions.

Page 187

A. I can't think of anything. I mean, I may think about it later. I still haven't thought of that immigration landmark case.

EXAMINATION

BY MR. RAMSEY:

Q. Good afternoon.

A. Good afternoon.

Q. My name is Steven Ramsey, again, and I represent the State of Missouri and Governor Eric Greitens.

If we could go back to your experience, did you come straight from undergrad into law school or was there a period of time in between?

A. I had a hard time getting into law school, so there was a lapse of time, about five years.

Q. And during that five years, what did you do? What you were employed as or how did you take up that time?

A. I had -- goodness. Goes back a ways. I worked for my family business. I worked for the IRS. I think that's probably it.

Q. And how would you classify your work for the IRS?

A. Started as a seasonal tax examiner, and I showed up, so they kept me.

Page 188

Q. And then so from that period, you went to law school. Did you immediately -- and I apologize if I missed this. Did you immediately begin in private practice for, I believe, four years?

A. No. My first job was with the Missouri Public Defender System as an attorney.

Q. And then was there a period that you did leave and then went into private practice?

A. Right. About five years with the public defender -- four years, 11 months -- and then two years with private practice, a law firm downtown Kansas City, Missouri, doing insurance defense, and returned to the public defender as a manager in the Saint Joe office and then the Liberty office.

Q. And then just briefly, what were your degrees in or your degree from undergrad?

A. BA in history.

Q. In terms of your preparation, I remember you testifying about the people you spoke to, Counsel, and you reviewed the petition. What other -- this is a big question, that's a broad question. What other broad groups or classes of people have you talked to in regard to your workload and caseload concerns, other district defenders being an example or can you give broad classes?

A. Sure. Judges, other members of the bar, you know, we see private members of the bar at the dockets. It's pretty much on our mind. Some may have said, "Hey, I volunteered" in relation to whether it was Clay or Platte, their call for pro bono. I've had a couple of folks do that.
Q. Have you been in contact with any organizations or nonprofits?
A. In connection with the crisis of the public defender system?
Q. Correct.
A. I don't think so.
Q. How about the press, any news, radio, et cetera?
A. I spoke -- I'm trying to think of when I spoke -- I'm trying to actually recall whether or not this was on or off the record.
Q. And if you're unsure, it's okay to not disclose that as well.
A. Well, I will say I have talked to various members of the press, historically, about the public defender crisis, caseload crisis, workload crisis.
Q. How about within the last year or so?

Page 190

A. They call me sometimes, but I don't have any direct recollection of it being in the last 12 months unless it would have been -- I'm recalling something with KCUR, but I'm not sure. They called once about the placement of a judge, and that may be -- which would, of course, have been totally unrelated to the public defender issues.
Q. There was some conversation concerning the funds that were appropriated by the general assembly to the Missouri State Public Defender System for the conflict counsel.
Do you recollect that testimony you gave earlier?
A. Yes.
Q. Was I right to hear you or to understand you saying that you were not confident that those funds would still be there in subsequent years?
A. Sure. Can I answer that fully?
Q. Sure.
A. Okay. When I call them conflict counsel money, if you will, it's not up to me how they're spent. I think it's up to our director how it's utilized and funneled out. I'm grateful that it's funneled out for that purpose. The history -- my particular history with the governor's office is continual disappointment with the previous governor with vetoing legislation, with withholding funds with Governor Nixon. My only understanding and appreciation for Governor Greitens is that he did not follow in the path of his predecessor, Governor Nixon, and, with our fingers crossed, did not withhold funds. So to that extent, I believe those that can appreciate the budgetary limitations are grateful that those funds haven't been withheld.

My understanding is as a result of Governor Greitens not doing what Governor Nixon had done time and time again, allowed that additional funding to the public defender system, and the system, through, I believe, extensive examination of how to maximize resources decided, and I agree, that that could be best utilized by resourcing those to contract private bar who agree to act in the public defender capacity and cover conflict counties to reduce our windshield time and everything else that would be affiliated with driving out to the wild blue yonder and farther and farther away from your offices in order to provide indigent defense.
As far as the future, I can only remain hopeful. I'm not an expert on the legislature other than every year they submit a budget. Other than that, I'm used to -- frankly, I'm used to getting bad news. This is the first good news I've gotten in quite a spell.

Q. In your experience and knowledge of the budgetary system who appropriates funds in the Missouri state system?
A. Not an expert on that. Don't care to speculate.
Q. What is your understanding of the withholding process that you mentioned about the governance?
A. There was at least two different times, if not three, that we were -- "we" being the public defender system management, had communicated that this money was requested, this money is in this committee, that committee, that sort of thing. Again, I don't understand it. Until they tell us it's ours, you know, I don't --
Q. I'm sorry. I apologize. Which committees? I interrupted you. I apologize for that.
A. That's okay. I just used that as an example. I don't even know if it goes to committee, so you won't hear me critique the legislature other than to say they need to give us more money. I won't be more specific than that.

Q. I understand. So I guess my question is your understanding is that the legislature is the one to appropriate the money?

A. Yeah, I guess so. I can't disagree with that.

Q. Okay. Now, you talked a little bit how -- so you have 12 attorneys right now?

A. Including myself, yes, sir.

Q. Including yourself.

And you were asked in an ideal world what you need, -- you think you would need to have a reasonable caseload. And if I remember correctly, your answer was 12 more attorneys or to double what you currently have; is that correct?

A. That's my estimate, yes.

Q. And that basis was on your experience?

A. It's based on two, two factors. One is my experience over decades and, two, on my reliance on the public defender assessment and the budgets they put out each year and when they talk about we have X number of attorneys which I believe are in excess of 300, and we need in excess of 300 more. So I trust their analysis, but in terms of what I personally believe, sure, we could absolutely use that. Were we ever going to get that? No.

Q. And so your understanding of how many attorneys you need comes directly from central office as opposed to being you having a history in statistics or management or some other independent basis?

A. You didn't listen to my question. I said it came from two factors.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. One was my reliance on the management studies that were done, but, more importantly, on my decades of experience.

Q. And as your experience as being a manager and being --

A. Manager, but not a statistician, correct.

Q. Let's take a few steps in a different direction.

A. Okay.

Q. When it comes to the determination of indigency, who makes that determination on your staff, specifically?

A. I have two of my formally titled clerks that are allowed to do that. I mean, I can make it at any point, my co-manager can make it at any point, but in terms of the nonmanagers, the two -- the two clerks that I -- I don't want everyone making that decision, so I have two that do it.

Q. Do those two have any specific training in that regard or how do you go about trusting those two as opposed to just everyone making that determination?

A. It's only recently been the two, quite honestly. Primarily, before that, it was the one who preceded me in the office, so she's been there probably around 20 years, and was a court clerk before that. Again, she's not a statistician, but she's familiar with the poverty guidelines, but that's really probably what we go off, the poverty guidelines, as a starting point in terms of income and assets.

Q. Do you have a sense of -- this isn't a term of art, but do you have a sense of a rejection rate for those who apply for services from the system?

A. Not that I can put a number to. I could probably just explain it better than that if you want.

Q. Please.

Page 196

A. I can give that a stab.

I think our office, the Liberty office, and I don't know this for a fact, but I get a sense that our office takes more steps to attempt to verify, spot check, income, assets. We also sometimes -- if for whatever reason we use the phrase smell of money. If we think there's assets there that they're not telling us about, as good guardians of the taxpayers' pocketbooks, we're going to look a little further, and we're not bashful about telling the courts to wait. The courts aren't always excited about that, but they have no choice but to wait because under the statutory scheme of Chapter 600, I have the right to conduct an independent investigation.

There are at present -- and understand I don't have sufficient staff to do this, but I utilize and take them away from doing other things, important things, to do this. We have -- we joke in our office that we have a financial investigation unit. It's not really a unit. I have one secretary not of which who is authorized to make the determination, but she's the one who is going to do the processing beyond if someone says they apply or if someone says let's -- or they qualify, let's do some -- we call it Chapter 600 investigation. And I have a document we file with the court that's entitled "Chapter 600 Investigation Pending," and we say the aforesaid has made application and is currently -- the financial investigation is being performed pursuant to Chapter 600, whatever number applies.

We have -- we contact the Missouri Department of Labor. Again, this is spot check. This is not on every application. We wouldn't be able to -- we would not be able to function to do anything else because we get so many applications. Okay. And when we spot check that, we provide the name of the applicant, the social security number of the applicant, and we ask for the past four quarters or last year's, but nothing more extensive than that because the recently is what we want because we know that's all the judge is necessarily going to care about. If they made money two years ago, it's gone. That doesn't -- you know, if they were out of a job for a year, we're going to be appointed. We're trying -- we're trying to limit our involvement, and not be taken advantage of for somebody who just wants a free lawyer.

Now, most frankly, most of the people who apply for us are dirt poor. They don't have much money for anything, but even if it's a small fraction of cases that we can avoid, okay, we want to try to avoid them because it's wrong to represent them to give them a free lawyer when they don't deserve one.

The other thing is that motivates them. If they're on the curve and they have it, but it really would be a financial imposition or might set them back a little bit, which a lawyer should, we do the best we can to try to motivate them to do that.

Now, they still have an obligation to attend every court appearance, whether they're in custody or out, but what I've seen is for the small fraction that we spot check -- and we're trying to make it a larger number, but it's hard to do with the staff we have -- we have a portion of that that falls off, and what they do is hire private counsel. Sometimes they represent themselves. They're not doing that in serious cases. They're doing it in cases where they have a bad case and they're going to repay the bad check. They're doing that sometimes in driving while suspended or revoked, and sometimes they're going to get the exact same outcome we do, but many times they're hiring private lawyers.

Because of the economy, salaries or fees have taken a dip because of the glut of lawyers, unfortunately. The economy has never fully recovered I don't think. It's gotten better, but never fully recovered for members of the bar, but it has created a -- there's some lowballers out there, and we're absolutely fine with people charged with criminal events hiring those members of the bar who can do a sufficient job to represent them. We're trying to encourage them to do that.

The judges see that. Some of the judges are very patient with that. Some are not as patient, but the ones that aren't as patient, we make it clear that they really don't have a choice.

Q. Is it your sense that your district -- forgive me if I'm misunderstanding, but your district has probably more or potentially more verification of resources than potentially other districts?

A. Well, when I look at Exhibit 14, understand that my assessment is purely speculation because I have no idea what most of these folks do, but I just assume that they don't have any more resources than me to do -- to serve such a function.

As to what they do independently, I really don't have any firsthand knowledge of it, but

I know that it's a time crunch, and it takes away from -- because it's not the first time we've been doing it. Even something as simple as running a real estate check and trying to see and doing some research with that, and even title search with vehicles, sometimes, every now and then, it saves us from a case, but it's an inordinate amount of resources. It might be easier to handle the case, but it wouldn't be easier on the attorney. It's a burden on the staff, though.

Q. Would you say it's common to reject an application? Is that something that comes through every day that you see a rejection or -- I'm trying to get a sense of how often your district turns away applications.

A. I know that there's a database that seeks to record the application, and whether or not the indigency finding is made by the public defender system or if it's instead appointed by the court. So I would have to defer to the historical accuracy of that.

Q. Who has the final say? So if the support staff member looks at an application and says yes, this person is in -- is there an independent control there, a monitoring, or do you all trust the discretion of that support staff or if it's yourself making that determination?

A. I make it clear to my support staff that their extra effort is there to limit cases and to make sure that people who don't deserve us don't take advantage of taxpayers' funds. So, if anything, they're going to err on the side of embarrassingly rejecting people.

Q. And so when that support staff rejects a person, hypothetically speaking, does that rejection stand or is there someone else or yourself, for instance, go back and look over the application and verify it?

A. If it's rejected, that's good by me. That's called a good call only because the applicant has the right, and we advise them of the right, or try to remember to advise them of the right every time, and, frankly, if we don't, which we seek to, the courts do and, quite often appoint us. But that just depends. And that's going to differ from judge to judge.

Q. You alluded to this potentiality earlier, but say a person has three other cases, criminal cases, and they have private counsel on those three cases --

Page 202

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- and they catch a fourth case. Does the virtue of them having the other three counsel, is that a factor that goes into whether or not they are indigent for that fourth case?

A. Absolutely. Part of what our process is -- and that's why the judges get frustrated. You've got the application. What else is there to do? What our staff does is -- and this I don't know whether or not other offices do. I would encourage them to do it, but I don't know if they have the time or resources to do it -- is we go to CaseNet, and we don't check every jurisdiction, but we check the ones that are more likely to be involved, and to see if that person has charges. Okay? And we also look up the case or cases that they are alluding to -- some of them know, some of them don't -- on their application.

If there's a way to connect them with private attorney at present or recently in that case or another, we're going to opt to find them not indigent. Then they have the right to appeal to a court.

Q. Switching gears a bit. How would you define a case or a matter?

Page 203

A. Can you be more specific?

Q. Sure. So you -- let's say that there's five cases, and I'm trying to get a sense if that means there are five criminal defendants or if that's saying there are five independent charges?

A. Sure.

Q. So I'm trying to understand the categorization of a case.

A. Okay. As I look on our database, I'll see, you know, John Doe, and see if he has any open cases. Now, John Doe may have -- and I break out that CR number. He may have -- he may have several counts on there, and I believe that would be tallied as one case. He may have -- it may be the kind of case where they threaten to charge additional counts, and that's why the numbers really -- you can't be guided by the numbers, not safely, because if you have one count, and they're threatening the other four, well, the attorney is working the other three. It's not fair to say we're only working the one because they have to be working all three in order -- for example, in order to negotiate that case, I require the attorneys -- and I think it's an obligation under the rules -- to get the discovery for the other three controlled buys if they're charged with the one. Because if part of the benefit of the bargain in pleading guilty is we won't charge you with these others, I want to make sure you've got cases on the others.

Now, under that setting, we are working more than the computer reflects because there's uncharged cases. So it works both ways.

Now, conversely, we also have traffic cases where the officer is mad at the person, and they've written every ticket imaginable. One extreme case that we've had, and it is extreme and it's never been recreated, is the officer wrote 30-plus tickets. Now, it's never happened. Usually it's more common to have one or two, maybe three or four.

Q. Let's turn to that -- your caseload in particular.

A. Okay.

Q. Did I hear you correctly is that you're testifying that you represent clients that have or -- yeah, clients have felonies, A/B all the way through speeding and traffic?

A. Speeding to murder.

Q. Speeding to murder.

Could you give a breakdown -- and I know you probably can't be precise without the numbers in front of you -- but what percentage is where? How many do you have in the municipal court with the traffic versus a felony or a misdemeanor?

A. We don't have any municipal court, but we do handle -- the public defender system does handle traffic cases in the associate circuit state court setting. We have a lot. The office has a lot. I, in particular, have -- I handle the traffic docket in Platte County, so I'm going to have a high number in there. One of my other attorneys will handle the traffic docket in Clay. She'll have a high number on that. Obviously, that isn't the limit of my caseload, nor is it the limit of her caseload.

As far as what sort of cases I'm in right now, I'm embarrassed to tell you I'm not even sure. The secretaries are directed to file my entry of appearance under duress. I then look at them, begin to create memos to file to create some semblance to the madness.

Q. Setting those aside, the ones that you entered duress on, before that, before those rolled in, about how many cases did you have at that point in time, if you can remember? I know it's probably been a few months.

A. I can't recall. I can guess, but I don't want to do that. It was high, but I can't give you a number.

Q. Sure. Let's talk a bit about the triaging that you and your district go through on a day-to-day basis. I think I had heard you testify that it's not simply a first in, first out method, but things rise to the top of the pile in different ways. I'm curious as to those different ways something can rise to the top of the pile.

A. A lot of it -- when we're talking about putting out fires, a lot of it has to do with trial date settings that you scheduled by courts. That becomes -- that trial is on fire -- I mean, that file is on fire because you don't know whether or not you're going to get a continuance. You may have a sense, based upon your experience and whatever jurisdiction and judge it is because it could differ not only by jurisdiction, but by judge. So those are really -- because what you're talking about is, as you know, bringing a jury in is taken serious by a judge. And so it's really -- that's the judge's priority, too, we have found. So if that means that's going to be the judgment day for the client to answer charges, by necessity, we've got to begin to pay the attention that we have available to it.

Q. So impending trial dates would be a factor?

A. Sure.

Q. Are there any other factors in terms of this case has been continued for months or years? Is there any sense of -- yeah, what other reasons would your office have or you have to bring something to the top of the pile?

A. If you look at it and you think the -- if you think the discovery is complete, sometimes you get a since -- sometimes you agree with the other side, this is not -- you know, we agree the prosecutor doesn't have this yet. We know we're waiting for it. The court knows that. We know that trial date is probably going to be continued. That's a trial date, the file is not on fire because everybody knows we're going to get it. Now, that's assuming you have the kind of judge that is going to give you the continuance you believe you deserve. You don't always have those kind of judges, so it may still be a flamethrower in that sense.

Other reasons might be -- you know, when I talk about a Monday morning MASH, it's every day for clients who either want a bond motion to be filed because when they want it filed, the office of chief disciplinary committee expects you to file it. There's no excuse for not filing it. They take that pretty seriously.

Now, that doesn't -- you don't get to factor in whether or not you think the person has money. You don't get to factor in whether or not you've already asked for it a number of times. You don't get to factor in whether or not the judge is going to just say no. That takes time to do it, and you've got to do it in order, frankly, to protect yourself from the bar complaint.

Another thing, very frequent thing, would be where the client has a probation officer. Sometimes it takes awhile to get that, but once you get the probation officer, you have an obligation, under the rule, to examine all the state's evidence that they have and that they've given you. If you -- if you have it and you haven't looked at it, you need to look at it so that becomes something that comes to the top of the pile. Why? Because this man or woman has an opportunity to get out of jail, especially if they've been telling you, "I want to take the deal." Right? Or even if they haven't been telling you that, if it's probation, you want to maximize the best for your client. So if you can get them out, but as a lawyer you have all the obligations to do the things and make the checklist and make sure that it's a submissible case, make sure there isn't any defenses that you have not checked with your client to make sure that that doesn't exist, and whether or not they want to waive those rights, if there's any suppression issues. Sometimes they're going to say, "I don't care about that."

Q. Do you have any policies or procedures that lay out the triage method, or is it one that you have gained through experience that not necessarily every attorney in your office has access to?

A. By definition, triage is without any rules, so there's no policies.

Q. About how many cases come in per year in your district if you have that off the top of your head? If not, no worries.

A. I don't.

Q. Do you have a sense of within the past year, either 2017 or 2016, how many cases your office has tried?

A. Not off the top of my head, no, sir. There would be statistics for that, but I wouldn't -- I can't recall them.

Q. Do you remember -- I apologize for interrupting you.

A. Sure.

Q. Can you recall your office taking to completion one trial within the past year?

A. Oh, yeah, certainly. The only reason I'm able to say that with definite is because we got -- my co-manager and I got an e-mail that there's a newsletter, and they wanted feedback on that, so I happened to be there when she was responding, and it was two trials, for example, that hadn't been mentioned in the news, so that was -- but it's all -- as that happens, the software picks that up, and there are statistics, indisputable statistics, that would verify whatever trials we've had.

Q. So at least one?

A. Oh, gosh, yeah.

Q. At least five?

A. Again, I can't -- I just can't -- I'm not comfortable guessing.

Q. Sure.

A. But I will say this: The trials itself could be a misleading factor, and here's why I say that: Lots of things are worked up for trial, and then they don't proceed to trial. That's an inordinate amount of attorney work hours that's expended for absolutely the appropriate reasons to defend that man or woman's life and liberty, but then it doesn't wind up getting tried. Some circumstances may change, the plea offer may change, so we don't go just by -- it's called trial division, but conducting trials is absolutely not the only work we do.

Q. You testified earlier that there have been excessive caseload and workload demand on the system and your -- on those that you supervise and yourself. 2005 was mentioned, but it's been there for some time; am I correct in understanding that testimony?

A. I agree with that, yes.

Q. At any point while you've been a district defender, have you put on any trainings or have known of any trainings that deal with workload or caseload concerns?

A. I think our training department may have had -- again, I don't -- quite honestly, I don't have time to attend the training, but I do try to glance at the syllabus, and I do have attorneys that are newer to the system that attend those sometimes, whatever the training are, in order to gain their CLE hours for the year, or attempt to.

I think there are syllabus items that deal with workplace stress, stuff like that, but I couldn't say that under oath that it actually existed. Training department would be the appropriate person to ask about that.

Q. And that's for a systemwide training, like the annual training that various public defenders go through?

A. It would be put on -- if it exists, it would be put on by the Missouri State Public Defender training division or someone that they affiliate with.

Q. But sitting here today, you have not, as a district defender, put on any specialized training for those you supervised?

A. I don't have time to. I probably have -- let me go back to the earlier question. I probably have attended management-related meetings that deal with caseload, but it's not limited to just caseload. It's also dealing with, you know, updates in the case law or procedure and that sort of stuff, but, invariably, caseload comes into the discussion.

Q. I apologize for being all over the place.

A. No problem.

Q. I'm trying to maintain coverage.

Page 213

A. It's no problem.
Q. Continuances, we talked about earlier, and I understand that judges have to grant those continuances. What is the longest period of time that you can recollect that a case was continued by your district or someone in your district?
A. I probably hold that record outside the capital, I don't know anything about capital. And I'm not boasting about it, but it's frequently mentioned. Seven years to trial.
Q. Turning to the funds that are available for various requests from assistant public defenders, your testimony earlier, I believe -- and correct me if I'm wrong -- is that you've never been turned down for a deposition when you, personally, requested funds for a deposition?
A. I don't think I have. I have had to seek further clarification from a supervisor for a meteorologist one time. I remember that. And, you know, there's often clarification sought in order to make sure that there's a good record for the use of the taxpayers' funds, but in terms of someone telling me no, it's usually more of a discussion. I don't think I've -- I don't think I've ever been told no. There may have been a brief -- very brief freeze on it years ago, but it really was a bump in the road. It wasn't anything like -- for the most part, the depositions that the attorneys seek the funds to conduct, there's funding there to conduct them. The real challenge becomes facilitating your workload in an efficient manner in order to get it to that point because that's a whole lot of -- I want them to be -- I want them to be done with forethought and some strategy as opposed to I just want to do them to be doing them.

Q. Have you, as a supervisor, ever declined someone who asked for funds for a deposition?
A. Yeah.
Q. What was the basis for that?
A. Sometimes strategic, sometimes case related, sometimes because the attorney -- I didn't think the attorney had thought it out enough. Sometimes I didn't think there was a disadvantage to doing it in an interview setting instead. I mean, it's not often I do that, but sometimes if strategy is involved, then I'm not hesitant to intervene, but I do think the depositions are a good training tool, not just to find out about the case, but also for the newer lawyer to learn and see all the surprises and, frankly, some of the good things and horrible things that come up during a deposition.

Q. Have you ever given as a reason -- or sitting here today, can you recollect a reasoning for declining a request for a deposition solely based on funds and the availability of those funds?
A. Like I said, I think there might have been that one time where there was a freeze or an encouragement, to -- but it was short-lived and a single event or single duration. It wasn't anything that was longstanding.
Q. I apologize for the duplication of these questions --
A. Sure.
Q. -- but same question for expert testimony. Have you ever been denied expert testimony that you thought was important to your case?
A. Outside of that meteorologist, which ultimately I gained permission to consult with, that would be the closest thing I could think of.
Q. And have you ever denied -- I guess you just mentioned about how you denied some depositions, but have you denied expert testimony for similar reasons?

Page 216

A. I don't think I did. We may have discussed whether the case was ready for it, so it may have been a timing issue, but I don't think I said -- I certainly didn't say, "No, you can't do it. We don't have the funding for the expert." It's more of a teaching tool and to make sure that the money is being used wisely.
Q. Do you have a sense of if more depositions and expert testimony are utilized for felonies or for misdemeanors or sitting here today, do you not have a sense of that?
A. I don't understand the question.
Q. In your experience, do you utilize -- do you -- are there more depositions for a felony A/B, for instance, as opposed to for a misdemeanor or is there no discernable difference between how many depositions are taken for a given case?
A. It depends on the contents of the file more than the charge, actually. Now, there may be more DNA in a murder case overall, but in terms of is that felony going to be a greater expense or greater amount of time invested by the attorney? Not necessarily because we have some really, really -- we joke in the office about a misdemeanor that all of a sudden, because we're inside of it, it's like wow, this is worse than -- this is worse than a protracted felony case because it gets so complicated, one thing leads to another, you know. So you can't really tell -- there's no such thing as just a misdemeanor, is what I'm saying.

Q. Is there or are there any policies that prevent assistant public defenders from requesting a deposition or expert based solely on cost, for instance, the meteorologist is $5,000, and we only allow $2,500 for this type of expert? Is there any limiting factors in that sense?

A. I don't -- I can't think of any. I mean, it would go probably beyond me if it was an issue of we've never spent that much on that type of court reporter or expert or translator or something like that. I know that we to utilize -- we try to tend to lean towards the state-authorized contract providers, for example, in the interpretive field, in the court reporter field, that type of thing, to try to maximize the funds.

Q. Let's turn to the timekeeping that you, in your office -- that your district engage in. Is the extent of your timekeeping at this point in time hours worked?

A. Through the -- through the time sheet it's done every two weeks or bimonthly, yes.

Page 218

Q. So at this point in time, there are no further demanding fields for time-keeping by task or case right now?

A. That is correct.

Q. When was the last time, if you can remember, when the time-keeping was done in almost a billable hours type of context?

A. I'm not sure when that -- I would be guessing, but I want to say a couple years, but that's a guess.

Q. Do you remember any training was -- the purpose of the training was to teach assistant public defenders, or any public defender, for that matter, how to keep their time?

A. By our training department, you mean, or just --

Q. Yeah, by the training department or by a district defender by yourself or when you were not a district defender, if anyone had ever put that on?

A. Again, I'm going to presume, but I'm not certain that the training division, perhaps during a new attorney workshop, would have alluded to that, but I'll defer to the training department director to -- again, their syllabus and whether or not they ever conducted anything on that.

As far as in office, we had a great deal of discussion about -- I mean, I would have attorneys that would come to me and say, "How should I bill this?" Not bill it, but, you know, "How should I allocate this? Should it be this, this or this?"

And I'm like, "Well, I think," you know, so there would be those. It's subject to interpretation even in the private setting.

Q. Is there anyone tasked with monitoring or supervising the current time-keeping system? I'll rephrase.

A. Sure.

Q. Is the extent of approval right now when they fill out their two-week time sheet and it comes to you for ultimate approval?

A. Well, the bimonthly time sheet goes to the district defender. I can only tell you what I do is I check it for accuracy. If I have -- I may be the only one. I may be doing less than others, I don't know, but if someone calls in sick, I save that so that I can -- if there's a need to check that against the time sheet. If there are hours where annual leave has been requested, granted, then I have a note-keeping mechanism for that in order to try to make sure that there aren't honest mistakes made by the employees. And there are times when I send them an e-mail and says, "Hey, let's talk about this time sheet," and then I explain this or remind them of that, and then they adjust accordingly.

It doesn't always have to do with a mistaken entry. Sometimes it is, if it's eight hours on a holiday, and they really meant holiday, but it's more expansive than that.

Q. You were tasked with overseeing the budget that's supplied to you by the comptroller of Missouri State System or, essentially, you're given a budget. It doesn't matter from who the budget is given, but are you given a budget?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you find that that budget is sufficient to get you through the fiscal year?

A. More oftentimes than not, it is. Again, I rely on, to a large extent, that longstanding staff member who I trust to do that and helps me oversee it. And if she tells me this looks like there's going to be an issue with it, then I contact the comptroller. I mean, I'm obligated to contact the comptroller and say this looks like it's going to be an issue so that they can be aware of it. The last thing they want is something to go over budget. That doesn't happen a lot, but it has happened.

Q. Do you know -- and it's completely fine if you don't -- if your caseload, as a district defender, is substantially different from other district defenders that you know?

A. The only thing I can really speak to of is my understanding is in -- my understanding is that the -- well, I don't know for a fact, but I know that I have some belief that the management at the Kansas City trial office does not carry a caseload, and I would be fully supportive of that type of scheme because of the enormity of the staff and the things that they have to do, the turnover and all those things.

Like I said, I've been encouraged to decrease or eliminate mine in the past.

Q. And who was it that was encouraging you to do so, was that management or was that other district defenders as you were talking about how you're operating on a day-to-day basis? Who did those -- where did those recommendations come from?

A. Only from upper management.

Page 222

Q. As an aside, what is your relationship like with upper management?

A. I think I have a cordial relationship with upper management.

Q. And I remember you testifying earlier that there were some things that you would run by upper management, and if there are a lot of things that -- maybe not a lot -- there are some things that you wouldn't; that you had some discretion there. Is there any type of a policy or have you ever been instructed on these five things you need to run by upper management or not?

A. Periodically we get e-mails that talk about -- it's more by subjects, you know, if this is an issue, make sure to check with me or other members of management, but it's usually subject related as opposed to an overall scheme.

Q. Has workload and caseload concerns and actions such as writing a letter, is that one of those subject areas that they want you to check with them about?

A. Well, let me make it perfectly clear. When it comes to my bar license and whether or not I am trying -- whether or not I'm going to comply with the rulings of professional conduct, I have no supervisor, not in the public defender system.

Q. Turning to Exhibit 14, which is the MO State Public Defender Cumulative Caseload Metrics chart or grid, if you will.

A. Yes.

Q. Sitting here today, do you know how the cases initiated field is defined?

A. I'm not an expert on this metrics. I'll be honest with you. I mean, there was a time when I looked at it more, but, no, I've never studied it, and I really probably would not be the right person to be able to -- if you want accuracy, to speak to about it.

Q. Sure. And so that same statement I presume would go along with me asking about the percent of capacity. Would you have any basis of knowing whether that number is accurate or not?

A. That's a totally different question.

Q. Okay. How so?

A. Well, management has explained to me how cases are counted. We have different views that deal with -- especially in light of the caseload cap efforts, especially in light of the Karl Hinkebein case and the Rule 4 crisis that's going on right now, but I know there's different ways to measure it, and one may be with the NAC standards. One may be with the Ruben Brown standards. I'm not a professional at all those. I will rely upon the stats that are computed by the Missouri State Public Defender System, but I will, quite honestly, have to rely on how they explain the different fields.

Q. In your district, how would a policy become effective? Just say you wanted to, I don't know, at lunchtime there was going to be pizza for everyone every single day. That's a silly example, but how would that go about becoming effective in your district?

A. I mean, unless it's something that I need to check with my managers on, unless it falls outside of my, you know -- and understand my field is relatively narrow. It's my office. I don't get to make decisions about anywhere else, but the district defenders are entrusted with providing supervision for their offices. If we were going to make a policy about various things, it would probably go out through an e-mail or I may just tell people. I mean, it depends on what sort of thing we're talking about. Sick leave, there's an e-mail that describes it. Annual leave, there's a form on a shelf.

Now, understand that with our

transition, there is a risk that the new people may have never gotten that e-mail. All right? So if I've got a rule, which I do, about keeping the sink clean in the kitchen that's, like, way more important than pizza, but pizza is the cause, I sometimes send that out every now and then. And I look at it and I'm, like, oh, my goodness. I've got five new people that have never seen this threat.

Q. So by virtue of sending that e-mail, that is effectively setting a policy? I know we're using that word very broadly.

A. Sure.

Q. I'm going to start jumping around a little bit more than I already have been.

A. Sure.

Q. Concerning the Polycoms, is that the appropriate term?

A. I think that's what they call it.

Q. You had testified that -- my understanding of your testimony was that some public defenders have been surprised before, and some attorneys have been surprised before when they went to the courthouse and they didn't realize that they were not going to be actually visiting with their client. Is that a fair understanding?

Page 226

A. I know I have.

Q. Okay. So you have --

A. But you only get surprised once, then you see what's going on in the jurisdiction, and then nothing will surprise you.

Q. The reason I ask is because there was some confusion on my end, potentially, of whether or not a judge had to give leave for a Polycom to appear, and the notifications that went into that. So if I'm confused, I apologize.

But it has happened to you?

A. Sure.

Q. When you had mentioned that around 75 percent -- and I believe that was a general approximation -- of the clients, it was either on your docket or within your representation are currently in custody. What was the basis for that 75 percent general rule percentage?

A. Just my experience, I suppose. I would -- most recently, if I were to conduct some sort of examination of most recent cases, when I go to update court dates and I check the outside of a folder and I see custody, custody, custody, it was a really informal poll I took, and that's why I said that's an estimate, but I would be shocked if it was far off.

Q. So it could be more than 75 percent?

A. Could be.

Q. And it could be less than 75 percent?

A. Absolutely.

Q. I want to get a better understanding of the conversation surrounding guilty pleas and your policy or your day-to-day operation of that. My understanding of your testimony, and please correct me if I'm wrong, is that if there is incomplete discovery, you do not allow one of your assistant public defenders to simply plea out somebody without completing that discovery; is that accurate?

A. That's accurate. I mean, I'm not always with them in the courtroom, but they know that's my rule.

Q. And how, exactly, is completion of discovery measured?

A. I'm not talking about investigation. I'm just talking about discovery. So you'll get the initial round of discovery, and you'll see first off is there anything that's mentioned in the portion that you have -- and it may be complete, but I'm always presuming it's not because of experience. Could be, though. And if you know, through experience, that there are other things that exist or that should exist, or it doesn't take experience if you're reading through it from beginning to end and see that it references something that you don't have in your stack, sometimes it may come through a conversation with a client that says, you know, this that or the other. It may be that while the officer, the taller officer, and you look, and all you've got is one report, you become skeptical as to whether or not there's another report.

So it could come from a variety of sources. A common example would be you don't have a lab result for a blood alcohol contents, blood or -- for possession of a controlled substance lab report.

Q. Do you have or maintain any type of checklist that would suggest when this discovery period has been completed or is it more or less on your experience and their understanding, "their" being your assistant public defenders that work under you, their understanding of your knowledge of what complete discovery is?

A. Well, there wouldn't be any set checklist because there wouldn't be any one always applicable set of standards. For example, in any case, you don't know whether or not -- if you have two crimes, one of them a sexual offense, then everything is going to change because you're going to have additional potential discovery.

If you got body cams, again, it's extrapolated even further. If there's surveillance from retail stores, again -- so there is no -- it's really just an analysis in order to say what's missing. And over that you may say through my experience, I bet this is there, and they just haven't given it to me. You have no idea until the client has told you, "Well, the statement I gave to the officer," and you've looked through, and you don't have the statement, that you probably should be looking for that, as well as the Miranda. So a lot of it has interaction with the client involved that would shed more light on it.

Q. Something to something you had mentioned, I believe, about the probation and for all hearings, I wanted to understand a little bit more about the statement that someone with an associate degree is running the criminal justice system.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. What did you mean by that, just in terms of the person running those hearings or --

A. I mean -- and I used to present on this back when there was time, but that's a thing of the past. Probation officer is only required to have an associate's degree. They're also allowed to carry firearms. They are, in my estimation, one of the few members of the criminal justice system that's allowed to reduce their own caseload, virtually having unfettered control over it because when they recommend revocation, and sometimes it's discretionary for the same act, they, by definition, get to reduce the work that they have to do the following Monday. That's what I mean by that.

Q. Now, your support staff that work with you, are they mandated to have a bachelor degree in terms of the ones who are making determinations of indigency?

A. I'm not sure what education they have or what they're required to have when they were originally hired on.

Q. We're almost there.

A. Sure. No problem.

Q. Turning to the aftereffects of the Supreme Court decision, the Hinkebein decision, you had sent -- well, you had sat down with your staff before the memo came out from the director of the public system; is that accurate?

Page 231

A. I think it is.

Q. At any point in time after that decision, did the central office provide a bullet point of "If you're worried about caseload concerns, here are four options for you," or any type of suggestions in what district defenders should do?

A. I don't think so. I think there was a single letter or e-mail. I don't think it was beyond that. I could be mistaken, but as we sit here, I don't think so.

Q. And so your decision to draft the letter and communicate with the judges, was that done solely in the vacuum of you looking at and ascertaining what Hinkebein meant for you and your staff, or were there discussions between yourself and other district defenders to come up with your game plan, if you will, or your response?

A. I talked to our director. I did not call Karl, who I know from years ago. We're not close friends, but a couple of decades ago we were at the same poker party. I'm sure I lost money because I don't know the rules.

In all likelihood, I would have talked to staff members. More than likely, I may have talked to other managers. Certainly talked to my co-manager, but I chiefly listened to the oral argument at least once, and printed and read the briefs on both sides, which I found to be very, very instructive, all three of those.

Q. And just for the record, who is Karl?

A. Hinkebein.

Q. At any point in time, have you made a decision or have you sought approval from upper management to file a Chapter 600 motion -- and that's the Statute 600.063 -- in terms of requesting a conference for a caseload or workload concerns?

A. I have. I have -- permission has been granted. I just haven't had the time to do it yet.

Q. And was that permission granted only after you had asked upper management, or was that something that upper management did for all district defenders, to your knowledge?

A. I mean, the statute says I have to ask. That's all I concern myself with. I didn't even realize I had to ask. Once I read the statute, I realized I better ask.

Q. And how long have you known about the existence of that statute?

A. The Chapter 600?

Q. Uh-huh.

Page 233

A. Which subsection are we talking about?
Q. 063, concerning the hearing for workload or caseload concerns.
A. I think I have a file at the office because this isn't the first time we've marched this fight of a caseload cap, and I think in that file is the Waters opinion and the -- probably the statute in response to the Waters opinion which, I believe, is the Chapter 600 we're referring to, and also the -- there's legislation that, thankfully, didn't pass that sought to extinguish and privatize the public defender system that we mentioned earlier in the conversation. I think my folder talks about that. There's some other things in there, too, about the auditor's reports and that kind of stuff. I haven't touched it for a while. This Karl Hinkebein is sort of what made me go back to it.
Q. Do you have a sense for why you decided to send the letter as opposed to ask for permission, and then file the relevant Chapter 600 motion?
A. Oh, absolutely.
Q. Why?
A. Do you want to hear why?
Q. I do want to hear why.

Page 234

A. I think the statute is poorly written. I mean, I thought that when I reviewed it, however many long ago whenever it was first crafted. It essentially said that I, the manager, needed to consult with the presiding judge, and sought permission. And, frankly, I found that to be an impractical solution, so -- and it also -- chiefly I found disappointing is that it says I could go and seek relief for a portion of my office, but not the entirety of my office, which I find to be, at a minimum, illogical, beyond that, unworkable and unfair because then I'm assuming that I must express some favoritism among the attorneys that I supervise because I can't -- I can't seek -- I mean, what I could do, I suppose, and it's unclear because it's a poorly written statute, I could divest myself of all my cases, and then seek relief for everybody in the office but me because then there wouldn't be the entire office. To what end? Everyone would find that to be peculiar and suspicious and maybe perhaps premeditated.
Now, the other thing I have, and I think it's a flaw in the statute, is I think the statute, in terms of statutory interpretation, I think the statute does not allow the public defender system to appeal the finding of the judge. I think the way it's written, poorly written, the conjunctive is used, and I think we need -- and I anticipate the prosecutors will pull this in their next tool and arsenal, I think the reading of the statute requires us to gain their consent to do that. Because I think, under a strict reading of the statute, only the public defender and, not or, the prosecuting attorney authority may appeal.

We don't agree about much, and we certainly don't agree that we have a caseload crisis. There are prosecutors actively working against our best interests because they know if the level field is ever close to level, they'll have to work a lot harder, and justice will be served.
So I filed the -- I wrote the letter instead. It does the exact same thing. I did not give a copy to the opposing prosecutor, by choice, and I certainly didn't have to, and yet they wrote a nasty response to me and to the court, complaining about the fact that I sought relief through the letter rather than the motion. I guess we'll just have to live to see how well my motion is successful and what difference it makes.
Q. Turning to Plaintiffs' Exhibit 16 and the previously marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit, I believe it's 5, do you have a sense of when these documents were created, either or, generally speaking?

A. It makes sense to me that they would -- that I would have seen them if I saw them, but they look familiar and probably saw them. As I think I said before, if I saw them, I think they were -- I glanced at a database, but I don't think I printed them. I'm assuming it would -- they appear to be around the time frame of when Karl Hinkebein's oral argument and decision was rendered. I have no reason to think that they predate that, but I suppose it is possible that they do since I'm not recalling seeing them and I haven't really read through, especially, Exhibit 5 fully, I don't -- I haven't analyzed it to see if it would necessarily precede Waters or not.
Q. Last two questions: At this point in time, have you ever been judicially determined to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel to a client?
A. Yes.
Q. On what occasions and how many?
A. I think a couple. It may be more. I'm not sure. The thing I can -- the only case I could point to -- well, and I don't -- it was a Platte County case, and it was the case I referenced, or I may have referenced, but I don't know if I can think of his name right now. I know his nickname, but that won't get us very far.

It was a Platte County robbery case that was a post-conviction relief hearing, and I'm not certain if the trial court deemed ineffective or if that was later at the -- on further appeal, but it dealt with the use -- and, again, it was one of the cases post-Senate Bill 5, where they had bifurcated the sentencing proceedings, and one of the allegations was -- I think it was that I should have called an expert at sentencing. And, again, this has been years, and this is just from memory, so don't -- if I'm incorrect about whether or not there was a finding of ineffective, I'll defer to whatever the official court records -- but, for some reason, I recall that gentleman getting a resentencing that the appellate office handled. It was definitely out of Platte County. I think there were other occasions, but I -- I can't be certain of that.

Q. Are there any judicially determined instances of ineffective assistance of counsel that have occurred to an employee that you have supervised as a district defender that you can recall?

A. I think so.

Q. Do you have a sense of how many?

A. I can't really -- any specifics, I won't be able to, but I think -- I know when that sort of thing occurs, you know, it's discussed because, frankly, because it's an appellate opinion, usually, although not necessarily. It could be remedied at the trial division, but often isn't, so it's in my memory bank, but that's about as close as it can get. I wish I could be more specific.

MR. RAMSEY: No further questions.

MS. SHIPMA: Okay. Let me look.

THE WITNESS: Can I -- I have recalled the name of that. Can I go back to that and give you the name, if you would like it?

MR. RAMSEY: If you want, yeah.

THE WITNESS: Vaca, V-A-C-A, but I can't remember the first name, but if you -- that should be enough to...

EXAMINATION

BY MS. SHIPMA:

Q. Okay. Anthony, I want to talk about the indigency determination. You had said that there are situations where your office may determine someone not to be eligible for services, but then the court appoints your office anyway; is that correct?

A. That does occur, yes.

Q. Do you have a -- do you have a sense of how often that occurs or what percentage of times?

A. Nothing with any clarity or specificity but, again, I think there's a database -- there should be a database when a case is opened whether the indigency determination is made by the public defender or by the court.

Q. And I'm not looking for a specific, but just in terms of your sense, does it happen more often than not that the court appoints us anyway?

A. Well, we're disappointed every time that happens because, frankly, we think there has not been -- we think we're right when we think that the person is above the poverty guidelines or that there are -- now, I will tell you that there are circumstances where the person appeals, and this happens a lot. Person appeals, and the judge will inquire or the applicant will volunteer, "I no longer have that job." Now, that may be true, that may be not true, but an applicant saying that, the judge generally appoints us without any further -- without any type of hearing or verification or inquiry by the judge.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

I want you to look back at Exhibit 15, which was your letter to the presiding judges.

A. Yes.

Q. Were you told by anyone in upper management that you had to write that letter?

A. No.

Q. Did you have to run that letter by upper management to get approval before sending it out?

A. No.

Q. Did you attend this past year's management training or management conference towards the end of September, I think?

A. Sadly, I did not.

MS. SHIPMA: Okay. That's all I have.

FURTHER EXAMINATION

BY MS. WILCOX:

Q. I have one follow-up, and I have to make sure I heard correctly because I'm looking for clarification.

I think you testified that the budget you get is sufficient for the fiscal year, like the budget you get, I guess, pays the costs that you request?

A. Well, I don't really request it. The comptroller dispenses the budgets to the different offices. I only know about wee hours, and we look, and if we get -- if we have some foreknowledge that, oh, we're going to go past that during the fiscal year, we're told to tell the comptroller, alert the comptroller in advance, and I can only remember doing that a few times or through my secretary that really keeps track of those numbers, so...

Now, that being said, that's my really involvement in it. Over the years, I used to have a library budget. I haven't had that for a decade, decade or a decade and a half. When I was in Saint Joe, I had a library budget. No such thing as a library budget. My telephone budget was, probably a handful of years ago, maybe five, slashed by 33 1/3 percent. I don't -- I don't control that.

Q. I think the clarification I'm looking for is that --

A. I'm sorry. It was my postage budget.

Q. -- is that you have a budget, it pays for certain things, but the way that interplays with the caseload crisis, that's what I'm looking for clarification in, if that makes sense.

Page 242

A. Okay. Sure.

Q. Sure, you get money in, and it pays for things.

A. Right.

Q. But are you still left in a situation where you don't have sufficient funds and resources to do the work you want to do?

A. Of course. The budget only gives me money, not time. Nobody I know can create that.

Q. And it doesn't give you enough money to pay for the attorneys that you think you need to do the work?

A. Well, the budget that I'm given, that's -- I don't get to tinker with that dollar figure. That's salaries. I'm given a budget for things like inventory and printers and warranties and some supplies, maybe some hand sanitizer. It's just -- not translators, depositions. As far as if it were as simple as me saying I would like you to double my budget for my eight assistant public defenders, I would have done that a long time ago --

Q. Okay.

A. -- if I thought it would have done any good.

MS. WILCOX: That helps. That clarifies.

I don't have any further questions.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're off the record at 2:35 p.m.

of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs deposes and says:
DIRECT EXAMINATION
BY MR. TARTAGLIO:
Q. Good evening, Mr. Wallis. Thank you for your patience here today.
A. You're welcome.
Q. Would you please state your full name for the record.
A. It's David Roy Wallis.
Q. Have you ever been deposed before, Mr. Wallis?
A. No.
Q. Have you ever taken a deposition before?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Do you have a ballpark estimate for about how many depositions you've taken?
A. About ten.
Q. I'm going to read a few admonitions to you now, so please keep these in mind as we go through this deposition today. Please make sure that when you give responses to my questions, you give verbal responses and not merely giving a gesture. Is that okay?
A. Yes.

Page 7

Q. When I ask a question, please make sure I finish the question before you answer. Is that okay?
A. It is.
Q. And during this deposition today, one of the attorneys may object to one of your questions -- to one of the questions, so if that happens, please wait for the objection before you begin your response. Is that all right?
A. Yes.
Q. Because we have one stenographer who can only transcribe one person at a time, let's make sure to try to not speak over each other. All right?
A. Yes.
Q. If you don't understand any of my questions, please feel free to say, I don't understand or can you please rephrase that. I want to make sure that when you give an answer, you understand the question. Is that okay?
A. Yes.
Q. If you want to take a break today, feel free to say, I need to take a break, and we'll take one. The only condition I put on that is if there's a question pending, please answer the question, and then we can take a break. All right?

Page 8

A. Okay.
Q. Mr. Wallis, what did you do today -- strike that.
Mr. Wallis, what did you do to prepare for this deposition today?
A. I met with Ms. Shipma on Friday.
Q. Did you review any documents to prepare for this deposition?
A. I looked at a few of our statistics on our computer this morning, and that was about it. About five minutes' worth of review.
Q. Did those statistics refresh your memory as to the subject matter?
A. They did.
Q. Mr. Wallis, how long have you -- strike that.
Mr. Wallis, are you currently employed by the Missouri Public Defenders?
A. I am.
Q. How long have you worked for the Missouri Public Defenders?
A. Since March of 2009.
Q. What positions have you held --
A. Excuse me. March of 2007.

Page 9

Q. Thank you.
Which positions have you held working for the Missouri Public Defenders?
A. As an assistant public defender and the district defender.
Q. Do you remember when you became a district defender?
A. July of 2011.
Q. Which district do you work in?
A. It would be the 13th.
Q. Have you worked in the 13th District your whole time at the Missouri Public Defenders?
A. No. I started in the 19th.
Q. Do you remember when you moved to the 13th?
A. I believe it would be June of 2009, approximately.
Q. What counties does the 13th District include?
A. Boone and just recently Cooper County.
Q. We're in Boone County right now; is that correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. Do you have a sense, even a general sense, of how much of your office's work comes from Boone

Page 10

County, as opposed to Cooper county?
A. I do.
Q. Please give that estimate.
A. We have 14 attorneys in my office. One attorney handles -- one and a half handle Cooper County. The caseload is approximately 120 cases compared to 13-, 1,400 in Boone County.
Q. So one of my questions to you -- you actually managed to figured it out before I could ask, which is, how many attorneys work in your office?
A. Fourteen, including myself.
Q. Are you the only -- well, strike that.
Does your office recognize distinction between line attorneys and supervising attorneys?
A. Yes.
Q. Could you please explain the difference in those roles?
A. There's two, I guess, managing supervisory attorneys, myself, and I have a deputy district defender, Sarah Aplin. She helps me in managerial duties in the office.
Q. So is it fair to say that there are 12 line attorneys?
A. Yes.

Page 11

Q. How many non-attorney staff are working in your office, if you know?
A. We have three office support assistants; those are full time. We have to full-time paralegals and two full-time investigators.
Q. What kind of work do the paralegals do?
A. Based on their job description, they're limited to specific tasks. They need to be assigned case -- certain caseloads. They deal with driving while intoxicated -- most driving casings, licensure issues, and some assault cases. So they work all of those -- the driving cases up for us.
Q. Okay. So -- when you say work it up, do you mean that they -- well, please describe what you mean by that.
A. Sure. They'll review discovery, they'll request records. We have access to the Department of Revenue, our DMV. They can get those records, they can search driving history, then they write up a brief summary of any video they saw, motions they might be suggesting we file, and then they provide that to the attorney.
Q. And do the attorneys -- in the cases that the paralegals work, do the paralegals also do work in the case?

Page 12

A. Yes, they do.
Q. They do different aspects of the case?
A. Sure. The paralegals really just kind of start -- kick off those kind of cases. The attorneys still watch the same video, they read the same discovery, they do all of the things that the paralegals do, there's just another set of eyes looking at it. And then, of course, the paralegals order records and get records and make document requests.
Q. Have you ever requested more than two paralegals to work in your office?
A. No.
Q. Do you feel that two paralegals is adequate for the workload your office has?
A. Yes.
Q. You mentioned that there were two investigators who worked for your office; is that correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. What kind of work do the investigators do?
A. They serve subpoenas on witnesses, they take -- they go visit crime scenes. We have them take statements of witnesses. They also locate witnesses, interview them. They are out in the field -- 90 percent of the day, they are out of the office.

Q. Have you ever requested that your office have more than two investigators?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel that two investigators is adequate for the amount of work that your office handles?

A. No.

Q. Could you please explain why you don't think that?

A. Well, we have 14 attorneys. My deputy district defender and I carry a caseload, so that's one investigator for seven attorneys. Based on the investigative request from our attorneys, we've had to tell the attorneys, You can only request investigations in this type of case or you can't ask for this. For example, if you're just wanting to go out and talk to the complaining witness about something, we're not going to send an investigator out there if we already have their statement from the police, unless there's some sort of exigent circumstance -- and this is mostly on misdemeanors. So we have had to limit what we can let our investigators do, mostly on misdemeanors, because we're trying to get out and get everything taken care of on felonies.

Q. Have you requested more investigators for your office?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. Why not?

A. I'm aware of our budget restrictions and where we're at with employees. I also know historically, somewhat, that two investigators for my size office is about what I'm going to get, and there just wouldn't be any funds for another position.

Q. So is it fair to say that there are -- if there were more funds, you would like more investigators for your office?

A. That's correct.

Q. What are the consequences, in your opinion, of not having enough investigators to handle the amount of work?

A. We don't get everything taken care of. We don't get -- we don't talk to every witness in every case, whether they be an adverse or a friendly witness. We don't go out and visit crime scenes and do our own independent investigations. We rely almost entirely on police reports and body cam videos that are provided to us to conduct an investigation or, at least, to steer it in the way we want it to go.

Q. So -- strike that.

As a district defender, do you have supervisory duties?

A. Yes.

Q. And please describe, in general terms, what those duties are.

A. I'm responsible for making sure people are at work. Assign court responsibilities for each division, circuit and associate, just manage the people's schedule. That's sort of the thing -- I don't have -- you know, when it comes to hiring, we do the interviews, my deputy director and I. That is then -- we seek approval from upper management. And any terminations or negative job action is done through upper management, not myself. It would be a recommendation that I would provide. So it's mainly just making sure everything working in the office.

Q. In addition to these supervisory duties, do you work cases?

A. I do.

Q. Do you know about what percentage of your time you spend working case versus doing supervisory?

A. Currently, it's probably about 70 percent on cases and 30 percent on management duties.

Q. Would you like to spend less time working on cases?

A. Oh, I enjoy working on cases, but I think -- I'm -- I have a job that requires me to work more on management than on cases.

Q. And what's the reason why you're not able to spend more time on that?

A. Well, our attorneys have too many cases, so my deputy and I have taken on a caseload significantly higher than we would usually assume because we don't want to give those to our other attorneys.

Q. I'd like to introduce an exhibit here. I don't think this one has been used before, so it'll need an exhibit number.

(Deposition Exhibit No. 28 was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) Take a second, Mr. Wallis, to glance through this.

Are you familiar with this document in here?

A. Somewhat. The information looks familiar.

Page 17

I can't say for certain I'm familiar with this exact document.

Q. So this document generally describes a protocol for measuring caseload. Is that fair to say?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you look at page 3 at the bottom there, do you see that table?

A. I do.

Q. And it breaks up cases into different types. There's noncapital homicide, sex offenses, other felony offenses, so on and so forth. Do you see that table there?

A. I do.

Q. Is -- are you familiar with this particular classification of cases here?

A. Yes.

Q. Has your office ever used this classification to measure your office's caseload?

A. We have.

Q. Does your office continue to use this classification to measure the caseload?

A. No.

Q. What procedure does your office use currently to measure the caseload that it has?

Page 18

A. Well, we don't go off of a caseload, we go off of workload, which is kind of taking the ABA opinion, I think, from 2006 -- I think that's what I'm referring to. The RubinBrown study, which is the table on the bottom of page 3, and then just in general direction we've been given that -- you know, I started off with, you know, pick a case number just for an anchor for attorneys to go off of, but then to tell them to keep in mind the type of case you're working on, the number of cases that a particular client might have. So, you know, they may have 100 cases, but they might have a client who has ten cases. So we really don't -- we're really working off of what the attorneys feel they can best work, and then also looking at that compared to historically what a full caseload was like prior to -- I want to say late September of this year.

Q. Okay. And I think I may have misspoke earlier. So do you distinguish between caseload and workload?

A. Yes.

Q. Please describe the distinction.

A. Well, a caseload is just the number of cases that you have working, regardless of whether or not it's -- one client has multiple cases or they're -- each caseload has one particular client. The workload, necessarily, takes into account multiple clients, the type of the case, which we kind of implement that table on page number 3, as well as legal study, reading hand-downs from the Supreme Court, keeping up on case law -- just doing all of the things that we need to do as attorneys, besides work on cases and appear in court.

Q. Do you know if this table on page 3 is what your office uses to calculate workload?

A. No. We don't use this table.

Q. Okay. How do you calculate workload?

A. Again, we look at -- just using a caseload number for an anchor to at least have some spot to work off of, and then the directive has been for each individual attorney to let me know if they can take more cases or not take more cases, based on how they are working their current cases. I go in at least once a day, and I have a view that lets me see the up-to-the-minute open cases that each attorney has, and I can sort that out by case type and venue in case. We have attorneys who are driving to other counties, and that gives me an idea about how someone is doing, and I'll approach them if I think the number is a little bit too high or a little bit too low and see where they're at. Taking into account trial preparation -- if someone's getting ready for a jury trial, they're not going to want to take on new cases, they're not going to be able to see their client out at the jail.

So there's a number of factors that I look at when determining if somebody has too many cases or not, but I mostly rely on the attorneys to tell me how they are handling the cases.

Q. So you're very involved in working with the attorneys in your office in determining if they have proper workload?

A. Yes.

Q. And let me know if you disagree, but this is a daily interaction with your attorneys and a daily discussion about this?

A. It may not be a daily discussions with the attorneys, but I am -- on a daily basis, one of the first things I do is I pull up the statistics for the office that lets me see where we're at with numbers. And, again, that's caseload that I'm looking at, and then if I feel like I need to have a conversation or if an attorney frequently will either e-mail me or come talk to me and say, Hey I'm ready to take more cases or please don't assign me any more cases, and then I'll give it another look to see where we're at.

Q. Okay. Please take a look at page 5 at the table here near the bottom. And you'll see in bold that this protocol estimates 1,752 as the average available hours per attorney per year.

A. That's correct.

Q. In your experience, do your -- do the attorneys in your office spend 1,750 hours a year working on legal work?

A. No.

Q. Do they work more than that?

A. They do.

Q. Do your -- the attorneys in your office -- is it common for them to work overtime?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it common for them to work on weekends?

A. Often.

Q. Are the attorneys in your office given extra compensation for this overtime or weekend work?

A. No.

Q. I'd like to move on to the next exhibit. This exhibit is premarked here. And if you look, Mr. Wallis, Area 13 is a little bit below the middle here.

A. That's correct.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. So could you please -- well, first of all, do you notice in the top left corner the start date and end date text?

A. I do.

Q. So it looks like this is from the first quarter 2017. Is that fair to say?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you look at the net case units, column for 13, it says 1,5678.90. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how net case units are calculated?

A. No.

Q. Do you see that near the right there's a column "Capacity"?

A. Yes.

Q. And that 13 -- the capacity is 6,760. Do you know how that capacity number is calculated?

A. No. I don't know what that number represents.

Q. The column to the left, do you see the column that says "Workload"? And for this district, it is 17,284. Do you know how that number was calculated?

A. No.

Q. Do you see the percent of capacity column --

A. Yes.

Q. -- near the right?

A. I do.

Q. And here it's 255.7 percent?

A. That's correct.

Q. Could you please explain what that number means?

A. I believe that is taking the RubinBrown protocol numbers -- we'll refer to in Exhibit 28, page 3 -- and taking the number of hours an attorney should work during the year -- the total amount of hours, and comparing that with the amount of cases times the RubinBrown number, and that puts us over what we should be work by 155 percent.

Q. So that -- this number means that your office is at -- is working 255 percent capacity?

A. According to the RubinBrown study, yes.

Q. Do you agree with the metrics?

A. No. No, I don't.

Q. Can you explain why?

A. I think the numbers are low. Taking for example, I think homicide noncapital is 137 or 100-something hours -- I'd have to look -- and that's simply too low of number for a homicide. Sex cases, I think, are 30 hours. That's an incredibly low number for a sex case, which oftentimes are many more complex than homicides. And with the advent of the Columbia Police Department, who is our primary law enforcement agency in this circuit, every officer has a body camera, and on a misdemeanor assault, if three officers are responding, and it takes them an hour to clear that case, the attorney is having to watch three hours of body cam video to make sure they're not missing thinking. So I don't agree with the numbers; I think they're low.

Q. So, in your opinion, based on those facts that you just described, is this 255.7 capacity percentage an understatement?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Let's move on to the next exhibit. And for the record, this is Plaintiff's Exhibit 10. And for the record, I should say that the first exhibit we looked at was MSPD21874, and the exhibit we just looked at was Plaintiff's Exhibit 4.

Page 25

We're now looking at Plaintiff's Exhibit 10.
Now, I apologize that there are no page numbers on this. For many boring reasons that I won't go into here, this is how it was printed out.
But if you turn to page six -- and I'm counting the double sides, so -- if you look near the bottom, you'll see your name down here.
A. You are counting --
Q. So -- as in --So these are pages 2 and 3.
MS. SHIPA: It's the backside of the third page.
THE WITNESS: Thank you.
A. Got it.
Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) Okay. So I'll represent to you that this document was produced to us with a series of tabs and that the first tab -- this page corresponds to FY2009. Do you have an estimate or a guess as to what that would stand for?
A. Yeah. Fiscal year 2009 would be my guess.
Q. Is the fiscal year the same as the calendar year?
A. No.
Q. When does the fiscal year run from?
A. I believe July 1st and ends the -- July 1st of the year and then ends the following

Page 26

June, if I have that right.
Q. So the right most column here, if you look on the first page, is workload; is that right?
A. That's correct.
Q. And so if we go to page 6 and we look there for -- it says 379.74 percent. And based on my representation to you earlier, this would be your workload for fiscal year 2009. Does that sound correct?
A. I -- sure.
Q. Please describe what it's like to try to practice law at 379.74 percent of capacity.
A. You're asking me to remember back in 2009 as well. I don't know what the workload number comes from. This is -- I think this is pre-RubinBrown, so this, I think, may have been off the old ABA protocol, I believe. I don't know. I wasn't in management at that time, and I just did the cases that were assigned to me. I know practicing back then I would have been in Jefferson City and then transferred to Columbia handling full cases. It was triaging cases, picking the cases that you think needed the most help. The cases that you maybe -- after a first read of discovery, you could identify an issue that could help the client. Other than that, it was reading a case, if you didn't see anything at first read, seeing what the offer was, communicating that offer to the client, and pleading them.

I can tell you in Boone County at this time we didn't have what we refer to as vertical representation. We had -- there's seven divisions in Boone County, and we had two attorneys assigned to each division and -- for example, if it was Division 3 in the afternoon, there would be two attorneys who were assigned those cases. Every attorney in the office would give their files to those two attorneys, and those two attorneys would then go up to court and work those cases. So we weren't interacting on it on a constant basis with our own clients. It was very much a group effort. So it was very confusing and there wasn't a lot of client-attorney relationship at that point, so it wasn't a very good time to be practicing.
Q. Sitting here now in 2017, do you still feel that your office is under similar pressures as it was back then?
A. I do. We've changed to a more vertical representation exclusively, where if an attorney has a case, they're in court with their client, they're not putting it off on another attorney who would be making an appearance, but we're still faced with the same time and resource constraints.

Q. Facing these sorts of time and resource constraints, what kind of things are you not able to do for your clients that you would be able to do otherwise?
A. Again, we don't look into much mitigation when it comes to alleged offenses. You know, if there's something that may not necessarily create a dismissal but may result in a better offer, perhaps an amended charge from a more serious charge to a lesser charge. We're not able to look into a lot of the collateral consequence our clients face that we should be looking into. We're not able to look for services to help them so they don't come back to our office. And, again, going back to originally, we're not able -- attorneys rarely, if ever, go to crime scenes. They'd like to; they just don't have an opportunity to do that. It'll take them out of the office and out of court.
So there's all sorts of different things the attorneys themselves could be doing. I'm a big proponent of attorneys being present when witnesses are interviewed, doing things like. We simply don't have enough -- there's not enough hours in the day for an attorney to be doing all of those things under our current status.

Q. Currently is it common for attorneys to attend police lineups?

A. We don't do lineups in Boone County.

Q. Do your attorneys attend hearings on bond?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned in your answer previously collateral consequences and that -- well, I don't want to misstate your words. So what current effect does the workload have on the attorney's ability to counsel the clients and collateral consequences of a conviction?

A. Just -- we can -- I think we hit the minimal requirements. You know, if it is a -- certainly, an immigration issue, we counsel them under Padilla about how it may negatively impact their ability to stay in the United States. We don't go much further than that. Not only do we not have the time and the resources, we don't have that sort of expertise locally in the office. We really don't look into -- for sex offenses, we have a general idea of registration and lifetime supervision requirements, but we don't go much past that. You know, for possession cases, it may affect a person's ability to get a loan -- a student loan, it may affect their ability to get a job, depending on what they're doing. There are just all of these other things that, I think, if you were paying an attorney, you would hope that attorney would advise you, even though it's not tied directly the criminal case, but your -- you know, the disposition will have these consequences down the line, and we're not able to do that in the overwhelming majority of our cases.

Q. Based on your office's current workload are there delays in the case that result from that?

A. I'm not sure I understand what you're asking.

Q. Do attorneys in your office ever seek continuances, for example, because of their workload?

A. Every day. All the time, yes.

Q. Are you aware of instances in which someone's case was delayed significantly because of the workload that the attorneys have to bear?

A. I don't have a specific client name in mind, but I know that it happens on a regular and daily basis where we're just asking for continuances because we haven't gotten around to getting an investigative request back from the investigator. We just simply haven't had time to review the file. Maybe even to extend or convey an offer. That happens all the time. And it's nothing intentional, it's just a matter of numbers, where it just gets overlooked.

Q. So aside from spending time on cases, your attorneys presumably have to pay certain costs, for example, to hire an expert or to hire a stenographer or videographer for a deposition, like we're here today. What procedures are in place when one of the attorneys wants to undergo some sort of activity that would require the expensive fees?

A. An E-request is submitted, and it's a request for funds. If it's $499 or less, it comes to myself or my deputy district defender for approval. It will have the client's name, the classification -- felony misdemeanor -- the class type, if it's an A misdemeanor or C or D felony. It gives us an idea -- it gives us the primary charge, which is the most serious charge. So if there's multiple counts on the case, it'll give us the serious charge. It'll ask for a trial date, if there's a trial date set, if there is an offer from the state. It then -- there are drop-down boxes that say, What kind of service is being asked for: Evaluation, depositions. There's probably six or seven boxes to check. And then it includes, you know, does it include mileage males, does it include meals, does it include travel? And then at the very bottom, there's a narrative portion where the attorney or the support staff person who is seeking the funds will type in why they need -- why they're asking for the funds they're asking for. And It's written with an eye towards auditors, so it's not written very legally, it's very -- you know, the plain language is there. It's why we need these funds, why we can't achieve our desired result without these funds, and then it's submitted to myself for approval or my deputy district defender.

If it's over $500, same process, but after I approve it, then it's approved by someone in upper management who reviews my decision as well.

Q. So for these requests that are under $500, do you ever deny those requests?

A. No -- well, I may have denied one or two of those, and it was for an exhibit, I think, at trial, and the trial date just wasn't soon enough. In knowing that the majority of our cases are resolved by plea or dismissal, I waited on that. And I may have denied some investigative request for depositions where the attorney has asked for money for depositions to go talk to the complaining witness in a case, and unless there is something in the client's file that shows that that witness is not cooperative or will refuse to speak with us, then it's -- the request is denied until there's something in the file that show we have actually gone out and tried to speak voluntarily with that witness.

Q. And for requests over $500, have you ever seen those requests from your office be denied?

A. I have.

Q. What are some of the common justifications for denials?

A. The one I just described where we haven't made an effort to go out and speak to the witness prior to depositions. We have had it before where there's been an issue about who pays for an interpreter at a court appearance or at a hearing, whether or not the public defender does or whether or not that's a cost to be the burden on the state, so those have been denied. It's usually for very technical reasons, not because they don't believe it's a good thing to be doing.

Q. Have they ever given you justification that we just don't have the money?

A. Never.

Q. Okay. I had just one quick question. You mentioned translation. Does anyone in your office speak Spanish?

A. Yes.

Q. And so when you have a Spanish-speaking client, do you have someone available who can help translate?

A. They speak conversationally, and it's not enough for -- you know, to get into the words that we're using in a legal sense. There was also -- we had an attorney who spoke Spanish, and she seemed to be getting all of the Spanish in-custody people, and rightfully so. She wasn't being compensated any more for doing something else. But, no, we don't -- we only have one that speaks conversationally, and we're always asking for interpreter services.

Q. Are those requests ever denied?

A. No.

Q. I'd like to move on to the next exhibit. For the record, this is Plaintiff's Exhibit 3.

Page 35

Mr. Wallis, go ahead and take a few moments to look at this e-mail here.

A. Sure.

Q. Are you ready?

A. I am.

Q. Could you please describe in general terms why you sent this e-mail?

A. Approximately, I think, a week or two weeks prior to sending this e-mail, Karl Hinkebein, an assistant public defender with our post-conviction relief unit was disciplined by the Missouri Supreme Court. Our director, Michael Barrett, sent out an e-mail informing the district defenders -- and I think he even urged us to forward that e-mail on to all of our attorneys about what had happened. He asked us to watch or at least listen to the oral arguments and to read the briefs regarding Mr. Hinkebein's case, and then in Mr. Barrett's e-mail, he made it clear that, you know, we are all responsible for our own offices, that it's the individual attorney's bar number who is at risk, and that we as an office and as individual attorneys are to proceed as we see is in our best interest in regard to our bar licensure.

Q. What is your take away from the Hinkebein decision?

A. I think it's just the court's reaffirmation that merely being public defenders and working with indigent clients and our inability to turn cases away isn't a shield to any bar discipline, should we violate the rules of professional conduct.

Q. Do you think anyone in your office in District 13 is in danger of some sort of state bar discipline because of the workload that they face?

A. Well, I think -- no. I don't think anyone is in danger. I'm not aware of any complaint -- an active complaint. I think the danger is, is that our clients -- our clients read the news, they watch the news, and I think they're aware of what happened. And some who are sitting in prison have a lot of time on their hands and could certainly make a claim. And it might be a meritorious claim of ineffective assistance raising to the level of unethical attorney conduct.

So that's the concern. But there's no -- I'm not aware of any pending bar complaint. And I think sense sending this letter to our presiding judge and stopping taking cases that we've brought that number down where I don't think our attorneys are worried about current clients right now, but the -- the concern is about former clients who may not have been adequately served.

Q. If you'll take a look, please, at the second paragraph from the bottom, last full paragraph here. There's a sentence that says, "Additionally, both Ms. Aplin and myself ..." Please take a moment to read that sentence.

A. Sure.

Okay.

Q. Please describe the review that you and Ms. Aplin conducted of the caseloads -- strike that.

Of the workloads of the attorneys in District 13.

A. Sure. It's similar to my previous answer. We looked a little bit at RubinBrown numbers. Again, there's that charter or that table on page 3 of Exhibit 28 -- to get an idea about the case types the attorneys were handling. We have attorneys who have -- they travel out of county. Previously, until we were given money by the legislature last year, some public defender offices were responsible for conflicts out of other counties. My office had nine counties beside Boone County that we handled conflicts out of. Once we stopped getting new cases, we still had residual files from those counties that we had to resolve. So attorneys were out of the office, and we took into account their travel, the types of cases, the things I had described earlier, their ability to be up on case law coming down, the ability to do research, all of those things. And, most importantly, we went and talked to the attorneys and asked them, How are you feeling with the number you're at? The number not being dispositive of anything, but simply how are you feeling with the caseload and the workload you're currently under? It was a very quick conversation with almost every attorney. We had been following this somewhat, and I knew based on their numbers what their answer was doing to be. So that was the review that we undertook, Ms. Aplin and myself.

Q. Well, generally, what did the line attorneys tell you when you conducted this review?

A. They asked for no more cases to be assigned to them. They felt overwhelmed and like they couldn't keep up, and it's something that we knew they had been feeling. Even before this happened, I would have attorneys come to me on an occasional basis and ask that they not be assigned cases. They may have gotten a murder case, a child sex case, they may have a trial coming up. Often, it was simply they were overwhelmed with cases and they didn't want to quit, they wanted to stay there and do what they enjoyed doing, and so I would often -- if an attorney came to me, I would stop assigning them cases for a month to two months to let them get caught up and feel like they could breathe before we started assigning them new cases.

Q. In your experience, has the workload at District 13 led to increased turnover in the workforce among the attorneys there?

A. It's been mentioned. I don't to the exit interviews, our human resource department does those, and I'm not sure of those how many are willing to share the exact reason they left. I know of at least three people within the last two years who have left because of the stress that the caseload and the job -- the number of case puts on them, and they've left one to go into private practice; two others to go so some other state agency.

Q. And what are the consequences for your office when one of the attorneys leaves? How does that affect the other attorneys there?

A. Well, we have some cases with -- that need an attorney, so my already overworked attorneys now are getting more cases, or what I will do or Ms. Aplin will do is we'll look at -- critically look at our workload, where we're at, and often we'll take the cases of the attorney who is leaving, at least try and maybe not work those cases up all the time, but at least keep them afloat until we can get somebody hired who we can then transfer those cases to. So it's conceivable, within a -- two or three months that a client have three attorneys and nothing have been done on his or her case. So it's -- it's crushing when that happens. Not only that, but we're losing somebody who has knowledge of the courthouse of how each associate or circuit court judge works. It's not just the number of cases they can process, it's everything else that that person may bring to the office.

Q. Does it typically take a certain amount of time to train up new attorneys? For example, replacements for people who have left.

A. Certainly.

Q. What goes into training a new attorney for -- to be a line attorney at the public defender?

Page 41

A. Well, the public defender has -- just generally, that have a new employee orientation for every employee they have. For attorneys, they have a trial skills workshop, which is, I think, a three- or four-day overnight taught by senior attorneys and our training staff. We have a centralized training division. They bring in speakers, they do all of these things. We also have new defender training, which is also, again, three to four days and nights of exhaustive training starting from the very beginning, how to conduct a client interview, how to do a preliminary hearing, how to do a deposition, all of those things. Every attorney is required to go to that training, regardless of prior experience.

They're then -- they then come back to the office and -- now, this doesn't happen right away. Depending on how the calendar works an, attorney might be in my office six months before they go to new defender training. Then we also have mentors in my office who take in new attorneys. There's nothing structural or organized about it. It's really -- we have some really experienced and really good attorneys in my office who really like helping the less-experienced attorneys out. Obviously, Ms. Aplin and myself are involved in their education, how to handle certain things, but we really leave it up to the new attorney to seek out who they feel comfortable with, and it's a pretty informal training in my office.

Q. So is it fair to say that both, in terms of formal training programs, as well as informal mentoring, it's a pretty substantial investment of time and energy when you have a new attorney join the office?

A. Absolutely.

Q. If we could -- I have one quick question, actually. So we talked earlier, with respect to Plaintiff's Exhibit 10, about individual workloads and workload percentage. Do you happen to know currently what your workload is, approximately?

A. Mine personally?

Q. As a percentage, yes.

A. No, I don't. I haven't looked at -- I haven't calculated that. I don't know if we have access to the -- we used to have a template for RubinBrown where we could type in our numbers and it would tell us where we're at. I'm not sure that we have access to that template anymore.

Q. So let's go back to Plaintiff's Exhibit 3 here.

Page 43

A. Sure.

Q. And let's turn to the back page. And here this paragraph talks about a caseloads causing a conflict of interest. Could you please elaborate -- I'm sorry.

A. Which paragraph number?

Q. This is here -- up here. Yeah, near the --

A. Okay. The first full photograph?

Q. That's right. So why don't you take a second to read that.

A. Sure.

Okay.

Q. And could you please elaborate on how caseloads can create conflicts of interest among the attorneys in your office?

A. Sure. I think it was, again an oral argument by the Missouri Supreme Court and also in the office of chief disciplinary counsel's petition and also in the ABA article or opinion, where it clearly stated -- and I think the Supreme Court even adopted in their argument -- or at least the chief disciplinary counsel did -- that it is a violation of our rules of ethics if we have -- if an attorney has so many cases, that taking on a new client will material effect their ability to represent the other client. Meaning, they don't have enough time to represent any more clients, they should not take anymore. We were way over that limit when I sent this e-mail out. Simply saying, Judge, by us taking more clients, we are now having to choose which client we're going to best represent because we don't have enough time to represent them all as they should be and as we're ethically obligated to do.

Q. Please move down to the paragraph that starts, "We have started an internal wait list." And that's around the hole punch in the middle.

A. All right.

Q. Take a minute to read the first couple of sentences there.

A. Okay.

Q. Does District 13 currently maintain a waist list for public defender resources?

A. We do.

Q. And please describe how that wait list is -- how it functions.

A. Sure. So it's -- we have an S-drive -- everyone in our office has access to that particular drive, and it -- it simply says "Wait List." It's near the top. Our clerks, when they take an application, if someone qualifies for our services, if they're not in custody, they're placed on the wait list.

And let me go back. If they're not locally confined in the Boone County Jail. If they're in some other county, we don't consider them locally confined. If they are not locally confined and they otherwise qualify, they're put on the wait list. Currently, I think we're about 150 people on that wait list -- not cases but individuals. If the person is in the Boone County Jail, we will wait two days before making a determination whether or not we'll take them, with the hope -- for them and for us -- that they might bond out or that they might hire private counsel. After 48 hours -- and it's an exact 48 hours. We don't enter in the case until the third day in the afternoon, so it's a little bit more than that, actually. We will then enter a case to represent locally-confined clients. Those are currently the only clients that we are taking cases, unless, however, we get somebody who is currently represented who picks up a new case, whether or not they're confined or not, we will take them as well.

Q. So you talked about locally-confined defendants. What happens to the people who are not locally defined -- or locally confined?

A. We will send them a letter saying, You've been -- you're approved for our services; however, at this time, we do not have an attorney to assign your case to, we will let you know in writing when we do have an attorney, please advise the court that you received this letter -- and that's hopefully to -- so when they go into court, the judges know. But if they're -- if they're not confined here in the Boone County Jail, they're given a letter, and we're letting the court deal with that.

Q. Do you know about what percentage of clients of the public defenders would fall under that category versus confined here in Boone County?

A. Which would be -- confined outside of Boone County? Is that what you're asking.

Q. I guess, just everyone who is not locally confined here in Boone County versus who is.

A. It would be a rough estimate, but I would say we probably have around a hundred to 120 clients who are in custody in the Boone County Jail always, because they keep that jail full all of the time. No matter how much they empty it, they always bring new people in. It is a small percentage of folks overall office wide. We might have right now 1,500 open cases, and of those, we might have -- 100, 200 of those cases are folks who are in the Boone County Jail.

Q. So is it fair to say that the vast majority of your clients get the letter that you described earlier saying, essentially, that we don't have resources to represent you currently?

A. That's correct.

Q. So going back to this idea of a wait list, which is referenced in the e-mail. So what -- this is very general, broad question, but what happens to the people that are on the wait list?

A. And, of course, the courts know about this. I've been in communication with the presiding judge. If I see him in court, he'll ask me about the wait list. I tell him we're still maintaining it. About once a week, one of our clerks, our office support assistants, will go through the wait list, every single case. We have Case.net here in Missouri. I don't know how familiar you are with Case.net, but it is -- it's wonderful. You can go in and type anyone's name. It'll tell you -- it'll bring up their case information, it'll bring up docket entries -- anybody can do this.

So our clerks will go in on Case.net, see if the client is still -- has an open case or if they've hired private counsel. And when we do that, we kind of -- we filter out folks. Not everybody stays on that list. About three weeks ago, we were about 240 cases, last week, after the clerks had filtered out all of those other cases, they noticed that we were -- somehow, we were able to remove about 60 of those folks off of our wait list.

So other than that, they're given that letter I described, and they're told, you know, if the court asks you, let them know that you're on the public defender wait list. We've kind of taken the position that the folks on the wait list aren't our clients, and we can't give them much concern. Our concern is to our existing clients, and it's really the court's issue to deal with at that point.

Q. How do -- how does your office put -- take people off the wait list to represent them? Is there a procedure in place to do that?

A. Yes. When we get there. Right now all we're doing is taking in-custody, locally-confined people. When we get to the point where we will be taking people off the wait list, we're going to go by the severity of the primary charge and whether -- and the age of the case. So someone who has a Class A or B felony, which has the highest, you know, liability possibilities, we'll take them first, as opposed to somebody with a Class C misdemeanor, which has -- you know, 15 days, as opposed to life, we'll take the one who is looking at the more severe liability.

Q. Is one practical consequence of being on the wait list that one's case is delayed, in your experience?

A. That's one of them, sure.

Q. Are there any others?

A. Oh, yeah. There's the pressure to plead guilty pro se, to be done with it. You know, we'll put you on probation, you don't need to keep coming back to court without an attorney, here's your offer, and, of course, no one is advising anyone of any collateral consequences or anything else. That's one of them. And as you said, delay. Witnesses leave -- you know, the courts haven't done it, but there in the past, the courts have threatened to make somebody indigent by placing them in custody, if they couldn't hire an attorney. So there's all of those. And it's simply to have somebody constantly appear in court without counsel and not know what's going on just isn't right.

Page 50

Q. Is another potential consequence of the wait list the fact that evidence might grow stale?

A. Oh, absolutely.

Q. Do you know of any examples where that has occurred?

A. No. And, again, it's -- we haven't gotten to the wait list, so I don't know whose rights are being negatively impacted right now because of our inability to help them with their case. I'm not looking forward to that discovery, and I'm sure it's going to happen, but we're simply not able to. Most convenient stores and businesses with camera systems only keep video on a 30-day basis, and that's a high priority for us in a lot of our cases where we can get some video evidence. That's gone with the wait list, unless our clients are doing it on their own.

Q. I have -- so just to make sure I understand -- so this wait -- about how long has the wait list been around?

A. I want to say it was mid-October, I think, is when we started it. The date of this e-mail, I think, was -- was a Wednesday -- I don't know if it was a Wednesday. It was the middle of the week, and then we started, I think, the preceding Monday.

Q. How many people, to your knowledge, who were on the wait list got off the wait list and got a public defender attorney?

Page 51

A. A public defender attorney?

Q. That's correct.

A. None, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Do you know about how many people are currently on the waist list?

A. I want to say it's about 140. I asked middle of last week where we were at, and it was 140.

Q. So if the people on the wait list are not getting attorneys from the public defender's office, how have they been getting off the wait list?

A. It would be conjecture on my part. I would assume it would be they are pleading pro se or they're going out and hiring private counsel.

Q. What are the potential problems with the criminal defendant pleading guilty pro se to a crime?

A. First, they may not have been guilty. There may be evidence that even if they did it, they weren't guilty, or a lack of evidence. And, again, it's the collateral consequences. In Missouri, if you plead guilty to the misdemeanor of driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license, the day that your judgment is entered, you're suspended for another year. Someone may have gone through all of the classes, paid up to a thousand dollars to get their license back, goes into court, pleads guilty, and have all of the work and all of the money they paid is gone, because there's an automatic one-year suspension. That's one of the most common ones. Not to mention, pleas that would affect someone's Second Amendment rights.

Q. How common is it that defendants that you work with in your personal experience are aware with these sorts of collateral consequences of pleading guilty?

A. Some are savvy enough and others aren't; they just want to plead guilty. Even on a misdemeanor shoplifting charge. If you do that three times in Missouri, your fourth one could be charged as a felony. Same thing with a DUI. You get enough misdemeanor and you commit misdemeanor crimes in the future, there's a possibility the state may enhance you as a prior misdemeanor offender. So it happens all the time, and I think some folks get so exasperated and frustrated with coming to court, because they have lives outside of the court system, that they just plead to be done with it.

Q. So let's flip to the first page of this exhibit, Plaintiff's 3, and look at the top. This is -- appears to be an e-mail written by presiding Judge Crane.
A. Judge Kevin Crane he's our -- Boone County elects a presiding judge out of the four circuit judge once every two years, and he's in the middle of his two years.
Q. So in this e-mail, he appears to be saying that Boone County will be appointing members of the private bar to represent criminal defendants. Has that been happening?
A. It happened for about a week, that Judge Crane appointed members of the Boone County Bar to clients -- defendants who were in custody locally confined.
Q. So you mentioned that went on for about a week.
A. About a week, maybe a week and a half.
Q. So there -- are there currently private attorneys being compelled to represent criminal defendants who are indigent?
A. No. Not anymore.
Q. Do you know why that process of appointing private attorneys stopped?

Page 54

A. I do.
Q. Could you please explain that?
A. Sure. I met with Judge Crane -- I was at a conference when I sent this e-mail. He called me upon receiving it, we had a talk. I got back Friday and spoke with him in his office. He wanted to know what happened. He was aware of Hinkebein's decision. I contacted our director, Michael Barrett, and let him know what was going on with Judge Crane, because he was very curious as to what the court's reaction was to my e-mail. Mr. Barrett decided that this might be a good time to try and get some goodwill from the presiding judges, that he hadn't made many end roads with other presiding judges in Missouri, and is Judge Crane appeared to be applicable to at least some sort of talk.
So we had a meeting with Judge Crane, the court administrator, Mary Epping, myself, Ms. Aplin, and Director Barrett at the law library of the courthouse, and Judge Crane was concerned about in-custody defendants, because it costs Boone County about $45 a day to house a person in custody at the jail here, but when we get overcrowded and have to send them to another county, it goes up to about $130 a day. And the county has a fixed budget for housing out-of-county inmates. So Judge Crane, I imagine, was hearing it from all sorts of people at the county that we were costing -- not we, but the jail was costing the county lots of money. My understanding is that Director Barrett asked Judge Crane if he would coauthor and sign a letter to the Missouri Supreme Court, the chief justice there, asking for an audience to discuss the issue involving Karl Hinkebein and how we were going to move forward and what direction the Supreme Court was going to give us. Judge Crane agreed to do that. He also agreed to send out some information on the presiding judge Listserv that he had access to by being a presiding judge, to access all other presiding judges in Missouri. As part of that concession, Michael Barrett agreed to take money that we had earmarked for conflict attorneys, when we had conflict issues, instead of hiring -- or instead of having other public defenders in other counties do it, we would then hire private counsel. He asked for and received permission to use a small amount of that money to pay local attorneys who were a part of our conflict panel money to represent in-custody defendants.

And then we got to the point where attorneys in my office felt like they could take cases. We also realized that Judge Crane didn't do much, other than sign his name to the letter, and then we weren't getting any benefit to our bargain, and so we just quietly -- I let Joel Elmer, our deputy director, know, and I believe I let Mr. Barrett know that we were no longer taking -- we were no longer asking for public defender money to hire private counsel for in-custody defendants, that we would be taking those.
Q. So to make sure I understand -- so your office got money because -- money that was being used to pay for conflict attorneys was being channeled to your office?
A. That's correct. That was the concession that Director Barrett made. Since Judge Crane was going to coauthor the letter and sign it, Mr. Barrett really wanted a presiding judge to be an ally to the public defender and to how we were going to proceed, also, to ask for direction from the Supreme Court. And so he asked for and got approval -- I think he probably could probably just do it on his own, if he wanted, being the director, but it was a finite number of dollars. I don't know what that number was, but I can tell you we were very cognizant of the money that was being spent, because if there's one thing that attorneys with the public defender don't like, it's driving to other counties to handle conflict cases; so we didn't want to be the office responsible for making us all go back to the old way of doing things.

Q. So you mentioned a finite number of dollars that your office received. Well, first of all, what did you use that money to do?

A. Again, it -- I didn't see any of the money. The way it works is, if a defendant was in the Boone County Jail, filled out an application and qualified for our services, we would then code it in our system as a conflict, and we would code it conflict over- -- case overload. That would then go to our contracting case manager and our deputy director, Joel Elmer. They would look at that and say, Okay, we're now going to assign it to this panel attorney, and it would be done.

So it was -- we would simply take the application, approve or deny it, and if approved, we would send it to our case contracting folks who would then handle who to assign that case to. I just knew that it wasn't -- this wasn't going be something long-term, where we were going to be hiring private counsel to work in-custody case. That's not what that money was for, and I didn't feel right using it for that, simply because we didn't want to go back to conflicts. So that's -- when I say "finite," I didn't know what the number was; I just knew that we were going to get to a point where I was going to be told, You're out of money for this, figure out a way to work with your presiding judge.

Q. So do you still have that money that you're able to use, as you described, to not have to take on those certain sorts of cases?

A. I would assume so. Again, it's a central fund, I guess. Our case contracting number. We have a case contracting manager. She has some folks who help her out. So every office in the system, when they have a conflict, they will then send their case information to our case contracting coordinator who will look at it, approve the conflict, and then the money is dispersed centrally. So it's not -- I don't have a -- Boone County hasn't been allocated a certain percentage of the $5.4 million, I think, is what was earmarked for that.

Q. Okay. And do you know if money is going to -- you mentioned 5.-something million dollars.

A. I believe that's what was appropriated -- the latest increase this last session.

Q. Do you know if there's money going into that fun to replenish the money that's being spent on these private attorneys?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Do you know what's going to happen when that money runs out?

A. I do.

Q. What is going to happen?

A. We're going to go back to the old way of doing things, where if another county -- again, we handled nine counties. If one of those counties has multiple codefendants or a personal conflict in the office, we will then -- Boone County will receive those cases, and we'll be driving back to those counties to work those cases.

Q. Does handling a conflict case from a different county impose additional burden on the attorney working on the case, as opposed to local case?

A. It does.

Q. Please describe those additional burdens.

A. It's devastating to our office and to the attorney. There's drive time to and from the counties. We have a set schedule here in Boone County with our associate and circuit courts for law days, for contested hearings. Another county may have a different schedule, so it creates scheduling problems. There is discovery procedures, local rules that we need to get familiar with, how discovery is meted out. Visiting clients, if we need to go an hour and a half away to another county -- we're a conflict, so we can't use that public defender's office, because, you know, we may be discussing information that we don't want to have discussed in their office. I certainly wouldn't let a conflict attorney into our office to meet with one of their clients because we have a conflict. So there's meeting spaces -- it's all sorts of the logistical issues, not to mention just the time that's consumed by handling conflicts.

Q. So with respect to this temporary diversion of funds that we've been talking about, do you see that as a long-term solution to the problem in District 13 of excessive workloads?

A. No. Not at all.

Q. And please explain why that's the case.
A. We're talking about a very -- we talked about earlier about what percentage was of in custody locally confined clients. It's a very small number compared to our overall caseload and workload. So just having money for that is not going to fix anything. It was, again, just keeping our head above water and not trying to at least placate the court somewhat. We saw them as a potential. Definitely never a long-term solution. The long-term solution is more attorneys and more support staff.
Q. Do you have an estimate for when this temporary fund will run out and things will go back to the way they were?
A. I'm -- are you asking for the overall conflict money?
Q. So my understanding -- and correct me if I'm wrong -- is that there was this temporary pool of money that was used to hire private attorneys but that it would run out.
A. No. No. I may have done a poor job of explaining it. So let's say the number was five million dollars that was given to us -- I think it was 5.4, but some percentage of that may have gone to other things. That 5.4 was given to the public defender system in general statewide to use for conflicts -- simply conflicts. So all local offices then got out of conflicts. What we were given permission for -- and conflicts only arose -- and maybe this is the confusion. Conflicts as it arose with multiple codefendants, as it arose with maybe a -- we had a client but was a witness to a case that just came in. We couldn't represent a witness in the case and then the potential suspect. So, you know, the old fashion kind of conflicts. That's what that money was earmarked for, for the entire system. We were given a special exception to use that money for conflicts because of a conflict of interest due to violating the rules of ethics. We've never done that before with the public defender. The conflict has always been a hard conflict as we know it traditionally to be multiple codefendants, so that's -- the money was just coming out -- it was a conflict, we were just calling it something else, not your traditional conflict.

MS. SHIPA: Can we go off the record for a minute?
MR. TARTAGLIO: Yeah.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 5:46 p.m., and

Page 63

we're off the record.
(Discussion off the record.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 5:47, and we're back on the record.
Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) So, Mr. Wallis, to kind of summarize this whole discussion, let me know if you agree with this summary:
Currently your office is able to send -- to conflicts cases that it didn't used to be able to send to conflicts?
A. We had that permission, but we are no longer doing that as of about two weeks ago.
Q. Okay. So that has already ended?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And how has that affected the workload at your office, that ending two weeks ago?
A. We're now taking people and assigning them to attorneys who qualify, as long as they're locally confined, so attorneys are only getting people who are in jail -- in the Boone County Jail, no one else; so that's how it's affected it. Ideally, nobody wants to have a client in the jail for several reasons. The jail is about a 30-minute round trip from door to door from our office. There's limited space there, we need to make appointments, makes representation difficult, so they're getting assigned the more difficult kind of case -- kind of cases to deal with -- maybe not factually, but it requires more work just with travel and scheduling.

Q. Okay. Let's move on to the next exhibit. This has already been marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 5.
And I'll direct your attention to page 3, the second paragraph from the top.
A. Okay.
Q. So this paragraph is talking about private attorneys being appointed to assist the public defender's office in District 13; right?
A. That's correct.
Q. Is that continuing to happen?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So this -- strike that.
Currently is the Boone County Bar Association assisting the public defenders in dealing with the workload issues that the office is facing?
A. Not to my knowledge, they aren't.
Q. Okay. So, actually, if we could go back to Plaintiff's Exhibit 3 here. So you sent this e-mail on September -- or -- it looks like this was sent around September 27th, 2017; right?

Page 65

A. That's correct.
Q. Between the time you sent this e-mail and now, are things at your office working differently in any material way?
A. They are.
Q. Please explain how.
A. Every attorney, except probably Ms. Aplin and myself, have fewer clients. They're able to work their cases. They're able to do things they haven't done before. It's been a positive impact since not taking the cases, keeping in mind that we're ignoring the people on the wait list, which isn't a good thing, but for the clients that we're currently representing and serving, they're getting much better representation.
Q. Have you gotten any feedback from the people on the wait list about what they think of this new way of doing things?
A. No. I generally don't have -- I'm not their first point of contact. That would be our office assistants who -- I'll hear from them that there's some frustration, but that most people understand what's going on. In the way we word our letters, we just don't have anyone currently to -- we don't have an attorney available for you. And I think people have understood that so far. I think that the lack of any pushback from the courts as of to date has helped as well. I think when the courts start pressuring defendants is when we'll see -- maybe see some negative impact. But as far as the folks in our office, it's been very positive.

Q. And do you see it as a suitable long-term solution to the problem of too much work and not enough people?
A. No.
Q. Please explain why.
A. Well, we have people on a wait list. Their constitutional rights are their constitutional rights, whether or not it's a low-level misdemeanor case or a felony case. The constitution requires that anyone accused facing a Liberty depravation be represented by counsel, and we're not holding up that end of the bargain right now with everyone, so it's not a long-term solution. I would hope that we would have more folks and more resources or perhaps the legislature decriminalize some things to help us in our current predicament.
Q. Are there any plans to change the wait list procedure as it currently exists?

A. No.
Q. I'm going to hand out another exhibit that has been premarked five.
I've been informed that this might simply be Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, as opposed to Petsch 5, but we don't need to --
MS. SHIPA: There's kind of a problem with the way the exhibits have been numbered during this deposition. I just realized it a moment ago.
MR. TARTAGLIO: Well, we can talk about that off the record.
MS. SHIPA: Okay.
Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) So, Mr. Wallis, have you ever seen this document or documents similar to it before?
A. Some of it looks familiar, but I don't -- I can't say if I've seen this specific document.
Q. Over the last few months, to your knowledge, has anyone in your office requested that they not be appointed counsel for a case for which they would otherwise represent a client?
A. You're asking if an attorney has asked to not be given new cases?
Q. That's correct.

Page 68

A. Yes. I've had -- every attorney has asked -- has made that request.
Q. Do they do that via motion, to your knowledge?
A. No.
Q. How does that typically work?
A. Their request to me?
Q. To -- well -- so strike that.
So do the attorneys in your why office request to the court that they not be assigned to certain cases?
A. No. They make that request to myself and Ms. Aplin.
Q. Okay. And then from there, taking into account their workload and the case, you and or Ms. Aplin decide whether to take the case or put them on the wait list? Is that how that works?
A. That's correct.
MR. TARTAGLIO: All right. Let's take a break.
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 5:55 p.m., and we're off the record.
(A recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 6:13 p.m., and we're back on the record.

Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) All right. So, Mr. Wallis, I'm going to do a quick housekeeping, kind of, recitation for the record, and then I have a few follow-up questions.

So we started off with Plaintiff's Exhibit 28, which we newly marked today. I believe we then moved to what I called Plaintiff's Exhibit 4. This is a spreadsheet -- a one-page spreadsheet of Missouri State Public Defender Cumulative Caseload Metrics. My understanding was this was the Exhibit 4 during the 30(b)(6) depositions. I believe the second exhibit I used is a very lengthy printout from the spreadsheet that shows individual workloads. It's marked as Exhibit 10. I believe this is also from the 30(b)(6) depositions. I remarked -- or I discussed earlier a Boone County Bar Association newsletter. This one is marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. I believe that is from the previous round of 30(b)(6) depositions. I talked about an e-mail written by Mr. Wallis and Sarah Aplin. This e-mail includes presiding Judge Crane. This one, I believe, was also from the 30(b)(6) deposition that was marked there as Plaintiff's Exhibit 3. I also talked about a template motion entitled "Suggests and Support of Writ of Prohibition and or Amending." This one has a sticker that says Exhibit 5, Petsch. So I believe this one is from the more recent individual depositions.

Okay. So, Mr. Wallis, I have a few quick follow-up questions. So I just want to make sure I understand the real-world consequences of the wait list. Is it the case that there are people currently sitting in jail awaiting trial who have been told that they will not be appointed a public defender lawyer at this time but they've been put on the wait list and will be given a lawyer eventually?

A. Yes. Those who are not locally confined in the Boone County Jail have been provided that notice.

Q. Do you know about how many people there are sitting in jail waiting for a lawyer who is on this wait list?

A. Out of county is what you mean?

Q. Well, just total -- approximately is fine. How many people are sitting in jail who are on the wait list waiting for an attorney?

A. I don't think the number is very large. It's less than ten.

Q. So you mentioned that -- you said that people who are confined in Boone County are getting a lawyer; is that right?

Page 71

A. That's correct.

Q. Currently. And so if someone is confined in Cooper County, would he or she be appointed a public defender attorney, even if they qualified for it?

A. Well, that's a -- that's -- I don't know if that -- we also handle Cooper County, so we are taking -- if you're confined locally in Cooper County, for the clarification, you would also -- we also would have an attorney who could represent a person in Cooper County.

Q. So someone who is put in jail in Cooper County would be appointed a lawyer, as opposed to being put on the wait list?

A. That's correct.

Q. So who are the -- so would people who are in Boone or Cooper county but are not in jail being put on the wait list?

A. That's correct.

Q. And in the future, do you expect that people who are confined in other counties but who are being represented in District 13 because of a conflict in the future, do you believe that those people will be put on the wait list?

A. If they're in another county -- maybe I can -- this is the answer: If you are not confined in Boone or Cooper County and you apply and you have a charge in one of those two counties, we are not -- the public defender's office in Boone County is not going to represent those clients; they're going to be put on a wait list until we have an available attorney.

Q. Okay. And that's true even if they're in jail?

A. That's correct. There is one small caveat exception we made. If someone is in the department of corrections and they filed a statutory speedy trial request, a disposition of detainer, which by statute, once that's properly filed, which is notice to the court and notice to the prosecutor, which department of corrections help facilitate those filings, the clock starts ticking on those cases. We've agreed to take those cases as well, just because of the time-sensitive nature of those cases. Last week I think we entered in three of those cases, so, that's -- again, it's a relatively small number. But we are taking -- I forgot to mention that we are taking those cases as well.

Page 73

Q. Are there currently plans to -- strike that.

Is there a procedure in place to take people off the wait list by giving them a public defender attorney?

A. Yes.

Q. Please describe what that procedure is.

A. Once I have enough attorneys approaching myself or Ms. Aplin who will indicate that they can take new cases, and the only folks we have left are people on the wait list, we'll then start addressing the people on the wait list. Right now we get approximately ten cases a week from the Boone County Jail, so that's taking up any attorney availability at the present moment.

Q. Do you know when the time will be when your office has enough resources to start taking people off the wait list to start give them public defender attorneys?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Earlier in discussing this e-mail from Judge Crane, you mentioned briefly that there's some discussion about seeking an audience with the Supreme Court of Missouri. Do you know if something like that ever happened?

Page 74

A. I believe there was an effort for Director Barrett to meet with the chief justice or at least the clerk of the court, and there was never a response.

Q. So is it your understanding that nothing happened, or do you just not know?

A. My understanding with talking to with Director Barrett was that the Supreme Court never responded to his request for a meeting.

Q. Could you please describe what -- in Missouri criminal procedure an initial hearing is briefly.

A. I'm not sure what -- I'm not sure we have an initial hearing. I'm not -- someone is arrested, they're given a -- they're either arrested or they're given a summons. They appear to court for maybe initial arrangement. At that point, if they have counsel, they can waive formal reading of the formal charges and enter a plea of guilty or not guilty. Often is the case if they're not represented by counsel, the judge will ask them if they want to waive reading, and the judge will then enter a plea of not guilty on the person's behalf. Unless the person is confined and says what do I need to do to get out of jail, and the offer is time served, and then the case is disposed.

Q. Okay. And so is that initial appearance that process that you just described?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. I didn't know the proper language.

A. That's fine.

Q. So at the initial appearance, is that typically when a bond is set for a criminal defendant?

A. Not always, no. In Boone County, there's a bond -- a set bond schedule. If you were arrested on almost any case, except a violent A or B felony case, once you're taken to the jail, there is a sheet that says you have the right to have a judge set your bond. If you choose Option A within 24 hours, a judge will set your bond, or you can refer to Option B, which is the bond schedule, and it lists how much each particular case costs to get out of jail. A DWI, for example, is $500. You can sit in jail for up to 24 hours and wait for a judge, or you can choose Option B of a $500 bond, and then you bond out. So bond is often taken up before. The prosecutors oftentimes file what's called a bond memo on certain cases where they think the particular facts are egregious. It's an ex parte communication with the court; we're not involved with it. It is a letter saying, Judge, we believe bond should bet set at $10,000 for this misdemeanor assault because he has alleged to have assaulted her two times prior and is on probation for it. So bond is often already set. We will take a bond reduction hearings if we're in the case and the client is in custody.

Q. Okay. So where someone is interested in paying that statutory amount that you referenced earlier, is -- if they have a public defender attorney, is a public defender attorney involved in the case at that point, typically?

A. No. No. Typically, we're not involved until the person -- the scenario I described is almost contemporaneous with the arrest, and we're oftentimes not open at that time and certainly haven't received the application. So by the time the bond is usually set or the person has posted it, it's been several days since the initial arrest, at the soonest.

Q. Okay. And you mentioned that there was another procedure which is to have a hearing in front of a judge for bond; is that right?

A. That's correct.
Q. Are -- so if a client attends that sort of hearing and has a public defender attorney in District 13, do they typically have an attorney present at that hearing?
A. Yes.
Q. So how does that work? Do you have someone who is stationed at the courthouse who does that sort of thing?
A. No. It's -- so someone will get arrested -- let's say it's a possession case -- and they set the bond at $450, which is the set bond on a regular felony possession of a controlled substance. The person can't pay the $450 to a bondsman, so the person sits in jail. At the next arraignment date, which is typically a Monday -- let's assume the arrest is made on a weekend -- we will have gotten an application from the jail. And if get an application from the jail over the weekend, we will make a determination has to our services before court that afternoon. We will then assign the case to somebody that afternoon -- or that morning, and they'll be given a new case and they will go up to court with no information on the client, other than maybe reading the probable cause statement, and we'll ask for a bond reduction at that point.

Q. Okay. So -- just to make sure I understand. So if -- in that -- actually, strike that?
MR. TARTAGLIO: All right. That's the questions that I have for now.
CROSS-EXAMINATION
BY MR. RAMSEY:
Q. Good evening.
A. Good evening.
Q. Again, my name is Steven Alan Ramsey, and I represent the State of Missouri and Governor Eric Greitens. Before I begin, I'm going to ask you a number of questions, and I'm going to try not to interrupt you. The two reasons why I may interrupt you are simply, one, because I'm impatient, and I'll try not to do that, but the second reason would be that you're answering questions that I did not ask.
A. Sure.
Q. With that being said, was your first job out of law school with the Missouri State Public Defender System?
A. No.
Q. What did you do before joining the public defender system?

A. I worked for the department of insurance.
Q. And how long did you work for the department of insurance?
A. Approximately nine month.
Q. And was that in an attorney or legal capacity?
A. It was.
Q. And then did you hold any legal positions or any positions before that?
A. No.
Q. After law school. Pardon me.
A. No.
Q. Your undergraduate degree, what was that in?
A. It was legal studies with a minor in criminal justice.
Q. In regard to your preparation -- not for this deposition -- that's not really preparation. Pardon me.
Who all have you talked to or had communications with regarding workload or caseload concerns. I know that's a broad question. So you've been in contact with judges.
A. Correct.

Q. What about organizations?
A. I've -- organizations have reached out to me to talk about the caseload issue.
Q. For instance?
A. Every year, I get a slew of e-mails from journalism students at Mizzou who are writing papers. I was recently contacted by a group who wanted to start a nonprofit to help people who are incarcerated in pretrial detention; they want to try to get them out. The media. I field interview requests on a consistent basis.
Q. And what about just generally people? Like, what class of people -- I imagine other members of the Boone County Bar, but what other group, if you will, of people have you been involved with?
A. Regarding the caseload issue?
Q. Yes.
A. I've spoken to, like, family and friends. The Boone County Bar widely avoids me, so I don't really have much discussion with the Boone County Bar. But I don't really talk about -- I don't find it a real compelling topic for those who aren't involved in it, necessarily.
Q. If we turn to Plaintiff's Exhibit 28, so it was the first one, I believe, that we spoke about.

Page 81

A. Okay.
Q. You didn't draft this document, did you?
A. No, I did not.
Q. Did you have any hand in its creation, to your knowledge?
A. No.
Q. And this graph -- or this grid, rather, on page 3 -- Bates stamp 21876 at the bottom, was it your testimony that you-all do not utilize that grid currently to assess your workload and caseload concerns?
A. No. We reference it to help gauge our workload, but there was a -- an Excel spreadsheet where we could punch the numbers in, and it would tell us where we're at with it. We don't utilize that spreadsheet, but we use these numbers in conjunction with the caseload and other factors.
Q. Turning away from that exhibit but referencing the RubinBrown report -- it presume you're at least generally familiar with that.
A. Correct.
Q. Was it your testimony earlier that the actual number utilized are inaccurate?

Page 82

A. I think I was asked if I agreed with the numbers, and I don't agree that the numbers accurately reflect the number of hours that should be taken to -- on a case.
Q. Turning to the previously marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 4. This was the grid, the Public Defender Cumulative Caseload Metrics.
A. Yes.
Q. It was my understanding from your testimony that you understood the numbers but you didn't necessarily know what each of the rows meant, if you will.
A. That's correct. I don't know what each column means.
Q. And you had no hand in creating this document?
A. That's correct.
Q. And so even if you look at the percent of capacity for your district, outside of the numbers that are on the page, you have no independent way of ascertaining whether or not this is an accurate depiction of the current state of affairs?
MR. TARTAGLIO: Objection. Leading.
A. That's correct.
Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Turning to

Page 83

Plaintiff's Exhibit 10 -- and this is the thicker document. You -- I'm sorry. In your testimony, had you seen this document before?
A. I have never seen this document.
Q. And then furthermore, you would have no sense -- independent knowledge about the workload or caseload, I guess, columns?
A. That's correct.
MR. TARTAGLIO: Objection. Leading. Misstates testimony.
Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Turning to the Plaintiff's Exhibit 3. This is the letter. Why did you determine that a letter to the judges was the appropriate path to proceed concerning workload concerns, as opposed to, for instance, a Chapter 600.063 motion for conference?
A. Well, I wanted the e-mail because I wanted something to memorialize what I was saying in case there was any dispute about that, and I never had any intention of proceeding under Chapter 600. This wasn't a Chapter 600 issue.
Q. And why wasn't it a Chapter 600 issue?
A. Because the e-mail was in direct response to the license -- discipline against Karl Hinkebein. The Supreme Court, office of chief disciplinary counsel, never referenced Chapter 600. They referenced the ethics and the rules of professional conduct over and over, and so that's how we proceeded. Had they mentioned 600, we might have taken a different stance. They didn't, so it was clear that our law license was in jeopardy by not complying with the rules of professional conduct, not because we weren't following 600.

Q. Turning away from that particular exhibit, have you filed a Chapter 600 motion up until this point?
A. No.
Q. Turning to Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 -- not the 5 Petsch but the BCBA Newsletter.
A. Okay.
Q. You didn't have any hand in writing in document, did you?
A. No, I did not.
Q. And had you seen this document before today?
A. I believe I saw the e-mail that was originally sent out by Jeff Hilbrenner who does the media for the Boone County Bar Association.
Q. Finally, the last Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, Petsch, did I understand your testimony correctly to be that you had not utilized this document before? In other words, you haven't filed a similar statement of prohibition?

A. That's correct. I haven't filed anything like this document, No. 5.

Q. And had you seen this document before?

A. Again, I can't say if I've seen this specific one. I know on our MSPD litigation resource database, there's several templates -- suggestions. This looks like it might be one, but it seems there may have been something else put in there. I can't say I've seen this one exactly before.

Q. And do you have a sense -- and if you don't, it's fine. Do you have a sense of -- if this has been available -- this type of document has been available for years or if this has been a more recent publication to the Web site?

A. I believe this was put on the litigation resource database in re: Action to the OCDC issue with Mr. Hinkebein, so it would be relatively recent.

Q. Turning to the wait list. Would you consider your decision to utilize a wait list more of a policy judgment or a legal judgment?

Page 86

A. I'm not sure I understand the question.

Q. I think the question was poorly phrased, so let me try it again.

What legal justification, if any, do you have for utilizing the wait list in your district?

A. Well, I think -- if the distinction is between policy as it relates to ethics and legal as it relates to authority, I think my legal justification is I'm an officer of the court, and I have sworn to abide by the rules of professional conduct. I could certainly see how there would be more of a policy argument that there isn't any statutory authority, necessarily, for the public defender to create a wait list.

Q. As you sit here today, and your understanding of how your district defines a case or a matter, could you explain what exactly a case is?

A. Sure. The way we use it locally in our office, a case is simply charges that are filed under a case number. So if a person goes out and commits a crime, allegedly, is charged, whether it have one or ten counts, the way the state files it, it's going to be given a case number through Case.net. We use that as a case. So every time there is new case number -- state-generated case number, we would consider that a case.

Q. And do you have any defenders who are on call 24/7?

A. No.

Q. Turning to the determination of indigency, who makes that termination at your office?

A. Initially, it falls to one of our three office support assistants. They're the ones who review the applications that come in.

Q. And is there -- or are there any independent checks on what a particular application says? To rephrase, is there any independent verification that your district goes through after a person applies and says, Hey, I'm indigent?

A. No. The overwhelming majority of the time, we take the application to be truthful. There have been some occasions where we've asked for some documentation, perhaps a letter from an employer stating there's been a recent termination or change in work hours, but that rarely happens.

Q. Do you have a sense of what percentage of applications are rejected in your district?

A. I'd say -- I get notification -- maybe five a week that are initially rejected, then there's always the appeal process.

Page 88

Q. Have you ever been rejected a request for expert testimony or the usage of an expert in a case that you personally have been involved with at the public system?

MR. TARTAGLIO: Objection. Vague.

A. I don't recall if I have. I don't -- I can't think of a time that I have.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Have you ever rejected a request for expert testimony from an attorney that you supervise?

A. Again, I can't think of a specific time. If I have, it would be less than I can count on one hand. I just can't think of any. I think one time I did certainly not because of funding, but because of the nature of the request versus where we were at with the case.

Q. Outside of depositions and expert testimony, what other things do assistant public defender have to request money for in relation to litigation?

A. We will do transcripts. If we have an interrogation or interview, sometimes we will request that a transcript be prepared. There might be some travel to go to crime scenes, so it would fall under travel. There's really not -- depositions and experts are far and away our -- the majority -- take the majority of our litigation expenses.

Q. Turning to trial, how many trials within the past year or so have you -- have either you or someone from your office actually went and tried through completion?

A. If -- we're talking the fiscal year or the calendar year?

Q. Whichever you prefer.

A. Fiscal year, we -- for the past five, six since years, we've averaged approximately 23 jury trials. I don't consider bench trials as jury trials. A jury trial, myself personally, I think in the last fiscal year -- counting this year, I think I've tried four or five since July of this year.

Q. And how many public defenders or assistant public defenders are at a particular trial? Do you send everyone with a second chair?

A. No.

Q. Okay. A few steps back. It's my understanding the district defenders have wide discretion to create policies within their districts. My question is, have you implemented any set policies since you've been a district defender?

Page 90

MR. TARTAGLIO: Objection. Vague.

A. If you're referring to local rules, I think that's how we kind of refer to local policy. I think years ago my former deputy director and I attempted to craft some and then figured out that general guidelines and handbook -- you know, the Missouri State Public Defender encompassed all that needed to be encompassed, so we do not currently have any active local policy.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Do you have any, I guess, customs, procedures, or local policies concerning when a public defender may counsel his or her client to accept a plea deal?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you describe them, please.

A. The minimum expectation is there needs to be discovery in order for there to be a meaningful conversation between the attorney and the client. That's the baseline.

Q. I apologize. You -- you've been a district defender since 2009 or 2011?

A. 2011.

Q. 2011. And since you have been within the system, caseloads and workload concerns have been prevalent. Is that fair to say?

Page 91

A. Yes.

Q. And so after you became a district defender, have you created or established any local trainings for your district to help with workload and caseload concerns?

A. No.

Q. Turning to timekeeping. At this point in time, does your district only keep time by the hour?

A. That's correct.

Q. So if at the end of your two-week period, you'll get a time sheet from, I presume, everyone in your office, and you have to check off on it, and it, you know, would have 8 hours per day or 12 hours per day or how many hours per day?

A. That's correct.

Q. So you do not keep time in five-minute increments like some periods in the past?

A. That's correct.

Q. Do you have a sense for when the last time you were keeping track of time in that sense?

A. I want so say it was about maybe two years, a year and a half ago when the directive was given by Director Barrett that we no longer had to keep time.

Q. At this point in time have you at any point in your time with the Missouri State Public Defender System been judicially determined to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. No.

Q. Has anyone that you have supervised in that same time frame, since you've been with the public defender system, been judicially determined to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel?

A. No.

MR. RAMSEY: No further questions.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MS. SHIPA:

Q. I have a couple.

Are the assistant public defenders in your office offered any kind of training locally?

A. They're not offered it locally. Through myself or Ms. Aplin, we have a training database that they can access where we have in-house MSPD training and then also where there are -- if there's national opportunities for attorneys or even investigators, they can ask for funds to attend that training if it requires funds. So there are some, but there's nothing locally that I provide myself.

Q. Do any of the attorneys in your office offer trainings or mentoring to other attorneys in the office?

A. They do.
Q. Can you describe that to me?
A. Some of our more senior attorneys, those with -- unfortunately, senior in my office is those with five on more years. We have one attorney who will take any new attorney in the office, teach them the ins and outs of how to conduct a trial, has them do mock trials in our conference room, has them -- he has access to Pozner & Dodd's cross-examination videos. He has them watch the videos. He's an active first and second chair with them at any jury trial. We have several other attorneys who mentor our younger attorneys. It's an informal formal sort of training.
Q. I think that you were asked earlier about your workload, but I'm not sure anyone asked you what is your current caseload.
A. I think -- the last time I looked was last Friday. I was at -- I think I was at 78 cases.
Q. Is this -- is that number higher than it usually is?
A. Yes. I think I have the highest caseload in the office.
Q. What would be a typical caseload that you would, you know, usually have?

Page 94

A. It would -- normally, it was between 20 and 30 cases.
Q. Why is it at -- 78, I think, is what you said now?
A. Right. We had two resignations within the past few months. We had an attorney go out on maternity leave -- actually, another one just went out on paternity leave, so we have two out on leave. We currently have one open position. And so intend of taking those cases that we've already entered on and giving them to the attorneys, I absorbed those cases.
Q. And does Sara Aplin have a caseload?
A. She does.
Q. Do you know about what her caseload is right now?
A. Hers is right around 70.
Q. Is that higher than normal for Sarah?
A. Yes.
Q. Now, I want to turn your attention -- a lot of attention has been given to this Exhibit 28. And I believe you said on page 3 -- I believe you said that table on there was based on the RubinBrown standards.

Page 95

A. That's what it appears to be to me.
Q. Do you know when the RubinBrown study was done ?
A. Oh, boy. I want to say 2011 through 2014, approximately. I don't -- yeah.
Q. Okay. Could you look amount the first page of Exhibit 28 and tell me the date of this?
A. 2007.
Q. So knowing the date of that and knowing the date of RubinBrown, do you still believe that this table on page 3 is based on RubinBrown?
A. The -- the cases -- the table we're looking at looks like the RubinBrown. The date couldn't be 2007 because I had just started with the public defender, and we weren't time keeping at that point.
Q. Okay. So you were just assuming that that was based on RubinBrown? You're not for certain that it is?
A. That's correct.
Q. And would you look at the first -- the sentence right above that bottom set of numbers and read that sentence to me.
A. You're talking about the bottom sentence?
Q. Yeah. Yes. The last sentence on the

page.
A. It's starts, "The MSPD internal workload study showed that MSPD attorneys are currently, even with existing case overloads, are spending an average of 31 hours per case on sex offense cases, so that number was used in lieu of the 12 hours per case for general felony cases."
Q. Does that sentence give you any idea of what this table might be based on, if not RubinBrown?
A. No.
Q. No? Okay. All right. That's fine.
MS. SHIPA: That's good. That's all of the questions I have.
REDIRECT EXAMINATION
BY MR. TARTAGLIO:
Q. I have one very quick follow-up question. You mentioned that the Boone County Bar Association tries to avoid you. Do you have an explanation for why that is?
A. Again, only can guess, but I believe that when a private attorney is constricted by the court to do free work, that the Boone County Bar Association blames the public defender for that.
I actually had an attorney -- right after

Judge Crane started appointing private members of the bar, we were walking down the street towards each other, and he moved over to the other side of the street. He waved but said I wasn't very popular and said a few other things, so ...

They seem to think that it's our fault that this is the mess we're in.

MR. TARTAGLIO: Let's go off the record very quickly, but then we'll be back on.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 6:50 p.m., and we're off the record.

(A recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 6:54, and we're back on the record.

Q. (By Mr. Tartaglio) So, Mr. Wallis, earlier Ms. Shipma asked you about what your typical caseload was, and I believe you said it was around 20 to 30 cases; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And with respect to Ms. Aplin, I think you said her caseload is also typically around that 20 to 30 range?

A. Maybe a little higher. She doesn't exceed 40, but it was generally between 30 and 40.

Q. For the line defenders who do not have the same supervisor duties as yourself, is their typical caseload higher than the 20 to 30 you talked about earlier?

A. Right now?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. A little while ago we talked about verifying the indigency request to obtain counsel from the public defender's office, and I believe you said that, typically, your office does not verify those requests; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is the reason why -- or strike that.

Isn't it true that the reason why your office typically does not spend resources verifying those requests is because there are higher priorities for your office, namely, representing clients in their actual cases?

A. Correct. And we don't have the time to do it.

Q. Thanks.

MR. TARTAGLIO: That's all I have.

VIDEOGRAPHER: The time is 6:56 p.m., and we're off the record.

(The deposition concluded at 6:56 p.m.)

MS. JACQUELINE D. SHIPMA
MISSOURI STATE PUBLIC DEFENDER SYSTEM
1000 W Nifong Boulevard, Suite 100
Columbia, Missouri 65203

IN RE: SHONDEL CHURCH, et al. v. STATE OF MISSOURI, et al.

Dear Ms. Shipma,

Please find enclosed your copies of the deposition of DAVID WALLIS taken on December 11, 2017 in the above-referenced case. Also enclosed is the original signature page and errata sheets.

Please have the witness read your copy of the transcript, indicate any changes and/or corrections desired on the errata sheets, and sign the signature page before a notary public.

I. Qualifications[1]

I am the Elwood Thomas Emeritus Professor of Law at the University of Missouri School of Law, where I have taught courses in Criminal Procedure, Professional Responsibility, Trial Practice, Criminal Litigation Skills, and Wrongful Convictions since 2000. Prior to that I taught similar courses and ran a criminal defense clinic at the University of Oklahoma College of Law from 1990-2000. I also directed a criminal defense clinic at the University of Wisconsin Law School from 1984-1988.

I was a public defender from 1978-1984 in the Milwaukee office of the Wisconsin State Public Defender. I was the Chief Staff Attorney for the last three years while at the office. Together with the Director of the office, I was responsible for supervising 42 trial lawyers and 6 investigators. I carried a reduced case load so that I could provide training, second chair trials of young lawyers, and help manage the office.

In the early 1980s I became active in the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers and attended the National College of Criminal Defense Lawyers in Houston. I also became active in the American Bar Association ("ABA") Criminal Justice Section. Later, while teaching at Wisconsin, I served as the Vice Chair of the ABA Defense Services Committee and interacted with public defender administrators from around the country.

When I moved to Oklahoma, I became active in the Oklahoma Criminal Defense Lawyers Association. Together with Bob Ravitz, who ran the Oklahoma County Public Defender Office, we started an annual Continuing Legal Education ("CLE") which brought public defenders and defense lawyers from around the state to Norman for a 2-day conference. In 1995, I was appointed by Oklahoma Governor Frank Keating to the Indigent Defense System board. This five person board was responsible for oversight of the Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS) that provided capital trial representation and appellate representation in capital and non-capital cases in all counties except Tulsa and Oklahoma counties. In addition, the OIDS board awarded contracts to private lawyers who handled trial cases in all counties other than Tulsa and Oklahoma counties, which were served by county financed Public Defender offices. After leaving the board, I was appointed to be part of the state defense team that represented Terry Nichols, one of those accused and convicted of the 1995 bombing of the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City.

Since becoming a law professor, I have written a series of articles involving criminal defense practice, ethical issues and various aspects of the criminal defense system, including the delivery of defense services. In 1995, I edited a book for the ABA entitled "Ethical Problems

[1] See Appendices A and B for a complete list of qualifications.

Facing the Criminal Defense Lawyer" that included a chapter on dealing with excessive caseloads. I met with and talked often with Robert Spangenberg, the president of the Spangenberg Group, which had studied the indigent defense system in almost every state in the nation when he came to assess the indigent systems in Oklahoma and Missouri.

I have presented at numerous CLEs across the country and have taught regularly at Harvard Law School's Trial Advocacy Workshop. Since moving to Missouri, I have frequently presented at Missouri State Public Defender workshops or conferences. In September 2016, I facilitated a workshop for Missouri District Defenders and supervisors on the ethical challenges for supervisors of attorneys handling excessive caseloads. I will conduct a similar workshop in Indiana in December 2017. In my teaching, writing and CLE presentations, I frequently have addressed the ethical issues that confront criminal defense lawyers struggling to provide competent representation while juggling crushing caseloads. I am familiar with the problems at the national level and in Missouri based on my own research, reading many studies and reports on the subject of indigent defense, conversations with lawyers and public defender administrators at conferences and seminars, discussions with my students who are or have been Missouri public defenders or prosecutors, and my own court observations.

In addition, I organized a symposium on the crisis in indigent defense at the University of Missouri School of Law in February 2010. That symposium, "Broke and Broken: Can We Fix Our State Indigent Defense System," brought scholars and practitioners from across Missouri, and around the country, to Columbia in order to grapple with this issue. The problems with the Missouri State Public Defender System ("MSPD") were a focus of the discussion that day. Indeed, Cat Kelly, then Deputy Director of the Missouri State Public Defender office, presented at the symposium. She lamented the ongoing crisis facing her office and their efforts to rally support for the MSPD. I was also on the team that studied the operation of the death penalty system in Missouri on behalf of the ABA. That team produced a lengthy report in 2012 entitled "The Missouri Death Penalty Assessment Report." Finally, since 2010, I have been a member of the Missouri Supreme Court Criminal Procedure Committee.

II. Assignment

I have been asked to evaluate whether, on a systemic, i.e., non-individualized basis, the State of Missouri, through the MSPD, is failing to meet its constitutional obligation to provide counsel to indigent defendants.[2] I have agreed to be compensated at the rate of $200 per hour for the work in this case, including testimony.

[2] See Appendix C for list of materials considered in forming this opinion.

III. Background

A. Structure of the Indigent Defense System in Missouri

The MSPD is an independent department of state government that provides trial and appellate representation for indigent defendants across the state. The MSPD is overseen by the Public Defender Commission ("PDC"), whose seven members are appointed by the governor. The PDC appoints the director of the MSPD, a post currently held by Michael Barrett.

The MSPD is divided into a Trial Division, an Appellate/Post-Conviction Division and a Capital Division. The MSPD's 2016 Annual Report noted that the department employed 587 employees, 376 of whom were lawyers. These lawyers were spread across 44 district offices around the state. A District Defender heads up each of the MSPD's District Offices. The District Defenders not only must carry a caseload and generally travel between three to five counties to represent clients, he or she also must effectively manage the lawyers and staff coping with high caseloads and deal with high turnover rates. High turnover means more time spent on reassigning the cases of the departing lawyer, filling the vacant position and then training the new lawyer once the position is filled. The District Defender also must manage the assignment of conflict counsel. According to its 2016 Annual Report, the MSPD contracts with private attorneys to handle about 5% of its annual caseload. Most of these cases involve what the MSPD describes as second- and third-level conflicts. The MSPD handles first-level conflict cases by having the local office send the client that the local office cannot represent to the next nearest defender office for representation. This practice exacerbates the MSPD caseload problem by adding more cases to an already full caseload and increasing time spent traveling by MSPD lawyers.

B. The obligation to provide adequate counsel

As the U.S. Supreme Court recognized in Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 344 (1963): "The right of one charged with crime to counsel may not be deemed fundamental and essential to fair trials in some countries, but it is in ours. From the very beginning, our state and national constitutions and laws have laid great emphasis on procedural and substantive safeguards designed to assure fair trials before impartial tribunals in which every defendant stands equal before the law. This noble ideal cannot be realized if the poor man charged with crime has to face his accusers without a lawyer to assist him."

The 6th Amendment right to counsel does not mean merely that a defendant has a lawyer assigned or appointed to his or her case. Rather, a defendant is entitled to the effective assistance of counsel. McMann v. Richardson, 397 U.S. 759, 771 (1970). Although the Court in Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688 (1984), declined to adopt any specific guidelines in assessing whether defense counsel was constitutionally deficient, it did point to the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, Defense Function, as guides to determine whether counsel's performance was reasonable. The Court did not want to mandate specific guidelines for fear that such guidelines might "distract counsel from the overriding mission of vigorous advocacy of the defendant's cause." Strickland, 466 U.S. at 688-89.

The Supreme Court of Missouri also has acknowledged that the right to counsel includes the effective assistance of counsel. State ex rel. Missouri Public Defender Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592, 597 (Mo. 2012) (en banc). Moreover, to pass constitutional muster, effective representation requires appropriate investigation, preparation and presentation of the client's case. Taylor v. State, 262 S.W.3d 231, 249 (Mo. 2008) (en banc). Following Gideon, indigent defendants in Missouri were initially represented by unpaid court-appointed counsel. After the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in State v. Green, 470 S.W. 2d 571, 573 (Mo. 1971) (en banc) holding it would no longer compel Missouri attorneys to carry the burden of defending indigents, the Missouri legislature established a blended system of local public defender offices and appointed counsel. 470 S.W. 2d at 573. In 1982, in the face of funding shortfalls, the legislature enacted Section 600.011 et seq. of the Missouri code creating the Office of the State Public Defender under the control of the Public Defender Commission. MO. REV. STAT. §§ 600.11 et seq. (1982). The Missouri State Public Defender System was reorganized in 1989 and since then, assistant public defenders have represented the vast majority of indigent defendants in Missouri.

Unquestionably, indigent defendants, like those represented by private lawyers, are entitled to competent counsel. Public defenders are ethically held to the same standards as private lawyers in the performance of their duties. And in Missouri, as around the country, a public defender is not excused from his or her duties to provide competent representation simply because he or she is handling a high caseload. State ex rel. Missouri Public Defender Comm'n v. Pratte, 298 S.W, 3d 870, 880 (Mo. 2009) (en banc); In re Karl Williams Hinkebein, Case No. SC 96089 (Mo. Sept. 12, 2017) (order); ABA, COMM. ON ETHICS & PROF'L RESPONSIBILITY, Formal Op. 06-441 (2006); Norman Lefstein, Securing Reasonable Caseloads: Ethics and Law in Public Defense (2011).

C. What constitutes competent criminal defense lawyering

As already noted, the Strickland Court did not spell out exactly what steps a lawyer must take to be a vigorous advocate on behalf of a criminal defendant. Nevertheless, the ABA Criminal Justice Standards for the Defense Function (4th edition) (2005) represent the best guide to the basic duties of a criminal defense lawyer responsible for providing vigorous advocacy to a client charged with a crime. The MSPD Guidelines for Representation (1992), which specifically set forth what is expected of Missouri public defenders, largely tracks the ABA Standards. I have included excerpts from those ABA Standards that identify the actions that any competent, conscientious criminal defense lawyer would take in defending any serious criminal case.

1. Standard 4-1.3: Continuing Duties of Defense Counsel

Some duties of defense counsel run throughout the period of representation, and even beyond. Defense counsel should consider the impact of these duties at all stages of a criminal prosecution and on all decisions and actions that arise in the course of performing the defense function. These duties include:

a) a duty of confidentiality regarding information relevant to the client's representation which continues after the representation ends;

b) a duty of loyalty toward the client;

c) a duty of candor toward the court and others, tempered by the duties of confidentiality and loyalty;

d) a duty to communicate and keep the client informed and advised of significant developments and potential options and outcomes;

e) a duty to be well-informed regarding the legal options and developments that can affect a client's interests during a criminal representation;

f) a duty to continually evaluate the impact that each decision or action may have at later stages, including trial, sentencing, and post-conviction review;

g) a duty to be open to possible negotiated dispositions of the matter, including the possible benefits and disadvantages of cooperating with the prosecution;

h) a duty to consider the collateral consequences of decisions and actions, including but not limited to the collateral consequences of conviction.

2. Standard 4-1.8: Appropriate Workload

Defense counsel should not carry a workload that, by reason of its excessive size or complexity, interferes with providing quality representation; endangers a client's interest in independent, thorough, or speedy representation; or has a significant potential to lead to the breach of professional obligations. A defense counsel whose workload prevents competent representation should not accept additional matters until the workload is reduced, and should work to ensure competent representation in counsel's existing matters. Defense counsel within a supervisory structure should notify supervisors when counsel's workload is approaching or exceeds professionally appropriate levels.

3. Standard 4-1.9: Diligence, Promptness and Punctuality

Defense counsel should act with diligence and promptness in representing a client, and should avoid unnecessary delay in the disposition of cases. But defense counsel should not act with such haste that quality representation is compromised. Defense counsel and publically-funded defense entities should be organized and supported with adequate staff and facilities to enable them to represent clients effectively and efficiently.

4. Standard 4-3.1: Establishing and Maintaining An Effective Client Relationship

a) Immediately upon appointment or retention, defense counsel should work to establish a relationship of trust and confidence with each client. Defense counsel should explain, at an appropriate time, the necessity for frank and honest discussion of all facts known to the client in order to provide an effective defense. Defense counsel should explain that the attorney-client privilege protects the confidentiality of communications with counsel except in exceptional and well-defined circumstances, and explain what the client can do to help preserve confidentiality.

b) At an early stage, counsel should discuss with the client the objectives of the representation and through what stages of a criminal matter the defense counsel will continue to represent the accused. An engagement letter as described in Standard 4-3.5 should also be provided.

c) Counsel should consider whether the client appears to have a mental impairment or other disability that could adversely affect the representation. Even if a client appears to have such a condition, this does not diminish defense counsel's obligations to the client, including maintaining a normal attorney-client relationship in so far as possible. In such an instance, defense counsel should also consider whether a mental examination or other protective measures are in the client's best interest.

d) In communicating with a client, defense counsel should use language and means that the client is able to understand, which may require special attention when the client is a minor, elderly, or suffering from a mental impairment or other disability.

e) Defense counsel should ensure that space is available and adequate for confidential client consultations.

f) Defense counsel should actively work to maintain an effective and regular relationship with all clients. The obligation to maintain an effective client relationship is not diminished by the fact that the client is in custody.

5. Standard 4-3.3: Interviewing the Client

a) In the initial meeting with a client, defense counsel should begin the process of establishing an effective attorney-client relationship. This includes assuring the client of confidentiality, establishing trust, explaining the posture of the matter, discussing fees if applicable, and inquiring about the client's objectives for the representation. Counsel may also discuss available evidentiary materials with the client, seek information from the client as to the facts and other potential sources of information, and ask what the client's immediate objectives and needs are and how to fulfill them.

b) Counsel should interview the client as many times as necessary for effective representation, which in all but the most simple and routine cases will mean more than once. Defense counsel should make every reasonable effort to meet in person with the client. Consultation with the client regarding available options, immediately necessary decisions, and next steps, should be a part of every meeting.

c) As early as practicable in the representation, defense counsel should also discuss with the client:

i. evidentiary materials relevant to the matter (consistent with the terms of any applicable protective order), and, after sharing such materials with the client, determine in depth the client's view of the facts and other relevant facts known to the client;

ii. the likely length and course of the pending proceedings;

iii. potential sources of helpful information, evidence, and investigation;

iv. the client's wishes regarding, and the likelihood of and steps necessary to gain, release or reduction of supervisory conditions;

v. likely legal options such as motions, trial, and potential negotiated dispositions;

vi. the range of potential outcomes and alternatives, and if convicted, possible punishments;

vii. the possibility and potential costs and benefits of a negotiated disposition, if appropriate, including one that might include cooperation with the government; and viii. relevant collateral consequences resulting from the current situation as well as from possible resolutions of the matter.

6. Standard 4-3.7: Prompt and Thorough Actions to Protect the Client

a) Many important rights of a criminal client can be protected and preserved only by prompt legal action. Defense counsel should inform the client of his or her rights in the criminal process at the earliest opportunity, and timely plan and take necessary actions to vindicate such rights within the scope of the representation.

b) Defense counsel should promptly seek to obtain and review all information relevant to the criminal matter, including but not limited to requesting materials from the prosecution. Defense counsel should, when relevant, take prompt steps to ensure that the government's physical evidence is preserved at least until the defense can examine or evaluate it.

c) Defense counsel should work diligently to develop, in consultation with the client, an investigative and legal defense strategy, including a theory of the case. As the matter progresses, counsel should refine or alter the theory of the case as necessary, and similarly adjust the investigative or defense strategy.

7. Standard 4-4.1: Duty to Investigate and Engage Investigators

a) Defense counsel has a duty to investigate in all cases, and to determine whether there is a sufficient factual basis for criminal charges.

b) The duty to investigate is not terminated by factors such as the apparent force of the prosecution's evidence, a client's alleged admissions to others of facts suggesting guilt, a client's expressed desire to plead guilty or that there should be no investigation, or statements to defense counsel supporting guilt.

c) Defense counsel's investigative efforts should commence promptly and should explore appropriate avenues that reasonably might lead to information relevant to the merits of the matter, consequences of the criminal proceedings, and potential dispositions and penalties. Although investigation will vary depending on the circumstances, it should always be shaped by what is in the client's best interests, after consultation with the client. Defense counsel's investigation of the merits of the criminal charges should include efforts to secure relevant information in the possession of the prosecution, law enforcement authorities, and others, as well as independent investigation. Counsel's investigation should also include evaluation of the prosecution's evidence (including possible re-testing or re-evaluation of physical, forensic, and expert evidence) and consideration of inconsistencies, potential avenues of impeachment of prosecution witnesses, and other possible suspects and alternative theories that the evidence may raise.

d) Defense counsel should determine whether the client's interests would be served by engaging fact investigators, forensic, accounting or other experts, or other professional witnesses such as sentencing specialists or social workers, and if so, consider, in consultation with the client, whether to engage them. Counsel should regularly re-evaluate the need for such services throughout the representation.

e) If the client lacks sufficient resources to pay for necessary investigation, counsel should seek resources from the court, the government, or donors. Application to the court should be made ex parte if appropriate to protect the client's confidentiality. Publicly funded defense offices should advocate for resources sufficient to fund such investigative expert services on a regular basis. If adequate investigative funding is not provided, counsel may advise the court that the lack of resources for investigation may render legal representation ineffective.

8. Standard 4-4.3: Relationship With Witnesses

a) "Witness" in this Standard means any person who has or might have information about a matter, including victims and the client.

b) Defense counsel should know and follow the law and rules of the jurisdiction regarding victims and witnesses. In communicating with witnesses, counsel should know and abide by law and ethics rules regarding the use of deceit and engaging in communications with represented, unrepresented, and organizational persons.

c) Defense counsel or counsel's agents should seek to interview all witnesses, including seeking to interview the victim or victims, and should not act to intimidate or unduly influence any witness.

9. Standard 4-4.6: Preparation for Court Proceedings, and Recording and Transmitting Information Defense counsel should prepare in advance for court proceedings. Adequate preparation depends on the nature of the proceeding and the time available, and will often include: reviewing available documents; considering what issues are likely to arise and the client's position regarding those issues; how best to present the issues and what solutions might be offered; relevant legal research and factual investigation; and contacting other persons who might be of assistance in addressing the anticipated issues. If defense counsel has not had adequate time to prepare and is unsure of the relevant facts or law, counsel should communicate to the court the limits of the defense counsel's knowledge or preparation.

10. Standard 4-5.1: Advising the Client

a) Defense counsel should exercise independent professional judgment when advising a client.

b) Defense counsel should keep the client reasonably and regularly informed about the status of the case. Before significant decision-points, and at other times if requested, defense counsel should advise the client with candor concerning all aspects of the case, including an assessment of possible strategies and likely as well as possible outcomes. Such advisement should take place after counsel is as fully informed as is reasonably possible in the time available about the relevant facts and law. Counsel should act diligently and, unless time does not permit, advise the client of what more needs to be done or considered before final decisions are made.

c) Defense counsel should promptly communicate to the client every plea offer and all significant developments, motions, and court actions or rulings, and provide advice as outlined in this Standard.

d) In rendering advice to the client, counsel should consider the client's desires and views, and may refer not only to law but also to other considerations such as moral, economic, social or political factors that may be relevant to the client's situation. Counsel should attempt to distinguish for the client between legal advice and advice based on such other considerations.

e) Defense counsel should provide the client with advice sufficiently in advance of decisions to allow the client to consider available options, and avoid unnecessarily rushing the accused into decisions.

11. Standard 4-5.4: Consideration of Collateral Consequences

Defense counsel should identify, and advise the client of, collateral consequences that may arise from charge, plea or conviction. Counsel should investigate consequences under applicable federal, state, and local laws, and seek assistance from others with greater knowledge in specialized areas in order to be adequately informed as to the existence and details of relevant collateral consequences. Such advice should be provided sufficiently in advance that it may be fairly considered in a decision to pursue trial, plea, or other dispositions.

12. Standard 4-6.2: Negotiated Disposition Discussions

a) As early as practicable, and preferably before engaging in disposition discussions with the prosecutor, defense counsel should discuss with and advise the client about possible disposition options.

b) Once discussions with the prosecutor begin, defense counsel should keep the accused advised of relevant developments. Defense counsel should promptly communicate and explain to the client any disposition proposals made by the prosecutor, while explaining that presenting the prosecution's offer does not indicate counsel's unwillingness to go to trial.

c) Defense counsel should ensure that the client understands any proposed disposition agreement, including its direct and possible collateral consequences.

d) Defense counsel should not recommend to a defendant acceptance of a disposition without appropriate investigation. Before accepting or advising a disposition, defense counsel should request that the prosecution disclose any information that tends to negate guilt, mitigates the offense or is likely to reduce punishment.

13. Standard 4-8.3: Sentencing

a) Early in the representation, and throughout the pendency of the case, defense counsel should consider potential issues that might affect sentencing. Defense counsel should become familiar with the client's background, applicable sentencing laws and rules, and what options might be available as well as what consequences might arise if the client is convicted. Defense counsel should be fully informed regarding available sentencing alternatives and with community and other resources which may be of assistance in formulating a plan for meeting the client's needs. Defense counsel should also consider whether consultation with an expert specializing in sentencing options or other sentencing issues is appropriate.

b) Defense counsel's preparation before sentencing should include learning the court's practices in exercising sentencing discretion; the collateral consequences of different sentences; and the normal pattern of sentences for the offense involved, including any guidelines applicable for either sentencing and, where applicable, parole. The consequences (including reasonably foreseeable collateral consequences) of potential dispositions should be explained fully by defense counsel to the client.

IV. History of constitutionally deficient defense in Missouri:

As the reports prepared by the Spangenberg Group in 2005 and 2009, the Senate Interim Committee in 2007, National Juvenile Defender Center in 2013, and RubinBrown in 2014 document, the MSPD has been underfunded almost from its inception. Approximately four years after the 1989 elimination of the contract system and the establishment of a statewide system of full-time defenders, The Spangenberg Group ("TSG") was asked to conduct a study of the State Public Defender System for the MSPD and the PDC, under the auspices of the ABA Bar Information Program. The 1993 study focused on the operation of the Public Defender System, the internal allocation of resources, and the overall budgeting and staffing situation compared with other states in terms of caseload and funding of statewide programs. TSG found that the MSPD was clearly underfunded compared to other state public defender programs.

The 1993 report concluded:

> [T]he increased caseload and the low salaries have led to a high turnover of staff over the last two years and several additional experienced attorneys indicated that they may also leave. The effect of the workload, the low salary and the turnover has not surprisingly resulted in morale problems in some offices. Many attorneys feel that without additional resources, they will not be able to provide competent representation to all of their clients. We echo this sentiment in very strong terms.
> TSG, Report on the Operation of the Missouri State Public Defender (1993).

In 2005, in light of rising caseloads and the continuing budget problems, the MSPD approached the Missouri Bar for assistance. The Missouri Bar urged its members across the state to sign up to accept public defender appointments on a pro bono basis because of MSPD's serious case overload. The incoming president of the Missouri Bar (and recently-retired member of the PDC), Douglas A. Copeland, subsequently created a Public Defender Task Force to work with the PDC, the bench, and the bar to identify solutions to address the problems the MSPD faced.

The Public Defender Task Force contracted with TSG to conduct a limited assessment of the MSPD. TSG's 2005 findings were "dire," concluding that the MSPD and its lawyers were operating in a crisis mode. TSG, Assessment of the Missouri State Public Defender System (2005) ("2005 Report") at 2; TSG, Assessment of the Missouri State Public Defender System (2009) ("2009 Report") at 6. TSG stated that "in our opinion, the [MSPD] is on the verge of collapse." 2005 Report at 24. TSG also noted that the PDC had itself reported on June 10, 2005, that "the situation is already at a crisis level, with trends pointing to an impending disaster in Missouri's criminal justice system." Id. As a result, TSG opined that there was reason to believe that some public defender attorneys were not complying with either the Public Defender Guidelines for Representation or the Missouri Supreme Court Rules of Professional Conduct and that attorneys were failing to provide the effective assistance of counsel to their clients.

TSG's 2005 study found among other things:

a) Staffing

TSG stated that the MSPD turnover exceeded that of any other public defender system in the country. An extremely high level of turnover among staff attorneys created serious problems. With many experienced attorneys leaving, cases were being distributed to the few remaining experienced attorneys or to new attorneys who were not yet ready for either a significant caseload or serious felony cases. The turnover problem was causing the remaining lawyers to shoulder the burden, further contributing to a sense of overload and burnout. Additionally, the turnover problem was creating a serious risk that newly-assigned attorneys would be unprepared or inexperienced.

High turnover also adversely affected supervision because most supervisors and district defenders were consumed with the burdens of their own ever-increasing caseloads. Finally, experienced lawyers were leaving the MSPD not only because of burnout and caseload pressures, but also because salaries were capped at $52,452 for all trial attorneys, which was the lowest that TSG had encountered in the country.

b) Quality of Representation

The combination of oppressive caseloads and turnover led some public defenders to describe their practice as triage in which defenders were forced to choose between providing adequate assistance to some clients by neglecting others. TSG reported that several defenders admitted that the volume of cases was so high that some public defenders could not provide effective assistance of counsel to many of their clients. In particular, TSG's 2005 findings reported serious problems with client contact, including lack of timely communication.

c) Funding

Despite rising caseloads, the Missouri State Public Defender had gone through several budget cycles without an increase in full-time equivalent positions. There was also a substantial lack of non-attorney support staff. TSG reported that Missouri had the lowest per capita expenditures of any statewide public defender program in the country. Missouri ranked 47th in terms of cost per capita for indigent defense.

d) Indigency Determinations

In 2005, TSG warned that public defenders were too quick to find defendants ineligible for counsel when in fact, some of these people were unable to retain counsel. TSG concluded that there were substantial problems with indigency determinations, noting in particular the presumption that a defendant was ineligible for MSPD services if the defendant had been released on a bail of $5,000 or more. TSG observed that some public defenders were finding a defendant ineligible if such a bond had been made, without regard to other factors, such as whether a small percentage of the bail was paid to a bondsmen or whether a friend or family member posted the bond but could not also afford to hire counsel for the defendant.

e) Representation in Conflict Cases

In 2005, TSG criticized MSPD's handling of conflict cases, echoing its concerns raised in 1993. Most conflict cases were referred within the MSPD to another office. TSG concluded that public defender handling of conflict cases, including co-defendants, created an appearance of a conflict in the same manner that attorneys from the same law firm handling conflict cases would create such an appearance. TSG also noted that conflict cases were taking too long to transfer from the originating office to the conflict office or for assignment to private counsel.

f) Comparison with Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System

In its 2005 Report, TSG referred to the ABA's "The Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System" (2002). TSG noted that these principles have been generally accepted and used as guidelines to assess indigent defense systems across the country. TSG's 2005 Report concluded that the MSPD failed to meet seven of the ten principles:

i. Principle 2 – Where caseload is sufficiently high, the public defense delivery system consists of both a defender office and the active participation of the private bar.

ii. Principle 4 – Defense counsel is provided sufficient time and a confidential space with which to meet with the client.

iii. Principle 5 – Defense counsel's workload is controlled to permit the rendering of quality representation.

iv. Principle 6 – Defense counsel's ability, training, and experience match the complexity of the case.

v. Principle 7 – The same attorney continuously represents the client until completion of the case.

vi. Principle 8 – There is parity between defense counsel and the prosecution with respect to resources and defense counsel is included as an equal partner in the justice system.

vii. Principle 10 – Defense counsel is supervised and systematically reviewed for quality and efficiency according to nationally and locally adopted standards.

As a result of the efforts of the Missouri bar and the growing recognition of the MSPD problems, the Missouri Senate established an Interim Committee on the MSPD system. In 2007, following its review which included taking testimony, the Interim Committee issued a report. That report concluded:

> The Senate Interim Committee on the Public Defender System recommends that the caseloads of public defenders be reduced, support staff be increased, the number of public defenders be increased, whether through FTE or contract counsel, along with the base salary of public defenders being increased and funding being added through supplanting unconstitutional court costs and providing additional appropriations. The Committee believes that these goals can be attained using or implementing the aforementioned programs and recommendations.
>
> Senate Interim Committee Report at 15.

The PDC's 2007 annual report echoed the concerns expressed by the Interim Committee's report and stressed that the severity of the crisis left open only one viable option. Public defenders would have to start refusing to accept cases thereby precipitating a constitutional crisis in Missouri's courts. Then Chief Justice of the Missouri Supreme Court, Laura Denvir Stith, responded to the crisis in her 2008 State of the Judiciary Address, by urging legislative action.

The Missouri legislature did act. Senate Bill 37 was introduced which proposed to set caseload maximums and contract with private attorneys to handle cases exceeding those maximums. Although the bill passed unanimously in the Senate and with a substantial majority in the House, on July 13, 2009, Governor Nixon vetoed the bill.

The MSPD did not limit its efforts to the legislature. It sought relief in the courts as well. In November 2007, the PDC voted to adopt 18 C.S.R. § 10-4.010 ("the rule") which set out a procedure by which public defenders could refuse new cases. The rule authorized the MSPD director to declare an office of limited availability when its caseload became excessive. That determination was to be based on an office exceeding the maximum caseload standard for a period of three consecutive calendar months.

On October 6, 2008, the District Public Defender notified the presiding judge of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit that the District 13 Office had been certified as having limited availability. The District Defender informed the court that the District 13 Office would not accept probation violation proceedings pursuant to a suspended execution of sentence until the District 13 Office was reinstated to full availability. When a public defender attempted to put this policy into practice, however, filing a written notice with the court that the public defender was unavailable to represent a defendant in a probation revocation matter, the judge refused, appointing the public defender to the case, despite the rule and the notice.

The PDC, the Director of the MSPD, and the individual public defender subsequently filed a petition for a writ of prohibition with the Court of Appeals for the Western District, seeking to restrain the trial judge from appointing the public defender to the indigent probationer's case. That case, along with two others, ultimately went to the Missouri Supreme Court. In Pratte, 298 S.W.3d at 877-78, the Court acknowledged that the MSPD caseload crisis continued to grow and that crisis raised the question of whether public defenders were fully meeting their ethical duties to their clients. Nonetheless, the Court found that the PDC rule relied upon to declare that an office was of limited availability denied an indigent of the right to representation contrary to Section 600.086. The court concluded that the PDC did not have the authority by rule to eliminate a category of defendants—in this case those facing a probation violation—that by statute the public defender is required to represent. In the companion case, the court did find that the trial judge lacked the authority to appoint a public defender to a case in his private capacity when that public defender declined the case because of his office's limited availability status.

The Court in Pratte went on to clarify, however, that the PDC rule could be properly used to manage its caseload problems as long as the MSPD did not reject categorically a class of cases. It encouraged public defenders to work with judges and prosecutors to reduce the demand for public defender services. The court also discussed, but did not resolve, the troubling question of under what circumstances private lawyers could be conscripted to deal with the MSPD caseload problems.

In 2008, SPG was retained by the Missouri bar to again assess the MSPD. TSG, working in conjunction with the Center for Justice, Law and Society at George Mason University authored a report in 2009 assessing the MSPD. In its report, TSG referenced the ABA's Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads ("Eight Guidelines") issued in August 2009.[3]

In establishing these Guidelines, the ABA relied on ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Opinion 06-441 (2006), which addressed the obligations of indigent defenders burdened with excessive caseloads. TSG utilized these Eight Guidelines in evaluating the MSPD. Specifically, TSG stated that, "the Eight Guidelines point to a growing crisis of constitutional magnitude, which despite MSPD's longstanding, systematic efforts, has been permitted to worsen, placing indigents persons accused of crimes, victims of crime, and the larger system of criminal justice in great peril." 2009 Report at 13 (sic).

Among the major findings detailed in TSG's 2009 Report was that MSPD was facing a resource crisis after a decade of underfunding. As of 2008, based upon preliminary data from the 50 states, Missouri now had the lowest per-capita expenditures of all states, except for Mississippi. Before the staff attorney additions in July of 2009, there had been no increase in the number of full time employees for six years, though MSPD's caseload had risen by over 12,000 cases. The report highlighted the low salaries that contributed along with high caseload and bad working conditions to high turnover. For some lawyers who stayed with the MSPD, especially those with staggering law school debt, current salaries simply were not high enough to cover all expenses so some even worked second jobs.

TSG noted that in terms of excessive workloads, since 2005 the situation had become even more severe. TSG's 2009 Report describes frustrated and disgruntled public defenders who reported feeling trapped and unable to discharge the kinds of fundamental obligations described by the ABA in its Eight Guidelines because of an impossible volume of cases they were being required to handle. The report also described at length how high caseloads adversely affected the ability of public defenders to represent their clients competently.

As TSG observed in its report, the Eight Guidelines stress the importance of adequate supervision to ensure that public defenders are not overwhelmed by an excessive caseload. As the 2009 Report documented, most supervisors simply did not have the time to do the job they were being asked to do. The demands of the supervisors' own caseloads resulted in inadequate mentoring, training and supervision of the lawyers working for them.

At a symposium at the University of Missouri School of Law in February 2010, numerous speakers identified Missouri as one of the most underfunded public defender programs in the country. Speakers described the host of problems confronting underfunded public defenders grappling with excessive caseloads. In an article that I authored as the foreword to the symposium edition to the summer 2010 edition of the Missouri Law Review, I addressed the longstanding problems with MSPD. I also looked at the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in Pratte. I opined that the court's efforts to deal with the MSPD's caseload crisis in Pratte would prove unworkable and not resolve the systemic deficiencies. Uphoff, Foreword, 75 MO. L.REV. 667, 677 (2010).

Following the Pratte decision, the MSPD continued to rely on PDC Rule 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010 to cope with their caseload crisis. In January 2010, the public defender office notified 38th Circuit Presiding Judge Orr that the public defender district office assigned to represent defendants in that circuit had exceeded the maximum caseload permitted under the caseload protocol for three consecutive months and, therefore, was at risk of being certified for limited availability. In accordance with the requirements of 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010, meetings were held in March and April 2010 that included Judge Orr, local prosecutors, and personnel from both the state and district public defender's office. Those meetings failed to produce any agreement that would reduce the local office's caseload. Accordingly, the MSPD director certified the district defender's office as on limited availability as of July 1, 2010. After the district office was certified and, as permitted by 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010(2)(A), the state public defender declared the district defender office as unavailable to accept additional cases until August 2010.

On July 28, 2010, Jared Blacksher appeared for his initial arraignment before Judge Waters who, over objection, appointed "the public defender's office" to represent him. On August 2, 2010, the state public defender's office filed a motion to set aside the appointment because it violated 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010. After holding a hearing, Judge Waters stated he felt he had no choice but to appoint the public defender to represent Blacksher. The PDC, MSPD and the district defender sought relief from the Missouri Supreme Court.

In Waters, the Missouri Supreme Court again confronted the question of "whether the duty of public defenders to provide a defense to indigent criminal defendants as set out in section 600.042.4 requires them to accept a judge's appointment to act as counsel no matter the size of their existing caseload and their ability to provide effective representation to their existing or any additional clients and despite the mechanisms contained in 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010." 370 S.W. 3d at 605. The Waters Court reiterated what it had said in Pratte that even if the resources provided for indigent defense are inadequate, a judge nevertheless has the duty to ensure that the defendant receives the effective assistance of counsel. As the Waters Court stressed, "[s]imply put, a judge may not appoint counsel when the judge is aware that, for whatever reason, counsel is unable to provide effective representation to a defendant. Effective, not just pro forma, representation is required by the Missouri and federal constitutions." Id. at 607.

The Court also reiterated that a defender cannot ethically take on a new case if doing so will adversely affect counsel's ability to competently defend existing clients. The Court went on to recognize that 18 C.S.R. 10-4.010 was designed to aid judges, prosecutors and public defenders in ensuring that effective representation is not compromised by excessive caseloads. It noted, however, that it was not faced in this case, nor in Pratte, with the issue of deciding whether the PDC had the authority to promulgate a rule governing the management of its caseload or whether the protocol it adopted was valid. Because Judge Waters did not find the PDC rule invalid, he erred in ordering the public defender to disobey it and appointing the office to this case in the face of the rule. Nonetheless, the court held that trial judges have the inherent authority over their docket to work cooperatively with prosecutors and public defender and play a management role to craft solutions that avoid or limit the need to have public defender offices certified as having limited availability.

Other national groups have confirmed the serious funding deficiencies in Missouri. In the spring of 2013, the National Juvenile Defender Center ("NJDC") released a report declaring that the Missouri indigent defense system was "in crisis" after enduring years of crushing caseloads with inadequate resources to provide its services. Missouri: Justice Rationed; An Assessment of Access to Counsel and Quality of Juvenile Defense Representation in Delinquency Proceedings, THE NATIONAL JUVENILE DEFENSE CENTER 7 (2013). In 2014, RubinBrown issued a report on behalf of the ABA's Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defenders. The Missouri Project: A Study of the Missouri Public Defender System and Attorney Workload Standards, RUBINBROWN (2014). RubinBrown assessed the MSPD workload data after the MSPD public defenders became the first defenders nationally to track time in five-minute increments. The RubinBrown report shows that MSPD lawyers were not spending the amount of time needed to perform the tasks identified as necessary to provide competent representation.

Certainly, that is the case for the sole public defender assigned to represent juvenile defendants in St. Louis County. A scathing report issued by the Department of Justice on July 31, 2015, found "substantial deficiencies in the State's system of ensuring that indigent juveniles in St. Louis County receive meaningful access to counsel." The DOJ report described the single public defender handling juvenile cases as having an excessive caseload. The DOJ concluded that the "failings reflect a system devoid of adversarial process. When no motions or appeals are filed, when no independent investigation takes place, when the actions of the police go unexamined, when all but a handful of cases result in a guilty plea to all counts and when DOJ recommended dispositions are almost always accepted without challenge, the only possible conclusion is that children in St. Louis County do not receive adequate or effective representation in delinquency proceedings, in violation of the Constitution." Investigation of the St. Louis Family Court, St. Louis, Missouri, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE (2015).

The Missouri Legislature's reaction to the MSPD's funding crisis has been mixed in recent years. The Legislature responded to Waters by enacting Section 600.062, which blocked the PDC or MSPD director from declaring an office unavailable and denied public defenders the ability to refuse a case without prior court approval. Nevertheless, the Legislature has approved budget increases for the MSPD. Yet even when the Legislature has taken steps in recent years to increase funding, the governor has thwarted these efforts. In 2014, the Missouri legislature appropriated $3,472,238 to permit the MSPD to contract out all conflict cases as part of its FY2015 budget. Although Governor Nixon line item vetoed this funding, that veto was overridden and the funds were added to MSPD's core budget. However, Governor Nixon only released $500,000 of those funds during FY2015.

Shortly after the release of the DOJ report criticizing the representation of juveniles in St. Louis County, MSPD Director Michael Barrett sent a letter to Governor Nixon highlighting the MSPD's funding woes and requesting a $10 million supplemental budget. Letter from Michael Barrett, Director, MSPD, to Governor Nixon (August 7, 2015) (see Appendix D). Not only was no budget increase forthcoming, but in FY2016, MSPD's appropriations core was cut by $3,472,238. On August 2, 2016, Barrett made national news by appointing Governor Nixon to represent an indigent defendant in Cole County. Letter from Michael Barrett, Director, MSPD, to Governor Nixon (August 2, 2016) (see Appendix E). Governor Nixon successfully challenged that appointment when the trial court ruled that Barrett lacked the authority to assign a public defender case to a private lawyer.

In FY2017, $4,500,000 was added to MSPD's core budget but Governor Nixon directed that all but $1 million of those funds be withheld from the MSPD. In January 2017, Missouri's new governor, Defendant Greitens, pledged to restore an additional $2.5 million in the next budget, for a total of $3.5 million, still short of the prior year's allocation of an additional $4.5 million. As of the date of this report, Greitens has still not released the $3 million that Nixon withheld from the MSPD's FY2017 budget.

On or around September 27, 2017, David Wallis, District Defender of Trial District 13 sent an email to local judges saying that the public defenders in Boone and Cooper County would be violating ethical rules if they continued to take new cases. According to Wallis, "every attorney under our supervision is currently violating the Rules of Profession Conduct. Their current individual caseloads create a conflict of interest with existing clients because they are forced to choose effective representation of one client to the detriment of other clients." Ex. 3 to Michael Barrett's Deposition Testimony, Church v. Missouri, No. 17-04057-CV-C-NKL (Oct. 4, 2017) ("Barrett Deposition Testimony") (see Appendix I). Presiding Judge Kevin Crane responded to the Wallis email by emailing the members of the Boone County bar on September 27, 2017 and saying that the Boone county judges would be appointing private lawyers to represent indigent defendants starting that day.

Undoubtedly, Wallis wholeheartedly believes the public defenders under his supervision have caseloads that are so high that they cannot take on additional case without violating their ethical obligations to existing clients. David Wallis is not the only District Defender who has recently notified a local judge about the ethical dilemma confronting public defenders. In a story on NPR, Dan Margolies reported that other public defenders already have or are planning to notify their local judges that they cannot take on any new cases. Margolies, Many Missouri Public Defenders Decline New Cases After State Supreme Court Disciplines Lawyer, NPR (Oct. 6, 2017).) (see Appendix F). In that story, Michael Barrett is quoted as saying:

> If I was a cartoonist for a newspaper, I'd draw a public defender whose got two guns pointed at him from either side of their head: On one side, the (Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel) and the Supreme Court saying "I dare you to take that case and I'm going to take your law license." On the other side is the local court who says, "I dare you to not take that case. And I'll hold you in contempt." That is our world right now.
> Id.

Given the dilemma facing the MSPD lawyers, Barrett sent a letter on September 11, 2017, to all MSPD lawyers reminding them that they are ethically obligated to decline cases if, because of high caseloads, they cannot competently represent their clients consistent with those ethical obligations. Ex. 2 to Barrett Deposition Testimony (see Appendix H). Barrett also reassured public defenders that they would not be fired for refusing a case consistent with their ethical obligations. Id. In the face of excessive caseloads, low salaries and the threat of disciplinary action, the turnover rate for MSPD lawyers has risen to "upwards of 25 percent." Barrett Deposition Testimony at 167:1-16 (see Appendix G). That, of course, will only make a bad situation even worse for MSPPD clients.

g) Excessive Caseloads

The 2014 Delphi study conducted by RubinBrown demonstrated that with the number of lawyers employed by the MSPD, the Missouri public defenders lacked sufficient time to perform the tasks necessary to competently represent their clients given the volume of cases they are required to handle. Since that report, the number of cases has risen but the number of staff lawyers has remained virtually the same. The affidavits on file in this case reflect what the past reports in Missouri also have consistently shown. Missouri public defenders struggling with excessive caseloads operate in a triage fashion that ultimately adversely affects their clients' right to effective representation.

Not surprisingly, excessive caseloads result in defenders being underprepared for trial that not only deprives defendants of their right to a fair trial but also increases the risk of wrongful convictions. Perhaps even more significant is the fact that excessive caseloads adversely affect a public defender's ability to obtain a favorable plea bargain or a good sentence result. Finally, excessive caseloads lead to poor and limited client communication, which contributes to the pressure on neglected clients simply to plead guilty regardless of their guilt or innocence, or the strengths and weaknesses of the state's case against them.

V. Empirical Observations

In addition to reviewing affidavits, exhibits, and reports, I visited a small sample of courts in central Missouri to observe to what extent, if any, the MSPD caseload pressures were impacting indigent clients.

A. Boone County

I went to Boone County on September 7, 25, and 28, 2017. In Boone County, indigent defendants generally appear at their initial appearance without counsel. During my visits, most of the defendants who were in custody appeared on video and were not present in the courtroom. None of the defendants who appeared on video were represented by a public defender except for one defendant in a misdemeanor case whose public defender happened to be in court on several other matters. That public defender advised the court that a plea bargain had been worked out and asked that the matter be set for a pretrial date.

For those in custody facing a felony charge, no public defender was available at the initial appearance to make a bail argument. Defendants were advised to apply for a public defender and cases were adjourned for a week to two weeks for a status conference. In many instances, the judge ordered a bond investigation but the unrepresented defendants had no opportunity to request a personal recognizance bond or argue for lower bail. Indeed, the judge cut off one defendant trying to explain that his arrest on a warrant was a mistake and told him he could explain things once he had counsel. His case, however, was continued for twenty-two days until the next court appearance. Another defendant, appearing without counsel, asked the court for a recognizance bond which was summarily denied.

Several defendants in custody on misdemeanors were advised that the prosecutor was willing to offer a fine with credit for time served to satisfy the fine and court costs if the defendant was willing to plead guilty. As with misdemeanor defendants who appeared in person for their initial appearance, the judge announced to all defendants that if the prosecutor was waiving jail, they would be ineligible for public defender services. Those defendants who did not want to plead guilty, or those defendants for whom the prosecutor was unwilling to waive jail were told to go to the public defender to apply if they lacked funds to hire counsel. Several indicated that they had already been to the public defender office but had not heard anything about their application. These defendants were given a status date several weeks later and urged to again follow up with the public defender office.

Most of the defendants in custody as well as those who had bonded out and walked into court, accepted the prosecutor's offer of no jail time and entered a guilty plea. Others who had posted bond and showed up for their initial appearance in felony cases were advised to apply for the public defender and report back one month later. Several defendants who appeared reported that they had gone to the public defender after their initial appearance but were deemed ineligible for a public defender. These defendants were told to seek private counsel and given another status date a month later. For defendants with jobs, multiple court appearances not only cost the defendant money, but also may threaten the defendant's employment.

During my visits, I observed several public defenders speaking to their clients in the spectators' gallery and in the jury box where defendants in custody were seated waiting for their case to be called. These communications were not in a confidential setting. Rather, others were sitting close and clearly within earshot of these attorney-client communications.

B. Cole County

I visited Jefferson City on September 29, 2017, to observe the proceedings that morning. I also spoke to the presiding judge after the morning session. The judge, who had been on the bench for over twenty years, stated he had noted a significant difference in his court in the last 2 or 3 years with respect to the availability of public defenders. He said public defenders used to appear at initial appearances but no longer do so unless they are already representing a defendant on another matter. He also indicated that Cole County created a pretrial release program because of the significant lag time between initial appearance and the appointment of a public defender.

I also spoke with the judge's bailiff who stated they have video arraignments for those in custody. The public defenders do not appear with such defendants so the cases are set over for a week for appointment of counsel. The bailiff said it was usually two or three weeks before a public defender was actually appointed for those in custody.

As in Boone County, those who had posted bond and were appearing for their initial appearance were told to apply for a public defender and given a date of November 3 to report back. Both the bailiff and the prosecutor, Tristin Estep, indicated that the public defenders do not appear at initial appearance with defendants who have posted bond. They stated it usually takes 30 to 60 days before a public defender is appointed because the office is so "backed up."

During my visit, one defendant complained he had applied for a public defender while in jail but had heard nothing. The judge advised him to go back to the public defender's office. In addition, as in Boone County, after the prosecutor waived jail time, many misdemeanor defendants plead guilty in exchange for a sentence of time served or a fine.

C. Audrain County

Audrain County Courthouse is located in Mexico, a small city of about 12,000 people about forty-four miles from Columbia. I observed court there on the morning of September 12, 2017. Unlike in Boone or Cole County, indigent defendants do sometimes appear at initial appearances with public defenders if they have completed an application and been found indigent. A paralegal from the public defender office was in court during my visit and assisted the public defender in interviewing defendants in custody in the jury box. As in Boone County, these attorney-client communications were not confidential in that other defendants were seated nearby. The public defender and paralegal also interviewed defendants who walked in and requested counsel. Again, those conversations were conducted amid other people in the audience. Nonetheless, unlike Boone County, I witnessed public defenders in some cases make bail arguments at initial appearances.

Assistant Prosecutor Scott Fox confirmed that public defenders frequently argued for lower bail or a recognizance bond at initial appearances except on those cases where he would object because the victim in the case had not been given appropriate notice. As in Boone and Cole County, several defendants who walked in after posting bond were referred to the public defender office and given a new status date over a month away. One defendant informed the judge that he had been to the public defender and was advised he did not qualify because of his disability income. When the defendant told the court he had no money to have counsel, his case was set for an indigency hearing.

D. Morgan County

On October 3, 2017, I went to Versailles to observe the Morgan County Court. However, there were not any arraignments that day nor were any scheduled that week. I spoke with the court clerk Pat Wasdyke, who said they usually set all of the public defender cases on Wednesdays. After a defendant is arrested, the defendant is given a public defender application. If the defendant qualifies, then a public defender will appear with the defendant at the initial appearance.

Wasdyke noted that if the defendant posts high bond, then that defendant will likely lose his or her public defender. If a person bonds out and walks in for an initial appearance, that defendant is given a public defender application, asked to fill it out, and then her office faxes the completed application to the public defender office. The defendant is then given a court date several weeks away for a status conference.

E. Recent Contacts with Missouri public defenders

As already noted, I met with the MSPD district defenders and office supervisors in September 2016 at a training focused on the ethical challenges public defenders supervisors face when they and their lawyers struggle with excessive caseloads. The supervising public defenders to a person complained that the lawyers they were supervising did not have enough time to perform consistent with what is required by the MSPD Guidelines for Representation and thereby provide competent representation to all or even most of their clients. The supervisors were especially worried for the younger, inexperienced lawyers in their office who were ill equipped to deal with the crush of cases they were being asked to handle.

I also conducted phone interviews within the past month with Josh Peter, Matt Gass, and Patrick Kutz, three lawyers who left the public defender office within the past year. Both Gass and Peter also submitted affidavits on file in this case. I spoke to all three of them about their experiences with the MSPD, their observation about their fellow public defenders, and the extent to which their high caseloads affected their ability to effectively represent their clients.

While in the past, I have talked with many public defenders about their work and I would have liked to speak to current PDs, I was unable to do so given the pending litigation.

VI. Conclusions

Based on conversations at the District Defenders workshop in September 2016, the affidavits and reports on file in this case, my observation during my court visits, frequent conversations with Missouri public defenders over the years including Kutz, Peter and Gass, and my own professional experiences, I conclude that: Missouri public defenders are handling too many cases leaving defenders insufficient time or the resources to do all of the tasks needed to adequately defend their clients. The reoccurring problems caused by excessive caseloads are as follows:

A. Lack of Representation at Initial Appearances and Failure to Conduct Prompt Interviews of Detained & Released Clients

Although the MSPD Guidelines and the ABA Standards discuss the role of the defender at the initial appearance in felony cases, it appears that many Missouri defendants are unrepresented at this critical stage of a criminal case. Not only are defenders not available to argue for a client's release on a personal recognizance bond, but there often is a serious delay before public defenders ever meet their clients. This leads to unnecessary jail time for clients who might have been released if the court were presented with information justifying a personal recognizance bond or at least a lower bond. In Lafayette County, Matt Gass stated that his excessive caseload backed up the system to the point that the local jail in Lexington was filled and some of his clients had to be shipped to Saline and Johnson County. That only exacerbated Gass's time problems because he was the only attorney in Lafayette County and then had to travel over an hour to these adjoining counties to visit his clients.

In many counties in Missouri, public defender caseloads prevent those public defenders from seeing defendants within ten days of their initial appearance. Rather, as the affidavits, my court visits and my conversations with Peter, Kutz and Gass reflect, there is often a significant lag time between arrest and when counsel is able to schedule and advocate for a defendant's release on bail. As a result of this delay, defendants and their families may suffer severe consequences—loss of job, loss of transportation, eviction. This is especially troubling for those who have been wrongfully arrested—on a stale or recalled warrant for example.

In addition, the long lag time between a defendant's initial appearance and the appointment of counsel, coupled with a failure to conduct prompt interviews of defendants in custody, contributes to cases of unnecessary incarceration for Missouri citizens arrested or being held wrongfully. Stories in the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch, see, e.g., Robert Patrick & Jennifer S. Mann, Jailed by Mistake, St Louis Post-Dispatch (Oct. 26, 2013) (see Appendix J), have documented many such cases and Patrick Kutz confirmed this problem. The TSG 2009 Report also discussed this problem.

The failure to do timely first interviews also means that investigations are often delayed weeks and or even months before being initiated. Such a delay often can negatively affect the attorney- client relationship. Both clients in custody, as well those who have been released on bond may be adversely affected if counsel waits weeks to start any investigation. Indeed, a delayed investigation ultimately may compromise counsel's ability to successfully defend the case. The award winning documentary "Murder on a Sunday Morning" recounts the true story of two Jacksonville, Florida public defenders successfully winning an acquittal of a 15-year-old defendant charged with murder. One of the key factors for the defense was that a defense investigator was able to take photos of the young defendant's facial bruising right after the initial appearance, which corroborated the defendant's claim that his confession was beaten out of him. It is highly unlikely those photos would ever have been taken by a Missouri public defender.

Peter, Gass, Kutz and other Missouri public defenders spoke to the common experience of those lawyers who have to cope with excessive caseloads: the need to deal with the press of the cases on the docket that day so that the needs of other clients, especially the newest clients are put off. Inevitably, that means that investigations are virtually always launched after a significant delay. In turn, that means witnesses never located, critical surveillance tapes taped over, and important evidence never discovered.

B. Sufficiency of Time to Communicate with and Counsel Clients

Central to meantingful representation in criminal case is establishing a good attorney-client relationship built on trust. It is difficult to build that trust when the client is already frustrated waiting weeks before first seeing his or her public defender. A thorough initial interview is critical to launching a timely, effective case investigation but such thorough interviews cannot be done if counsel has too many cases and feels pressured to do a rushed interview. Moreover, even if one starts out with a good relationship, that trust will be quickly eroded if the defender is tied up in so many cases he or she cannot continue to keep the client informed of case developments. The TSG reports mirror what is reported in the affidavits and in my conversations with public defenders. Excessive caseloads severely limit time needed to build and maintain good lines of communication with so many clients.

A public defender intern laughed in my law school criminal litigation skills course when I demonstrated how to conduct a meaningful initial interview. He said he had seen many of the public defenders in the Columbia trial office interview clients and none had spent more than a fraction of the time I spent or covered the areas covered in my interview. Again, the TSG reports and my conversations with public defenders reveal that Missouri public defenders often put client communication on the back burner as they struggle to deal with day-to-day problems. Many Missouri public defenders reported an inability to follow through on office policies requiring seeing clients at least once every 30 to 60 days depending on whether the client was in custody or not. Moreover, when defenders finally see their clients after long periods of no contact, they often face angry clients who have little confidence in their defenders and do not trust the recommendations they make.

Communication issues are compounded by the high turnover in the public defender office and by the fact that the public defender conflict procedures, at least up until July 1, 2017, require travel to adjoining counties. Clients get frustrated telling their stories to a second and sometimes third public defender. That leads to more requests for continuances, as the new lawyer needs time to catch up on that case while trying to do so in a host of other cases as well. This shuffling of cases often further delays case investigation and complicates client communication, but also it increases the pressure on defendants to simply plead guilty to get the case over. Thus, poor client communication can interfere with a client's right to effective assistance of counsel in many ways. Defendants may not learn of plea offers in a timely manner. See Missouri v. Frye, 566 U.S. 134, 145-46 (2012). Rushed discussion of plea deals often will not include any discussion of the collateral consequences of the pleading guilty. Perhaps most importantly, poor communication and limited contact can cause innocent defendants to accept guilty pleas because they have no confidence in their lawyer's ability or will to defend them. It also can affect a client's sense that he or she was fairly treated by the system.

C. Justice Delayed Can Be Justice Denied

In its 2009 Report, TSG noted that defendants were filing pro se motions in order to ensure that their speedy trial rights were not jeopardized by the problems with public defender representation. TSG noted that in State ex rel. McKee v. Riley, a defendant charged with several counts of tampering with motor vehicles was detained for approximately a year and a half, with his case continued five times. 240 S.W.3d 720, 730 (Mo. 2007). Though he was represented by the public defender, he repeatedly filed speedy trial motions, pro se, as his case was continued time after time. The Supreme Court directed the trial court to immediately convene a hearing to determine whether the defendant's speedy trial rights had been violated, observing that:

> In considering how to weigh any delay caused by crowded dockets, this Court and Respondents must take into consideration that the delay in this case is not unique. Numerous other petitions for writs have been filed in this Court by persons incarcerated while awaiting disposition of their charges in this and on some occasions in other jurisdictions, similarly alleging lengthy delays. The right to a speedy trial is an important right that the courts of this state are duty-bound to honor, even in the face of heavy trial dockets and competing demands for trial. Protracted and unreasonable delays in criminal cases due to crowded dockets cannot become routine. Neither is it acceptable for the prosecuting attorney and defense counsel to accept or request such routine continuances without objection. The defendant's right to a speedy trial and the public's interest in timely resolution of criminal cases demands that this and other similar cases receive more expeditious treatment, even in the face of competing demands on counsels' and the court's time.

> This Court does not mean to suggest that any party to this proceeding has intended to violate any defendant's speedy trial rights, but—unreasonable delay in run-of-the-mill criminal cases cannot be justified by simply asserting that the public resources provided by the State's criminal-justice system are limited and that each case must await its turn.‖ [The defendant] is entitled to a prompt hearing on his claim that his constitutional rights have been violated and, if they have not yet been, then he is entitled to a prompt trial on the merits of these charges.

The affidavits, depositions, and other exhibits on file in this case show that excessive caseloads and high turnover continue to plague the MSPD and the criminal justice system. As Patrick Kutz and Matt Gass described to me in our phone interviews, the number of cases to be handled required constant triaging. Trying to pull everything together for a trial in one case meant putting virtually every other case on hold. Admittedly, that tension exists to some degree in every public defender office in the country. However, the problem is exacerbated in a program like the MSPD where excessive caseloads compromise the ability of defenders to provide many of their clients with constitutionally adequate representation. Indeed, the sheer volume of cases inevitably leads to long delays before one's public defender finally has the time to fully review one's case.

In addition to compromising the defendant's right to a speedy, fair trial, such delays increase the risk of wrongful convictions as evidence disappears, memories fade, and witnesses move never to be found. Moreover, these delays coupled with poor communication pressure frustrated defendants to accept plea deals just to get the case finished. The collateral consequences to defendant's families—and those of victims—while cases drag on are also significant.

D. Completion of Necessary Investigation and Discovery Practice

The TSG reports, public defender affidavits, and my recent conversations with former public defenders also reveal that excessive caseloads and limited investigative staff adversely affect their ability to adequately investigate most of their cases. Again, defenders are forced to pick only a few cases upon which to focus their investigative resources. That means that misdemeanors, except in truly unusual circumstances, simply are not investigated. In fact, most investigation is done only in serious felonies, particularly aggravated sex offenses, which take a substantial amount of time. Lesser felonies, like misdemeanors, are put at the bottom of the list and rarely investigated. Moreover, since lawyers and investigators are both pressed for time, even those cases that are investigated may suffer because investigators may rely on phone interviews instead of interviewing witnesses in person. In addition, given the sheer volume of cases investigators are asked to handle, rarely can investigators devote the time needed to conduct a thorough investigation, particularly in terms of locating essential witnesses, which can be very time-consuming. Nor do defenders in most cases have time to visit the crime scene.

The volume of cases public defenders are handling means that much investigation is not done until shortly before trial. That increases the chances that witnesses are not located or evidence overlooked. The TSG reports also describe a willingness to shut down all investigation once a client signals a willingness to plead guilty. Given the crushing caseloads defenders are coping with, this form of triage is understandable. Yet it runs contrary to what is demanded of conscientious defense counsel under the ABA standards. Indeed, the evidence on file in this case reflects what I heard at the district defenders workshop last August and was confirmed by Josh Peter. That is, with such excessive caseloads, defenders were all too willing to plead their clients guilty even before they had collected and read discovery in a case or had done any investigation or legal research.

Excessive caseloads also limit the extent to which most public defenders engage in litigating discovery issues. Discovery is often limited to a one-time, formal boilerplate request, rather than more extensive motions practice (e.g., motions to compel) and hearings on questions of discovery. Kutz noted that it often took weeks or even months to get discovery from prosecutors in St Louis City. Their office policy, unlike many other offices, was not to enter into a plea bargain until reviewing discovery. However, since there was a long lag time in getting discovery, in part due to dealing with so many other cases, incarcerated clients sometimes waited a considerable amount of time before a plea bargain could be finalized even when the result was a sentence of probation.

E. Completion of Legal Research

Aggressive motion practice is hallmark of good defense lawyering in a criminal case. Sometimes good motions can lead to a case being dismissed. Good motion practice can also increase pressure on prosecutors to offer more favorable peal bargains. Yet effective motion practice demands time to do legal research and craft effective arguments.

Caseload pressures, and the corresponding time crunch Missouri public defenders routinely struggle with, however, severely limit time for legal research. In turn, that means public defenders generally have little time to draft and litigate suppression motions or file other motions. As Matt Gass explained, when he went to a public defender training he learned all of the things he should be doing to competently defend his clients including filing various motions. But the daily press of business, especially appearing in court, traveling to court and to jail, and negotiating with prosecutors left little time for investigation, legal research, or motion practice.

Gass also mentioned that one of the judges and some of the prosecutors he dealt with made it clear that setting a case for trial and filing motions would result in plea offers being withdrawn. So without time to research the viability of potential issues, he tended after consulting with clients not to file motions because his clients were not willing to take the risk. Excessive caseloads often cause this kind of shortcutting. Excessive caseloads, therefore, negatively affect counsel's leverage to negotiate favorable plea bargains for his or her clients.

F. Pre-hearing/Pre-trial Preparation

The reports and affidavits on file in this case indicate that the deficiencies of Missouri public defenders mirror what happens in other jurisdictions with public defenders struggling with excessive caseloads.

Public defenders with too many cases headed for trial at roughly the same time must do the best they can by spreading their limited time around. Therefore, some cases get modestly more attention and others not much at all. Thus, as Kutz noted, he might do depositions in a case that was headed for trial, but in many others, he simply did not have the time to do any depositions.

As TSG noted in its 2009 Report, "[t]rial preparation, moreover, is inextricably intertwined with investigation and legal research, two areas where attorneys report they are consistently failing." 2009 Report at 26. TSG's 2009 Report noted that overworked public defenders failed to file necessary documents like alibi notices As any experienced lawyer knows, gathering information and proper preparation are critical parts of performing well at trial such as conducting an effective cross examination. Especially for inexperienced lawyers, lack of supervision and of the time to conduct research before trial can doom one's client. Failing to raise a viable motion may be the difference between getting a case dismissed and a client being convicted and receiving a lengthy prison sentence for a client.

G. Pre-Sentence Preparation

From my own experience as a public defender and office supervisor, I know the value in many cases of working with the client before negotiating a plea or arguing at a sentencing hearing. Indeed, I am aware of many cases in which presenting a good mitigation package to the prosecutor and/or the court made the difference between probation and a long term in prison for a client. Given the inadequate contact most Missouri defenders have with their clients, however, it is difficult for defenders to conduct a thorough sentencing investigation and put together a sentencing memorandum tailored to the background and personal characteristics of the client. Thus, even though the vast majority of clients ultimately plead guilty, excessive caseloads leave little time for developing creative sentencing alternatives or being prepared to make effective sentencing presentations in cases calling for such a presentation. In addition, Missouri defenders have limited access to social workers or resources that might aid defenders in this aspect of their representation.

H. Lack of Essential Supervision

The evidence in this case confirms what I learned at the District Defender workshop last September. Even though supervisors were given reduced caseloads in order to spend time managing the office, training the inexperienced lawyers, offering advice on cases and overseeing the work of lawyers and investigators, the volume and complexity of cases they handle leave insufficient time to supervise. The problem is compounded because of the frequent turnover and relative inexperience of the new lawyers who come into the office. As Josh Peter, among others, noted, the supervisor ends up taking the most serious and time-consuming cases in the office. Turnover also means more time that the supervisor must spend dealing with client complaints and shuffling cases among remaining staff while vacancies are filled. When a vacancy is finally filled, the supervisor often needs to devote even more time to that lawyer while other lawyers with only slightly more experience are left largely unsupervised. Both Josh Peter from Jackson County and Patrick Kutz in St Louis City spoke of the lack of supervision and the large number of inexperienced lawyers in their respective offices. As a result, inexperienced lawyers were too quickly assigned to handle serious felony cases that were over their heads and had to do so without much guidance at all from their supervisors, who were themselves struggling with their own caseloads. TSG's 2009 Report observed that "[s]upervisees conveyed a sense of near-panic at the lack of supervision provided in the face of overwhelming caseloads." 2009 Report at 30. Over the years, and well before being retained as an expert in this case, I have talked with many current and former MSPD attorneys who found themselves handling serious felonies less than a year after graduating from law school, and who often felt overwhelmed and under supervised during their time at the MSPD. Certainly, the district defenders at the September 2016 workshop lamented the lack of time they had to do the kind of supervision that they felt was needed.

Based on my observations, conversations, professional experience, and the reports and evidence on file in this case, it is my professional opinion that the MSPD fails consistently to provide the effective assistance of counsel to which all of their clients are constitutionally entitled. These failures stem from the MSPD's systemic deficiencies, which in turn result in Missouri public defenders having insufficient time, too many cases, too few resources, too much travel, and too little supervision to comply with their own Guidelines, the ABA Standards, ethical norms, or the Missouri and U.S. Constitutions. These systemic failures are not the product of the MSPD's operational inefficiencies. Rather, as TSG's reports and the RubinBrown study clearly demonstrate, the MSPD has been severely underfunded for years. Simply put, the MSPD lacks the funding to hire the number of lawyers needed to handle the number of defendants the MSPD is being asked to represent.

As Matt Gass, a manpower officer in the Air Force before becoming a public defender explained in our conversation, he was very familiar from his work in the Air Force of how to budget his time as efficiently as possible to cope with a heavy workload. There comes a point, however, when the amount of work simply is too much for a person or a unit to shoulder. He and one other lawyer handled about 90% of almost 1,300 felony cases a year in Pettis County. He closed about 800 felony cases in a little over two years, an extraordinary number. He stated he was overwhelmed from the start and could do little preparation in any case because he was focused on moving cases and trying to stay up with communicating with over a hundred clients. As he said, recognizing he could not keep up, he went up the chain of command as he was trained to do in the military, and ultimately raised his concerns with Michael Barrett. He told Barrett that, with the number of cases he was juggling, he was struggling to perform consistent with his ethical obligations.

When he moved to Lafayette County, his caseload for a short time was manageable. He was soon overwhelmed and things went from bad to worse when a 90-day hiring freeze went into effect and he was alone in Lafayette County. Again, he spoke to Barrett and told him either he had to fill the vacancy or he would have to stop taking cases. Gass finally quit because he knew he could not do his job properly and he saw no relief in sight.

The ethical and moral dilemma that Gass faced, and his fellow public defenders continue to face, is real. With excessive caseloads, defenders must stretch themselves to the breaking point trying to serve too many clients. They can only provide competent representation to some of their existing clients by neglecting other clients which generally means their newest clients. This puts them in violation of Missouri Rule of Professional Conduct 4-1.7 because they have an actual conflict of interest. Without the option of refusing new clients, the only options are to quit or to struggle on in Sisyphean fashion, hoping that what happened to Karl Hinkebein does not happen to them. Not surprisingly, more public defenders are leaving because, as Barrett observed, they're "not [] able to do what they need to do for their clients." Barrett Deposition Testimony at 167:14 (see Appendix G).

For public defender clients, the choices are very stark. Fire your public defender and hope you, your family or friends can scrape up enough money to hire a private lawyer to negotiate a plea. Or plead guilty, even if innocent, to whatever deal your beleaguered public defender can negotiate. Alternatively, you can languish in jail for months or even a year or more until your trial is finally held, taking your chances with your lawyer despite knowing he or she is likely unprepared and your case not adequately investigated.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct.

I. ASSIGNMENT AND FINDINGS

I have been asked to opine about the background ethical rules governing the provision of legal services to indigent defendants, in criminal cases, in the State of Missouri.

II. QUALIFICATIONS AND BACKGROUND

I am a professor at the New York University School of Law and have spent 39 years teaching, speaking, and writing about the ethical obligations of lawyers. My curriculum vitae is available at http://its.law.nyu.edu/facultyprofiles/index.cfm?fuseaction=profile.full_cv&personid=19943. A list of my publications is available at http://its.law.nyu.edu/facultyprofiles/index.cfm?fuseaction=profile.publications&personid=19943.

III. COMPENSATION

I am not being compensated for the time I spent working on this case, but will be reimbursed for travel expenses.

IV. RECENT TESTIFYING EXPERIENCE

I have testified as an expert at trial or deposition in one case in the last four years. That case was before JAMS (an arbitration) and is entitled Ruby v. Allen Matkins. I was retained in 2014 and testified at a deposition. The lawyer and firm retaining me on behalf of Mr. Ruby was Dale Kinsella of Kinsella Weitzman in Santa Monica, CA.

I am scheduled to testify in a case in federal court in the Eastern District of New York in October or November of 2017. I have not been deposed in that case.

V. DOCUMENTS CONSIDERED

In preparing this report, I consulted the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the Missouri Rules of Professional Conduct. In addition to the document considered, I rely on my experience in the field of legal ethics as described on my resume.

VI. CORE ETHICAL DUTIES

There are certain core ethical duties that all lawyers, including public defenders, owe to their clients.

A. The Duty to Provide Competent Representation

A lawyer is ethically obligated to render competent representation. Competence requires that a lawyer who is representing a client in a matter before a tribunal to (a) know or have the time and ability to discover the governing substantive, procedural, and evidentiary laws associated with the matter; (b) investigate the facts of the matter and have the time and resources to do so; and (c) exercise a level of care, skill and judgment in making decisions in the matter based on the law and the facts that the lawyer has identified. Competence requirements are further described infra.

B. The Duty to Communicate with the Client

A lawyer is ethically obligated to assist a client in making informed decisions that the client is entitled to make about the matter, to promptly respond to a client's reasonable requests for information about the matter, and to keep the client reasonably informed about the matter's status even without being asked. These ethical duties take time and a lawyer must have the time needed to fulfill them.

C. The Duty to Act Punctually and Diligently

A lawyer is obligated to act with reasonable promptness in seeking to achieve the client's objectives. Lack of diligence and failure to communicate are among the most frequent reasons for client complaints to disciplinary agencies. Furthermore, lack of diligence can lead to a loss of rights.

D. The Duty of Loyalty

A lawyer is obligated (a) to avoid conflicts of interests whereby the interests of other clients or the lawyer's own interests present a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of a client will be materially limited; and (b) to obtain informed client consent confirmed in writing when such conflicts emerge. A lawyer must have the knowledge needed to discover the existence of such conflicts, including conflicts that the governing rule imputes to the lawyer because of the conflicts of other lawyers with whom the first lawyer is associated.

VII. FURTHER DESCRIPTIONS OF THE DUTY OF COMPETENCE

In a criminal case, competent representation requires time—often much time—for the defense lawyer to be able to gather information, where indicated, concerning (a) the client generally; (b) the client's response to the charging instrument; (c) the client's response to information from others who will testify or whom the lawyer has interviewed; and (d) the client's investigative recommendations, including the identity of possible witnesses whom the defense lawyer should interview. The lawyer will often have to return for subsequent client interviews as new information emerges.

Time, skill, and funds must exist for the defense lawyer to identify and confer with consulting or testifying experts and to learn their specialized knowledge sufficient both to conduct a direct examination and to cross-examine any expert called by the prosecutor.

Time and skill are also required for the defense lawyer to discover the prosecutor's proof, either through formal discovery, or informal investigation, and to formulate responses to that proof, including discovery of information that may help impeach the prosecutor's anticipated witnesses.

Beyond time to discover and investigate facts, the defense lawyer must have the time to research the current state of the substantive (including Constitutional), procedural, and evidentiary law as these bear on the issues in the case, and to research and draft discovery, procedural, substantive, and in limine motions as appropriate.

Overall, the lawyer for a criminal accused must have the time and skill needed to learn and deploy the legal and factual information relevant to issues that arise at every formal stage of the prosecution, including any lineup, the filing of the charge, bail determination, pretrial motions including to suppress evidence, plea bargaining (and collateral consequences of a pleas), in limine evidentiary motions, trial and post-trial motions, and sentencing (in the event of conviction). In addition to time, the defense lawyer must have the funds needed to perform tasks such as travel to interview witnesses, including alibi witnesses, witnesses who can impeach the credibility or contradict the testimony of the state's witnesses, and eyewitnesses.

The primary policies behind the duties identified are (a) to ensure that the lawyer knows and can present to the trier of fact admissible information beneficial to the client; (b) to ensure that the client enjoys all the rights and protections to which he or she is entitled under the law; and (c) to respect the autonomy of the client including the client's interest in participating in decisions about his or her matter.

VIII. APPLICATION OF ETHICAL DUTIES TO VARIOUS SITUATIONS

The basic duties described here can be applied to various situations that may confront a defense lawyer in a criminal case. Appropriate conduct at any decision point must, of course, be analyzed in light of the particular circumstances then existing. But some general conclusions are possible. I have been asked to assume and respond to each of the following circumstances, in order to help explain the general principles described in this report.

A. Situation 1

A public defender fails to interview a client before a bond hearing and has very little knowledge of the client's case.

The bond hearing will determine the conditions of pretrial release and is a critical stage of the proceeding. A free defendant will be better able to assist in preparing his defense, including psychologically. Separately, the client has an interest in freedom as an end in itself, and the lawyer's job is to help him achieve it. The failure here violates the duty of competence.

B. Situation 2

A public defender is so busy that he fails to attend a post-arraignment line-up.

Competence requires attendance at a line-up to ensure that it is conducted in accord with due process requirements and therefore more likely to yield accurate results. Presence at the line-up may also aid the lawyer in identifying information that may impeach an in-court identification.

C. Situation 3

A client tells the public defender about a witness who might be able to provide an alibi, but the public defender and his investigators are too busy to interview the witness.

Being "too busy" to interview an alibi witness and so failing to do so is inconsistent with the duty of competence. This is not to say that every witness identified by a client should be interviewed. But a credible alibi can establish reasonable doubt. If a lawyer is too busy to interview an alibi witness, she should not have accepted the case.

D. Situation 4

A public defender knows that an expert witness could expose serious weaknesses in the prosecution's forensic evidence, but he lacks the resources and time to engage an expert.

Competence requires application to the court for funds to engage the expert. Denial of these funds to an indigent accused – whether denied by the court or because the legislature has not made them available – may be a due process violation. The lawyer must preserve the point for appellate review. To do that, she must request the funds and support her request with legal and factual arguments.

E. Situation 5

A client is in jail pending trial. His overworked public defender, attempting to "triage" his caseload, asks for multiple trial continuances that stretch on for many months.

Depending on the amount of time the lawyer is unable to attend to the case because of her caseload, the failure can jeopardize the client's ability to defend himself (e.g., witnesses disappear or forget). Further, pre-trial incarceration is a harm in itself if the client is acquitted or convicted of a crime carrying (or that results in) a sentence lower than the time spent awaiting trial. While a lawyer must balance her time, at some point ignoring a matter can amount to a violation of the diligence required by Rule 1.3.

F. Situation 6

In a possession-with-intent-to-distribute case, a police officer searched the client without getting a warrant, and the public defender doubts whether the search was lawful. Nevertheless, because of a lack of time, he does not file a motion to suppress the fruits of the search.

Lack of time is no justification for failing to protect (in effect, possibly waiving) the client's Fourth Amendment rights. This failure is inconsistent with the duty of competence. A lawyer who fails to make appropriate pretrial motions because of lack of time should not have accepted the matter.

G. Situation 7

A witness who would provide valuable testimony lives beyond the subpoena power of the court, and it appears that he would probably not have the financial means to travel and testify for a trial. The public defender is too busy to depose the witness.

Being "too busy" does not justify a failure to interview and depose a "witness who would provide valuable testimony" but is outside the subpoena power of the court. The failure is inconsistent with the duty of competence. If a lawyer is "too busy" to perform this task, she should not have accepted the matter.

H. Situation 8

In a possession-with-intent-to-distribute case, the public defender files a motion to suppress the evidence. To save time, the public defender uses a "boilerplate" motion template without performing any legal research.

Whether or not this is inconsistent with the duty of competence is highly fact dependent but almost always (if not always), it will be inconsistent with the duty of competence because suppression decisions turn on the facts in the actual matter. Competence will require a lawyer to argue those facts against the backdrop of Fourth Amendment standards. Citing generic rules from a template (which by definition is not based in the facts of the matter) can result in a loss of the claim.

I. Situation 9

A client is in pre-trial detention and has not heard from his lawyer in months. When he calls his lawyer, he is told that his lawyer is too busy to talk with him.

This conduct will ordinarily violate Rule 1.4, the duty to communicate with a client. While lawyers must budget their time, being "too busy" is not a justification for prolonged failure to communicate. As discussed previously, the lawyer who is too busy to communicate should not have accepted the case.

J. Situation 10

With a felony trial set to begin in just a few days, the public defender has done hardly anything to prepare for trial.

Almost certainly, having done "hardly anything" before a felony trial would be inconsistent with the duty of competence. Absent extreme facts, which I find it hard to imagine, doing nothing will always be inconsistent with the duty of competence.

K. Situation 11

After trial, a client is convicted. Due to a lack of time, the public defender fails to prepare for the sentencing hearing.

For defendants, the sentencing hearing, whether after trial or a plea, is a critical event in those cases where the court has a range of sentencing options. Factual investigation to prepare for the hearing, and to identify witnesses to call as appropriate, is essential for competent representation. Research may also be needed to identify the legally correct sentencing options.

L. Situation 12

A public defender, whose client is about to plead guilty to a felony, fails to warn the client about the immigration-related consequences of the guilty plea.

This is inconsistent with the duty of competence. A guilty plea may not only subject the defendant to incarceration but also to collateral consequences, including deportation. Even if failure to inform a client of a particular consequence is not the ineffective assistance of counsel as a matter of law, where the consequences are significant, where a reasonable person contemplating a guilty plea would be expected to weigh them in making the decision, competence requires disclosure and consultation.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The United States files this Statement of Interest to assist the Court in answering the question of what remedies are appropriate and within the Court's powers should it find that the Cities of Mount Vernon and Burlington violate misdemeanor defendants' right to counsel. The United States did not participate in the trial in this case and takes no position on whether Plaintiffs should prevail on the merits. The United States files this SOI to provide expertise and a perspective that it may uniquely possess. If the Plaintiffs prevail, it is the position of the United States that the Court has discretion to enter injunctive relief aimed at the specific factors that have caused public defender services to fall short of Sixth Amendment guarantees, including the appointment of an independent monitor to assist the Court. The United States has found monitoring arrangements to be critically important in enforcing complex remedies to address systemic constitutional harms.

In discussing the remedies available to the Court in this Statement, the United States will address questions (1) and (3) of the Court's Order for Further Briefing, with particular focus on the role of an independent monitor. (Dkt. # 319.) To answer the Court's first question, the United States is unaware of any federal court appointing a monitor to oversee reforms of a public defense agency, but the Ninth Circuit has recognized a federal court's authority in this area under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Miranda v. Clark County, NV, 319 F.3d 465 (9th Cir. 2003). The United States is aware of one case in which a federal court, through a Consent Order instituting reforms of a County public defender agency, received reports from the county regarding the progress of those reforms. Stinson v. Fulton Cnty. Bd. of Comm'rs, No. 1:94-CV-240-GET (N.D. Ga. May 21, 1999). However, the Court did not have the benefit of an independent monitor to assist it in assessing the implementation of the reforms.

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division, Special Litigation Section
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

Also, an independent monitor is currently monitoring systemic reform of a juvenile public defender system through an agreement between the United States and the Shelby County (TN) Juvenile Court ("Shelby County").

Finally, it is worth noting that but for removal to federal court by the Cities here, this matter would have proceeded in state court, and state court litigation over the crisis in indigent defense is not at all unusual. Those cases bear out the practicality—and, at times, the necessity—of court oversight in this area.

In answer to the Court's third question, a number of states have imposed "hard" caseload standards,[1] but the United States believes that, should any remedies be warranted, defense counsel's workload should be controlled to ensure quality representation. "Workload," as defined by the ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System, takes into account not only a defender's numerical caseload, but also factors like the complexity of defenders' cases, their skills and experience, and the resources available to them. Workload controls may require flexibility to accommodate local conditions. Due to this complexity, an independent monitor would provide the Court with indispensible support in ensuring that the remedial purpose of workload controls is achieved.

The Washington State Bar's Standards for Indigent Defense, incorporated by its Supreme Court in its criminal rules, considers the importance of workloads in evaluating the efficacy of defender services. Washington's move to implement workload controls is a welcome recognition of its obligation under Gideon. The United States recognizes that these standards are the result of work commenced at least since 2003 by the Washington State Bar Association's Blue Ribbon Commission on Criminal Defense and supported by the State Legislature, the [1] For example, Arizona, Georgia, and New Hampshire have specific caseload limitations. A number of states have "soft" caseload caps by using a weighted system. See attached Exhibit 1 for a description of select jurisdictions.

Washington Defender Association, and the Washington Association of Prosecuting Attorneys, among others. These workload controls are scheduled to go into effect October 2013.[2]

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

The United States has authority to file this Statement of Interest pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 517, which permits the Attorney General to attend to the interests of the United States in any case pending in federal court. The United States has an interest in ensuring that all jurisdictions—federal, state, and local—are fulfilling their obligation under the Constitution to provide effective assistance of counsel to individuals facing criminal charges who cannot afford an attorney, as required by Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963). The United States can enforce the right to counsel in juvenile delinquency proceedings pursuant the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994, 42 U.S.C. § 14141 (Section 14141). As noted above, the United States is currently enforcing Section 14141's juvenile justice provision through a comprehensive out-of-court settlement with Shelby County.[3] An essential piece of the agreement, which is subject to independent monitoring, is the establishment of a juvenile public defender system with "reasonable workloads" and "sufficient resources to provide independent, ethical, and zealous representation to Children in delinquency matters." Id. at 14-15.

As the Attorney General recently proclaimed, "It's time to reclaim Gideon's petition – and resolve to confront the obstacles facing indigent defense providers."[4] In March 2010, the Attorney General launched the Access to Justice Initiative to address the access-to-justice crisis. Indigent defense reform is a critical piece of the office's work, and the Initiative provides a centralized focus for carrying out the Department's commitment to improving indigent defense.[5] The Department has also sought to address this crisis through a number of grant programs.[6] The most recent is a 2012 $1.2 million grant program, Answering Gideon's Call: Strengthening Indigent Defense Through Implementing the ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System administered by the Bureau of Justice Assistance.[7] In light of the United States' interest in ensuring that any constitutional deficiencies the Court may find are adequately remedied, the United States files this Statement of Interest on the availability of injunctive relief.

BACKGROUND

The Plaintiffs' claims of deprivations of the right to counsel, if meritorious, are part of a crisis impacting public defender services nationwide. Fifty years ago, the Supreme Court held that "any person haled into court, who is too poor to hire a lawyer, cannot be assured a fair trial unless counsel is provided for him." Gideon, 372 U.S. at 344. And yet, as the Attorney General recently noted, "despite the undeniable progress our nation has witnessed over the last half-century—America's indigent defense systems continue to exist in a state of crisis," and "in some places—do little more than process people in and out of our courts."[8]

Our national difficulty to meet the obligations recognized in Gideon is well documented.[9] See, e.g. ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants Report, Gideon's Broken Promise: America's Continuing Quest for Equal Justice, (December 2004). Despite long recognition that "the proper performance of the defense function is . . . as vital to the health of the system as the performance of the prosecuting and adjudicatory functions," Attorney General's Committee on Poverty and the Administration of Federal Criminal Justice, Final Report 11 (1963), public defense agencies nationwide remain at a staggering disadvantage when it comes to resources. Steven W. Perry & Duren Banks, U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics, *Prosecutors in State Courts, 2007 Statistical Table*s 1 (2012) (noting that prosecution offices nationwide receive about 2.5 times the funding that defense offices receive); National Right to Counsel Committee, Justice Denied: America's Continuing Neglect of Our Constitutional Right to Counsel 61-64 (2009) (collecting examples of funding disparities).

Due to this lack of resources, states and localities across the country face a crisis in indigent defense. Cara H. Drinan, The Third Generation of Indigent Defense Litigation, 33 N.Y.U. Rev. L. & Soc. Change 427 (2009) (describing crises nationwide). In many states, remedying the crisis in indigent defense has required court intervention. E.g., State v. Citizen, 898 So.2d 325 (La. 2005); Hurrell-Harring v. New York, 930 N.E.2d 217 (N.Y. 2010); Missouri Public Defender Comm'n v. Waters, 370 S.W.3d 592 (Mo. 2012). The crisis in indigent defense extends to misdemeanor cases where many waive their right to counsel and end up unnecessarily imprisoned. NACDL, Minor Crimes, Massive Waste 21 (2009).[10]

DISCUSSION

It is the position of the United States that it would be lawful and appropriate for the Court to enter injunctive relief if this litigation reveals systemic constitutional deficiencies in the Defendants' provision of public defender services. Indeed, the concept of federal oversight to address the crisis in defender services has gained momentum in recent years. See, e.g,. Gideon's

Broken Promise, supra, at 41-42 (recommending federal funding); Drinan, The Third Generation of Indigent Defense Litigation, supra (arguing federal judges are well suited to address systemic Sixth Amendment claims); Note, Gideon's Promise Unfulfilled: The Need for Litigated Reform of Indigent Defense, 113 Harv. L. Rev. 2062 (2000) (advocating systemic litigation). (Again, the United States takes no position on the merits of the underlying suit.)

I. The Court Has Broad Authority to Enter Injunctive Relief, Including the Appointment of an Independent Monitor, if It Finds a Deprivation of the Right to Counsel.

If Plaintiffs prevail on the merits of their claims, or as part of a consent decree, this Court has broad authority to order injunctive relief that is adequate to remedy any identified constitutional violations within the Cities' defender systems. Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Educ., 402 U.S. 1, 15 (1971); see also Thomas v. County of Los Angeles, 978 F.2d 504, 509 (9th Cir. 1992) (noting that courts have power to issue "broad injunctive relief" where there exist specific findings of a "persistent pattern of [police] misconduct"). When crafting injunctive relief that requires state officials to alter the manner in which they execute their core functions, a court must be mindful of federalism concerns and avoid unnecessarily intrusive remedies. Labor/Community Strategy Center v. Los Angeles County, 263 F.3d 1041, 1050 (9th Cir. 2001). Courts have long recognized—across a wide range of institutional settings—that equity often requires the implementation of injunctive relief to correct unconstitutional conduct, even where that relief relates to a state's administrative practices. See, e.g., Brown v. Plata, 131 S. Ct. 1910 (2011) (upholding injunctive relief affecting State's administration of prisons); Brown v. Bd. of Educ., 349 U.S. 294 (1955) (upholding injunctive relief affecting State's administration of schools). Indeed, while courts "must be sensitive to the State's interest[s]," courts "nevertheless

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division, Special Litigation Section
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

must not shrink from their obligation to 'enforce the constitutional rights of all persons.'" Plata, 131 S. Ct. at 1928 (quoting Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 321 (1972)).

In crafting injunctive relief, the authority of the Court to appoint a monitor is well established. Eldridge v. Carpenters 46, 94 F.3d 1366 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that district court's failure to appoint a monitor was an abuse of discretion where defendant insisted on retaining a hiring practice already held to be unlawfully discriminatory); Nat'l Org. for the Reform of Marijuana Laws v. Mullen, 828 F.2d 536, 543 (9th Cir. 1987); Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1282 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding that the "assistance of a Special Master is clearly appropriate" because "[d]eveloping a comprehensive remedy in this case will be a complex undertaking involving issues of a technical and highly charged nature").

II. Appointment of an Independent Monitor Is Critical to Implementing Complex Remedies to Address Systemic Constitutional Violations.

In the experience of the United States, appointing a monitor can provide substantial assistance to courts and parties and can reduce unnecessary delays and litigation over disputes regarding compliance. This is especially true when institutional reform can be expected to take a number of years. A monitor provides the independence and expertise necessary to conduct the objective, credible analysis upon which a court can rely to determine whether its order is being implemented, and that gives the parties and the community confidence in the reform process. A monitor will also save the Court's time.

In Grant County, Washington, an independent monitor was essential to implementing the court's injunction in a right-to-counsel case. Best et al. v. Grant County, No. 04-2-00189-0 (Kittitas Cty. Sup. Ct., filed Dec. 21, 2004). There, the monitor assisted the court and parties for almost six years by conducting site visits, assessing caseloads, and completing quarterly reports on the County's compliance with court orders. We note that the monitor's term in Grant County

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division, Special Litigation Section

Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

was limited from the outset to a defined period, and the monitor's final report noted work that still remained to be done.[11] In our experience, it is best to continue monitoring arrangements until the affected parties have demonstrated sustained compliance with the court's orders.

In 2009, the United States entered a Memorandum of Agreement with King County, Washington to reform the King County Correctional Facility. United States v. King County, Washington, No. 2:09-cv-00059 (W.D. Wash., filed Jan. 15, 2009). That successful reform process was assisted by an independent monitor. Other significant cases involving monitors include: United States v. City of Pittsburgh, No. 97-cv-354 (W.D. Pa., filed Feb. 26, 1997) (police; compliance reached in 1999); United States v. Dallas County, No. 3:07-cv-1559-N (N.D. Tex., filed Nov. 6, 2007) (jail); United States v. Delaware, No. 1-11-cv-591 (D. Del., filed Jun 6, 2011) (mental health system); United States v. City of Seattle, No. 12-cv-1282 (W.D. Wash., filed July 27, 2012)(police). In each of these cases, the independent monitor improved efficiency in implementation, decreased collateral litigation, and provided great assistance to the court.[12]

The selection of a monitor need not be a strictly top-down decision by the Court. The parties may agree on who should fill the role of the monitor, but if they cannot, the Court can order them to nominate monitor candidates for the Court's consideration. In addition, it should be noted that the cost of an independent monitor, however it is paid, should not reduce the funds available for indigent defense.

Finally, it should be noted that the appointment of an independent monitor can ensure public confidence in the reform process. With allegiance only to the Court and a duty to report its findings accurately and objectively, the monitor assures the public that the Cities will move forward in implementing the Court's order, and will not escape notice if they do not. Moreover, the Cities' progress towards implementing the Court's order will be more readily accepted by a broader segment of the public if that progress is affirmed by a monitor who is responsible for confirming each claim of compliance asserted by the Cities.

[11] The monitor's final report and two of its quarterly reports are attached as Exhibit 2.

III. If the Court Finds Liability in this Case, its Remedy Should Include Workload Controls, Which Are Well-Suited to Implementation by an Independent Monitor.

Achieving systemic reform to ensure meaningful access to counsel is an important, but complex and time-consuming, undertaking. Any remedy imposed by the Court may require years of assessment to determine whether it is accomplishing its purpose, and the Court and the parties may need independent assistance to resolve concerns about compliance.

One source of complexity will be how the Court and parties assess whether public defenders are overburdened. In its Order for Further Briefing, the Court asked about "hard" caseload standards, which provide valuable, bright-line rules that define the outer boundaries of what may be reasonably expected of public defenders. ABA Ten Principles, supra. However, caseload limits alone cannot keep public defenders from being overworked into ineffectiveness; two additional protections are required. First, a public defender must have the authority to decline appointments over the caseload limit. Second, caseload limits are no replacement for a careful analysis of a public defender's workload, a concept that takes into account all of the factors affecting a public defender's ability to adequately represent clients, such as the complexity of cases on a defender's docket, the defender's skill and experience, the support services available to the defender, and the defender's other duties. See id. Making an accurate assessment of a defender's workload requires observation, record collection and analysis, interviews with defenders and their supervisors, and so on, all of which must be performed quarterly or every six months over the course of several years to ensure that the Court's remedies are being properly implemented. The monitor can also assess whether, regardless of workload, defenders are carrying out other hallmarks of minimally effective representation, such as visiting clients, conducting investigations, performing legal research, and pursuing discovery. ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants, Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Workloads (August 2009). These kinds of detailed inquiries, carried out over sufficient time to ensure meaningful and long-lasting reform, are critical to assessing whether the Cities are truly honoring misdemeanor defendants' right to counsel, and they can be made most efficiently and reliably by an independent monitor. As shown in Exhibit 2, these are the kinds of inquires made by the independent monitor in the Grant County, Washington case. Also, should non-compliance be identified, early and objective detection by the monitor, as well as the identification of barriers to compliance, allow the parties to undertake corrective action.

An independent monitor may also obviate the need for the Court to dictate specific and rigid caseload requirements. In the Shelby County juvenile justice enforcement matter, for example, the County is required to establish a juvenile defender program that provides defense attorneys with reasonable workloads, appropriate administrative supports, training, and the resources to provide zealous and independent representation to their clients, but the agreement does not specify a numerical caseload limit. See Mem. of Agreement at 14-15.

CONCLUSION

Should the Court find for the Plaintiffs, it has broad powers to issue injunctive relief. That power includes the authority to appoint an independent monitor who would assist the Court's efforts to ensure that any remedies ordered are effective, efficiently implemented, and achieve the intended result.

EXHIBIT 1 TO U.S. STATEMENT OF INTEREST

EXHIBIT 1: CASELOAD LIMITS IN VARIOUS STATES

ARIZONA
Caseload maximums	Presumptive caseload limits based on National Legal Aid and Defender Association standards: • 150 felonies per year • 300 misdemeanors per year
Case refusal discretion	Not stated
Authority	Arizona v. Smith, 140 Ariz. 355 (1984); Zarabia v. Bradshaw, 185 Ariz. 1 (1995)
Comments	The presumptive limits function as hard caps in the counties with public defender offices, but not in counties with contract attorneys.

GEORGIA: Northern Judicial Circuit
Caseload maximums	Director of Georgia Public Defender Standards Council cannot assign more cases to contract attorneys than: • 125 felony cases to attorneys with 5 or more years of experience • 75 felony cases to attorneys with fewer than 5 years of experience • 300 misdemeanor cases to attorneys who handle only misdemeanor cases
Case refusal discretion	Not stated
Authority	Cantwell v. Crawford, No. 09EV275M, Consent Order 6-7 (Elbert Cty. Sup. Ct. July 8, 2010)
Comments	None

MONTANA
Caseload maximums	Montana has "soft caps" in the form of a case weight system to ensure that a public defender agency is not exceeding ethical caseload limits, and to ensure that resources are being properly distributed. The case weight system assigns daily case hours to each case when assigned and evenly distributes cases among attorneys to monitor how many cases each attorney receives per month. When an attorney's monthly hours reach 125, the Regional Manager or Managing Attorney must meet with the staff attorney to discuss the attorney's caseload. Different types of offenses are given different case weight hours: • Misdemeanors range from 2.5 hours for fugitive/out of county warrants to 10 hours for misdemeanor sex crimes. Additional hours are added when jury trials occur, when the case is outside of the assigned region, if there are five or more charges in one case, and for those who practice in courts located outside of the city where their office is located. Hours are assigned based on the highest crime charged, with no hours assigned for the other charges. • Felonies range from 2.5 hours for fugitive/out of county warrants to 100 hours for homicides. Additional hours are added if there are three or more charges in the case, if the case is outside of the assigned region, when a jury trial occurs, and for those who practice in courts located outside of the city where their office is located. Hours are assigned based on the highest crime charged, and additional points may be added based upon the number of additional charges. • Civil/Juveniles range from 2.5 hours for involuntary commitments to 20 hours for dependent neglect. Additional hours are added if the case is outside of the assigned region, and for those who practice in courts located outside of the city where their office is located.

Case refusal discretion	When a public defender faces an excessive workload, the supervising attorney shall consider doing any of the following: • discontinue assigning cases to the public defender for a specified time; • discontinue assigning specific kinds of cases to the public defender for a specified time; • assign other public defenders to assist on particular cases; • assign extra staff or an investigator to assist on particular cases; • reassign particular cases; and/or • negotiate time off work for the public defender.
Authority	Statute authorizing establishment of statewide standards for acceptable caseloads and workload monitoring protocols to ensure that public defender workloads are manageable:

	• Mont. Code Ann. § 47-1-105 (2011) Administrative policy for case refusal: • Mont. Admin. Pol'y Title 47, § 1-105 (2012)
Comments	The Public Defender Commission adopted OPD Policy Number 117, which states that a mission of the Office of the Public Defender is to ensure that no attorney doing public defender work—either as an employee or as a contract attorney—has a workload of such an amount that clients are not adequately represented and/or the attorney's well-being is jeopardized. The Policy also establishes that regional deputy public defenders and managing attorneys in each public defender office are responsible for managing attorney caseloads, sets out a procedure for monitoring caseloads, and requires the Chief Public Defender to report to the Commission any workload problems that arise. The Public Defender Commission, adopted on February 15, 2013, resolved that the Chief Public Defender is authorized to take any and all actions necessary to align caseloads with resources, including, but not limited to, taking all necessary and appropriate actions, in conjunction with and in consultation with judges and prosecutors, to limit acceptance of new case assignments, until OPD either receives additional resources to cover caseloads, or caseloads subside to a level that OPD can handle them with current resources, or some combination of both.

NEW HAMPSHIRE
Caseload maximums	Full-time attorneys providing general felony, misdemeanor, and juvenile delinquency cases shall maintain a caseload of not more than 65 open and active cases. When attorney cases are a mixture of different types, the acknowledged maximums are as follows: • Felony maximum: 35 cases • Misdemeanor maximum: 35 cases • Juvenile delinquency maximum: 20 cases • Other cases: 15 cases The mix of cases totaling 65 for each attorney shall be determined by the Public Defender Program Executive Director, Director of Legal Services, and Managing Attorneys based upon the staff attorney's experience level.

(202) 353-1077

Case refusal discretion	The allocation of cases between the public defender program and assigned counsel shall be in accordance with a plan adopted by the public defender program and approved by the judicial council. The plan establishes caseload limits for defender attorneys in accordance with professional standards under the code of professional responsibility, and shall provide for appointment of assigned counsel only where maximum caseloads have been reached or public defender attorneys are otherwise unavailable. Once caseloads have been reasonably reduced, the public defender will resume intake of new cases.
Authority	Allocation of cases: N.H. Rev. Stat. § 604-B:6 Appointment of other counsel if and when a decision is made to close the intake of new cases: N.H. Rev. Stat. § 604-A:2 II.
Comments	Conflict cases are handled by private attorneys under contract. Their caseloads are limited by virtue of the fact that they contract to handle a certain number of "units" each year, and no one is awarded so many "units" that their caseload of indigent defense matters could or would become unmanageable. The conflict case administrator sends the contract attorneys their cases in an even rotation, ensuring that the contract attorneys do not acquire too many cases at any one time.

NEW YORK CITY
Caseload maximums	Number of cases assigned per year per attorney shall not exceed: • 150 felony cases; • 400 misdemeanor cases; or • Proportional combination calculated at a ratio of 1 felony case to 2.66 misdemeanor cases Chief Administrator of Courts shall annually review attorney workloads and take action to promote compliance Rules are non-binding guidelines between 4/1/10 and 3/31/14, and will be made binding as of 4/1/14.
Case refusal discretion	Not stated
Authority	Rules at: Title 22 NYCRR Judiciary, Part 127.7; Part ZZ of Chapter 56 of the Laws of 2009 directed that such rules be promulgated.
Comments	None

VIRGINIA
Caseload maximums	No hard caps. The Virginia Indigent Defense Commission uses a "soft number" of 335 cases per attorney per year (mixed misdemeanors and felonies).
Case refusal discretion	Chief public defenders have statutory authority to turn down cases when they believe their office caseload is too high.
Authority	VA Code § 19.2-163.4 provides authority for defenders to turn away conflict cases.

RE: Best, et al. v. Grant County

Dear Counsel,

It is my understanding that my tenure as Settlement Monitor ends at the conclusion of the "Monitoring Period" on June 30, 2012. Accordingly, I am writing to provide a brief assessment as to the current state of Grant County public defense as well as recommendations for the future.

During the last five years, Grant County's public defense program has improved significantly. Though performance varies among attorneys, the overall quality of representation provided by public defenders in Grant County is far better than it was when I started serving as Settlement Monitor in 2007. The trial rate has increased dramatically. Motions and expert requests are filed with much greater frequency than before. Defenders are more likely to make timely jail visits.

While Grant County has made substantial progress in establishing a quality public defense program, there remains much work to be done. Going forward, I recommend making the following areas/issues priorities:

1. Support staff – Grant County has never provided its in-house defenders with appropriate paralegal/secretarial support. GCPD has been operating without an office manager for 6 months. The only other permanent staff member is Katy Montemayor who serves as receptionist and administrative assistant. Her work is almost exclusively administrative and does not directly support the work of individual defenders. As a result, the in-house defenders have no paralegal/secretarial support. Director Stephen Kozer has emphasized the need for additional support staff but thus far has not received hiring authorization. Grant County needs to immediately hire an office manager and at least one paralegal or secretary to support the defenders

2. Mental health cases – The failure to promptly seek experts in mental health cases has been a chronic problem in Grant County. Mentally ill defendants frequently find their cases in limbo, with the speedy trial period stayed, no defense expert, no investigation, and a lengthy waiting list for Eastern State evaluations. Although required to do so by the Amended Settlement Agreement, Grant County has not yet adopted a policy requiring its defenders to seek an expert on cases in which defendants are evaluated by Eastern State Hospital. Similarly, Grant County has yet to provide its defenders with forms to be used in requesting experts.

3. Investigation – Attorneys continue to be inconsistent in their use of investigators. Director Stephen Kozer has put appropriate policies in place but more active monitoring and supervision is needed in this area.

While there are certainly other areas for improvement, these three have the potential to make the greatest practical difference for defenders and their clients.

The long-term success of Grant County's public defense program will depend primarily on its ability to recruit and retain quality public defenders. Recruiting has been an ongoing problem as Grant County lacks a significant pool of local criminal defense attorneys from which to draw. Attorneys who apply from elsewhere often lack the necessary experience or are poor candidates for a variety other reasons. Obvious solutions to this problem are to pay more, advertise openings more widely, and recruit more actively.

On an institutional level, I recommend that Grant County expand its in-house program to include at least a few district court positions. In most jurisdictions, public defenders start with misdemeanors where they learn the basics of criminal defense work and gain trial experience. Those defenders are then promoted to felony work when positions become available. A group of in-house misdemeanor defenders would provide Grant County with a pool of qualified applicants who are known quantities and have not already learned bad habits and/or been unsuccessful in other jurisdictions. Moreover, recruiting for a misdemeanor division should be much easier as a law degree is the only experience required and new law graduates may be much more willing and able to move to Grant County for work.

If Grant County does elect to expand GCPD to include district court, it is essential that Director Stephen Kozer do absolutely no felony casework or coverage. Training new defenders requires intense supervision. For at least the first few months of any new attorney's tenure, Mr. Kozer would need to regularly accompany the attorney to court appearances and consult in the preparation of all cases. Handling even a small felony caseload or providing coverage for other attorneys in Grant County Superior Court would be incompatible with these responsibilities.

Although my term is ending, I remain invested in the success of Grant County's public defense program. If I can be of any assistance in the future, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Finally, I would appreciate any guidance you may have as to the disposition of my files. Normally, such files would be the property of the client, but in this case, I do not have a client in the traditional sense. If either party wishes to retain the files, I am happy to make them available to you. Most of my file materials consist of documents copied from Grant County Superior Court files which I suspect would be of little interest. I also have some handwritten notes from observing court, interviewing investigator candidates, etc. Finally, I have electronic files that include my reports, correspondence, spreadsheets, and the like. If you would like to take possession of any or all of my file materials, please let me know by July 31, 2012. If I do not hear from either party, I plan to dispose of the file materials as I see no ongoing need for them.

Thank you for the opportunity to serve as Settlement Monitor. It has been a very challenging but also rewarding experience.

Sincerely,

Tito Rodriguez
Attorney at Law

Best, et al. v. Grant County

Monitor's Report

First Quarter, 2011

April 23, 2011

Submitted by Francisco Rodriguez, Settlement Monitor

Monitor's Activities

During the first quarter, I conducted monthly site visits to Grant County on the following dates:

- January 10-11, 2011
- February 22-23, 2011
- March 21-22, 2011

While in Grant County, I observed court proceedings, reviewed court files, and met with public defenders.

Between site visits, I have periodic contact with the Supervising Attorney, individual defenders, investigators, and counsel for both parties. I also regularly review electronic court dockets to track case dispositions, motions practice, and the use of experts, as well as to identify cases that warrant further review.

Access to Information

The Settlement Agreement provides that the Monitor is entitled to broad access to information concerning the Grant County public defense system. During the first quarter, I continued to experience delays in receiving basic monthly report information from the Grant County Department of Public Defense (GCPD). The delays were even lengthier than last quarter. For example, Grant County did not provide some monthly report information for January until April 15 despite multiple requests for the information. In addition, Supervisor Ray Gonzales has been slow in responding to requests for information. In some instances, I had to make repeated requests over several weeks before receiving any response from Mr. Gonzales.

Until last quarter, significant delays in receiving basic data regarding the public defense program had been rare. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales attributes this quarter's delays on Grant County's implementation of the DAMION case management system. He reports that the new system has "bugs" and "anomalies" that have prevented his office from fully adopting the software and interfered with his ability to produce monthly report information.

With respect to court documents, Katy Montemayor, GCPD's legal assistant, continues to be very diligent and prompt in responding to my requests. Similarly, the staff in the Grant County Superior Court Clerk's Office is always exceptionally helpful in my review of court files.

Compliance Issues

As noted in my last report, I asked the parties to submit argument on the question of whether an extension of the Settlement Agreement was warranted. I originally asked the parties to respond by February 16, but the parties requested that I extend that deadline as they attempted to negotiate an agreed resolution. On March 2, Plaintiffs' counsel submitted a lengthy letter urging that I not only extend the term of the Settlement Agreement by one year but also find Grant County in violation for 2010. Plaintiffs' letter detailed a variety of violations of the Agreement and proposed a number of "cures" for these violations including the termination of Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales.

The original deadline for resolution of the dispute regarding 2010 compliance was March 16, but the parties have requested several extensions to facilitate negotiations. The current deadline for both resolution of the pending dispute and my decision regarding extension of the Settlement Agreement is April 29. I understand that the parties are very close to reaching an agreement to resolve all outstanding issues.

Attorney Staffing

The first quarter of 2011 was a period of transition for Grant County public defense. Defender John Doherty departed at the end of January. Dean Terrillion, who left GCPD in early December, returned to finish a few remaining cases early in the quarter. Julie Trejo has also resigned, but her departure date has now been extended to May 31, 2011. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales reports that he stopped assigning Ms. Trejo new cases in early April.

Two new attorneys joined GCPD during the first quarter. Stephen Kozer started work on January 3, 2011. Mr. Kozer has 27 years of criminal experience as a public defender, private criminal defense attorney, and prosecutor. He most recently worked at the Yakima Office of Assigned Counsel. Christian Cabrera began work at GCPD on March 1, 2011. Mr. Cabrera has approximately one year of criminal experience handling misdemeanors for the Yakima Department of Assigned Counsel.

Grant County's hiring of Mr. Cabrera to handle criminal cases covered by the Settlement Agreement is problematic as he lacks the qualifications required to handle felony cases under the WSBA Standards for Indigent Defense Services. Those standards require that any attorney assigned to handle felony cases, including probation violations, must have a minimum of one year of criminal experience and have completed at least two jury trials. Mr. Cabrera has completed just one jury trial and is thus not qualified under the WSBA Standards to work on any criminal cases covered by the Settlement Agreement.[1]

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales apparently failed to evaluate Mr. Cabrera's qualifications under the WSBA Standards when making his hiring decision and was not aware of the issue until I raised it with him recently.[2] As a result, Mr. Cabrera has already been assigned to cases for which he is not qualified in apparent violation of the Settlement Agreement. More problematic, however, is the fact that Mr. Gonzales now has two full-time attorneys in his office who are limited to handling child support cases, a caseload that last year amounted to about .33 FTE. I have written to the parties urging them to address this issue right away.

Grant County has yet to hire a replacement for Julie Trejo but has advertised the position. Unlike previous positions, the notice for this contract defender position was posted through both the Washington Defender Association (WDA) and the Washington Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (WACDL). As of mid-April, Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales was still interviewing potential candidates.

Based upon the cases assigned during the first quarter, Grant County will receive approximately 600 more criminal case assignments this year. With current staffing, Grant County has a remaining caseload capacity of 566 case credits, a shortfall of 34 credits. This shortfall will worsen if Grant County does not hire Ms. Trejo's replacement right away. The primary reason for the projected deficit is the inability of Grant County to assign criminal cases to Ms. Maggard or Mr. Cabrera. If the parties agree that either or both attorneys are eligible to handle criminal cases covered by the Settlement Agreement, Grant County will have a surplus capacity of approximately 115 to 265 case credits (0.75 to 1.75 FTE).

Caseloads

The Settlement Agreement establishes an annual caseload limit of 150 case equivalents for full-time defenders. In addition, Grant County has adopted monthly and quarterly caseload limits to ensure that case assignments are spread relatively evenly throughout the year.

---

[1] I have not had the opportunity to review Mr. Cabrera's work or even meet with him, so I do not intend to make any comment on his knowledge or skills as an attorney.

[2] Mr. Gonzales's failure to determine whether Mr. Cabrera was even eligible to handle felonies is troubling. Presumably, trial experience would be an important area of inquiry in the interview process for a position in the felony unit of a public defender office. Moreover, Mr. Gonzales is well aware that the Settlement Agreement requires that all attorneys meet the WSBA Standards. We have had numerous discussions about those standards as well as the Settlement Agreement's requirement of compliance with those standards. Indeed, this is precisely the same error Mr. Gonzales made when he hired Kacie Maggard mistakenly believing she would be eligible to handle criminal cases under the Settlement Agreement.

Overall case assignments during the first quarter of 2011 were virtually identical to the first quarter of 2010. Individual attorney caseloads were higher, however, because Grant County has one fewer public defender on staff this year. The first quarter total caseload for each defender is listed in the table below:

ATTORNEY	1Q TOTAL
Kentner	37.33
Trejo	37.33
Oglebay	36.66
Kozer	36.33
Perry	36.33
Maggard	22.00
Cabrera	7.66
Doherty	1.33

Although the totals for all defenders were within Grant County's monthly and quarterly limits, the projected annual caseloads for the five public defenders eligible for criminal cases assignments are very close to the annual maximum, leaving virtually no flexibility for upward fluctuations in case assignments. Moreover, had those defenders been required to absorb the criminal cases erroneously assigned to Mr. Cabrera, all would have projected annual caseloads exceeding the yearly limit.

As noted in prior reports, the above caseload figures are likely inaccurate as Grant County continues to omit extraordinary credits from its caseload totals. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales reported zero extraordinary credits earned during the first quarter. He has not reported a single extraordinary case credit earned in the last 8 months. Because Mr. Gonzales makes no effort to track extraordinary cases, it is difficult to estimate the magnitude of this problem.

Caseload Management/Transfers.

Grant County has not established any policy or procedure to facilitate the transfer of caseloads when public defenders leave the program. Although I have encouraged Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales to develop a formal framework for addressing caseload transfers, he has thus far declined to do so. The recent spate of resignations has highlighted the problems with Mr. Gonzales's informal approach to this issue.

In response to past inquiries regarding the transfer process, Mr. Gonzales had indicated that departing attorneys were providing their replacements in each case with a detailed case status report, though perhaps in a different format than I had suggested. I have been requesting samples of these documents for months and only recently learned that no such documents exist. Instead, Mr. Gonzales finally produced a case list for each attorney. These lists contained very little information other than the next court date (if that).

The case transfer process in Grant County does not adequately protect the interests of indigent defendants. When taking over a felony case, the new attorney needs to know the status of discovery, investigation, motions, and plea negotiations. The substituting attorney should not be forced to essentially start over or attempt to reconstruct the case history based upon documents in the file.

The recent transfer of John Doherty's caseload illustrates the problems caused by the lack of any formal transfer protocol. Almost all of Mr. Doherty's cases were transferred to Stephen Kozer. In moving for a continuance on an Attempted Murder 1° case, Mr. Kozer recently explained that he "had to 'jump' into the middle of most of [Mr. Doherty's] cases, sorting out the work that needs to be done" and that he needed a continuance in order to provide effective assistance of counsel. Mr. Kozer went on to explain that "I have been in the office early in the morning (5am) and have spent every weekend Saturday and Sunday . . . working on cases." Although taking over another attorney's caseload is always challenging, adequate supervision can dramatically ease the transition. Handing a new attorney a large stack of felony case files and wishing him or her good luck is not an appropriate way to transfer a caseload.

I am also concerned about Grant County's caseload management for new attorneys. Grant County does not award incoming attorneys any caseload credit for transferred cases when they assume a departing defender's caseload. This is not an unreasonable practice assuming care is taken to ensure that the new attorney's workload is manageable. If no credit is to be awarded for such cases, the supervising attorney should (1) require that the prior attorney fully work up the cases, file briefs, request investigation, etc., (2) review the entire caseload and assign some cases to other attorneys in order to lighten the transfer burden, and (3) not assign the recently hired attorney a full load of new cases until he/she is up to speed on the inherited caseload. Unfortunately, Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has not been taking these or other similar steps to manage workloads.

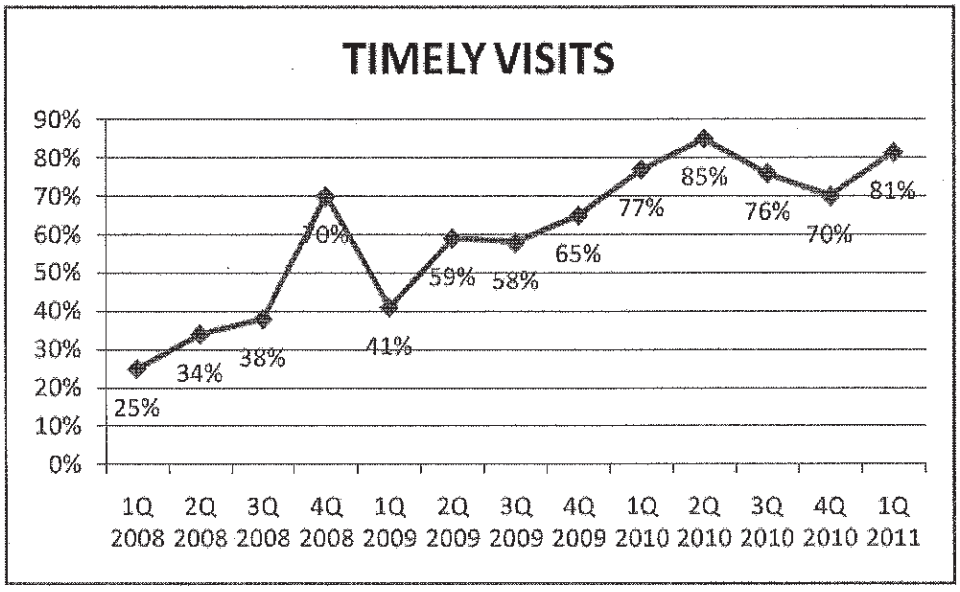
In the declaration mentioned above, defender Stephen Kozer wrote that he had been "reassigned from Mr. Doherty's caseload approximately 28 A and B felonies . . . ." In addition, Mr. Kozer has received a full load of new case assignments in each of his first three months. The quarterly caseload maximum for Grant County's public defenders is 40 case equivalents. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales assigned Mr. Kozer 67.33 case equivalents in the first quarter, 36.33 in new assignments and 31 in transferred cases. While Mr. Kozer seems highly capable and extremely diligent, the workload he has been asked to assume is overwhelming. It does not appear that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has offered Mr. Kozer any relief or accommodation to account for the large volume of serious cases he inherited.

Jail Visits

Grant County requires its public defenders to visit all in-custody clients prior to arraignment. This requirement is memorialized in a formal written policy and subject to monthly monitoring by the Supervising Attorney.

For the first quarter, I reviewed 70 in-custody felony case assignments, cross referencing case assignment data with jail visitation logs, jail inmate rosters, and court dockets to determine whether the assigned lawyers visited their clients prior to arraignment. In some cases, I treated the visit as timely even though the visit occurred shortly after arraignment because the case had been assigned on or after the arraignment date.

Overall, I found the rate of timely jail visits for the first quarter to be 81.4%, the second best quarterly performance recorded in the last three years. Although the overall rate of timely visits has greatly improved over the last several years, the rate of timely visitation remains inconsistent and below what it should be. This quarter Grant County exceeded 80% compliance for only the second time in more than three years:



Individually, public defender performance this quarter was more consistent than in past quarters:

ATTORNEY	% TIMELY
Kentner	100.0%
Perry	94.7%
Oglebay	85.7%
Kozer	80.0%
Trejo	53.3%

Bob Kentner again visited 100% of his clients in a timely fashion. Mr. Kentner has now maintained a perfect rate of timely visits for the last year. John Perry also had a high rate of timely visits this quarter, visiting 18 of his 19 in-custody clients as required (94.7 %). Susan Oglebay (85.7%) also made timely visits to all but one of her jailed clients.

Stephen Kozer's visitation rate (80%) was somewhat lower, but that is certainly understandable given his workload. In addition to taking over Mr. Doherty's caseload and receiving a full load of new cases, Mr. Kozer also received the highest number of in-custody felony case assignments this quarter at 20.

Julie Trejo had a much lower rate of timely visits than her colleagues this quarter at 53.3%. Jail visitation has always been a weakness for Ms. Trejo due in part to her commute from Spokane. Setting aside Ms. Trejo's visits, the overall rate of timely visits for the other defenders as a group was 89.1%.

I am optimistic that in the near future, Grant County's public defenders will finally achieve and maintain an overall rate of timely visitation of 90 to 100%. Defenders Kentner, Perry, and Oglebay have already demonstrated their commitment to timely jail visits. Although Mr. Kozer's rate of timely visits this quarter was not as high as it should be, he appears to be extremely diligent, and I anticipate that he too will consistently visit his jailed clients as required. If Grant County's next attorney hire is similarly committed to complying with Grant County's jail visitation policy, Grant County should easily attain a rate of timely jail visits that exceeds 90%.

In addition to the timeliness of initial visits, I also reviewed the total time each defender spent visiting clients at the jail. Stephen Kozer spent substantially more time visiting his in-custody clients during the first quarter than the other defenders:

ATTORNEY	TOTAL HOURS
Kozer	56
Kentner	42
Perry	26
Trejo	16
Oglebay	11
Maggard	5
Cabrera	3

Bob Kentner also spent a great deal of time consulting with his jailed clients. Ms. Oglebay and Ms. Trejo spent less time in the jail visiting their clients than their peers. Ms. Oglebay has only recently started receiving new felony assignments, however, having handled the probation violation calendar for the last year or so. Kacie Maggard handles child support cases, and Christian Cabrera has taken over the probation violation calendar, so their workloads inherently involve fewer jail visits.

The outlook for jail visitation at this point is quite positive due almost entirely to the personnel currently in place. Past experience demonstrates, however, that Grant County cannot rely on always having a highly diligent, self-motivated staff of public defenders. Accordingly, Grant County needs to adopt its own system of monitoring jail visits so that it has a mechanism in place to identify and correct future problems in this area. The current system of transcribing jail sign-in logs into spreadsheets and cross-referencing them with case assignment records is very time-consuming and unlikely to continue after the Settlement Agreement ends. I have recommended that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales explore a simpler and less labor intensive approach to monitoring jail visits, but he has yet to take any action to address the issue despite repeated promises to do so.

Client Complaints

Grant County maintains a toll-free telephone line for client complaints. All calls to the complaint line are logged, and substantive complaints are referred to Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales for follow-up as appropriate. Most calls to the complaint line are from inmates at the Grant County Jail. In addition to using the complaint line, clients and family members sometimes contact Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales directly with complaints.

Grant County's posted notices within the jail dormitories seem to be effective in informing jailed defendants how to make a complaint, but Grant County has yet to implement an effective complaint system for out-of-custody clients. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has delegated responsibility for informing these clients of the complaint procedure to the public defenders. The defenders are asked to provide written notice of the complaint procedure to their clients at the time of arraignment. In practice, however, the public defenders rarely distribute the complaint notice to their clients. During my three site visits this quarter, I did not observe a single defender distribute the notice. I have advised Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales that the current system does not comply with Grant County County's obligation under the Settlement Agreement to "inform[] all indigent criminal defendants of the right to make complaints regarding the quality of their public defense." Based upon our discussions of this issue and his own observations of the problem, Mr. Gonzales agreed that his office would mail a notice to each defendant with information about how to make a complaint along with the name and contact information of the assigned attorney. Months later, however, Mr. Gonzales has yet to institute this or any other procedure that complies with the Settlement Agreement.

During the first quarter, Grant County logged approximately 22 calls to the complaint line from 14 different clients:

ATTORNEY	CALLS
Trejo	9
Perry	4
Kentner	3
Billingsley	2
Doherty	2
Oglebay	1
Kozer	1

Although nine calls came from Ms. Trejo's clients, none of those calls were concerning. Five were from the same defendant who was apparently anxious about the resolution of his case. Ms. Trejo visited him eight times over the course of a month and was able to resolve his case with a misdemeanor plea. The other callers made inquiries or left messages unrelated to the quality of their representation.

Most of the calls from clients of the other current defenders did not involve substantive complaints about their public defenders. One of Bob Kentner's clients complained about a lack of visitation, but the jail sign-in logs show that Mr. Kentner had visited him relatively recently, and Mr. Kentner visited him again the day of his call. A client of John Perry called to complain about not being released as expected due to a DOC hold, and Mr. Perry promptly obtained a new release order for the client.

Calls from two clients of defenders no longer working for Grant County were of greater concern, but as those attorneys are no longer with Grant County, I see no need to address them further at this time.

The relatively small number of complaints documented in Grant County's reports is encouraging, but I am concerned that these reports may not capture all of the complaints made against Grant County's public defenders. Some callers to the complaint line are apparently urged to submit their complaints using a jail "kite." These "kites" are not included in the complaint logs. Defendants who file repeated motions for new counsel sometimes do not appear on the complaint line report. Similarly, two individuals who contacted me to complain this quarter do not appear in the complaint log. It is surprising that individuals who seem rather aggressive in pursuing complaints against their public defenders never called the complaint line nor complained directly to the Supervising Attorney.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales's most recent report noted that he had had contact with three clients who were "not complaining but wished to have their concerns heard." In response to my request for clarification, Mr. Gonzales reported that one of these clients was "concerned about the progress of his case and whether his counsel was properly prepared to go to trial." At one point, the client's calls to the GCPD office had become so frequent that Mr. Gonzales directed the client to call no more than twice per week. When I reviewed the docket and portions of the court file for this defendant's case, I found that he had filed a request for new counsel containing very specific allegations against his assigned attorney. I also learned that Mr. Gonzales was present and addressed the court in connection with at least one of the defendant's requests for new counsel. At that hearing, the clerk's minutes reflect discussion of a lawsuit the defendant had filed over the handling of his case. The fact that this client's complaints appear nowhere in Grant County's complaint logs and that the only reference to his complaints in GCPD records is a vague, passing reference to a client who wished to have his "concerns heard" is troubling.

Investigator Staffing/Caseloads

Grant County has five approved public defense investigators: Ellyn Berg, Karl Calhoun, Taylor Kindred, Jeff Wade, and Jason Dowd. Ms. Berg is on staff with GCPD and works exclusively with the in-house felony defenders. The other four investigators are private investigators who accept case assignments from Grant County. They are assigned adult felony cases with the contract defenders as well as other public defense cases in juvenile and district court. Jeff Wade and Jason Dowd were approved on a trial basis during the first quarter and added to Grant County's investigator panel.

During the first quarter, Grant County's defenders requested investigation in 54 adult felony cases. As in prior quarters, Ms. Berg received the highest number of adult felony assignments:

INV	1Q CASES
Berg	22
Calhoun	19
Kindred	8
Wade	6
Dowd	2

Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Kindred also received 4 juvenile case assignments each this quarter. It appears that Mr. Calhoun is receiving a disproportionate share of the case assignments. When juvenile cases are included, his total case assignments are higher than those of full-time in-house investigator Ellyn Berg. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should carefully monitor Mr. Calhoun's workload to ensure he does not take on too many cases. Mr. Gonzales should also consider distributing case assignments more evenly.

Each quarter, I contact the public defenders to request feedback on the investigators, but I received little response this quarter. The in-house attorneys have always been very complimentary regarding Ms. Berg's work, and I again received positive feedback about her.

Investigation Rates

As noted above, Grant County's full-time felony defenders requested investigation in a total of 54 cases during the first quarter. The individual totals for the public defenders are listed in the table below:

ATTORNEY	INV REQ
Kentner	22
Perry	15
Trejo	7
Oglebay	6
Kozer	4

Bob Kentner again submitted the most investigation requests followed by John Perry. They have consistently been the attorneys most likely to investigate their cases.

The overall rate of investigation in Grant County at the end of first quarter was 39.1%. This rate is slightly higher than the overall rates for the last several years. Individual investigation rates continue to vary widely:

ATTORNEY	% INV
Oglebay	78.6%
Kentner	64.8%
Perry	43.1%
Trejo	18.7%
Kozer	11.4%

Defenders Susan Oglebay, Bob Kentner, and John Perry seem to be investigating their cases appropriately. Julie Trejo's investigation rate is low, and she had not submitted any investigation requests this quarter until late March. Stephen Kozer's investigation rate is also low. Moreover, he had two jury trials this quarter in which no investigation was requested. Given Mr. Kozer's workload this quarter, however, it would be premature to draw any conclusions regarding his use of investigators.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should monitor the use of investigators by Grant County's public defenders on a regular basis and take corrective action when defenders are not using investigation appropriately. Mr. Gonzales should ensure that trial cases are investigated and that the attorneys are making timely requests for investigation in all cases in which investigation is warranted.

Experts

The Settlement Agreement recognizes that defenders need to employ experts in some cases in order to be effective. The Settlement Agreement also specifically requires that expert requests be made ex parte and sealed in the court file.

Grant County defenders filed eight expert requests during the first quarter. Susan Oglebay and Stephen Kozer each made two requests. Bob Kentner, John Perry, Julie Trejo, and John Doherty each made one request. Mr. Kentner's request was the only one that was properly sealed in the court file. In three cases, no motion to seal was filed. In three others, the defenders filed a motion to seal that was granted, but confidential information remained unsealed due to drafting errors in the forms used.

Mental health experts are, by far, the most commonly used type of expert in Grant County. They are utilized to evaluate competency and potential mental defenses as well as to determine amenability for SSOSA. This quarter, four experts were retained to explore possible mental defenses, and two were hired to perform sexual deviancy evaluations for possible SSOSA requests.

I continue to recommend that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales provide additional training on the use of experts, particularly in mental health cases, and that he develop forms and briefing to facilitate the process of requesting experts. Standardization of the process of requesting an expert through the creation of templates would allow Mr. Gonzales to finally resolve longstanding problems with unsuccessful efforts to seal expert requests. To date, however, Mr. Gonzales has demonstrated no inclination to address these issues.

Motions Practice

During the first quarter, Grant County public defenders filed substantive motions in 15 cases. Every defender filed motions in at least two cases. The totals for each public defender are listed below:

ATTORNEY	MOTIONS
Kozer	4
Trejo	4
Kentner	3
Oglebay	2
Perry	2

Julie Trejo continues to maintain an active motions practice, filing substantive motions in four cases this quarter. She won dismissal of a methamphetamine delivery case after challenging the validity of the warrant. Stephen Kozer also filed motions in four cases this quarter and appears to be quite aggressive in pursuing legal issues. In the four cases in which he filed motions, I found nine separate substantive briefs raising a wide variety of legal issues.

All of the public defenders currently handling adult felonies in Grant County are quite capable of identifying basic legal issues in their cases and appear to have been diligent in raising those issues this quarter.

Trials

The trial rate in Grant County continues to be a strength for its public defense program. Grant County's public defenders tried eight cases during the first quarter:

ATTORNEY	TRIALS
Perry	3
Kozer	3
Trejo	1
Kentner	1

Stephen Kozer quickly demonstrated his willingness to take cases to trial, completing three trials in his first three months in Grant County. He won a complete acquittal for a client charged with Assault 2°, Assault 3°, and Assault 4°. John Perry also had three trials this quarter. He won a favorable outcome for a client charged with multiple counts of Harassment, Intimidating a Public Servant, and Resisting Arrest, with not guilty verdicts on three of the four counts.

Training

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales did not conduct any trainings during the first quarter. Grant County appears to have largely outsourced its training for public defenders. Mr. Gonzales reports that he anticipates most of the in-house defenders will attend the Washington Defender Association's annual training conference later this month.

I continue to recommend that Grant County offer local trainings more frequently. Such trainings are helpful because they can be tailored to the particular needs of the staff. Moreover, the less formal setting of in-house trainings promotes the exchange of ideas among public defenders and helps develop a team approach to the practice. With the wealth of criminal experience currently available within its own ranks, Grant County is missing an opportunity to allow the defenders to learn from each other. Such in-house trainings are a staple of quality public defense programs.

Conflicts

Grant County continues to operate without an approved conflict of interest policy as it has for almost two years now. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales is aware of the problem and has repeatedly promised to submit a conflict policy for approval. To date, however, he has not done so.

With respect to identifying conflicts, I did find some problems this quarter. In one case, Grant County's conflict check system correctly identified John Perry as having a conflict, but Mr. Gonzales assigned the case to Mr. Perry anyway. When the conflict was recognized about three weeks later, Mr. Perry was forced to withdraw from the representation of both clients. Mr. Gonzales explained that he simply made a mistake in overlooking the conflict. In another case, Grant County's conflict check system missed multiple conflicts, and the disqualified attorney represented the client through resolution of the case. I found at least two other cases in which conflicts were either overlooked or not identified.

In reviewing court files this quarter, I found yet another conflict issue. John Doherty represented a client who pled guilty to Robbery 2°. The client subsequently sought to withdraw his plea based on Mr. Doherty's ineffective assistance. Mr. Doherty represented the defendant at the hearing on his motion, arguing his own ineffective assistance. Mr. Doherty had apparently failed to inform the client that he was pleading guilty to a strike offense. In fact, Mr. Doherty had erroneously stricken language in the plea statement notifying the defendant the charge against him was a strike. Though it is laudable that Mr. Doherty was willing to acknowledge his mistake, his error created a conflict of interest, and he should not have represented the client on the motion to withdraw his plea. The matter was ultimately resolved with a plea to non-strike offenses. When I asked Mr. Gonzales about the case, he indicated he was unaware of the situation.

The process of assigning cases to conflict counsel has also been somewhat problematic this quarter. The Settlement Agreement requires that the Supervising Attorney notify the Monitor of conflict cases immediately after assignment so that I may review whether the assignment is appropriate. Two problems have arisen in this process. First, Mr. Gonzales sometimes neglects to inform me of conflict assignments in a timely fashion. Second, when he does notify me of a conflict assignment, Mr. Gonzales frequently does not immediately send me the supporting documents I need in order to review the conflict. Apart from these procedural problems, when I was able to review conflict cases this quarter, I did not find any inappropriate conflict assignments.

Without a written conflict policy to review, it is difficult to know where to begin in making recommendations as to how to avoid these types of problems. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should draft a conflict policy immediately and submit it for approval as required by the Settlement Agreement.

Supervising Attorney

My assessment of the Supervising Attorney's performance has not changed. Mr. Gonzales has addressed virtually none of the issues identified in my quarterly reports over the last two years and seems completely unconcerned with ongoing violations of the Settlement Agreement. He either ignores recommendations for improvement or promises to implement changes and never does.

Conclusion

Poor supervision is at the root of most of the problems within Grant County's public defense program. I am hopeful that the current group of public defenders may be sufficiently competent, diligent, and self-motivated to succeed in spite of a lack of effective supervision. For the long term, however, Grant County must solve its supervision problem if it hopes to institutionalize quality standards for public defense.

EXHIBIT 2(C) TO U.S. STATEMENT OF INTEREST

Best, et al. v. Grant County

Monitor's Report

Fourth Quarter, 2010

January 23, 2011

Submitted by Francisco Rodriguez, Settlement Monitor

Monitor's Activities

During the four quarter, I conducted monthly site visits to Grant County on the following dates:

- October 25-26, 2010
- November 15-16, 2010
- December 6-7, 2010

While in Grant County, I observed court proceedings, reviewed court files, and met with public defenders.

Between site visits, I have periodic contact with the Supervising Attorney, individual defenders, investigators, and counsel for both parties. I also regularly review electronic court dockets to track case dispositions, motions practice, and the use of experts, as well as to identify cases that warrant further review.

In addition to routine monitoring activities, I met with two investigator candidates during the fourth quarter as well as one indigent defendant who requested to meet with me.

Access to Information

The Settlement Agreement provides that the Monitor is entitled to broad access to information concerning the Grant County public defense system. During the fourth quarter, I experienced some delays in obtaining information from the Grant County Department of Public Defense (GCPD). These delays were unusual as I typically receive monthly report information within a few days of the due date and other basic information quite promptly. The office staff seem rather overwhelmed at present. Gail Sundean, GCPD Office Manager, continues to be responsible for responding to most of my requests for information. Katy Montemayor, GCPD's legal assistant, is often tasked with obtaining the court documents I request and provides them quite promptly when assigned to do so. Finally, the staff in the Grant County Superior Court Clerk's Office is always extremely cooperative and helpful with my review of court files.

Compliance Issues

I routinely identify compliance issues in my quarterly reports and make recommendations to address any problems noted. The Settlement Agreement provides for payment of legal fees in the event of noncompliance, but I am not charged with addressing that issue unless the parties submit a dispute to me for resolution.

The Settlement Agreement does authorize the Monitor to extend the term of the Agreement for up to one year if Grant County is not in full compliance at all times after December 31, 2007. I have not yet decided whether an extension of the Settlement Agreement is warranted. I recently wrote to the parties requesting input on this issue by February 16, 2011.

There have been a number of disputes regarding compliance over the course of the year, and though those issues apparently remain unresolved, neither party has formally requested my intervention to date.

Attorney Staffing

Grant County had experienced an unusual period of stability in staffing over the past year, but that ended in the fourth quarter. Julie Trejo[1] gave notice in early November that she was terminating her contract, and defenders Dean Terrillion and John Doherty subsequently resigned their in-house positions. Brett Billingsley's contract also ended in October.

Grant County will soon have lost 50% of its 2010 defender staff. Julie Trejo had been the longest tenured Grant County public defender, having started there in September of 2007. Brett Billingsley started working with Grant County part-time in January 2008 and converted to full-time later that year. Dean Terrillion and John Doherty had been with Grant County less than two years. Of the remaining defenders, all have worked in Grant County less than two years except John Perry who started about two and a half years ago in June of 2008. Put another way, Grant County has experienced almost 90% turnover in its defender staff in less than two years.

Grant County has experienced ongoing problems with a lack of local public defender candidates who are both interested in and qualified for the position. As a result, many of Grant County's defenders commute great distances to work. Mr. Terrillion and Mr. Doherty, for example, had been commuting to homes in Western Washington almost every weekend, and both identified job location as their primary reason for leaving Grant County.

Julie Trejo's contract requires her to give 120 day notice of her intent to terminate. As in-house defenders, Mr. Terrillion and Mr. Doherty are not bound by any particular notice requirements when leaving Grant County's employ. Mr. Terrillion gave approximately two weeks notice as his new employer was not willing to be flexible on his start date. Mr. Doherty gave about one month's notice. These rapid departures created significant challenges for Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales in assigning and transferring cases, particularly as he approached quarterly and yearly caseload limits at year's end. Fortunately, Grant County and Ms. Trejo agreed to extend her contract through the end of April 2011, providing Mr. Gonzales with some relief in assigning new cases.

[1] Julie St. Marie recently got married and changed her name to Julie Trejo.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales reports that he has had difficulty locating qualified candidates to replace the departing public defenders. I have recommended that Mr. Gonzales advertise through the Washington Defender Association (WDA) and the Washington Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (WACDL), the two primary (and perhaps only) criminal defense organizations in the state of Washington. Yet Mr. Gonzales has not posted any of the recent attorney openings with either organization. WDA currently has postings for Whatcom, Benton/Franklin, King and Clark Counties. Even Grant County District Court has posted an opening. Meanwhile, Mr. Gonzales informs me that he anticipates re-opening his posted positions to seek additional applicants. I hope that he will abandon his informal, word-of-mouth approach in favor of more traditional methods of recruiting public defenders.

Grant County has hired one new in-house public defender. Stephen Kozer started this month and will take over most of John Doherty's caseload. Mr. Kozer is an experienced public defender who most recently worked for the Yakima County Office of Assigned Counsel where Mr. Gonzales also once worked. Mr. Kozer had written to Mr. Gonzales back in September inquiring about openings in Grant County.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has indicated that Grant County plans to hire one additional in-house public defender to fill Mr. Terrillion's position as well as one additional contract defender to replace Ms. Trejo. If case assignments for 2011 continue at the same rate as in 2010, the planned staff of seven full-time defenders should be sufficient to handle the anticipated caseload.

Attorney Salaries

The Settlement Agreement requires that compensation for in-house defenders be comparable to that of their counterparts in the Prosecuting Attorney's Office. Ensuring salary parity was a central concern in considering whether to approve Grant County's move to an in-house public defender office. After extensive discussions regarding salary parity, Grant County agreed to adopt a formal compensation plan that based attorney salaries on criminal legal experience. Adoption of this compensation plan was a condition of approval for the in-house defender program.

A recent review of public defender salaries revealed that Grant County has not followed its own compensation plan. The compensation plan establishes six salary levels based upon criminal experience. Yet the salary levels assigned to the two most recently hired

Grant County public defenders appear to bear no relation to their actual level of criminal experience. The salary classification for each of the in-house defenders is listed below:

ATTORNEY	SALARY LEVEL	EXPERIENCE RANGE	ACTUAL EXPERIENCE
Maggard	Attorney 1	0-3 years	< 1 year
Kozer	Attorney 2	2-5 years	27 years
Oglebay	Attorney 2	2-5 years	16+ years
Terrillion	Attorney 2	2-5 years	7+ years
Doherty	Attorney 5	10+ years	16+ years
Perry	Attorney 6	Discretionary	15-17 years

Both Susan Oglebay and Stephen Kozer were assigned "Attorney 2" salaries, a level intended to include attorneys with two to five years of criminal experience. Ms. Oglebay has practiced criminal law for 23 years. Even setting aside her other areas of practice, she conservatively estimates that she has 16 years of full-time criminal experience. Similarly, Mr. Kozer has practiced criminal law for 27 years. Despite their extensive criminal experience, these attorneys were hired at salaries just one step above entry level, By comparison, the Prosecuting Attorney's Office has two felony attorneys slotted at the "Attorney 2" level, and both have only two years of legal experience. Such disparities violate the salary parity contemplated by the Settlement Agreement.

Caseloads

The Settlement Agreement establishes an annual caseload limit of 150 case equivalents for full-time defenders. In addition, Grant County has adopted monthly and quarterly caseload limits to ensure that case assignments are spread relatively evenly throughout the year.

The departure of Brett Billingsley at the start of the fourth quarter left Grant County with little excess caseload capacity for the remainder of the year. Although most of the public defenders were well below their annual limits, quarterly caseload limits prevent Grant County from assigning excessive caseloads to defenders even if they have unused capacity from earlier in the year. Capacity concerns were further complicated by the rather sudden departure of Mr. Terrillion in December which forced Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales to transfer almost all of his active cases to other public defenders.

Fortunately, the overall number of case assignments for the fourth quarter was dramatically lower than in prior quarters. New felony assignments were down by approximately one third, with Grant County recording the three lowest monthly totals of the year in October, November, and December. Fewer new case assignments enabled Grant County to absorb the unanticipated addition of 25 transfer cases from Mr. Terrillion without overburdening the remaining defenders.

Evaluating Grant County's compliance with caseload limits is challenging because the figures provided by Grant County are not accurate. Grant County has acknowledged errors in counting probation violation cases but has not corrected its counts for the first 5 to 6 months of the year. In addition, Grant County has not reported work on "extraordinary" cases as required. For example, John Perry represented a defendant on a charge of Aggravated Murder from September 2009 until December of 2010 without ever receiving any extraordinary credits. The failure to properly count extraordinary cases can result in significant underreporting of case credits. In 2008, the year before Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales took over the program, Grant County reported about 110 extraordinary case credits. In 2010, Mr. Gonzales reported approximately 12. As a result of the errors in counting credits for probation cases and extraordinary cases, the attorney caseload totals reported by Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales are artificially low.

The caseload data provided by Grant County suggests that all of its public defenders were within their monthly, quarterly, and annual caseload limits:

ATTORNEY	2010	4Q 2010	OCT '10	NOV '10	DEC '10
Oglebay	135.33	25.33	5.33	11.33	8.66
Trejo	126.33	36.33	11.00	10.33	15.00
Doherty	123.66	37.00	13.66	8.33	15.00
Kentner	111.33	25.66	5.66	6.00	14.00
Perry	108.66	30.00	9.00	10.00	11.00
Terrillion	108.33	20.33	9.66	10.66	0.00
Billingsley	70.66	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00
Maggard	50.00	7.00	6.00	1.00	0.00

Public defender Susan Oglebay had the highest caseload total for the year at 135.33. She is the only defender who approached her annual caseload limit. Although Grant County's final figures show her finishing the year at about 135 credits, it is likely that her true caseload exceeded the annual limit of 150. Ms. Oglebay has been the primary attorney handling probation violation matters since April, and Grant County did not properly count her case credits for at least the first 2 to 3 months she covered that calendar. In addition, Ms. Oglebay was assigned at least one extraordinary case for which she has not received extraordinary case credits as required. Though the caseload totals reported for most, if not all, of the other defenders were also inaccurate, these defenders probably did not exceed their annual caseload limits as they likely ended the year with sufficient remaining capacity to absorb the uncounted credits that they should have been awarded.

Distribution of class A felony case assignments continues to be a concern. For the year, John Perry and John Doherty received about twice as many class A felony assignments as the other defenders:

ATTORNEY	2010 CLASS A
Doherty	16
Perry	16
Kentner	9
Terrillion	8
Billingsley	7
Trejo	7
Oglebay	2
TOTAL	65

These assignments should be spread more evenly among the defenders to balance the workload and to add depth of experience to the entire defender group.

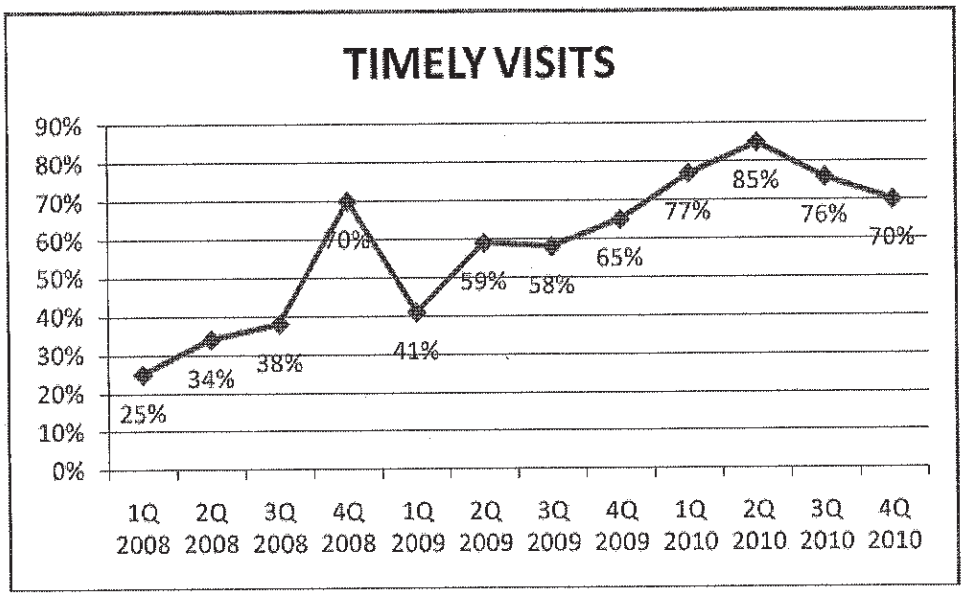
The departure of Mr. Terrillion in December posed a challenge for Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales who had to reassign a large number of cases on short notice. Mr. Gonzales did not reassign most of Mr. Terrillion's cases until after his departure. Most were reassigned by the end of the following week, however. When a public defender resigns, that defender's cases should be reassigned at least a week or two before his or her last day to ensure continuity of representation and to allow the new attorney an opportunity to consult with counsel of record. The departing defender should prepare a transfer memorandum detailing the status of the case including discovery, investigation, motions, and plea negotiations. The memorandum should also identify any potential legal issues, summarize the client's version of events and goals for the representation, and outline case strategy. I have discussed the need for transfer memos with Mr. Gonzales in the past, and he has agreed that such documentation would be helpful. Despite this acknowledgment, Mr. Gonzales has not established any formal procedures for transferring cases and has been unable to produce a single transfer memo from Mr. Billingsley or Mr. Terrillion.

Jail Visits

Grant County requires its public defenders to visit all in-custody clients prior to arraignment. Despite its clear written policy on initial client contact, Grant County has had little success in ensuring its public defenders consistently visit their jailed clients in a timely fashion. While some defenders do make timely visits a priority, others do not. Grant County has done little to emphasize the importance of initial jail visits or enforce its own policy.

For the fourth quarter, I reviewed 65 in-custody felony case assignments, cross referencing case assignment data with jail visitation logs, jail inmate rosters, and court dockets to determine whether the assigned lawyers visited their clients prior to arraignment. In some cases, I treated the visit as timely even though the visit occurred shortly after arraignment because the case had been assigned on or after the arraignment date.

Overall, I found the rate of timely jail visits for the fourth quarter to be 70%, the worst quarterly performance this year. Though Grant County's jail visitation policy has been in place since at least 2007, Grant County has exceeded 80% compliance in a quarter only once in the last three years:



The rate of timely visits for the year was 78%, an improvement over the 2009 rate of 54%, but still unacceptably low. While I am somewhat encouraged by the generally positive trend over time, progress has been very slow. Grant County should expect more of its public defenders.

Individually, public defender performance varied widely in the fourth quarter, with Bob Kentner and Susan Oglebay visiting 100% of their clients in a timely fashion and John Perry at better than 90%, while the other defenders had much lower rates:

ATTORNEY	% TIMELY
Kentner	100.0%
Oglebay	100.0%
Perry	90.9%
Terrillion	66.7%
Doherty	58.8%
Trejo	40.0%

Both Mr. Doherty and Ms. Trejo had clients held in custody more than three weeks without receiving a visit. Mr. Doherty was assigned a mentally ill client who, as of January 10, had been in custody more than 25 days without receiving a visit. Ms. Trejo's client waited more than 22 days before finally entering a guilty plea without ever having received a visit from his assigned attorney. For the most part, however, Grant County's defenders visited their in-custody clients within a week or so of assignment.

For the year, Mr. Kentner and Ms. Oglebay visited virtually all of their in-custody clients in a timely fashion, and Mr. Perry also had a high rate of timely visits:

ATTORNEY	% TIMELY
Kentner	98.0%
Oglebay	95.2%
Perry	87.9%
Doherty	80.3%
Terrillion	79.1%
Trejo	60.0%
Billingsley	48.6%

Mr. Kentner's near perfect performance is particularly impressive given the fact that he commutes from Seattle each week. Aside from Mr. Kentner and Ms. Oglebay, the other public defenders did not consistently visit their jailed clients as required.

To address ongoing problems with timely jail visits, I have recommended that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales meet individually with public defenders who fail to comply with the jail visit policy in order to stress the importance of timely jail visits as well as the consequences of failing to comply with Grant County policy. Mr. Gonzales is resistant to this type of supervision and has generally declined to formally address the problem. As a result, jail visits are not a priority for many defenders. I have also recommended that Mr. Gonzales monitor jail visits weekly by simply passing around a clipboard with a list of the week's case assignments during Grant County's regular docket days and asking attorneys to confirm that each client has received a visit. Mr. Gonzales embraced this idea and agreed to implement it months ago but still has taken no action.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has simply not made timely jail visits a priority for Grant County public defense. Defenders ignore Grant County policy with impunity and Mr. Gonzales seems unaware of or unconcerned by the problem. Indeed, his last two monthly reports did not even include jail visit information. For November, Mr. Gonzales's office did not complete its review of initial jail visits until December 30. Mr. Gonzales indicates that he views timely jail visits as very important, even suggesting he expects in-house defenders to visit all clients within three days. Yet Mr. Gonzales makes no effort to monitor compliance with this three-day visit requirement, and his staff does not comply with it.

In addition to the timeliness of initial visits, I also evaluated the total time each defender spent visiting clients at the jail. Bob Kentner spent by far the most time visiting his in-custody clients in 2010:

ATTORNEY	TOTAL HOURS
Kentner	147
Perry	112
Trejo	93
Doherty	88
Oglebay	82
Terrillion	45
Billingsley	26
Maggard	23

Dean Terrillion spent less than a third of the time that Mr. Kentner did visiting clients in jail and about half the time of most of his other colleagues. Brett Billingsley appears to have spent very little time meeting with his in-custody clients, spending an average of less than 3 hours per month on jail visits.

The lack of client visits in one of Mr. Terrillion's trial cases this quarter was particularly troubling. Mr. Terrillion visited the client in question for just ten minutes on the day of his arraignment. He did not visit the client again for more than two and a half months. The second jail visit occurred on the morning the client's trial began. After he was convicted, Mr. Terrillion did not visit him at all during the two and a half months between trial and sentencing. The client was convicted on 8 of 9 counts and received an exceptional sentence of 20 years in prison. Over the more than 5 months he had the case, Mr. Terrillion spent a total of about 45 minutes visiting his client.

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales recently expressed concern that some defenders may not be spending adequate time visiting jailed clients and reports he is considering establishing a minimum time each defender is expected to allot to jail visits each month. No such policy is currently in place, however.

Client Complaints

The Grant County Department of Public Defense maintains a dedicated toll-free telephone line for client complaints. All calls to this line are logged and substantive complaints are referred to Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales for follow-up as appropriate. In addition, clients sometimes contact Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales directly with complaints.

The Settlement Agreement requires the Supervising Attorney to maintain a compliant system that not only records complaints but also "informs all indigent criminal defendants of the right to make complaints regarding the quality of their public defense." For in-custody clients, Grant County posts information regarding the complaint line in the jail dorms. These jail postings appear reasonably effective as most of the calls to the complaint line come from inmates.

For out-of-custody clients, the assigned public defenders have been instructed to provide written notice of the complaint procedure at arraignment. In practice, however, the public defenders rarely do so. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales recently advised me that he estimates the complaint flyers are given to clients about a third of the time. Based upon my observations, his estimate is overly optimistic. I have notified that Mr. Gonzales that the existing procedure does not comply with the Settlement Agreement and recommended alternatives. He has not yet implemented any changes, but I have been advised that he will do so in the near future.

During the fourth quarter, Grant County logged approximately 31 contacts through the complaint line or the Supervising Attorney from 20 different clients:

ATTORNEY	CLIENT CONTACTS
Kentner	10
Trejo	8
Doherty	6
Perry	5
Terrillion	1
Billingsley	1

For the year, Grant County logged 207 complaints from 101 different clients:

ATTORNEY	CLIENT CONTACTS
Billingsley	64
Perry	41
Doherty	32
Kentner	30
Trejo	30
Terrillion	7
Oglebay	3

Clients frequently call the complaint line to ask for attorney phone numbers, leave messages for their assigned attorneys, or make other inquiries not related to the quality of their representation. Accordingly, reliance solely on call totals can be somewhat misleading. The annual totals, however, do reflect the general pattern of substantive complaints during the year.

In reviewing the substance of the fourth quarter complaints, I found complaints from two clients particularly concerning. Client A is charged with Attempted Murder 1° and the prosecutor's office is seeking an exceptional sentence. The client called in November to complain that his attorneys, John Doherty and Dean Terrillion, had each visited him only once during the six months he had been in custody. In following up on this complaint, Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales reported that he had contacted counsel who advised him that the client had been seen and the case was "proceeding appropriately."

Mr. Gonzales' investigation of this complaint was inadequate. Had he reviewed the jail visit logs produced by his own office, he would have learned that the client's complaint was valid. Dean Terrillion visited the client briefly a few days after assignment in May. The next visit the client received occurred more than six weeks later in late June when John Doherty visited the client for the first time. This second visit took place a week before the client's scheduled trial date and about three weeks after completion of his omnibus hearing. These were the only visits he received until, after more than six months in custody, Client A finally called to complain about the lack of jail visits on the day his trial was scheduled to begin. This was the third scheduled trial date. At that time, Mr. Doherty and Mr. Terrillion had spent less than an hour combined over more than six months visiting their client on an Attempted Murder 1° case. Such behavior should not be tolerated and falls well below acceptable standards of practice. Mr. Gonzales' failure to take this complaint seriously is disappointing.

Client B called in December to complain that his attorney John Doherty has been telling him for a month that he would win the client's case with a suppression motion. The client called to complain on the day of his suppression hearing because Mr. Doherty still had not filed a suppression motion, and his hearing had been stricken. An internal email regarding Client B's complaint adds that the client "feels that JD just gave up and doesn't want to help him and lately JD has been giving him attitude. He would like to get a different attorney, one that cares." Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales did visit the client in response to his complaint. Mr. Gonzales reports that the "client did not intend to complain" and after discussion, now "understands" his situation. Mr. Gonzales's response to this complaint suggests that he was more interested in diffusing the complaint than investigating it. Clearly, the client intended to and did complain about Mr. Doherty. Rather than meet with the client privately to investigate his complaint more thoroughly, Mr. Gonzales brought Mr. Doherty along for the visit. It should have come as no surprise that the client was reluctant to repeat his complaints in the presence of Mr. Doherty. Yet Mr. Gonzales considered the matter resolved and took no further action in the matter. Nowhere in his report does Mr. Gonzales address the substance of the client's complaint that Mr. Doherty had failed to file a winning suppression motion as promised Overall, I have found Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales's response to client complaints to be lacking. Mr. Gonzales seems to believe his role is to defend his lawyers against client complaints rather than to objectively investigate those complaints in order to protect the rights of indigent defendants. Mr. Gonzales cannot effectively supervise Grant County's defenders unless he is prepared to be critical when appropriate and to take correction action when necessary.

Investigator Staffing/Caseloads

Grant County has three approved public defense investigators: Ellyn Berg, Karl Calhoun, and Taylor Kindred. Ms. Berg is on staff with GCPD and works exclusively with the in-house felony defenders. Karl Calhoun and Taylor Kindred are private investigators who accept case assignments from Grant County. They are assigned adult felony cases with the contract defenders as well as other public defense cases in juvenile and district court. Investigator Marv Scott retired as of November 1, 2010.

During the fourth quarter, Grant County's defenders requested investigation in 45 adult felony cases. As in prior quarters, Ms. Berg received the highest number of cases:

INV	4Q CASES
Berg	24
Kindred	13
Calhoun	10

Mr. Kindred also received 7 juvenile case assignments this quarter. For the year, Ms. Berg averaged about 10 new adult felony cases per month. Her total caseload was more than double that of the other investigators:

INV	2010 CASES
Berg	122
Calhoun	60
Kindred	24
Scott	21
Patterson	13

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has expressed concern regarding Ms. Berg's workload in past quarters and had planned to contract with an overflow investigator to provide her with some relief. Unfortunately, he has not yet been able to do so.

Mr. Gonzales has submitted two additional investigators for approval, and I completed the review process on both candidates more than a month ago. Their applications remain pending, however, as Mr. Gonzales and I await a response from counsel for Grant County regarding possible conditional approval. Counsel has thus far not responded to my inquiries on this matter.

Investigation Rates

Grant County's felony defenders requested investigation in a total of 44 cases during the fourth quarter. The individual totals for the public defenders are listed in the table below:

ATTORNEY	INV REQ
Kentner	13
Doherty	10
Perry	9
Trejo	6
Oglebay	3
Terrillion	3

The total number of requests for 2010 followed a similar pattern:

ATTORNEY	INV REQ
Kentner	55.5
Perry	51.5
Doherty	37.5
Trejo	28
Oglebay	22
Terrillion	16.5
Billingsley	8

Together, Grant County's defenders requested investigation in 219 cases this year.

The overall rate of investigation in Grant County at the end of 2010 was 36%. This represents an increase over last year (29%) and is consistent with the investigation rates in 2007 (35%) and 2008 (36%). Individual investigation rates continue to vary widely:

ATTORNEY	% INV
Perry	58.4%
Kentner	50.4%
Oglebay	49.6%
Doherty	35.5%
Trejo	26.7%
Terrillion	20.3%
Billingsley	12.2%

Mr. Perry and Mr. Kentner more than doubled their rate of investigation in 2010. Mr. Doherty and Ms. Trejo increased their rates by more than 10%. By contrast, Mr. Billingsley and Mr. Terrillion investigated roughly the same percentage of their cases this year as they did last.

Though the investigation rates of most defenders improved in 2010, some defenders are still not investigating all of the cases they should. During the fourth quarter alone, Grant County's public defenders had six jury trials in which they had not requested investigation. Brett Billingsley took four cases to trial without the benefit of investigation while Dean Terrillion and Julie Trejo each had one such trial. Mr. Terrillion's client, discussed above, faced eight counts arising from two residential burglaries and was ultimately sentenced to 20 years in prison. It is rarely, if ever, appropriate for an attorney to proceed to trial without investigation. Neither the attorneys involved nor Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has offered any justification for the lack of investigation in these cases.

I continue to believe that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should provide the defenders with training regarding the effective and appropriate use of investigation and that he should more closely supervise public defenders who demonstrate problems in this area. To date, Mr. Gonzales has been unwilling to follow these recommendations.

Experts

The Settlement Agreement recognizes that defenders need to employ experts in some cases in order to be effective. The Settlement Agreement also specifically requires that expert requests be made ex parte and sealed in the court file.

Grant County defenders filed four expert requests during the fourth quarter. Bob Kentner, John Doherty, Dean Terrillion, and July Trejo each made one request. The requests of Mr. Kentner and Ms. Trejo were sealed. Mr. Terrillion and Mr. Doherty did not file a motion to seal.

I remain particularly concerned about the handling of cases involving mental health issues. Since last quarter, Grant County public defenders have requested that three more indigent defendants be evaluated by Eastern State Hospital. In two of the three cases, the assigned defenders did not ask for a defense expert.[2] Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has assured me that he recognizes the importance of retaining defense experts in these cases. He has even gone so far as to propose adopting a policy requiring that Grant County's public defenders seek an expert in all cases involving mental health issues. Yet he has not follow through with his proposal or taken any other action to address this issue. When discussing the cases identified in last quarter's report, Mr. Gonzales indicated that the problem was just a matter of timing and that he still expected the assigned defenders to retain an expert in those cases. In fact, the assigned attorneys never retained experts in any of the four cases I identified. In two cases assigned to John Doherty, he stipulated to a finding of competence almost immediately after Eastern State Hospital completed its report. .

Two cases I reviewed this quarter were concerning due not only to the failure of the assigned attorneys to request an expert but also their failure to identify mental health issues in a timely fashion. In one case, the assigned attorneys had little contact with the jailed client for more than two months. During the first month the client was in custody, he received one visit from his assigned attorney Dean Terrillion.[3] The visit lasted for a total of 7 minutes. Mr. Terrillion did not seek an expert, request investigation, or raise mental health concerns with the court. The case was later transferred to John Doherty who represented the client for almost a month but never visited him. Mr. Doherty was advised that the defendant was unable to appear in court and that he already had a court-ordered mental health evaluation pending in district court. Still, Mr. Doherty did not request investigation or an expert. Only after the client had been in custody for more than two months did Mr. Doherty finally secure an order for a mental health evaluation at Eastern State Hospital.

[2] Mr. Terrillion and Mr. Kentner both failed to request experts in their cases. Mr. Kentner did request an expert in the third case.

[3] No one visited the client prior to his first appearance. No one visited the client prior to arraignment either, probably due to the fact that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales did not assign counsel until the day of arraignment.

In another case, police described the defendant as suicidal with strange, nonsensical speech. He was punching himself in the mouth and had broken a tooth in the process. Police took him to Grant County Mental Health for an evaluation but were called back later when he became disruptive. When police tried to assist mental health staff by escorting the man back to a secure room, the man resisted and was charged with Assault 3°. The need for a psychological evaluation was noted by the attorney handling his first appearance. Dean Terrillion was assigned to represent him shortly thereafter. Despite the obvious mental health issues, Mr. Terrillion never requested an expert or otherwise raised mental health issues. The case was subsequently transferred to Susan Oglebay who requested the defendant be evaluated by Eastern State Hospital. When Ms. Oglebay made the request, the court questioned why the prosecutor was even pursuing felony charges in the matter. The case was resolved by misdemeanor plea a week later.

Many of Grant County's public defenders exhibit a lack of urgency in addressing mental health issues in their cases. Part of the problem is likely inadequate client contact which prevents the defenders from recognizing mental health issues promptly. Even when such issues are readily apparent, however, some public defenders are not requesting a defense expert or even seeking an evaluation by the State in a timely manner. I have recommended that Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales arrange for additional training in this area and that he develop forms and briefing to facilitate the process of requesting experts. Mr. Gonzales has expressed support for these ideas but taken no action.

Motions Practice

During the fourth quarter, Grant County public defenders filed substantive motions in 14 cases. The totals for each public defender are listed below:

ATTORNEY	MOTIONS
Trejo	5
Terrillion	3
Kentner	2
Oglebay	2
Doherty	1
Perry	1

Julie Trejo again filed the most substantive motions this quarter, as she has in every quarter this year. Mr. Kentner had a noteworthy success, winning an unusual post-conviction motion challenging a prison inmate's offender score more than 7 years after sentencing. He won the client's immediate release.

For the year, Grant County public defenders filed substantive motions in 55 cases, with Ms. Trejo filing motions in almost twice as many cases as every other defender except Mr. Terrillion:

ATTORNEY	MOTIONS
Trejo	15
Terrillion	12
Oglebay	8
Perry	8
Kentner	7
Doherty	4
Billingsley	3

Ms. Oglebay's motions total is also impressive given that she was assigned the fewest new felony cases by a substantial margin. Mr. Doherty, by contrast, received among the highest number of new cases but filed very few motions. Grant County's defenders frequently obtained favorable results for their clients by filing motions as 19 of the cases in which motions were filed ended in dismissal or a misdemeanor plea.

The departure of Ms. Trejo and Mr. Terrillion may result in fewer motions filed in 2011 given that together they filed almost as many motions as the other five defenders combined. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should take care to emphasize the importance of motions practice with new hires to help ensure Grant County is able to maintain the progress it has made in this area.

Trials

The trial rate in Grant County has become the program's greatest strength. Grant County's public defenders tried 11 cases during the fourth quarter:

ATTORNEY	TRIALS
Billingsley	4
Perry	2
Terrillion	2
Trejo	2
Kentner	1
Oglebay	0

Brett Billingsley had twice as many trials as any other defender as he finished his remaining cases and transitioned to his new position as a public defender in Grant County District Court. Mr. Billingsley won favorable verdicts in all of his trials, including complete acquittals in three cases. Mr. Terrillion won not guilty verdicts for his client on charges of Assault 1° and Assault 2° with the client convicted of the lesser charge of Assault 3°. Bob Kentner lost a difficult robbery trial but helped his client avoid three deadly weapon sentencing enhancements.

For the year, Grant County public defenders had 38 trials, almost twice the number as in 2009. Ms. Trejo continued her strong trial practice from last year while John Perry went from 1 trial last year to 8 this year, and both Brett Billingsley and Dean Terrillion doubled their trial totals from last year:

ATTORNEY	TRIALS
Billingsley	9
Perry	8
Trejo	7
Terrillion	6
Doherty	4
Kentner	3
Oglebay	1

Almost every public defender had multiple trials in 2010, the only exception being Susan Oglebay who received substantially fewer new felony case assignments than her colleagues.

With Mr. Billingsley and Mr. Terrillion already having left the program and Ms. Trejo and Mr. Doherty leaving soon, Grant County is losing attorneys who tried 26 cases last year. That represents almost 70% of the trials in 2010. Grant County will face a significant challenge in maintaining its trial rate in 2011 without these defenders

Sentencing

Sentencing practice remains a concern in Grant County. I recently observed Dean Terrillion represent a client at a sentencing hearing for which he appeared completely unprepared. The prosecutor sought an exceptional sentence of 20 years, arguing that the defendant's extensive criminal history suggested he would inevitably re-offend. Mr. Terrillion said little on the defendant's behalf; his comments were roughly "I can't deny the defendant is in warehouse status. The question is how much money do you want to spend warehousing him?" Both the defendant, who spoke about his family, and the judge, who noted that the defendant's criminal history was all nonviolent, made more persuasive arguments on the defendant's behalf than Mr. Terrillion. This was the same case discussed above in which Mr. Terrillion had spent very little time visiting the client, a fact that undoubtedly made presenting mitigation information more difficult. The court ultimately granted the State's request and imposed an exceptional sentence of 20 years for crimes arising from two residential burglaries that involved no weapons or violence of any kind. Ironically, Mr. Gonzales had insisted that Mr. Terrillion return from his new job to handle the sentencing in this matter because of his familiarity with the case.

Training

Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales arranged for a lunch-time training on the Drug Offender Sentencing Alternative (DOSA) during the fourth quarter. For the year, Mr.

Gonzales organized only two local trainings. Grant County did, however, offer all of its defenders the opportunity to attend the WDA annual conference last spring. In addition, Grant County sent Dean Terrillion and Kacie Maggard to an intensive trial training program last year. As part of my year-end review process, Grant County provided the CLE record for each of its public defenders, and it appears that they all obtained adequate criminal defense training last year.

Though Grant County currently provides sufficient training opportunities for its defenders, Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales should provide more local trainings targeted to ongoing issues such as investigation, experts, and sentencing practice. Moreover, Mr. Gonzales should take advantage of the resources available on his own staff. Grant County is in the process of losing four different public defenders each of whom could have led an in-house training. The failure to establish an ongoing in-house training program led by the defenders themselves is a significant missed opportunity.

Conflicts

Grant County continues to operate without an approved conflict of interest policy as it has for the last 18 months. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has promised to submit a conflict policy for approval but still has not done so. Most recently, he assured me he would provide the conflict policy by December 17. At the end of December, he acknowledged he had missed his own deadline but still has not submitted a conflict policy.

Based upon the information provided by Mr. Gonzales, most conflict assignments during the fourth quarter seemed necessary and appropriate. One case, however, was assigned to outside counsel based not upon a conflict of interest but upon a perceived need for overflow counsel. Mr. Gonzales apparently concluded he needed overflow counsel because the other attorneys to whom he could assign the case had busy schedules. Mr. Gonzales explained that he believed that assignment to outside counsel was in the best interest of the client.

Finally, I have some concern about Mr. Gonzales's use of conflict screens. Mr. Gonzales has a very informal approach to screening conflicts of interest within his office. These conflict screens are generally not memorialized and amount to little more than an admonition to the attorneys involved to not talk with each other about the case. Conflict screens should be rarely used. If a screen is employed, it should be carefully documented. In the future, Mr. Gonzales should avoid the use of such conflict screens. If Grant County wishes to allow for screens in its conflict policy, that policy should detail how a conflict screen is to be documented.

Supervising Attorney

My assessment of the Supervising Attorney's performance remains unchanged. Despite having ample opportunity to address clearly defined problems, Mr. Gonzales has failed to do so. He seems ill-suited for a management role.

The problems identified in this report are not new. Neither are my recommendations. Each quarter I seem report on the same problems and make the same recommendations. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales frequently promises to follow these recommendations or otherwise address ongoing problems, but he rarely delivers on those promises. At the end of 2009, I provided a detailed list of recommendations for improving supervision in 2010. Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales has largely ignored those recommendations. Among my recommendations from a year ago were many familiar topics:

- Monitor jail visits weekly for attorneys who have demonstrated problems in this area and personally assure each client receives a visit;
- Monitor investigation requests monthly and meet with attorneys who have low rates of investigation to discuss improving performance in this area;
- Provide training on the use of investigators and the importance of investigation;
- Draft written guidance for attorneys handling the probation violation calendar that defines which cases must be reported for case credit under the Settlement Agreement;
- Provide training on representing clients in probation violation hearings;
- Enforce reporting requirements for extraordinary credits as well as obtain and record credits for past-due hours from 2009;
- Draft templates for the defenders for expert requests and related motions to seal;
- Coordinate defender efforts regarding sealing issues and meet with the judges if necessary to better understand their concerns with the process;
- Provide training regarding the use of experts, sealing expert requests, and making a record for appeal on expert and sealing issues;
- Monitor expert requests on cases with mental health issues;
- Schedule standing weekly meetings with attorneys who have demonstrated a need for closer supervision;
- Meet with the defenders individually and/or as a group to discuss topics on which they would like training as well areas in which they might be able to present a training to their colleagues;
- Revise the conflicts policy and procedure to reflect current practice and submit it for approval;
- Develop a formal written procedure for transferring cases including a template for a transfer memo and specific guidance regarding the tasks to be completed prior to transfer; and

Rather than take specific steps to deal with ongoing problems and improve the practice in Grant County, Supervising Attorney Ray Gonzales seems content to remain a passive observer rather than a proactive manager of the program.

Mr. Gonzales's strength is in promoting a trial-oriented approach to criminal defense. He views trials as an important part of defense practice and encourages Grant County's defenders to go to trial when appropriate. I worry, however, that by emphasizing trial practice without also stressing the importance of trial preparation, Mr. Gonzales may inadvertently be cultivating what is sometimes referred to as a "cowboy mentality" among some of the public defenders. In such an environment, trial becomes an end in itself and little thought is given to the client's needs and goals or to less glamorous tasks such as investigation, jail visits, and trial preparation.

If Mr. Gonzales is to succeed as Grant County's Supervising Attorney, he must demonstrate a willingness to change and an ability to follow through on promised improvements. The turnover in attorney staff offers an opportunity to establish a new approach to supervision, a more proactive, structured approach. I hope that Mr. Gonzales will seize this opportunity.

Conclusion

Grant County starts 2011 facing the daunting task of rebuilding its public defender staff. Grant County may be fortunate and find attorneys who are highly skilled, diligent, and self-motivated, but given the high level of attorney turnover, the best way to ensure the quality of representation over time is through effective supervision. Accordingly, Grant County should make supervision a priority. Grant Count must take steps to ensure that its Supervising Attorney has internal systems and standards in place to monitor the performance of its public defenders and that he has the management skills necessary to improve attorney performance when it falls below Grant County's minimum standards.

Preface

This report is the result of a collaborative effort between RubinBrown LLP ("RubinBrown"),[1] the American Bar Association ("ABA"),[2] and the Missouri State Public Defender System ("MSPD"). The ABA has denominated the effort "The Missouri Project." The effort was led by Michael T. Lewis (Partner-In-Charge of the Business Advisory Services group at RubinBrown). The research team consisted of Jason Mannello (RubinBrown), Josh Leesmann (RubinBrown), and Kent Bausman, Ph.D. (Maryville University).

We would like to thank Stephen F. Hanlon,[3] Chair of the Indigent Defense Advisory Group of the ABA's Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants ("SCLAID")[4] for his assistance in this effort. We would also like to thank Cathy Kelly and Peter Sterling (Director and General Counsel, respectively, Missouri State Public Defender System) for providing guidance and insight into the MSPD's practices and technical systems. We also appreciate the input and editorial comments of Norman Lefstein.[5] We would also like to thank Dean Hunter for his editorial review.[6]

We would like to thank each member of the MSPD for their cooperation and input throughout the project. We would also like to thank the group of private bar attorneys and public defender experts asked to participate in numerous surveys and meetings. The project would not be possible without their input and efforts.

[2] The ABA (www.AmericanBar.org) is the largest voluntary professional membership organization and the leading organization of legal professionals in the United States. Its nearly 400,000 members come from all 50 states and other jurisdictions. They include attorneys in private law firms, corporations, nonprofit organizations, government agencies, and prosecutorial and public defender offices, as well as judges, legislators, law professors, and law students.

Since its founding, the ABA has actively worked in the fields of legal ethics and indigent defense. In 1908, the ABA adopted its first Canons of Professional Ethics (now the Model Rules of Professional Conduct) ("ABA Model Rules"). In 1913, the ABA created the entity now known as the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility ("ABA Ethics Committee"). The ABA Ethics Committee publishes formal ethics opinions on professional and judicial conduct, provides informal responses to ethics inquiries, and, upon request, assists courts in their development, modification, and interpretation of ethical standards such as the ABA Model Rules and the ABA Model Code of Judicial Conduct.

[3] For the last 20 years, much of Mr. Hanlon's work has involved systemic challenges to indigent defense systems. Mr. Hanlon currently limits his practice to advising and representing public defenders with excessive caseloads. He currently teaches indigent defense at St. Louis University School of Law.

[4] The ABA created SCLAID in 1920 and charged the entity with examining the delivery of legal services to assist the poor.

Executive Summary

This report lays out the methodology, analysis, and results of the joint efforts of the MSPD, the ABA, and RubinBrown to develop data-supported workload standards. Although this effort is not the end of the process, it is a critical first step in establishing supportable, data-driven workload standards that can assist the MSPD in assessing staffing requirements and provide empirical support to determine maximum workloads.

In 1973, the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals recommended maximum case loads for public defender programs (the "NAC Standards"). However, the NAC Standards were not based upon empirical study[7] and MSPD's recent application of the NAC Standards has been criticized by the Missouri State Auditor and the National Center for State Courts ("NCSC"). Both the Missouri State Auditor and the NCSC concluded:

- MSPD's protocol "suffers significantly from its failure to depart from NAC caseload standards,"
- The protocol suffers "from its apparent inability to make fuller use of a 2006 time study,"[8] and
- "Our review of the calculations and available data supporting the caseload protocol noted the MSPD lacks sufficient support for the data and methodology used for protocol calculations." [9]

These critiques were at the forefront of the analysis to establish new workload standards for the MSPD. This study does not rely upon the 1973 NAC Standards. It instead utilizes MSPD's current time data, combined with a data-driven survey process, to calculate new workload standards.

Daily time entry became a mandatory function for all MSPD practitioners as of March 1, 2013.[10] This study utilized MSPD time data for a 25-week period beginning in March of 2013 and ending August of 2013 as the foundation for workload standards.

Excessive workloads result in insufficient time available to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel to all clients. As in prior studies of this type, this study required a means to identify areas where MSPD attorneys reported they often did not have sufficient time to complete certain tasks with reasonable effectiveness.

[10] At the time this report was issued, MSPD personnel did not record sick leave, vacation, or holidays in the time log system. However, this information was tracked in a separate form. Further, the Appellate division did not begin tracking time until April 1, 2013.

The study surveyed MSPD practitioners directly and was used to identify which case-related tasks they reported they often had either sufficient or insufficient time to perform based on current practices and staffing levels. The study then utilized a Delphi method to estimate the amount of time that should be allotted for those tasks that MSPD line defenders identified as often not having sufficient time to complete with reasonable effectiveness.[11] The Delphi method used in this study was an iterative process that included both experienced private practice criminal defense attorneys as well as MSPD line defenders.[12]

The resulting attorney workload standards, shown below, reflect estimates of the average amount of time[13] an attorney can expect to spend on a category of Case Tasks for a particular type of case to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel.[14]

Case Type	Controllable Case Task Hours per Case
Murder/Homicide	106.6
A/B Felony	47.6
C/D Felony	25.0
Sex Felony	63.8
Misdemeanor	11.7
Juvenile	19.5
Appellate/PCR	96.5
Probation Violation	9.8

The conclusion shown in the above chart reflects the consensus time expectations (under prevailing professional norms and standards) of a group of both private practice and public defender experts from across the state of Missouri. The above workload standards, however, are not the end of the process. Stakeholders throughout the criminal justice system recognize that the study and calculation of workload and related workload standards is a continuous process.

[11] MSPD line defenders were asked to identify tasks that they often did not have sufficient time to complete with reasonable effectiveness in the current environment (i.e., current practices and staffing levels).

[12] The study excluded MSPD personnel solely tasked with the administration and management of the system, focusing only on MSPD practitioners that carry a caseload.

[13] Of course, some cases will take less time and some cases will take more time, but in each case, as the recent decision of the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington makes clear, reasonably effective representation "presumes a certain basic representational relationship" and the system of public defense must "[allow]…counsel to give each case the time and effort necessary" to ensure reasonably effective representation, Wilbur v. City of Mount Vernon, No. C11-1100RSL, 2013 WL 6275319, at *1, *3 (W.D. Wash. December 4, 2013), so that the prosecutor's case can be subjected to "meaningful adversarial testing," United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 654, 659 (1984).

[14] The workload standards include only case-related tasks over which an attorney has some control (i.e., exclude in court, travel, training, and administrative time). Further, the workload standards assume adequate support staff and attorney resources are available. Private practice defense counsel reported utilizing 2 support staff resources per attorney, on average. By contrast, the MSPD currently has approximately 2 attorneys for every 1 support staff resource (0.55 support staff per attorney, or approximately 1/4th of the support staff available to private practice defense counsel).

These standards should be revisited periodically to account for potential changes in technology and technology usage, indigent defendant demographics and crime patterns, the Missouri criminal code, and the staffing and organizational structure within the MSPD and the larger criminal justice system.

In addition, as the MSPD's time entry system matures and the amount of data contained within it increases, the ability to utilize that data to examine organization practices, study different types of complexity factors, and quantify time sufficiency will increase.

Introduction

The guarantee of assistance of counsel in one's defense against criminal prosecution is a right afforded under the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Article 1, Section 18(a) of the Missouri Constitution.

In 1963, the Supreme Court's decision in Gideon v. Wainwright extended the right to counsel to felony cases in state criminal courts;[15] subsequently, the Supreme Court extended the right to counsel to misdemeanor cases ending with the defendant being imprisoned.[16] A majority of states, however, recognize the right to a lawyer if the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor. In Missouri, the right to counsel is extended to defendants in misdemeanor cases if incarceration is probable.[17]

Despite the promise provided by the Gideon decision, many academics and legal scholars have concluded that much of that promise has remained unfulfilled.[18] Simply assigning an attorney to a defendant does not ensure a fair outcome.[19] Rather, pursuant to the Rules of Professional Conduct, proper defense representation requires that lawyers: 1) be competent to represent the client, 2) offer prompt and diligent representation of the client's interests, and 3) productively engage with the client while exercising independent judgment.[20]

To guide policy makers and criminal defense practitioners in ensuring a fair and proper process, the American Bar Association has developed Criminal Justice Standards ("ABA Standards")[21] and the state of Missouri has developed the Missouri State Public Defender Guidelines for Representation ("Missouri Guidelines").[22]

The fulfillment of these obligations is dependent upon having sufficient resources available. In the years since Gideon, the consensus is that indigent defense in the United States has been inadequately supported, creating a crisis in the state of indigent defense.[23] According to Drinan, "[f]rom the start, states have failed to fund the indigent defense function adequately, and as the volume of criminal cases has grown over the years, too few lawyers have faced ever-increasing workloads. The result has been what many have called 'assembly-line justice' – in other words, egregious and persistent violations of the right to counsel."[24]

To address the potential violations of the right to counsel, several states and counties throughout the United States have begun to search for data-driven workload standards to assess and manage attorney resources in an attempt to provide adequate criminal defense for the poor. From our discussions with the MSPD, it was also clear that the system would benefit from a consistent methodology that would allow public defenders to quantify workload expectations necessary to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel to indigent defendants.

[21] The ABA Standards are the result of a lengthy process that has been in continual development since 1964. Specifically, the ABA Standards "are the result of the considered judgment of prosecutors, defense lawyers, judges, and academics who have been deeply involved in the process, either individually or as representatives of their respective associations, and only after the [ABA] Standards have been drafted and repeatedly revised on more than a dozen occasions, over three or more years." Literature Review

The Delphi method was introduced in 1962 by researchers at the Rand Corporation. The method was described as a "new" research technique utilized by the Air Force in the 1950s to gather expert opinion and generate a reliable consensus.[25] As a methodological strategy, the Delphi method proposed that a succession of surveys be given to a group of experts, with structured feedback presented to the experts at each interval stage.[26] The surveying practices applied by the Delphi method could be interviews or questionnaires that focus on some fundamental question of significance to the group of experts convened for feedback.

The features of this method include "anonymity, iteration, controlled feedback, and the statistical aggregation of group response."[27] At the onset of the process, participants in a Delphi group are largely anonymous from one another. The purpose of anonymity is to ensure that solicited experts are not influenced by the responses of other participants and that the ideas presented are judged on their own merit. This technique is believed to be conducive to the exercise of independent thought on the part of participating experts and to aid experts in forming well-thought-out opinions.

The reliance on expert opinion as data is built on the premise that an expert is "able to select the needed items of background information, determine the character and extent of their relevance, and apply these insights to the formulation of the required personal probability judgments."[28] Experts typically complete a questionnaire over multiple iterations with the goal of allowing participants to change their opinions and judgments when presented with controlled feedback regarding the opinions and judgments of their fellow participants. This controlled feedback is normally presented as a statistical summation of the group's responses, e.g., a mean or median. The structured feedback at each successive iteration consists of "available data previously requested by…the experts…, or of factors and considerations suggested as potentially relevant by one or another respondent."[29]

The goal of the feedback at each stage is to assist in limiting mistaken beliefs an expert may have on the question at hand or to increase their awareness of other information they may not have previously considered.[30]

At the conclusion of the final iteration, the final iteration's mean or median response is used as the measure of the group's opinion.[31] In theory, the number of iterations required of the Delphi method can be unlimited until consensus among participants is achieved, however it has been found that three to four iterations is usually all that is required to reach consensus.[32] Rowe and Wright systematically reviewed studies that explored the effectiveness of the Delphi method. Their focus was on how well the Delphi method worked in producing a consensus of opinions and judgments and to assess how accurate those opinions and judgments were.

Overall, they found that the majority of these evaluative studies showed support for the Delphi method in reducing variances in opinion and judgment, thus indicating that greater consensus had been achieved. As for the concern over the accuracy of those opinions and judgments, Rowe and Wright again found that the majority of studies provide compelling evidence in support of the Delphi method. Compared to other methodological techniques utilized for similar purposes, the Delphi method was found to "lead to improved judgments over staticized groups and unstructured interacting groups."[33]

Since its introduction, the Delphi method has been employed across a diverse array of industries, such as health care, education, information systems, transportation, and engineering.[34] The purpose of its use beyond forecasting has ranged from "program planning, needs assessment, policy determination, and resource utilization."[35] Within the legal system, early examples of use of the Delphi method can be traced back a couple of decades.

Examples of these attempts were sponsored by both the National Association of Court Management ("NACM") and the National Center for State Courts ("NCSC"). These efforts were principally charged with assessing judicial and court support staff needs.[36]

In the 2000's, the NCSC started using Delphi techniques in addressing the caseload and workload crisis of indigent defense in the United States. In a recent book, Lefstein comments on the use of the Delphi method, noting:

> "The technique is recommended when a problem does not lend itself to precise measurement and can benefit from collective judgments. This would seem to be precisely the situation when a defense program seeks to determine how much additional time, on average, its lawyers need to spend on a whole range of activities involving different kinds of cases."[37]

The Delphi method has been recommended as a necessary complement to time-based studies that seek to determine appropriate caseloads for defense lawyers.[38] What the Delphi method is believed to offer is a method to adjust preliminary case weights based on time studies while avoiding the institutionalization of potentially sub-standard current practices.

Methodology & Analysis

Past workload studies[39] were reviewed and assessed in developing the methodology advanced in this study, which sought to quantify the amount of time a public defender should expect to spend on a particular task in a particular case type through an application of the Delphi method. As in prior studies, the Delphi methodology was used to provide an estimate of what workload standards should be in order for a public defender to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel. However, among other things, this study expands upon prior work in this field in that it focuses on both the amount of time that should be spent on a task, as well as how often a task should be completed. Further, this study expands on prior work in that it utilizes the input of private practice defense counsel.

To determine workload standards, a multi-step process was used that first analyzed the current, "actual" state of affairs as a starting point. After an introduction of the definitions and key terms utilized throughout this study, the methodology can best be explained as the performance of the following steps:

Standards, Definitions, and Key Information

Sufficient time to complete the specific task: the amount of time, on average, reasonably required to complete the task with reasonable effectiveness.

Reasonable effectiveness: effective representation under prevailing professional norms.

Typical case: average, or typical, case considering that each case may have significant variability in the level of complexity (i.e., language, mental health, and other issues).

ABA Criminal Justice Section Standard 4-6.1(b): "Defense counsel may engage in plea discussions with the prosecutor. Under no circumstances should defense counsel recommend to a defendant acceptance of a plea unless appropriate investigation and study of the case has been completed, including an analysis of controlling law and the evidence likely to be introduced at trial."

Missouri v. Frye (132 S.Ct. 1399, 2012): "…ninety-four percent of state convictions are the result of guilty pleas."

A. System Analysis

The MSPD provides "direct representation to over 98% of the indigent defendants accused of state crimes."[40] The system is comprised of approximately 585 employees, of which 376 (64%) are attorneys and 209 (36%) are support staff. In other words, there is approximately one support staff resource for every two attorneys. The line defender attorney group consists of 312 public defenders in the trial division, 36.5 public defenders in the Appellate/PCR division, and 17 public defenders in the capital division. The trial and appellate/PCR division support staff group consists of 43 legal assistants, 56.5 investigators, 6.5 paralegals, 3 mitigation specialists, and 67.5 secretaries.

The MSPD maintains a case management system that tracks basic case information such as open date, close date, charge type, disposition type, jurisdiction, and assigned attorney. This study utilized the current 2–year extract of the case management database consisting of over 120,000 cases and over 300 different charge types.

[40] STATE OF MISSOURI PUBLIC DEFENDER COMMISSION, FISCAL YEAR 2012 ANNUAL REPORT 7 (2012).

Since March of 2013, the MSPD has required that all of its public defenders enter their time in a time log system. This system captures the amount of time across over 50 types of tasks for all MSPD practitioners on each case.

This study linked the case management system with the time log system as a basis for the workload analysis. Based upon MSPD's current systems, cases were grouped by type and attorney time spent on each case was grouped by task.

B. Case Type / Case Task Summary

Working with the MSPD, 11 different Case Types were initially identified to use in the development of new workload standards. The 11 Case Types are:

1. Murder / Homicide
2. Sex Felony
3. AB Felony
4. CD Felony
5. Misdemeanor
6. Juvenile
7. Probation Violation
8. Sexual Predator Proceeding
9. Appeals/PCR
10. Release Petitions
11. Special Writs

From an assessment of current cases, it was determined that Special Writs, Release Petitions, and Sexual Predator Proceedings were highly specialized and infrequent. As a result, these Case Types were excluded from the study. The remaining 8 Case Types[41] are as follows:

1. Murder / Homicide
2. Sex Felony
3. AB Felony
4. CD Felony
5. Misdemeanor
6. Juvenile
7. Probation Violation
8. Appeals/PCR

Case Type is currently the primary way complexity is addressed in this workload study, though it is recognized that case complexity can be impacted by a variety of factors. Language barriers, mental health history, and family issues are just a few examples of factors that can impact case complexity.

[41] The remaining Case Types capture the vast majority of case specific time in the MSPD time log system. For this study, the "Murder / Homicide" Case Type did not include capital murder cases. Juvenile cases primarily encompass juvenile delinquency cases; however, there are a small percentage of juvenile status offenses. The MSPD does not handle abuse or neglect cases involving juveniles.

All else equal, however, different Case Types generally have different degrees of average complexity. For example, without any prior case specific knowledge, it is reasonable to assume that a Class A felony will be more complex than a misdemeanor. Since both the case management database and the time log system consistently report Case Type, this data was utilized to assess current actual time and resource utilization, which provides the foundation to draw conclusions about time and resource allocation by Case Type. The 8 Case Types form the foundation for the workload standards and are used to identify how MSPD practitioners are actually spending their time under current conditions and practice.

This study was particularly interested in the tasks that are best performed by attorneys (versus support staff), and in those attorney tasks that may be affected by excessive workloads. In other words, this study sought to identify which attorney Case Tasks are impacted by excessive caseloads and time constraints. An attorney typically has more control over the time spent on certain Case Tasks, such as trial preparation, research, interviews, etc. ("Controllable Tasks") than the time spent on other Case Tasks, such as travel, court, etc. ("Non-Controllable Case Tasks"). Therefore, Case Tasks were segregated into two different categories for purposes of this study:

Controllable Case Tasks

- Client Communication:
  1. In Person
  2. Over the Phone
  3. Written
  4. Family/Other Communications

- Discovery/Investigation:
  5. State's Discovery Disclosure
  6. Records and Transcripts
  7. Depositions and Witness Interviews
  8. Experts and Technical Research

- Case Preparation:
  9. Legal Research
  10. Drafting and Writing
  11. Plea Negotiation
  12. Court Preparation
  13. Case Management
  14. Alternative Sentencing Research

Non-Controllable Case Tasks

15. In Court - Pretrial
16. In Court – Trial
17. In Court – Appellate Argument
18. Travel
19. Miscellaneous Case Administration

Once identified, the Case Type and Case Task classifications were utilized to measure how MSPD attorneys are currently spending their time on case-related work.

C. Time Study

The Time Study combines MSPD's time entry database with its case management database to present a picture of how much time MSPD practitioners are spending on case-related work. Time data was extracted from the time entry database for a 25-week period beginning March 2013 and ending August 2013. This data showed how much time, in total, MSPD practitioners spent on case-related tasks.

This data was combined with case count information from the MSPD case management database to calculate average time spent per Case Type, shown below.[42]

Case Type	Average Reported Controllable Case Task Hours per Case
Murder/Homicide	84.5
A/B Felony	8.7
C/D Felony	4.4
Sex Felony	25.6
Misdemeanor	2.3
Juvenile	4.6
Appellate/PCR	30.3
Probation Violation	1.4

The calculation first annualized the total case-related time incurred over the 25-week period (by dividing the total time by 25 weeks, and then multiplying the result by the 52 weeks in a year). We then estimated the average time per Case Type by using MSPD's case management database to estimate the average number of cases for which that time is incurred.

Specifically, we determined the average number of open cases between March 31, 2013 and August 31, 2013 (to reflect a workload that is concurrent with the time data), and then annualized that figure by dividing the open workload by the average length of case (based on fiscal year 2012 and fiscal year 2013 case management database). The resulting figure is an estimate of the number of cases per year. The annualized total time incurred divided by the estimated number of cases per year provides the average reported time per case, as shown below.

[42] The chart summarizes current average reported time on case-related tasks by Case Type. Further, the reported average excludes travel, in court, and administrative time. This Delphi study has focused on the Controllable Case Tasks for each of the 8 referenced case types, excluding all Non-Controllable Case Tasks (which account for a significant portion of an attorney's time), because the time required for the Non-Controllable Case Tasks is predominantly dictated by the court's schedule and the geography of the district.

Case Type	Annual Hours		Annual Case Count		Average Reported Controllable Case Task Hours per Case
Murder/Homicide	22,677	÷	269	=	84.5
A/B Felony	53,855	÷	6,196	=	8.7
C/D Felony	113,002	÷	25,910	=	4.4
Sex Felony	26,916	÷	1,051	=	25.6
Misdemeanor	30,127	÷	13,322	=	2.3
Juvenile	7,085	÷	1,554	=	4.6
Appellate/PCR	44,719	÷	1,477	=	30.3
Probation Violation	24,405	÷	16,977	=	1.4

The Time Study quantified how MSPD attorneys are actually spending their time. However, it does not indicate if this actual time is sufficient to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel.

D. Time Sufficiency Survey

A "Time Sufficiency Survey" was conducted on MSPD line defenders.[43] MSPD practitioners were asked what percentage of the time for specific Case Type / Case Task combinations they had sufficient time to complete the task with reasonable effectiveness.

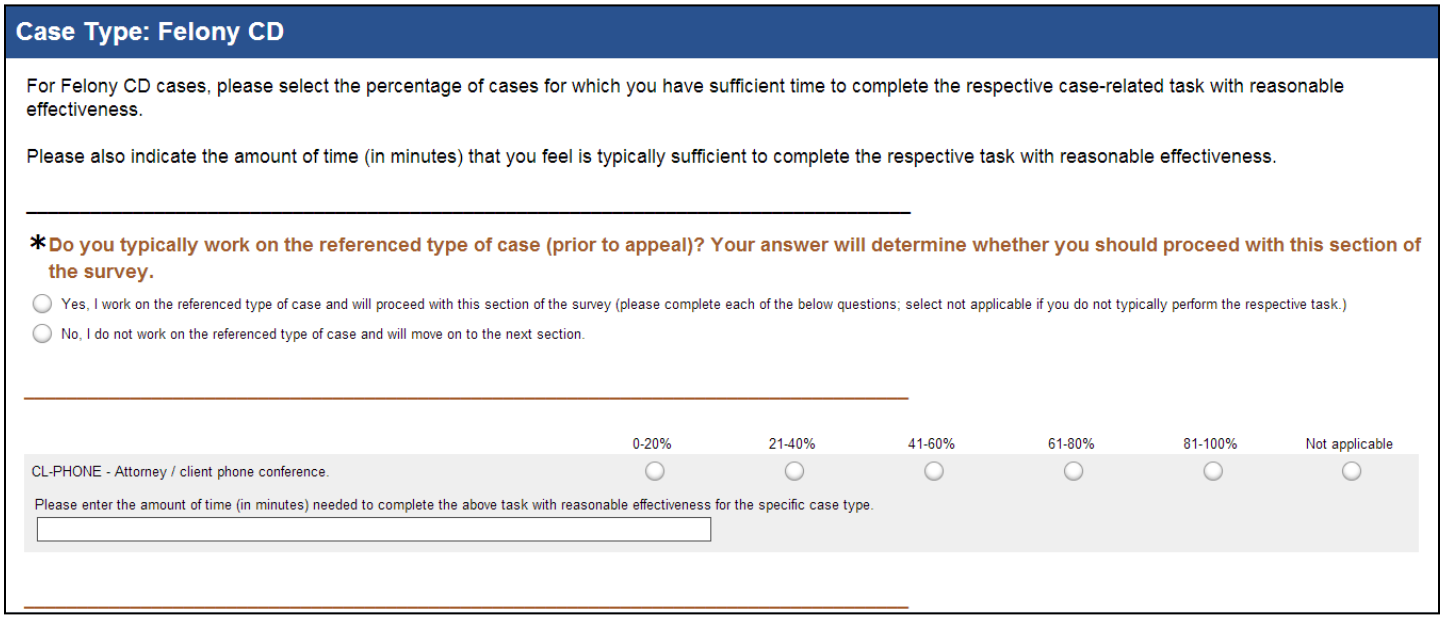
The Time Sufficiency Survey results were utilized to exclude certain Case Type and Case Task combinations from the Delphi process.[44] That is to say, if MSPD practitioners indicated that they often had sufficient time to adequately perform the specified Case Task for the Case Type based on current practices and staffing levels, the particular task was excluded from the Delphi process.

The Time Sufficiency Survey was performed by creating a questionnaire that was distributed via email to all MSPD line defenders by a third-party, professional survey provider. The survey asked respondents in what percentage of cases do they have sufficient time to complete the Case Task with reasonable effectiveness.

[43] The survey excluded operations personnel and senior management, focusing on public defenders currently carrying a case load.

[44] See the attached Exhibit 4 for the list of excluded Case Type and Case Task combinations.

The questions were asked for each Controllable Case Task within each Case Type, and the respondents were able to indicate their response by choosing either 0-20%; 21-40%; 41-60%; 61-80%; or 81-100% of the time. An example of the survey instrument is shown in the illustration below.



Case Type: Felony CD

For Felony CD cases, please select the percentage of cases for which you have sufficient time to complete the respective case-related task with reasonable effectiveness.

Please also indicate the amount of time (in minutes) that you feel is typically sufficient to complete the respective task with reasonable effectiveness.

* Do you typically work on the referenced type of case (prior to appeal)? Your answer will determine whether you should proceed with this section of the survey.

- ○ Yes, I work on the referenced type of case and will proceed with this section of the survey (please complete each of the below questions; select not applicable if you do not typically perform the respective task.)
- ○ No, I do not work on the referenced type of case and will move on to the next section.

	0-20%	21-40%	41-60%	61-80%	81-100%	Not applicable
CL-PHONE - Attorney / client phone conference.	○	○	○	○	○	○

Please enter the amount of time (in minutes) needed to complete the above task with reasonable effectiveness for the specific case type.

The Time Study, combined with the Time Sufficiency Survey, described the "current state of affairs." In other words, these two components of the analysis allowed for 1) the quantification of how MSPD practitioners currently spend their time on cases, broken down by Case Type / Case Task combinations and, 2) the identification of those Case Type / Case Task combinations where MSPD practitioners report that there is not enough time to perform those functions with reasonable effectiveness.

To move from the "current state of affairs" to a "sufficient state" required a methodology to gauge how much time should be allowed for performance of certain Case Type / Case Task combinations. The "Delphi Process" was utilized to obtain this data.

E. Delphi Process

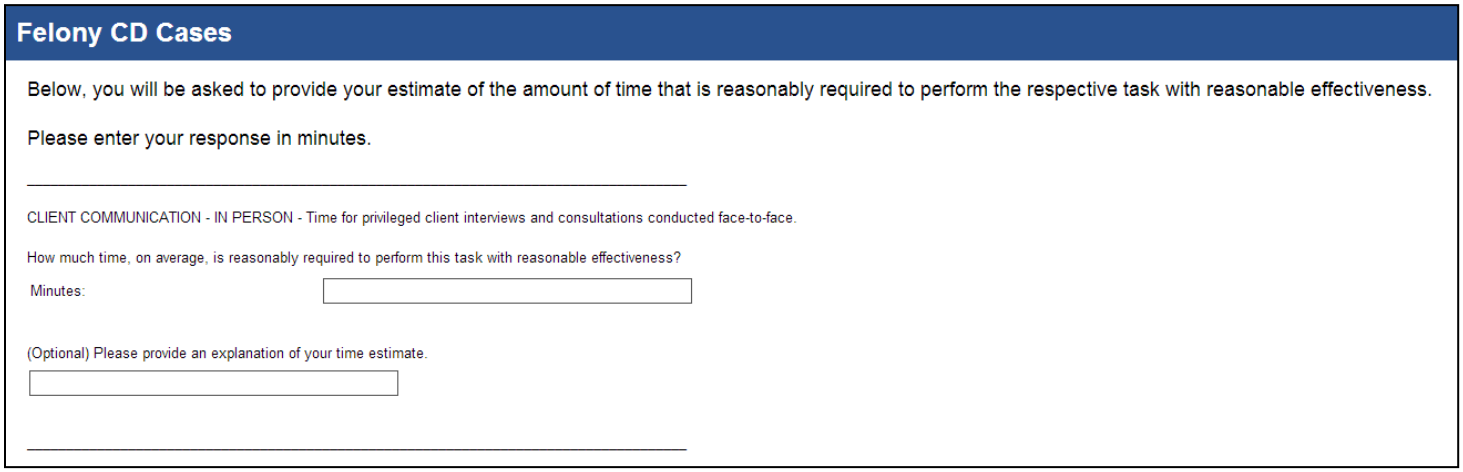
The Time Sufficiency Survey, in combination with the Time Study, provides critical information about current practice. However, the Time Sufficiency Survey results indicated that the MSPD defenders may be operating under excessive workloads. Thus, current practice may provide very little useable information about how much time attorneys should be spending and how often attorneys should be performing particular tasks in order to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel.

The Delphi process used in this study leverages the expertise of both private practice and public defenders to provide a consensus estimate of the amount of time defense counsel should expect to spend on a particular case in order to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel. Further, in providing estimates of the amount of time an attorney should expect to spend on a particular case, the Delphi panel was asked to consider prevailing professional norms and standards of practice. That is to say, the standards resulting from this process should reflect the prevailing professional norms and standards, such as the Missouri Guidelines and the ABA Standards.

As a first step in this process, the time an attorney spends on a particular case can be broken out into two components, time and frequency, as follows:

1. time incurred on the performance of specific Case Tasks ("Task Time"); and
2. the actual performance (or non-performance) of certain Case Tasks ("Task Frequency").[45]

Then, criminal defense experts (private, as well as public defense practitioners) from across the state of Missouri were identified and asked to participate in an iterative study of the time associated with the Case Tasks and Case Types. The expert panel was asked to provide an estimate of the amount of time that should be spent on each Case Task for each Case Type, assuming that the task must be performed. An example of the survey instrument for this step is shown in the illustration below.



[45] For example, Task Frequency component seeks to answer: "In how many cases does an attorney speak to a client over the phone?" This is contrasted with the number of phone calls an attorney may make within a particular case, which was not in the scope of this study.

The response estimates of Task Time were then summarized across the entire group of experts. The group was then provided summary statistics on the point estimate and range of time from this first survey. An example of the summary information from the first survey round is shown in the table below.

CD Felony
(Estimated Minutes)	Lower	Average	Upper
Client Communication - In person	30	309	606

Using the same survey instrument as the first round, the expert panel was then asked to again provide an estimate of the Task Time, this time taking into account the summary of responses from the first round of the process. Similar to the first iteration, the responses were summarized across all participants for this round as well. This round also presented the summarized responses of the private practice and MSPD attorney groups. An example of the summary from this second round is shown below for the same CD felony Case Type and in person client communication Case Task.

As a third and final iteration, the expert panel was invited to participate in a live meeting to discuss a summary of the second round of the survey process and to reach a group consensus for each Task Time estimate. The information in the above illustration was presented to the group during the in person discussion. The group was reminded to keep in mind that the time estimate should:

1. assume adequate support staff (and that attorneys would only perform tasks not appropriate for support staff),
2. assume that the task must be performed,
3. apply prevailing professional norms, and
4. provide an estimate of the amount of time defenders should expect to perform the Case Task.

Given the above information, the group was asked to either confirm the time estimate from the second survey round, or provide a new estimate to replace the second round average.

Although this initial survey process provided an estimate of the typical amount of time required for a particular task, it did not provide insight into the frequency with which these tasks should be performed. To collect this data, the Delphi panel was asked to repeat the same process (making the same assumptions as above and applying professional norms) as with the Task Time estimates, only now providing an estimate of the frequency that defenders should expect to perform the Case Tasks. Again, the three stage process resulted in a group consensus of the Task Frequency for each Case Type.

As a final step in the Delphi process, the Task Time was combined with the Task Frequency to arrive at an expected time for each Case Task. That is to say, the Task Time was multiplied by the Task Frequency as follows:

$$Expected\ Time\ per\ Task\ =\ Task\ Time\ \times\ Task\ Frequency$$

The expected time per task is interpreted as the amount of time that a public defender should expect to spend on any one Case Task and Case Type combination for the typical case. The Delphi panel was then convened for a final meeting for a presentation of the results of the Delphi process to confirm the time expectation resulting from the study. The expected time was then summarized for each Case Type in arriving at the final workload standards.

The Delphi panel's frequency weight was applied to the time estimate to arrive at the estimated amount of time that an attorney can reasonably expect to spend on a particular task for a given Case Type. The resulting workload standards for each Case Type are shown below.[46]

[46] The reported workload standards include only time for Controllable Case Tasks (i.e. exclude in court, travel, and administrative time). The workload standard total shown in the table is rounded to the nearest 10th of an hour.

Case Type	Average Reported Hours		Delphi Panel Adjustment		Workload Standard for Controllable Case Tasks
Murder/Homicide	84.5	+	22.2	=	106.6
A/B Felony	8.7	+	38.9	=	47.6
C/D Felony	4.4	+	20.7	=	25.0
Sex Felony	25.6	+	38.2	=	63.8
Misdemeanor	2.3	+	9.5	=	11.7
Juvenile	4.6	+	15.0	=	19.5
Appellate/PCR	30.3	+	66.2	=	96.5
Probation Violation	1.4	+	8.3	=	9.8

Attorney Workload Standard Conclusion

The following table shows the Delphi-estimated time required for controllable Case Tasks for an attorney to provide reasonably effective defense by Case Type. [47]

Case Type	Controllable Case Task Hours per Case
Murder/Homicide	106.6
A/B Felony	47.6
C/D Felony	25.0
Sex Felony	63.8
Misdemeanor	11.7
Juvenile	19.5
Appellate/PCR	96.5
Probation Violation	9.8

This study sought to quantify the amount of time a public defender should expect to spend on a particular type of case through an application of the Delphi method. In other words, this study sought to quantify what workload standards should be in order for a defender to provide reasonably effective assistance of counsel.

[47] The workload standards include only case-related tasks over which an attorney has some control (i.e., exclude in court, travel, training, and administrative time). Further, the workload standards assume adequate support staff and attorney resources are available. Private practice defense counsel reported utilizing 2 support staff resources per attorney, on average. By contrast, the MSPD system currently has approximately 2 attorneys for every 1 support staff resource (0.55 support staff per attorney, or approximately 1/4th of the support staff available to private practice defense counsel).

Exhibit 1 (attached to this report) shows the estimated time by both Case Type and Case Task group. The conclusion shown in the above chart reflects the consensus time expectations (under prevailing professional norms and standards) of a group of both private practice and public defender experts from across the state of Missouri.

Exhibit 3: Case Task Descriptions

Case Task	Task Description
Client Communication - In person	Attorney's time for privileged client interviews and consultations conducted face-to-face.
Client Communication - Phone	Attorney's time for privileged client interviews and consultations conducted via phone.
Client Communication - Written	Attorney's time for privileged client interviews and consultations conducted by written correspondence. Includes drafting and reviewing correspondence prepared by others.
Client Communication - Family/other communications	Non-privileged communications with client's family and friends, not including potential witnesses.
Discovery/Investigation - State's discovery disclosure	Attorney's time receiving, organizing and reviewing the state's disclosure to all discovery requests including special discovery by motion.
Discovery/Investigation - Records and transcripts not included in state's discovery	Attorney's time in requesting, acquiring and reviewing records which were not part of the state's disclosure, e.g., client's medical records.
Discovery/Investigation - Depositions and witness interviews	Attorney's time preparing for and conducting depositions or witness interviews where the attorney is investigating the case.
Discovery/Investigation - Experts and technical research	Identifying, contracting, and consulting experts including testimony prep and also attorney's time doing self research on a technical (not legal) subject.
Case Preparation - Legal research	Case related legal research for arguments, motions or briefs.
Case Preparation - Drafting and writing	Attorney's time actually drafting, typing or reviewing legal documents including motions and briefs.
Case Preparation - Plea negotiation	Plea negotiation with the state's attorney or representative whether verbal or written.
Case Preparation - Court preparation	Attorney's time reflecting, analyzing, brainstorming and outlining court case presentation. Also includes subpoenas, writs ad testificandum, and pre-charge representation.
Case Preparation - Case management	Attorney's time for case related office administrative tasks, e.g., time keeping, billing, and docket management tasks.
Case Preparation - Alternative sentencing research	Attorney's time identifying, locating, and engaging alternative sentencing resources, e.g., treatment programs.

The table shows the 22 Case Type and Case Task combinations that MSPD practitioners identified as often having sufficient time to adequately perform based on current practices and staffing levels. If the Case Type and Case Task combination was identified by MSPD practitioners and the practitioner estimated sufficient time was consistent with actual time spent on the particular task (from the time log system), the combination was excluded from the Delphi process. Specifically, if the average survey results were higher than 3.3 (on a scale of 1 to 5, 5 being most often having sufficient time) and the average estimated time needed was at least 75% of the actual time observed the Case Type and Case Task combination was excluded from the Delphi process.

It is important to note that it is anticipated that this study will be the first of many performed by the MSPD. An evaluation should be performed in each subsequent study to determine which Case Type and Case Task combinations should be included, or excluded, based upon the results of the Sufficiency Survey.

A National Blueprint

In the following appendices, we set forth additional detail and documents for use by other state and local public defender programs attempting to replicate the work and methodology set forth in The Missouri Project. With appropriate modifications, the additional detail and documents can be used by other public defender programs wishing to replicate The Missouri Project methodology in their respective jurisdictions.

Appendix 1: Example Sufficiency Survey Instructions

RE: Public Defender System Workload Study

As you may be aware, the Public Defender System is currently undertaking a study to develop new workload standards to assist in evaluating the Public Defender System resource requirements.

A key step in this process is the completion of a time sufficiency survey by public defenders and the supporting staff. A time sufficiency survey assists researchers in identifying specific areas where, on average, public defenders feel that they either do or do not have sufficient time to complete the specific task (and thus may be impacting their ability to provide effective assistance to clients). This survey will also provide valuable insight from public defenders on how long various tasks should take.

Your participation in this survey is critical to the process of developing new workload standards specific to the public defender system. You are being asked to complete the electronic time sufficiency survey that will be sent as an email link from a survey provider.

The survey asks a series of questions by type of case ("Case Type") and the specific case-related tasks ("Case Task"). You will be asked in what percentage of those specific cases do you feel that you have sufficient time to complete the Case Task with reasonable effectiveness. Each question has a related question which asks how much time, on average, you feel is necessary to perform the specific Case Task with reasonable effectiveness.

In completing the survey please consider the following:

- Your responses will be kept confidential and any reporting of the results of the sufficiency survey will be done anonymously.
- While each case has significant variability in the level of complexity (i.e., language, mental health, and other issues), the survey is meant to capture responses for the "typical" case. In other words, please consider the average case.
- "Sufficient time" to complete the specific task means the amount of time, on average, reasonably required to complete the task with reasonable effectiveness. "Reasonable effectiveness" means effective representation under prevailing professional norms.
- The questions are segregated along "n" Case Types:
    - Case Type 1
    - Case Type 2
    - Case Type n

If you do not work on the respective type of case, please select "No" for that section of the survey and proceed to the next page. If you do work on the respective type of case, please select "Yes" and answer each Case Task question, selecting or entering "Not applicable" if you do not perform the specified task for that Case Type.

- The Case Tasks are the same tasks that you utilize for time entry in your Time Log system.
- The time sufficiency survey will ask you to indicate in what percentage of cases DO YOU HAVE sufficient time to complete the indicated case-related task (we are not asking in what percentage of cases you don't have sufficient time to complete the indicated task).

We know you face many demands of your time. It is estimated that this survey will take approximately 1 – 3 hours to complete, and your progress will be saved for each section as you click "Next" so the survey can be completed over multiple sessions. You can access your saved survey via the original survey link in the email. Your participation in this process is a critical part of the process in developing accurate and defensible workload standards.

Thank you for your time and attention to this very important matter.

Appendix 2: Example Sufficiency Survey

Case Type: Felony CD

For Felony CD cases, please select the percentage of cases for which you have sufficient time to complete the respective case-related task with reasonable effectiveness.

Please also indicate the amount of time (in minutes) that you feel is typically sufficient to complete the respective task with reasonable effectiveness.

*Do you typically work on the referenced type of case (prior to appeal)? Your answer will determine whether you should proceed with this section of the survey.

- ○ Yes, I work on the referenced type of case and will proceed with this section of the survey (please complete each of the below questions; select not applicable if you do not typically perform the respective task.)
- ○ No, I do not work on the referenced type of case and will move on to the next section.

Please enter the amount of time (in minutes) needed to complete the above task with reasonable effectiveness for the specific case type.

Appendix 3: The Delphi Methodology Employed in The Missouri Project

Assembling the Delphi Panel

During the initial phases of the Delphi process, a list of over 50 private practice attorneys and 50 public defenders was compiled by a steering committee of experts led by MSPD management. Experience, reputation, and location were all considered when compiling this list of over 100 attorneys. Each attorney on the list was extended an invitation to participate in a study to develop workload standards for state of Missouri (see Appendix 4 for example invitation language). Of the over 100 invitations, 32 private practice attorneys and 35 public defenders expressed interest and availability to participate in the study.

Designing the Survey

The general survey content was heavily influenced by MSPD's time entry system and the Case Types and Case Tasks included in the survey were modeled after the MSPD system. An initial survey instrument was built and sent to 5 randomly selected Delphi panel members to elicit comments and feedback that would then be used to develop the final survey structure prior to surveying the entire Delphi group. In order to facilitate a more effective survey, the time component (i.e., how long a task would take, assuming that the task is performed) was broken out from the frequency component (i.e., how often the task is performed). Specifically, isolating the research variables (i.e., time and frequency) facilitates a more robust structured feedback process by providing clarity and allowing the survey participants to avoid having to weight responses.

The Survey Process

Using the Time Survey process as an example, the initial survey round was anonymously administered to all 67 Delphi attorneys (see Appendix 5 for example instructions). It should also be noted that throughout the process, attention was paid to maintaining a balance of public defenders and private practice attorneys (see Appendix 11 for example response rates for the groups). The survey responses were compiled anonymously and summarized into an average response with an upper and lower bound (based on 1 standard deviation from the mean). The summarized responses were provided back to the Delphi panel and they were asked to complete the same anonymous survey again, after reviewing the summary statistics from round 1. The survey responses from round 2 were again summarized into an average response with an upper and lower bound (based on 1 standard deviation from the mean).

Survey Conclusions

Again using the Time Survey process as an example, those completing the second round of the survey were asked to participate in a live meeting to discuss survey results and develop final workload standard recommendations. 24 Delphi panel attorneys participated in the final live round, representing over 495 years of criminal defense and over 55 years of prosecution experience. The results from round 2 of the anonymous survey were presented during the in person meeting (as shown on page 19 of the Missouri Report). Each survey question was addressed individually and the participants were asked to comment, confirm, or recommend a final workload standard for the particular Case Type and Case Task combination before moving onto the next question. By the end of the approximately 8 hour meeting, all Time Survey questions were confirmed or updated by the Delphi panel.

Appendix 4: Example Delphi Panel Invitation

The Public Defender System ("PD") is currently undertaking a study to develop new workload standards to assist in evaluating PD resource requirements. You have been identified as a luminary within the field of criminal defense and have graciously agreed to participate in this Delphi study. We understand that there are many demands of your time and we greatly appreciate your agreement to participate. Although it is difficult to estimate the exact timing of the 'iterations' of this process at this point, we anticipate completing the first two (online) surveys over the next two to three weeks. Further, we anticipate following the survey portion of the process with a meeting (dependent upon coordinating the schedules of the various panel participants).

As a first step in this process, you will be receiving a (separate) follow-up email with a link to the first survey. (If you have not received the link to this survey by Monday (July 15), we ask that you please check your email spam folder to ensure that the message was not blocked by the email system.) We ask that you please carefully review the instructions and, if possible, complete the survey by July 19, 2013. If you have a conflict with this timing, please let us know and we will work hard to try to accommodate alternative timing.

We recognize that this is likely going to be a challenging endeavor and we are glad to be of assistance to you in any way that we can as you work through this process.

Appendix 5: Example Delphi Time Survey Instructions

RE: Public Defender System Workload Study

Thank you for your participation in this process. As you are aware, the Public Defender System is currently undertaking a study to develop new workload standards to assist in evaluating Public Defender System resource requirements.

A key step in this process is the completion of a Delphi study of criminal defense experts in the state of Missouri. The Delphi study will assist the public defender system in creating recommendations for workload standards. This process will provide valuable insight from criminal defense attorneys on the time reasonably required to perform various tasks.

The Delphi study will be structured into iterative phases. It is anticipated that the first 2-3 phases will consist of time sufficiency surveys that will ask participants how much time, on average, is reasonably required to perform a specific task for a specific case type. After compiling the results of the first survey, we anticipate reporting back to you summary statistics from the first round of the survey and submitting to you the second round survey, similar in format to the first round, asking you to update (or leave unchanged) your estimate based upon your review of the results of the first survey. In order to facilitate a consensus of the necessary time for the specific tasks, it is anticipated that there will be an in person (or conference call) panel discussion which will include the expert panel and representatives from the Public Defender System.

Your participation in this survey is critical to the process of developing new workload standards specific to the public defender system. You are being asked to complete the electronic time sufficiency survey that will be sent as an email link.

To start, you will be asked two questions regarding the support staff utilized for case work. Then, the survey asks a series of questions by the specific case-related tasks ("Case Task"). You will be asked how much time, on average, you believe is reasonably required to perform the Case Task for a typical case with reasonable effectiveness (for both attorneys and support staff).

In completing the survey please consider the following:

1. Your responses will be kept confidential and any reporting of the results of the sufficiency survey will be done anonymously.
2. While each case has significant variability in the level of complexity (i.e., language, mental health, and other issues), the survey is meant to capture responses for the "typical" case. In other words, please consider the average case.

3. "Sufficient time" to complete the specific task means the amount of time, on average, reasonably required to perform the task with reasonable effectiveness. "Reasonable effectiveness" means effective representation under prevailing professional norms.
4. The Case Tasks are similar to the tasks utilized by the Public Defender system for time entry in its Time Log system.
5. The questions are segregated along “n” Case Types:
    a. Case Type 1
    b. Case Type 2
    c. Case Type n
6. Your time estimate should reflect the cumulative time reasonably required to perform the task for the entire case. That is to say, if the task takes 10 minutes per instance and a typical case requires 5 instances, the appropriate response would be 50 minutes.
7. We will be available to assist with any questions you have regarding the survey or the Delphi study as you participate in the process.

We know you face many demands of your time. It is estimated that each survey will take approximately 1 – 3 hours to complete, and your progress will be saved as you click “Next” so the survey can be completed over multiple sessions. You can access your saved survey via the original survey link in the email. Your participation in this process is a critical part of the process in developing accurate and defensible workload standards.

Thank you for your time and attention to this very important matter.

(Optional) Please provide an explanation of your time estimate.

CLIENT COMMUNICATION - PHONE: Same as above only by phone.

How much time, on average, is reasonably required to perform this task with reasonable effectiveness?

Minutes:

(Optional) Please provide an explanation of your time estimate.

Appendix 7: Example Delphi Time Survey Instructions for Successive Surveys

RE: Public Defender System Workload Study

Thank you again for your participation in this process and the completion of the phase 1 survey. We are now ready to begin phase 2 of the iterative Delphi process and appreciate your continuing participation.

In phase 1, we asked participants how much time, on average, is reasonably required to perform a specific task for a specific case type. We have compiled the results of the first survey, and will be reporting back to you summary statistics from that survey. In addition, we will be submitting to you the second round survey, similar in format to the first round, asking you to reenter your estimate based upon your review of the results of the first survey. The results of this second round survey will be used to facilitate the in person panel discussion which will include the expert panel and representatives from the Public Defender System.

Your continued participation in this survey is critical to the process of developing new workload standards specific to the public defender system. As in the first round, you are being asked to complete the electronic time sufficiency survey that will be sent as an email link.

To start, we would like to highlight the primary change from the first round:

1. You will be presented with summary statistics (explained in more detail below) from the first survey. These are intended to assist in informing your responses to the second round.

Other than this change, the second round survey will be very similar in format to the first round survey. The Case Types are the same, and the Case Tasks are the same as well. The survey itself will provide two response areas per question: one for your time estimate in minutes (which will be restricted to numeric responses only) and an additional optional comment box which will provide an opportunity to comment on your estimate if you feel it is necessary.

We will be providing you with two data points for each Case Type / Case Task combination – the average time estimate for each combination, and a range of time estimates for each combination. Please review this data prior to and during your completion of the phase 2 survey. In reviewing this data, please keep in mind that:

1. The average time estimate is a single point estimate showing the average response of all phase 1 participants.
2. The range that we present contains approximately 2/3^{rds} of all phase 1 participant estimates. In other words, the range we present is not the entire range of estimates received, but is approximately limited to the central 2/3^{rds} of responses.

In completing the survey please consider the following:

- Your responses will be kept confidential and any reporting of the results of the sufficiency survey will be done anonymously.
- While each case has significant variability in the level of complexity (i.e., language, mental health, and other issues), the survey is meant to capture responses for the “typical” case. In other words, please consider the average case.
- "Sufficient time" to complete the specific task means the amount of time, on average, reasonably required to perform the task with reasonable effectiveness. "Reasonable effectiveness" means effective representation under prevailing professional norms.
- Your time estimate should reflect the cumulative time reasonably required to perform the task for the entire case. That is to say, if the task takes 10 minutes per instance and a typical case requires 5 instances, the appropriate response would be 50 minutes.
- We will be available to assist with any questions you have regarding the survey or the Delphi study as you participate in the process.

We know you face many demands of your time. It is estimated that this survey will take approximately 1 – 3 hours to complete, and your progress will be saved as you click “Next” so the survey can be completed over multiple sessions. You can access your saved survey via the original survey link in the email. Your participation in this process is a critical part of the process in developing accurate and defensible workload standards.

Thank you for your time and attention to this very important matter.

Appendix 8: Example Delphi Frequency Survey Instructions

RE: Public Defender System Workload Study

Thank you again for your participation in this process. In the initial phases of the Delphi process, you were asked to provide an estimate of reasonable time required to perform a specific task for a specific case type. We are now seeking information regarding the frequency of performance of specific tasks for specific case types and appreciate your continuing participation.

We will be sending you a survey, similar in format to the last survey, asking you to enter your estimate of the percentage of cases that defenders should perform the specific task. Specifically, you will be asked to "Provide your estimate of the percentage of cases that attorneys should perform the specific task to provide reasonably effective representation." Also similar to the last survey, we anticipate completing two iterations of this frequency survey:

Iteration 1: You will be asked to provide an estimate of the percentage of cases that attorneys should perform the specific task.

Iteration 2: You will be asked to provide an estimate of the percentage of cases that attorneys should perform the specific task, after you review a summary of Iteration 1 responses.

Your continued participation in this survey is critical to developing new workload standards specific to the public defender system. Similar to prior surveys, you are being asked to complete the electronic survey that will be sent to you as an email link.

The survey itself will provide two response areas per question: one for your frequency estimate—in percentage form— (which will be restricted to numeric responses only); and an optional comment box which will provide you an opportunity to comment on your estimate, as necessary.

In completing the survey please consider the following:

1. Your responses will be kept confidential and any reporting of the results of the sufficiency survey will be done anonymously.
2. While each case has significant variability in the level of complexity (i.e., language, mental health, and other issues), the survey is meant to capture responses for the "typical" case. In other words, please consider the average case.
3. Your frequency estimate should be in percentage form (i.e. enter "25" for 25% of cases).
4. Your response should reflect the frequency that attorneys (not support staff) should perform the specific task to provide reasonably effective representation.

5. Your frequency estimate should reflect the typical case (or average case), assuming adequate support staff.
6. For example, if you enter “25” for the task question, your response will be interpreted as: On average, 25% of cases require performance of that particular task in order to provide reasonably effective representation.
7. "Reasonably effective" means effective representation under prevailing professional norms.
8. In responding, please consider the ABA Criminal Justice Standards (found here: ABA Standards) and the State guidelines for representation (found here: PD Guidelines).
9. We will be available to assist you with any questions you may have regarding the survey or the Delphi study as you participate in the process.

We know you face many demands of your time. It is estimated that this survey will take approximately 1 to 3 hours to complete, and your progress will be saved as you click “Next” so the survey can be completed over multiple sessions. You can access your saved survey via the original survey link in the email. Your participation in this process is critical to developing accurate and defensible workload standards.

Thank you for your time and attention to this very important matter.

Felony CD Cases

Below, you will be asked to provide your estimate of the percentage of cases, on average, that attorneys should perform the specific task to provide reasonably effective representation.

Please enter your response as a percentage (for example, please enter 25 for 25%)

CLIENT COMMUNICATION - IN PERSON: Time for privileged client interviews and consultations conducted face-to-face.

Please enter an estimate of the percentage of cases, on average, that attorneys should perform the above task to provide reasonably effective representation.

Percent of cases:

(Optional) Please provide an explanation of your percentage estimate.

CLIENT COMMUNICATION - PHONE: Same as above only by phone.

Please enter an estimate of the percentage of cases, on average, that attorneys should perform the above task to provide reasonably effective representation.

2. The number of attorneys consistently recording time (averaging at least 1.0 hour per week) to the particular Case Type in the MSPD time log system.

Appendix 13: A Note on Public Defender System Requirements

Time Entry System

The public defender system should have a time entry (or time log) system meeting the following minimum requirements:

- Ability to track:
  - Attorneys' case related time by Case Type and Case Task
  - Attorneys' non-case related time
  - Time in increments no greater than a quarter of an hour
- Case Type and Case Task classification consisting of:
  - 15 – 25 case-related (attorney controllable) tasks
  - Case-related (uncontrollable) tasks
  - Non-case related tasks
  - At least 10 unique Case Types
- Time entry system should be:
  - Mandatory system-wide
  - Consistent across public defender system's offices
  - Able to track all attorney time
  - Fully deployed for at least six-months prior to commencement of study
  - Consistent with the Case Management System

Case Management System

The public defender system's case management system should meet the following minimum requirements:

- Case Management System Case Types are identical to Time Log System Case Types
- Consist of at least twelve-months of system-wide case information
- Have a case identifier also used in Time Log System
- Consistent across public defender system's offices

In addition, it would be beneficial (but not part of the minimum requirements) if other factors such as language barriers, mental health issues, and other complexity factors can be captured in the case management system.

Commitment to Permanent Time Keeping

Permanent time keeping is a critical component to the implementation, ongoing study, and refinement of attorney workload standards. In addition, it can be an invaluable management and analysis tool for a public defender system independent of the need for workload standards. Therefore, we believe it is critical that the public defender system commits to continuous time keeping.

Appendix 14: Example Engagement Letter Language

This letter of engagement ("Letter") sets forth the services that RubinBrown LLP ("RubinBrown") will provide for _____ ("Client"). In order to better understand each party's obligations, the terms "we", "us" and "our" refer to RubinBrown and the terms "you", "your" and "management" refer to the Client. Your engagement of RubinBrown shall be governed by the terms of this Letter and the attached RubinBrown Engagement Terms.

Scope of Services

RubinBrown will provide you with consulting services designed to assess and calculate caseload standards for the _____Public Defender system ("PD"). We will coordinate our efforts with _____, who is engaged on behalf of the PD, to perform our services and provide our deliverable. Based upon our understanding of the proposed project, we anticipate performing the work in the following phases:

1. Overview of the PD system: In Phase 1 of the project, we anticipate receiving (from PD) the following data for analysis:
    a. Annual case load (measured by new cases by year, type, and location) over an agreed upon number of years; and
    b. Personnel overview of PD (measured by number, type, location, part time / full time status, and years of experience of PD staff) over an agreed upon number of years.

    We will utilize this data to gain an understanding of the current state of the PD and to create and present to the PD summary data tables that provide a basic overview of the current caseload and structure of PD.

2. PD Time Study: Phase 2 of the project will involve commenting on, and ultimately the receipt of data from, the in-process time study (the "Time Study"). It is our understanding the PD has begun tracking personnel time on a system wide basis. We anticipate communicating and collaborating with the PD to obtain a clear understanding of how time is being tracked and categorized. It is our understanding that time is being captured along two (2) dimensions: Case Type (a broad designation of the type of case, such as Class B Felony or traffic related, for example) and Case Task (a field to capture the specific tasks and functions that are performed by PD personnel for each Case Type, such as meetings with client or preliminary motions, for example).

    We will utilize this data to measure and present the current case load mix and initial case weights (i.e., how are PD personnel currently spending their time). Based upon similar studies performed in other states, we anticipate that the minimum time required for the Time Study is six (6) weeks.

3. PD Time Sufficiency Survey: Phase 3 of the project will utilize an already completed survey of PD personnel (the "Time Sufficiency Survey") to obtain their perspective on whether the current time spent (by Case Task) is sufficient to fulfill their obligations.

   We anticipate that specific objectives of Phase 3 will involve:
   a. Receiving the raw, underlying data from the Time Sufficiency Survey;
   b. Analyzing the data from the Time Sufficiency Survey;
   c. Creating summary data tables to provide a basic overview of the Time Sufficiency Survey;
   d. Presenting preliminary summary tables to PD for review; and
   e. Comparing preliminary conclusions from the Time Sufficiency Survey to the preliminary conclusions from the Time Study.

   We will utilize this data to identify the Case Tasks that PD personnel have indicated they currently do not have sufficient time to complete.

4. PD Interviews: In Phase 4, we anticipate interviewing three to five experienced PD personnel in order to discuss the results of, and our takeaways from, the Time Study and Time Sufficiency Survey. These interviews will help provide assurance that we are interpreting the data correctly as well as provide PD an opportunity to provide additional insight into the data and the overall process.

5. Delphi Method: Phase 5 will involve coordinating with an expert panel assembled by _____ to obtain estimates of time allocations for those Case Type / Case Task categories that were deemed to have deficiencies in current practice. This panel will be comprised of both experienced PD public defenders and experienced criminal defense practitioners who have experience with the kinds of cases typically handled by the PD.

   We expect that this phase will include two distinct survey processes consisting of a time survey and a frequency survey. By the end of Phase 5, we will have the set of final recommended case weights based upon the results of the Time Study, Time Sufficiency Survey, and panel input from applying the Delphi Method. These final case weights will form the basis for the recommended caseload standards.

6. Final Report: Our final deliverable will consist of a written report that will:
   a. Present the final results of our analysis;
   b. Document and describe all the steps taken and work performed in Phases 1 through 5; and
   c. Present the caseload standards and the underlying data and results in summary form through the use of tables, figures, and graphs.

   We anticipate that writing the Final Report will not actually be a final, distinct phase, but will actually be drafted throughout the process and performance of Phases 1 through 5. We will present _____ with an initial draft report for comments and feedback. The Final Report will be issued once that feedback has been received and considered.

October 1, 2017

Dear Governor Greitens:

Enclosed please find the 36th budget request for the Missouri State Public Defender System (MSPD). As you are undoubtedly aware, MSPD's mission is to carry out the state's obligation to provide competent counsel to Missourians who are poor and face a loss of their liberty following a criminal conviction.

As Director of MSPD, I join your efforts to ensure that taxpayer dollars are utilized responsibly and effectively, to protect equality under the law, and due process for the accused. Over the course of the past couple of years, Missouri has climbed to 8th highest in the rate at which it incarcerates its citizens, with approximately 50% of individuals incarcerated for a non-violent offense, while contemporaneously reaching 11th among the states in violent crime rate.

These outcomes suggest that the prison population, and its budget, is continuing to grow without any positive impact on the state's violent crime rate. In addition to helping the state fulfill its obligation under the 6th and 14th amendments, MSPD's aim is to make sure that taxpayers are not burdened with the enormous costs of incarceration if a person can be effectively managed in the community. Without adequate resources, however, MSPD's ability to develop alternative plans for someone otherwise facing incarceration is limited. Regrettably, this often results in more people going to state prison for low-level or non-violent offenses, including for violating their probation. Not only does this break up families, it needlessly inflates the reliance on the welfare roles when families are forced to break up.

Therefore, it is my responsibility to submit a budget request that accurately reflects the task that is before us. During the course of the past two years, MSPD's caseloads have increased substantially, from about 76,000 cases statewide to more than 85,000 cases a year. Without a budget that mirrors the workload that the state has placed on MSPD, constitutional violations will undoubtedly continue and Missouri will continue to achieve poor outcomes in both its incarceration rate and public safety.

Very truly yours,

Michael Barrett

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Department: Office of the State Public Defender	HB Section(s): HB 12.400
Program Name: Public Defender
Program is found in the following core budget(s):	This program is found in all MSPD core budgets. MSPD has only one mission and only one program - To Provide effective legal representation to indigent persons accused of crime.

1a. What strategic priority does this program address?

The single overriding goal of the Office of the Missouri State Public Defender System is to provide effective criminal defense representation for its clients fulfilling the office's constitutional mandate. Strategies to accomplish this mission have been identified and implemented with continued refinements to enhance productivity, efficiencies, whereby reducing costs and eliminating waste in the processes and operations that deliver such services.

1b. What does this program do?

The Missouri State Public Defender System [MSPD] is a statewide system that provides legal representation to poor persons who are accused or convicted of state crimes in Missouri's trial, appellate, and Supreme courts. Carrying out these functions fulfills the state's obligation to provide the right to counsel under the state and U.S. Constitutions to those who cannot afford it.

2. What is the authorization for this program, i.e., federal or state statute, etc.? (Include the federal program number, if applicable.)

Chapter 600 R.S. Mo, which was enacted to comply with the state's obligations under the U.S. Constitution and Missouri Constitutions:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to . . . have the assistance of counsel for his defence.
Amend VI, U.S. Constitution

In order to assert our rights, acknowledge our duties, and proclaim the principles on which our government is founded, we declare: . . . That in criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to appear and defend in person and by counsel.
Article I, Section 18(a), Missouri Constitution.

3. Are there federal matching requirements? If yes, please explain.

No

7a. Provide an effectiveness measure.

There are three primary measures of effectiveness applicable to the Missouri State Public Defender System:

(1) Case Law: Through cases ruled upon by the United States Supreme Court, the Missouri Supreme Court and Courts of Appeal, specific standards of what does or does not constitute effective assistance of counsel in the representation of a criminal defendant have evolved. Where an attorney is found by the court to have failed to meet those standards, any conviction of the defendant must be set aside.

(2) Missouri Rules of Professional Responsibility are established by the Missouri Supreme Court and applicable to every attorney licensed to practice law within the State of Missouri. The Rules set out what is expected from a competent, professional attorney and are enforced by the Missouri Supreme Court through its Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel. Failure to comply with these rules can result in actions being taken against the attorney's license, ranging from a formal reprimand up to and including permanent disbarment from the right to practice law within the state.

(3) MSPD Guidelines for Representation adopted by the Missouri State Public Defender Commission, which set out the Commission's expectations of its attorneys in order to meet the above standards for effective representation of clients served by Missouri Public Defenders.

Unfortunately, the Missouri State Public Defender System is not currently able to meet many of these standards because it is staffed to handle only a percentage of the total caseload assigned to it this last year. The overload has forced lawyers and investigators alike to cut corners, skip steps, and make on-the-fly triage decisions in order to keep up with the deluge of cases coming in the door. As a result, effectiveness in many of these cases is seriously compromised.

American Bar Association Ethical Advisory Opinion re Public Defender Caseloads: In 2006, the American Bar Association issued an ethical advisory opinion warning against ethical violations caused by excessive defender caseloads and highlighting the fact that public defenders are not exempt from the professional obligation of all attorneys not to take on more cases than they can effectively handle. That opinion cited national caseload standards, as a base which should not be exceeded, but warned that other factors must also be taken into consideration, such as availability (or lack of) support staff to assist the attorneys, time taken away from case preparation by other non-case-related duties, such as travel, training, management, etc., and the specifics of local practice that could impact the amount of time needed for handling particular case types. See, ABA Formal Opinion 06-441: Ethical Obligations of Lawyers who Represent Indigent Criminal Defendants When Excessive Caseload Interfere with Competent and Diligent Representation, May 13, 2006.

Department: Office of the State Public Defender	HB Section(s): HB 12.400
Program Name: Public Defender
Program is found in the following core budget(s):	This program is found in all MSPD core budgets. MSPD has only one mission and only one program - To Provide effective legal representation to indigent persons accused of crime.

Over the last ten years, the issue of Missouri Public Defender's workload has been the subject of five different studies: one by a Missouri Bar Task Force, two by The Spangenberg Group, an independent consultant, another by a Senate Interim Committee, and the most recent by the American Bar Association titled The Missouri Project. Each of these investigations reached the same conclusion: Missouri's public defenders have too many cases and not enough lawyers or support staff to fulfill the state's constitutional obligations.

The most recent ABA study, conducted and overseen by RubinBrown of St. Louis, one of the nation's top accounting and business analytics firms, was designed to not only identify excessive work overloads – which it did -- but also to establish reliable case weights to determine what staffing levels are needed to match the existing workload (i.e., the average number of hours a competent attorney could expect to spend on a particular case type to provide competent representation).

When these case weights are applied to MSPD's caseload, the number of staff MSPD would need to meet its existing caseload is 347 additional attorneys (see case weight metrics below). 336 attorneys are requested in the Constitutionally Mandated Representation decision item. 11 attorneys are requested in the Juvenile Advocacy decision item. This proposal further seeks funding that would allow MSPD to continue to assign all Trial Division conflict cases to private attorneys, which remains the single most efficient way to immediately impact case overload.

ABA/RubinBrown Workload Study
Non-Capital Homicide	106.6
A/B Felony Offense	47.6
C/D Felony Offense	25.0
Sex Offense - Felony	63.8
Misdemeanor	11.7
Juvenile	19.5
Appeals/PCR	96.5
Probation Violation	9.8

Department: Office of the State Public Defender	HB Section(s): HB 12.400
Program Name: Public Defender
Program is found in the following core budget(s):	This program is found in all MSPD core budgets. MSPD has only one mission and only one program - To Provide effective legal representation to indigent persons accused of crime.

The budget request also includes the addition of:

A comprehensive compensation structure for Attorney staff - Assistant Public Defender recruitment and retention is critical to the Missouri State Public Defender System's (MSPD) ability to meet its constitutional mandate of effective representation, especially in light of the fact that it is operating with less than one half the attorneys and one quarter the support staff needed for its existing caseload.

Two Youth Advocacy Units, one in Kansas City and one in St. Louis, to specialize in the representation of juveniles (11.50 attorneys);

Each of these constitutes a measured, but significant step forward on the road toward fulfilling the state's constitutionally mandated obligations.

7b. Provide an efficiency measure.

The Missouri State Public Defender System's 369.50 Trial and Appellate lawyers closed 76,752 cases last year, appearing in every courthouse in every county across the state, at an average cost to the state's taxpayers of just $325.31 per case. This astonishingly low cost of indigent defense in Missouri – among the lowest in the nation -- is not a cause for celebration. It comes at the cost of justice, the result of widespread failure to provide indigent defendants the effective assistance of counsel that the U.S. Constitution's Bill of Rights guarantees them. There is a limit to the 'Do More With Less' mantra within the arena of criminal justice, and Missouri passed it sometime ago.

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Department: Office of the State Public Defender	HB Section(s): HB 12.400

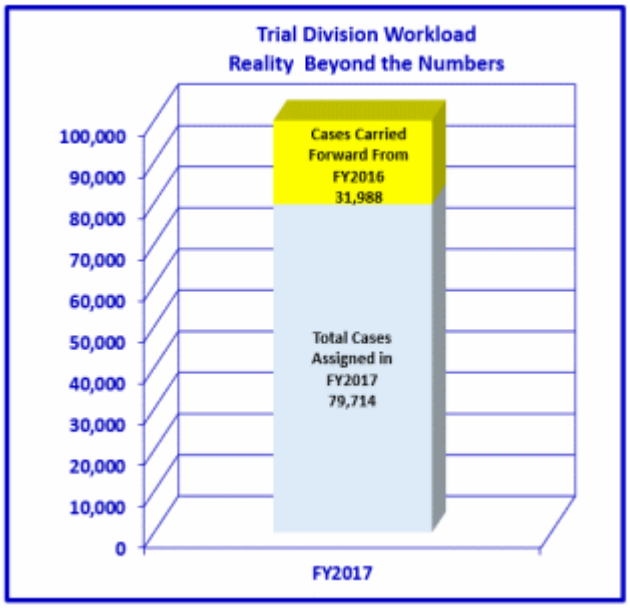
7c. Provide the number of clients/individuals served, if applicable.

In FY2017, MSPD provided representation in 85,812 new cases. The Public Defender Commission sets the indigency guidelines that are used to determine who is eligible for public defender services. Currently, those guidelines match the Federal Poverty Guidelines. Strictly applied, that would mean an individual making only $12,000 a year would not qualify for a public defender. According to recent reports, Missouri ranks 50th out of 50 states in income eligibility standards for public defender services, leaving a wide gap of ineligible defendants who in reality still lack the means to retain private counsel in the market. The guidelines, however, do allow for the taking into consideration of all of the defendant's particular circumstances affecting his/her ability to hire counsel, so things such as the seriousness of the charge may impact that decision. Defendants have the right to appeal MSPD's denial of their application to the court for an independent review of their eligibility. If the court finds they are unable to afford private counsel, the court can overrule the public defender denial.



The table on the following page shows a 6.26% increase in the number of cases assigned to the Public Defender System in Fiscal Year 2017. This is on top of a 9.72% increase in Fiscal Year 2016. In Fiscal Year 2015, the Missouri State Public Defender opened 73,598 cases. In Fiscal Year 2017, 85,812 cases were opened. In addition to the cases opened in Fiscal Year 2017, public defenders must provide representation in those cases that were opened in prior fiscal years and have not yet been closed, as the table on the right illustrates.

2. CORE DESCRIPTION

The Missouri State Public Defender System [MSPD] is a statewide system, providing legal representation to indigent defendants accused of state crimes in Missouri's trial, appellate, and supreme courts. It is an independent department of state government, located within, but not supervised by, the Judicial Branch. It is governed by a seven-member Public Defender Commission, appointed by the governor.

This decision item includes funding for public defenders and their support staff throughout the state and central administrative staff. It also

3. PROGRAM LISTING (list programs included in this core funding)

The Missouri State Public Defender has only one program: providing constitutionally required criminal defense representation to Missourians facing the loss of liberty in state misdemeanor and felony prosecutions, as well as in appellate and post-conviction representation matters in which the state has created a right to counsel.

FLEXIBILITY REQUEST FORM

BUDGET UNIT NUMBER: 15111C BUDGET UNIT NAME: Office of the State Public Defender - Legal Services HOUSE BILL SECTION: 12.400	DEPARTMENT: Office of the State Public Defender DIVISION: Director's Office - Legal Services

1. Provide the amount by fund of personal service flexibility and the amount by fund of expense and equipment flexibility you are requesting in dollar and percentage terms and explain why the flexibility is needed. If flexibility is being requested among divisions, provide the amount by fund of flexibility you are requesting in dollar and percentage terms and explain why the flexibility is needed.

DEPARTMENT REQUEST

As in previous years, the Office of the State Public Defender is requesting full flexibility in our legal services appropriations. (Appropriations 0911, 0912 and 8727). Due to the turnover of attorney positions, the number of conflicts and the overload of cases, it is frequently necessary to transfer cases from state employees (Appropriation 0911) to private counsel who can be compensated from appropriation 0912 or 8727.

It is also necessary to transfer vacancy savings dollars from the Personal Service Appropriation to the Expense and Equipment Appropriation to cover appropriation shortfalls in case litigation expenses and increasing office expenses such as travel, postage, equipment maintenance and network charges.

2. Estimate how much flexibility will be used for the budget year. How much flexibility was used in the Prior Year Budget and the Current Year Budget? Please specify the amount.

PRIOR YEAR ACTUAL AMOUNT OF FLEXIBILITY USED	CURRENT YEAR ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF FLEXIBILITY THAT WILL BE USED	BUDGET REQUEST ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF FLEXIBILITY THAT WILL BE USED
$998,712	$1,000,000	$1,000,000

3. Please explain how flexibility was used in the prior and/or current years.

PRIOR YEAR EXPLAIN ACTUAL USE	CURRENT YEAR EXPLAIN PLANNED USE
$988,712 was transferred from Personal Service (0911) to Expense & Equipment (0912) to cover a significant shortage in litigation costs, general operating costs and $643,067 of conflict cases transferred to private counsel.	Flexibility will be utilized to best meet the caseload demands of the State Public Defender System. Dollars from Personal Service vacancy savings could be used to meet the costs of operating the local offices or to contract out cases to private bar as the need arises or to pay for increasing necessary litigation expenses.

3. WHY IS THIS FUNDING NEEDED? PROVIDE AN EXPLANATION FOR ITEMS CHECKED IN #2. INCLUDE THE FEDERAL OR STATE STATUTORY OR CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORIZATION FOR THIS PROGRAM.

Assistant Public Defender recruitment and retention is critical to the Missouri State Public Defender System's (MSPD) ability to meet its constitutional mandate of effective representation, especially in light of the fact that it is operating with less than one half the attorneys and one quarter the support staff needed for its existing caseload. Further, MSPD must be able to retain the employees it does have in order to avoid the backload that occurs to the existing high caseloads when attorneys move on to other jobs.

4. DESCRIBE THE DETAILED ASSUMPTIONS USED TO DERIVE THE SPECIFIC REQUESTED AMOUNT. (How did you determine that the requested number of FTE were appropriate? From what source or standard did you derive the requested levels of funding? Were alternatives such as outsourcing or automation considered? If based on new legislation, does request tie to TAFP fiscal note? If not, explain why. Detail which portions of the request are one-times and how those amounts were calculated.)

MSPD must be able to pay a competitive salary and offer advancement opportunities to address APD recruitment and retention issues. This can be accomplished through the repositioning of existing job classes to salary ranges that more accurately reflect market/competitive pay and by expanding the job classification structure, creating additional promotion opportunities. The proposed salary minimum represents the first pay step on the planned pay range. Salary structures of the Attorney General, local Prosecutor's Offices and other statewide public defender offices were consulted prior to developing the proposed compensation structures.

The American Bar Association (ABA) adopted 10 Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System in 1992. The Principles were created by the ABA's Standing Committee on Legal and Indigent Defendants and were approved by the ABA House of Delegates in February 2002, as a practical guide for governmental officials, policymakers, and other parties who are charged with creating and funding new, or improving existing, public defense delivery systems.

Principle 8: "There is parity between defense counsel and the prosecution with respect to resources and defense counsel is included in as an equal partner in the justice system."
The commentary on this principle calls for parity of salaries. Prosecuting attorneys and public defenders are key players in the criminal justice system and require the same education and experience. Compensation should be comparable.

As the economy remains strong, APD turnover con*nues to increase with the separa*on rate for Fiscal Year 17 at 17.99%, up 3.38% from Fiscal Year 16. A signi[illegible]ant contribu*ng factor to turnover is the salaries MSPD is able to pay APDs.

6. PERFORMANCE MEASURES (If new decision item has an associated core, separately identify projected performance with & without additional funding.)

When an Assistant Public Defender (APD) leaves MSPD for another job, cases must be reassigned to other APD's who are already overloaded with high caseloads. This results in case delays for clients, puts additional burdens on local county jails as defendants continue to sit in jail awaiting case resolution, and creates unnecessary backlogs for the courts. In addition, high turnover creates a constant cycle of hiring, training, and rehiring as APD's gain valuable knowledge and experience and then seek other jobs negatively impacting the morale and increasing burnout of remaining staff. All of which ultimately end up costing the Missouri taxpayer.

In the Spring of 2013, the National Juvenile Defender Center issued an assessment of Missouri's system of juvenile indigent defense representation. The report was part of a national strategy to review state juvenile indigent defense delivery systems and to evaluate how effectively attorneys in juvenile court are fulfilling their constitutional and statutory obligations to their clients. The study concluded that "Missouri's indigent defense system is in crisis and has endured at least two decades of crushing caseloads and inadequate resources to provide its mandated services," and little to no attention has been paid to what this crisis has meant to poor children accused of a criminal offense. Specifically, it found that:

"children facing criminal or status offenses in Missouri's juvenile justice system frequently do so without the benefit of counsel or without adequate representation through all critical stages. There are significant gaps in both access to and quality of representation provided to youth that fall well below the standards established by the Institute of Judicial Administration and American Bar Association's Juvenile Justice Standards, the ABA Rules of Professional Conduct, the Ten Core Principles for Juvenile Indigent Defense established by NJDC and NJDS's newly release National Juvenile Defense Standards. Justice is often rationed to juveniles in Missouri for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is the crisis in the public defender system...."

Further, the NJDC assessment emphasized that "the defense lawyer plays a critical role for youth in delinquency court by protecting clients from unfairness, promoting accuracy in decision making, providing alternatives for decision makers, and monitoring institutional treatment, after care and reentry. Throughout the entire court process the juvenile defender is the individual responsible for bringing the child's perspective and interests before the court." Not only is the defense lawyer the child's voice, in order to adequately represent a child, they need to be knowledgeable in other areas including adolescent brain development, education law, childhood mental illnesses, trauma, and cognitive limitations, age-appropriate treatments and disposition options, and juvenile court practice and procedure. Specialization is critical when representing youth.

4. DESCRIBE THE DETAILED ASSUMPTIONS USED TO DERIVE THE SPECIFIC REQUESTED AMOUNT. (How did you determine that the requested number of FTE were appropriate? From what source or standard did you derive the requested levels of funding? Were alternatives such as outsourcing or automation considered? If based on new legislation, does request tie to TAFP fiscal note? If not, explain why. Detail which portions of the request are one-times and how those amounts were calculated.)

Utilizing data provided from the Office of the State Court's Administrator, there were 14,342 formal juvenile cases filed statewide in 2012 (the last year that OSCA has provided MSPD with numbers), of which 7,836 were abuse/neglect cases, leaving 6,506 juvenile cases where the juvenile was entitled to an attorney. Of the 6,506 juveniles, only 13% were actually represented by private counsel. That leaves 5,660 juvenile cases where the juvenile needed a public defender. However, in that same year, MSPD provided representation in just 1,923 juvenile cases.

As a result of this finding, the Missouri Juvenile Justice Association is seeking a rule or statutory change to prohibit the waiver of counsel by juveniles (this need has become even more so given the Department of Justice's findings in its recent report on St. Louis County). In the meantime, they have asked MSPD to pursue the reinstatement of the two Juvenile Advocacy Units, one in the Kansas City area and one in the greater St. Louis area. (MSPD previously had these units, but had to relinquish them when trial division caseloads became too high and no additional personnel were added.)

These specialized units not only better serve juvenile clients, they also provide a resource and expertise for those providing juvenile representation throughout the state. This will become even more essential if waiver of counsel in these cases is eliminated and more public defenders and inexperienced private attorneys are appointed to provide juvenile defense representation.

MSPD is requesting juvenile attorney staffing at the recommended RubinBrown workload standards. MSPD is also seeking one additional attorney in each office to represent juveniles certified to stand trial as an adult and to serve as a statewide juvenile resource attorney to assist local offices across the rest of the state.

As stated in the program description, the issue of Missouri Public Defender's workload has been the subject of many different studies. Through budget requests, the media and eventually law suits, the Missouri State Public Defender (MSPD) has warned that the rights of poor Missourians are being violated throughout the state because MSPD's resources are too few and the caseloads too high. These claims were confirmed for both juveniles and adults.

In the Spring of 2013, the National Juvenile Defender Center (NJDC) released a report that declared Missouri's indigent defense system to be "in crisis" after having "endured two decades of crushing caseloads and inadequate resources to provide its mandated services." A year later, following yet another failed attempt to acquire more resources, the American Bar Association (ABA) released the results of a commissioned report using a nationally renowned accounting firm, RubinBrown, which assessed MSPD's workload data in order to draw unbiased conclusions.

To facilitate this review, MSPD became the first public defender system in the country to require its attorneys to track time in five minute increments. Applying the Delphi methodology, a proven business-analysis model, the ABA Report, "The Missouri Project", found that MSPD did not have nearly enough resources to meet its obligations and that a significant number of additional attorneys were needed.

When these case weights are applied to MSPD's 2017caseload, the number of staff MSPD would need to meet its caseload is 347 additional attorneys (see case weight metrics to the right). 336 attorneys are requested in the Constitutionally Mandated Representation decision item. 11 attorneys are requested in the Juvenile Advocacy decision item. This proposal further seeks funding that would allow MSPD to assign all Trial Division conflict cases to private attorneys, which remains the single most efficient way to immediately impact case overload.

4. DESCRIBE THE DETAILED ASSUMPTIONS USED TO DERIVE THE SPECIFIC REQUESTED AMOUNT. (How did you determine that the requested number of FTE were appropriate? From what source or standard did you derive the requested levels of funding? Were alternatives such as outsourcing or automation considered? If based on new legislation, does request tie to TAFP fiscal note? If not, explain why. Detail which portions of the request are one-times and how those amounts were calculated.)

This Decision Item presumes that:

1. All Trial Division conflict cases are contracted out to the private bar;
2. Current contract fee amounts to private counsel remain flat;
3. Caseload, and the percentage of cases that have conflicts, remain relatively flat; and
4. The personnel increase, included in Part B, is also funded.

CASELOAD RELIEF - Constitutionally Mandated Representation Contracting ALL Trial Division Conflict Cases (PART A)

When a case involves multiple defendants, there is always the risk that one will point a finger at the other. Therefore, the local defender office can only represent one co-defendant and any other co-defendants must be represented elsewhere, either by another defender office or by private counsel on a contract for representation. Historically, MSPD had sent the first co-defendant to another defender office and contracted out additional co-defendants to private counsel.

To assist in efficiencies, in Fiscal Year 2018, the Missouri State Legislature and the Governor, provided an additional $4,421,988 unrestricted funds for the purpose of contracting out all conflicts to private attorneys.

Although the private counsel fee schedule has not been adjusted in years, due to 6.25% caseload increase from Fiscal Year 2016 to Fiscal Year 2017 and due to the fact that are simply more conflicts, an additional $858,842 is needed to be able to contract out all conflicts.

ALL TRIAL CONFLICTS TO PRIVATE COUNSEL

NEW DECISION ITEM
RANK: 5 OF 5

Department:	Office of the State Public Defender	Budget Unit	15111C
Division:	Public Defender
DI Name:	Caseload Relief - Constitutionally Mandated Representation DI#1151003	HB Section	12.400

Attorney Staff Needed to Handle Remaining Caseload: Removing all conflict cases helps to reduce the public defender case overload, but it does not eliminate it. Assuming that there is no increase in caseload, MSPD would still be 347 lawyers short of the number of attorneys needed according to the ABA report. This number is determined by applying RubinBrown's average case weights to the number of cases for each case type assigned for Fiscal Year 2017. The number was calculated after conflicts have all been eliminated and contracted to private attorneys. Attorney travel time and court time were added to the RubinBrown metrics calculations, resulting in 1,470,060 attorney hours required. Assuming 2,080 available attorney hours each year—707 attorneys would be required to provide effective, constitutional representation. The current number of Trial and Appellate Division attorneys is 359.50. There are 11.50 attorneys requested in a separate Juvenile Advocacy decision item; leaving 336 attorneys to be requested in this decision item.

Support Staff: Every law practice management expert will affirm that lawyer time needs to be leveraged by utilizing support staff for everything that can be done by a non-lawyer. This allows the lawyer to focus on tasks that only a lawyer can do. Therefore, MSPD is requesting 1 legal assistant for every 3 attorneys; that would mean 112 legal assistants in order to meet that ratio.

Attorneys and support staff would be allocated to the most over-worked offices based on several factors including but not limited to: the RubinBrown caseload weights, problematic counties to practice in, difficult prosecutors to negotiate with, office space available, etc.
The calculations for the Trial Division office only include the juvenile cases where the public defender system is currently providing juvenile representation. Some local public defender offices do not provide representation for juveniles and in those instances many counties are contracting with private attorneys to do so. A separate decision item is included in MSPD's FY2019 Legislative Budget Request to set up juvenile advocacy offices in St. Louis Area and in Kansas City.

Some of the staffing requested in this decision item would be used to establish a Springfield Appellate/Post-Conviction office. (The caseload numbers for these appellate/pcr cases are included in the RubinBrown metrics and in the total number of attorneys needed for effective representation.) The Appellate/Post-conviction Division presents unique overload issues, which unlike Trial Division conflicts, are best addressed not through increased contracting to private counsel, but by the creation of an additional appellate/post-conviction office in Springfield, MO.

The attorneys in this division represent defendants who have already been convicted of a crime and are raising issues of error in the judicial process that led to their conviction. Post-conviction counsel must always review and raise, where appropriate, the issue of ineffective assistance of the client's previous counsel. This means that the office that provides appellate representation for a client will always have a conflict handling that client's post-conviction proceedings, which is why MSPD has six appellate/post-conviction offices, two each in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Columbia. Each duo of offices is able to handle conflict cases for one another, without (most) of those cases having to be shipped across the state to one of the other two appellate/post-conviction office locations.

Department:	Office of the State Public Defender	Budget Unit	15111C
Division:	Public Defender
DI Name:	Caseload Relief - Constitutionally Mandated Representation	HB Section	12.400
	DI#1151003

However, travel is still a significant problem in this division because of the nature of post-conviction proceedings, which take place in the circuit court of conviction. This means MSPD has five offices covering post-conviction proceedings in 114 counties plus the City of St. Louis. (Only one of the offices in Columbia handles post-conviction matters, the other handles only appellate cases.) The map on the next page shows how the counties are currently divided among the existing offices. As the map indicates, the heavier concentration of cases in the two urban areas of St. Louis and Kansas City leave the attorneys in those areas unable to take on as many counties as their Central Missouri counterparts are required to cover. But even with fewer cases coming in from each of the outstate (grey) counties, MSPD's Central PCR office is carrying a caseload at 362% of its attorney capacity. Add in the amount of travel involved and it becomes an equation that is simply not sustainable.

MSPD has attempted to reduce the travel burden on these offices by contracting out "remote-county PCR's", as they are known within the system, to local private counsel, but this approach has not been successful. Post-conviction practice is unique and very technical. Very few private attorneys have any experience, much less expertise, in these types of cases. MSPD's attempts to contract these cases to private counsel have too frequently resulted in the cases having to be brought back in-system to correct significant, case-changing errors made by attorneys who are in over their heads. MSPD attempted to address this problem by offering training to private attorneys interested in taking these cases, but that, too, has proved insufficient to the task. Few accepted the opportunity and those who did, ended up taking these cases so infrequently that any benefit they may have received from the training has long since worn off by the time they get their next PCR.

Therefore, part of this decision will address the problem by adding an additional office in Springfield. Missouri's appellate courts are located in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Springfield (with the Supreme Court in Jefferson City), so the new office would be conveniently located to the appellate court, while also reducing the travel time associated with a majority of the post-conviction cases in southwest Missouri. As expected, given the fact that Springfield is Missouri's third most populated city and Joplin is not far behind, the southwest region of the state accounts for a significant number of the post-conviction cases currently overloading the Central PCR office. Creating an additional Appellate/PCR office in Springfield will siphon these cases off the Columbia office, provide better service to the clients and courts in Southwest Missouri while reducing travel costs and freeing up time for the Columbia Central PCR attorneys to better handle the workload in the remainder of Missouri's outstate counties.

2. CORE DESCRIPTION

This appropriation was established to cover three main types of expenses.

VIOLENT CRIMES: Payment of expenses associated with the defense of violent crimes, including those charged as sexually violent predators.

LITIGATION EXPENSES: Litigation expenses costing over $500 are paid out of the appropriation. These would include, but are not limited to, such things as independent analysis of DNA evidence, mental health evaluations by experts, depositions, interpreters, medical records, transcriptions, exhibits, immigration consultations, fingerprint experts, handwriting analysis, etc. There has been no increase in funding for litigation expense since fiscal year 1996.

CONFLICT CASES: A conflict requiring a case to be contracted out to private counsel occurs when there are multiple co-defendants charged in a particular incident. Should these co-defendants, each want to snitch on the other, an ethical problem is created and one defender office may not represent more than one co-defendant.

2. CORE DESCRIPTION

As laws continue to change and turnover of Missouri State Public Defender's staff is significant, training of public defenders and their staff becomes even more critical. The funds in this appropriation are collecteded from the indigent accused and by statute are used at the discretion of the Director of the State Public Defender System for the operation of the department, including, but not limited to, training, Missouri Bar Dues, legal research, one-time equipment purchases, office moves and other cirtical needs.

3. PROGRAM LISTING (list programs included in this core funding)

There are no separate programs within this appropriation. Dollars collected from Puiblic Defender Clients are utilized to assist in funding the Missouri State Public Defender System.

2. CORE DESCRIPTION

Beginning in FY1995, each department/agency participating the Department of Revenue's Debt Offset Program, was required to establish an appropriation to receive money intercepted from individual Missouri State Income Tax Refunds by the Department of Revenue on behalf of the department/agency.

The Department of Revenue has also set up an intercept program for persons receiving Lottery winnings, in which the State Public Defender participates.

3. PROGRAM LISTING (list programs included in this core funding)

In Fiscal Year 2017, the Missouri State Public Defender intercepted $1,059,487.53 of Missouri State Income Tax refunds and $95,201.99 of Lottery winnings form past Public Defender clients who have/had outstanding debts to the State Public Defender.

Each year the budget request must contain core requests for each of the appropriation categories that were funded in the previous year. (As represented above.) The core requests are required for continued funding. The dollar requests in core decision items reflect the appropriations received in the current fiscal year less any one-time equipment expenditures or core reductions and are the base with which MSPD begins the FY2017 budget request.

Every other item in this budget request is a separate and distinct budget decision item which is considered for funding by the Governor and the Legislature. MSPD's request for new decision items are put forth on the following pages. In the FY2018 budget request, MSPD is requesting that the Commission approve decision items to provide a more comprehensive attorney compensation structure and additions .

The Fiscal Year 2018 Budget Instructions received from the Office of Administration (OA), Division of Budget and Planning, states that Departments should not include any statewide pay plan requests in our budget submission, such as cost of living adjustments. OA did request that the cost to comply with FSLA Overtime Regulations should be included as part of the Department's request.

Church, et al v. State of Missouri, et al

Over the last couple of decades, the issue of Missouri Public Defender's workload has been the subject of five different studies: one by a Missouri Bar Task Force, two by the The Spangenberg Group, an independent consultant, another by a Senate Interim Committee, and the most recent by the American Bar Association titled The Missouri Project. Each of these investigations reached the same conclusion: Missouri's public defenders have too many cases and not enough lawyers or support staff to fulfill the state's constitutional obligations.

The most recent ABA study, conducted and overseen by RubinBrown of St. Louis, one of the nation's top accounting and business analytics firms, was designed to not only identify excessive work overloads – which it did -- but also to establish reliable case weights to determine what staffing levels are needed to match the existing workload (i.e., the average number of hours a competent attorney could expect to spend on a particular case type to provide competent representation).

When these case weights are applied to MSPD's caseload, the number of staff MSPD would need to meet its existing caseload is 332.9 additional attorneys (see case weight metrics below). 311 attorneys are requested in the Constitutionally Mandated Representation decision item. 11.5 attorneys are requested in the Juvenile Advocacy decision item. In addition, there are 10 FTE currently being restricted by Governor Nixon. This proposal further seeks funding that would allow MSPD to assign all Trial Division conflict cases to private attorneys, which remains the single most efficient way to immediately impact case overload.

ABA/RubinBrown Workload Study
Non-Capital Homicide	106.6
A/B Felony Offense	47.6
C/D Felony Offense	25.0
Sex Offense - Felony	63.8
Misdemeanor	11.7
Juvenile	19.5
Appeals/PCR	96.5
Probation Violation	9.8

The budget request also includes the addition of:

- Two Youth Advocacy Units, one in Kansas City and one in St. Louis, to specialize in the representation of juveniles (11.50 attorneys);
- A comprehensive compensation structure for Attorney staff; and
- Dollars to fund the new FSLA Overtime Regulations should they become law.

CASELOAD RELIEF—PART A
ALL TRIAL DIVISION CONFLICT CASES TO THE PRIVATE BAR

FY2018 New Decision Item—
Trial Division Conflicts	$1,338,618

This option presumes that:

1. All Trial Division conflict cases are contracted out to the private bar;
2. Current contract fee amounts to private counsel remain flat;
3. Caseload, and the percentage of cases that have conflicts, remain relatively flat; and
4. The personnel increase, included in Part B, is also funded.

Contracting All Trial Division Conflict Cases:

Currently, when a case involves multiple defendants, there is always the risk that one will point a finger at the other. Therefore, the local defender office can only represent one co-defendant and any other co-defendants must be represented elsewhere, either by another defender office or by private counsel on a contract for representation. Historically, MSPD has sent the first co-defendant to another defender office and contracted out additional co-defendants to private counsel. However, this in-house handling of trial division conflict cases is not a cost-effective approach because it pulls lawyers out of their primary jurisdictions and requires them to drive significant distances to appear in court, conduct investigations, witness interviews and depositions, visit their clients in jail, all in a distant county. It is not uncommon for each trip to take a day of the attorney's time to deal with one or two cases. Instead, economies of scale suggest it is more cost-effective and efficient to contract all trial level conflict cases to local attorneys in the private bar and allow the defender offices to concentrate on effectively representing the cases that arise within the counties they are designated to serve.

At present, MSPD uses the fee schedule on the following page for cases contracted out to private counsel. Litigation expenses (the cost of transcripts, investigation, experts, or depositions) are not included in these fees but are approved on a case-by-case basis. Such costs would be incurred by MSPD whether the case was being handled internally or by private counsel.

Given the assumptions set out, the cost of contracting out all Trial Division conflict cases to private counsel would run a little over $6.573 million. Since our Fiscal Year 2017 appropriation for this purpose is approximately $2.278 million plus $2,957,120 in Legal Services, which is currently restricted by Governor Nixon, contracting out all conflict cases would require an additional $1,338,618 million, as shown in the table on the following pages.

CASELOAD RELIEF—PART B
FUNDING FOR 258 ASSISTANT PUBLIC DEFENDERS & 86 SUPPORT STAFF

Constitutionally Mandated Representation

$22,600,965

Attorney Staff Needed to Handle Remaining Caseload: Removing all conflict cases helps to reduce the public defender case overload, but it does not eliminate it. Assuming that there is no increase in caseload, MSPD would still be 332.9 lawyers short of the number of attorneys needed according to the ABA report. This number is determined by applying RubinBrown's average case weights to the number of cases for each case type assigned for Fiscal Year 2016. The number was calculated after conflicts have all been eliminated and contracted to private attorneys. Actual attorney travel time and court time were added to the RubinBrown metrics calculations, resulting in 1,419,445.40 attorney hours required. Assuming 2,080 available attorney hours each year—682.40 attorneys would be required to provide effective, constitutional representation. The current number of Trial and Appellate Division attorneys is 349.50, there are 10 FTE currently being restricted by Governor Nixon. There are 11.50 attorneys requested in a separate Juvenile Advocacy decision item; leaving 311 attorneys to be requested in this decision item.

Support Staff: Every law practice management expert will affirm that lawyer time needs to be leveraged by utilizing support staff for everything that can be done by a non-lawyer. This allows the lawyer to focus on tasks that only a lawyer can do. Therefore, MSPD is requesting 1 legal assistant for every 3 attorneys; that would mean 86 legal assistants in order to meet that ratio.

Attorneys and support staff would be allocated to the most over-worked offices based on several factors including but not limited to: the RubinBrown caseload weights, problematic counties to practice in, difficult prosecutors to negotiate with, office space available, etc.

The calculations for the Trial Division office only include the juvenile cases where the public defender system is currently providing juvenile representation. Some local public defender offices do not provide representation for juveniles and in those instances many counties are contracting with private attorneys to do so. A separate decision item is included in MSPD's FY2018 Legislative Budget Request to set up juvenile advocacy offices in St. Louis Area and in Kansas City.

Some of the staffing requested in this decision item would be used to establish a Springfield Appellate/Post-Conviction office. (The caseload numbers for these appellate/pcr cases are included in the RubinBrown metrics and in the total number of attorneys needed for effective representation.)

The Appellate/Post-conviction Division presents unique overload issues, which unlike Trial Division conflicts, are best addressed not through increased contracting to private counsel, but by the creation of an additional appellate/post-conviction office in Springfield, MO.

The attorneys in this division represent defendants who have already been convicted of a crime and are raising issues of error in the judicial process that led to their conviction. Post-conviction counsel

Church, et al v. State of Missouri, et al
DFs - 001520

must always review and raise, where appropriate, the issue of ineffective assistance of the client's previous counsel. This means that the office that provides appellate representation for a client will always have a conflict handling that client's post-conviction proceedings, which is why MSPD has six appellate/post-conviction offices, two each in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Columbia. Each duo of offices is able to handle conflict cases for one another, without (most) of those cases having to be shipped across the state to one of the other two appellate/post-conviction office locations.

However, travel is still a significant problem in this division because of the nature of post-conviction proceedings, which take place in the circuit court of conviction. This means MSPD has five offices covering post-conviction proceedings in 114 counties plus the City of St. Louis. (Only one of the offices in Columbia handles post-conviction matters, the other handles only appellate cases.) The map on the next page shows how the counties are currently divided among the existing offices. As the map indicates, the heavier concentration of cases in the two urban areas of St. Louis and Kansas City leave the attorneys in those areas unable to take on as many counties as their Central Missouri counterparts are required to cover. But even with fewer cases coming in from each of the outstate (grey) counties, MSPD's Central PCR office is carrying a caseload at 300% of its attorney capacity. Add in the amount of travel involved and it becomes an equation that is simply not sustainable.

MSPD has attempted to reduce the travel burden on these offices by contracting out "remote-county PCR's", as they are known within the system, to local private counsel, but this approach has not been successful. Post-conviction practice is unique and very technical. Very few private attorneys have any experience, much less expertise, in these types of cases. MSPD's attempts to contract these cases to private counsel have too frequently resulted in the cases having to be brought back in-system to correct significant, case-changing errors made by attorneys who are in over their heads. MSPD attempted to address this problem by offering training to private attorneys interested in taking these cases, but that, too, has proved insufficient to the task. Few accepted the opportunity and those who did, ended up taking these cases so infrequently that any benefit they may have received from the training has long since worn off by the time they get their next PCR.

Therefore, part of this decision will address the problem by adding an additional office in Springfield. Missouri's appellate courts are located in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Springfield (with the Supreme Court in Jefferson City), so the new office would be conveniently located to the appellate court, while also reducing the travel time associated with a majority of the post-conviction cases in southwest Missouri. As expected, given the fact that Springfield is Missouri's third most populated city and Joplin is not far behind, the southwest region of the state accounts for a significant number of the post-conviction cases currently overloading the Central PCR office. Creating an additional appellate/pcr office in Springfield will siphon these cases off the Columbia office, provide better service to the clients and courts in Southwest Missouri while reducing travel costs and freeing up time for the Columbia Central PCR attorneys to better handle the workload in the remainder of Missouri's outstate counties.

COMPREHENSIVE COMPENSATION STRUCTURE $728,805

Employee retention and recruitment is essential to the Missouri State Public Defender System's ability to meet its constitutional mandate to provide effective representation, especially in light of the fact that it is operating at less than one half the attorneys and one quarter the support staff needed for its caseload. Further, MSPD must be able to retain the employees it does have in order to avoid the back-load that occurs to the existing high caseloads when attorneys move on to other jobs.

Without moving somewhat closer in salary parity to prosecuting attorneys, MSPD cannot recruit or retain employees. The resulting revolving door, as evidenced by our increasingly high turnover rate, which increased from 11.37 % in 2014 to 15.16% in 2015. The rate remains at unacceptable 14.61%. makes it more likely that innocent persons will be incarcerated, that clients will languish in jail waiting until someone can get to their cases, and that non-violent offenders will be unnecessarily sent to prison, all at an extraordinarily high cost to Missouri's citizens, a much higher cost than what it would take to provide salary parity and greater retention for our employees. Every time an attorney leaves, his or her cases are reassigned and an already overloaded attorney adds the case to his or her existing backlog. With MSPD operating at one quarter the support staff needed, it also is critical that MSPD is able to retain the existing investigators, paralegals, legal assistants, mitigation specialists, and other clerical staff.

A comprehensive compensation structure, with some minor adjustments to existing salaries, will provide the needed promotion tracks to retain attorneys throughout their career.

JUVENILE ADVOCACY OFFICES $1,055,751

In the Spring of 2013, the National Juvenile Defender Center issued an assessment of Missouri's system of juvenile indigent defense representation. The report was part of a national strategy to review state juvenile indigent defense delivery systems and to evaluate how effectively attorneys in juvenile court are fulfilling their constitutional and statutory obligations to their clients.

The study concluded that "Missouri's indigent defense system is in crisis and has endured at least two decades of crushing caseloads and inadequate resources to provide its mandated services," and little to no attention has been paid to what this crisis has meant to poor children accused of a criminal offense. Specifically, it found that:

> "children facing criminal or status offenses in Missouri's juvenile justice system frequently do so without the benefit of counsel or without adequate representation through all critical stages. There are significant gaps in both access to and quality of representation provided to youth that fall well below the standards established by the Institute of Judicial Administration and American Bar Association's Juvenile Justice Standards, the ABA Rules of Professional Conduct, the Ten Core Principles for Juvenile Indigent Defense established by NJDC and NJDS's newly release National Juvenile Defense Standards. Justice is often rationed to juveniles in Missouri for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is the crisis in the public defender system...."

4,000 JUVENILES WENT WITHOUT REPRESENTATION IN ONE YEAR

Utilizing data provided from the Office of the State Court's Administrator, there were 14,342 formal juvenile cases filed statewide in 2012 (the last year that OSCA has provided MSPD with numbers), of which 7,836 were abuse/neglect cases, leaving 6,506 juvenile cases where the juvenile was entitled to an attorney. Of the 6,506 juveniles, only 13% were actually represented by private counsel. That leaves 5,660 juvenile cases where the juvenile needed a public defender. However, in that same year, MSPD provided representation in just 1,923 juvenile cases.

As a result of this finding, the Missouri Juvenile Justice Association is seeking a rule or statutory change to prohibit the waiver of counsel by juveniles (this need has become even more so given the Department of Justice's findings in its recent report on St. Louis County). In the meantime, they have asked MSPD to pursue the reinstatement of the two Juvenile Advocacy Units, one in the Kansas City area and one in the greater St. Louis area. (MSPD previously had these units, but had to relinquish them when trial division caseloads became too high and no additional personnel were added,)

These specialized units not only better serve juvenile clients, they also provide a resource and expertise for those providing juvenile representation throughout the state. This will become even more essential if waiver of counsel in these cases is eliminated and more public defenders and inexperienced private attorneys are appointed to provide juvenile defense representation.

MSPD is requesting juvenile attorney staffing at the recommended RubinBrown workload standards. MSPD is also seeking one additional attorney in each office to represent juveniles certified to stand trial as an adult and to serve as a statewide juvenile resource attorney to assist local offices across the rest of the state.

FSLA OVERTIME REGULATIONS $70,008

The Department of Labor (DOL) issued the final regulations making changes to overtime exemptions under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The new employee salary threshold is slated to be set at $47,476/year. The prior salary threshold was $23,660. The new salary threshold will encompass several MSPD employees that are currently classified as exempt.

There is an automatic escalator every three years in the minimum salary level for exempt employees. Employers must comply with the new rule by Dec. 1, 2016.

Below is a spreadsheet analyzing the impact of potential changes on MSPD.

Classification	Annual Salary As of 7/1/16	Annual Cost To Adjust To FLSA Threshold Of $47,476
Support Services Coordinator I	$36,924.00	$10,552.00
Support Services Coordinator II	$39,708.00	$7,768.00
Mitigation Specialist I	$38,304.00	$9,172.00
Mitigation Specialist I	$36,924.00	$10,552.00
Mitigation Specialist I	$38,304.00	$9,172.00
Mitigation Specialist II	$41,184.00	$6,292.00
Mitigation Specialist II	$43,560.00	$3,916.00
Mitigation Specialist II	$41,184.00	$6,292.00
Mitigation Specialist II	$41,184.00	$6,292.00
	$357,276.00	$70,008.00

The FLSA regulation does not apply to employees who are licensed attorneys. As a point of interest, there are 153 MSPD attorney staff whose salaries fall below the threshold amount of $47,476. To bring these 153 attorneys to the minimum threshold would cost $496,524.

CASELOAD RELIEF—Supplemental Request
ALL TRIAL DIVISION CONFLICT CASES CONTRACT TO SPECIAL PUBLIC DEFENDERS

FY2018 Supplemental for Conflicts	$858,842
FY2018 Supplemental for Overload	$1,587,083
Total Supplemental	$2,445,925

This option presumes that:

1. All Trial Division conflict cases are contracted out to special public defenders in FY2018
2. 1/3 of the overload cases for both the Trial and Appellate Divisions are contracted to special public defenders for 2 months of FY2018.
3. Current contract fee amounts to private counsel remain flat;
4. Caseload, and the percentage of cases that have conflicts, remain relatively flat from Fiscal Year 2017 to FY2018;

Contracting All Trial Division Conflict Cases:

Currently, when a case involves multiple defendants, there is always the risk that one will point a finger at the other. Therefore, the local defender office can only represent one co-defendant and any other co-defendants must be represented elsewhere, either by another defender office or by a special public defender on contract for representation. Historically, MSPD has sent the first co-defendant to another defender office and contracted out additional co-defendants to special public defenders. However, this in- house handling of trial division first level conflict cases is not a cost-effective approach because it pulls lawyers out of their primary jurisdictions and requires them to drive significant distances to appear in court, conduct investigations, witness interviews and depositions, visit their clients in jail, all in a distant county. It is not uncommon for each trip to take a day of the attorney's time to deal with one or two cases. Instead, economies of scale suggest it is more cost-effective and efficient to contract all trial level conflict cases to local attorneys as special public defenders and allow the defender offices to concentrate on effectively representing the cases that arise within the counties they are designated to serve.

At present, MSPD uses the fee schedule on the following page for cases contracted out to special public defenders. Litigation expenses (the cost of transcripts, investigation, experts, or depositions) are not included in these fees but are approved on a case-by-case basis. Such costs would be incurred by MSPD whether the case was being handled internally or by a contracted special public defender.

Given the assumptions set out, the cost of contracting out all Trial Division conflict cases to special public defenders would run a little over $7.126 million. Since our Fiscal Year 2018 appropriation for this purpose is $2,845,920 plus $3,421,988 in Legal Services (Total $6,267,908), contracting out all conflict cases would require an additional $858,842, for both FY2018 and FY2019 as shown in the table on the following pages.

In Fiscal Year 2018, the Missouri State Legislature and the Governor, provided an additional $4,421,988 unrestricted funds for the purpose of contracting out all conflicts to private attorneys. Due to 6.25% caseload increase from Fiscal Year 2016 to Fiscal Year 2017 and due to the fact that are simply more conflicts, an additional $858,842 is needed to be able to contract out all conflicts for this current fiscal year and continuing into FY2019.

Due to required and desired compliance to the Rules of Professional Conduct regarding excessive Public Defender caseloads, MSPD is requesting funding to contract out one-third of the overload to special public defenders bar.

In the Trial Division, in Fiscal Year 2017, initiated 40,858 cases over the Ruben Brown calculated caseload capacities. The Appellate Division initiated 1,249 cases over the appellate standards.

Using the FY17 case type percentages, and applying these percentages to the overages, it can be determined the number of each case type that would be included in the overload. When the MSPD contract fee rates are applied to the number of cases, a cost of contacting the overload can be derived.

This supplemental request was calculated for funding two months of the overloads. But there are simply not enough panel attorneys (Special Public Defenders) in the state to take the 6,809 Trial Division and the 208 Appellate Division cases initiated in these two months. Therefore, MSPD is requesting 1/3 or the calculated costs of contracting out the overload for this two month period.

As there are not a sufficient number of panel attorneys (special public defenders) to take these cases, particularly for the fees paid , MSPD is requesting 1/3 or the calculated costs of contracting out the overload for this two month period or $1,587,083 of lawful age, produced, sworn and examined on behalf of the Plaintiffs, deposes and says:

JOEL R. ELMER,

(Starting time of the deposition: 1:10 p.m.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're on the record. Today's date is October 4th, 2017, and the time is approximately 1:10 p.m. This is the video-recorded deposition of Joel R. Elmer in the matter of Shondel Church, et al., versus State of Missouri, et al., Case Number 17-04057-CV-C-NKL, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Central Division.

This deposition is being held at ACLU of Missouri Foundation in St. Louis, Missouri. The reporter's name is Bill DeVries. My name is John Niehaus. I'm the legal videographer. We are with Midwest Litigation Services.

Will counsel please introduce yourself for the record?

MR. SHAHABIAN: Matt Shahabian for the plaintiffs.

MR. WILLIAMSON: Jason Williamson for the plaintiffs.

MR. RAMSEY: Steven Ramsey for the State of Missouri and Governor Eric Greitens.

MR. QUINLAN: Michael Quinlan for the State of Missouri and Governor Eric Greitens.

MS. SHIPMA: Jacqueline Shipma for MSPD.

VIDEOGRAPHER: Can you please swear in the witness?

COURT REPORTER: Do you swear or affirm that the testimony you are about to give in this proceeding will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. SHAHABIAN:

Q. Good morning, Mr. Elmer. I know we met outside, but just introduce myself again, my name is Matt Shahabian. I'm an attorney representing the plaintiffs in this case, and I'll be asking you some questions for your deposition here today. Have you ever been deposed before?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Okay. So let's just go over a few ground rules. If you could listen to my question and wait for me to finish before answering, that would be great for both me and for our court reporter here. If you do not understand my questions, please ask me to clarify.

If you would like, we have seven hours scheduled for this deposition. I do not think we're going to need anywhere near seven hours, but if you'd like to take any breaks as we progress, please let me know. I just ask that if there's a question pending, you answer the question before we take a break. Do you understand those ground rules?

A. Yes.

Q. Great. Could you please tell us your title?

A. Deputy director, Missouri State Public Defender system.

Q. What is your role as the deputy director of the Missouri State Public Defender system?

Page 10

A. I am one of two deputy directors. The trial division director reports to me. Our operations director reports to me. Our IT director reports to me. And our case contracting manager director reports to me. So I oversee those persons. And I also handle any special projects assigned by the director.

Q. Who is the trial division director?

A. Ellen Blau.

Q. Who's the operations director?

A. Jane Duncan.

Q. And who is your IT director?

A. John Mullin.

Q. And the case contracting manager?

A. Maggie Johnston.

Q. How long have you been the deputy director of the Missouri State Public Defender system?

A. Since July 1st of 2014.

Q. What did you do before that?

A. I was a division director.

Q. What does it mean to be a division director?

A. At the time we had multiple division directors before our current structure. I had approximately ten offices that I oversaw the district defenders of those offices.

Q. How long were you a division director?

A. For about three and a half years.

Q. And you said that was before your current structure. Is there no longer a division director role at the MSPD?

A. Well, there's one division director. That's Ellen Blau.

Q. Okay. And how long have you been employed with the MSPD in any capacity?

A. First as a law student beginning in 1983 for a couple of years, and then beginning as an assistant public defender in 1987.

Q. So you've been there for over 30 years?

A. Yes.

Q. Congratulations. Do you have any other experience in criminal defense outside of your role as MSPD employee?

A. No. I mean, I was -- right after law school I clerked for the Missouri Supreme Court for two years, and of course criminal cases came before us, but obviously I wasn't practicing criminal defense.

Q. Do you understand that you're being deposed today as a representative of the Missouri State Public Defender system pursuant to Federal Rule 30(b)(6)?

A. Yes.

Q. What is your understanding of what it means to be a representative of the MSPD for purposes of this deposition?

A. My role is to answer the questions truthfully that are asked of me.

Q. Have you reviewed the notice of deposition in this case seeking a 30(b)(6) deposition of the MSPD?

A. I -- yeah, I reviewed it.

(Exhibit 1, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been premarked as Plaintiffs' 1. Is that the notice of deposition you reviewed?

A. Yes.

Q. And my understanding is you are prepared to testify to -- if you look at attachment A, you'll see a list of deposition topics, 13 of them numbered?

A. Yes.

Q. My understanding is you've been designated to testify on all but number 13, relating to the budget. Is that your understanding?

Page 13

A. Yes.
Q. What did you do to prepare for your deposition today?
A. I did a little bit of review and I met with Ms. Shipma.
Q. Did you meet with anybody else?
A. Greg Mermelstein and Jane Duncan, and I believe that was it.
Q. Who is Jane Duncan?
A. She's the operations director.
Q. Apologies. My memory is a little slow at this age. Did you review any documents in preparation for this?
A. There's also a brief discussion that Michael Barrett was involved in too.
Q. Was anyone else involved in that discussion?
A. Ms. Shipma, Mr. Mermelstein.
Q. Did you review any documents in preparation for your testimony today?
A. I looked over our last annual report, the Missouri Project Report prepared by Missouri -- by RubinBrown. I looked at our last workload capacity reports. A couple of turnover reports that have been prepared by Jane Duncan. And I looked at some expenditure dollar numbers in our management databases.

Q. Do you know if the documents you reviewed have been produced to the plaintiffs in this case as part of discovery?
A. I -- I know some of them have. I can't tell you for sure if all of those have.
Q. Okay. So let's turn to some of the topics you're here to testify about. I'll try to run through these as quickly as possible. I'd like to start with the policies and procedures regarding the use of conflict counsel by the Missouri State Public Defender's office. Could you tell us generally how con -- the appointment of conflict counsel works in the Missouri State Public Defender system?
A. If an assistant public defender believes they have a conflict of interest, then they -- that goes to their district defender, and ultimately if the district defender agrees then it is transferred to case contracting, and unless I have questions it's assigned to someone on our panel, a private attorney on our panel.
Q. Do all conflict cases go to attorneys on the panel?

A. Since July 1st, except for rare exceptions, they all go to panel attorneys.
Q. Prior to July 1st, did all conflict cases go to panel attorneys?
A. No.
Q. What was the system prior to July 1st?
A. What we called the first-level conflict we'd go to a nearby office. In the urban areas, even what we considered a second-level conflict would go to a different nearby office. Beyond that, all the other conflicts came to case contracting to be assigned to a panel of attorneys.
Q. And to clarify, when you said July 1st, you meant July 1st, 2017?
A. Correct.
Q. What's the difference between a first-level conflict and a second-level conflict?
A. Well, if an office represents A and there is another client who has a conflict with a client A, say client B has a conflict with client A, then client B would be a first-level conflict. If there's yet another client who had a conflict with client A, we'll call him client C, then that would be a second-level conflict.

Page 16

Q. So a second-level conflict would be two or more conflicts or am I misunderstanding?
A. That's correct. For instance -- well, that's correct.
MR. QUINLAN: Like if there were multiple defendants in the same case.
A. Yes. If there were three co-defendants, then there would be one for the local office, there would be a first-level conflict, and there would be a second-level conflict.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) And then for conflicts of third level or higher, would those go to panel attorneys?
A. Yes. Most of the second-level conflicts went to panel attorneys, and third-level and beyond all went to panel attorneys.
Q. How is the panel attorney system administered?
A. Could you clarify what you mean by administered? It's a pretty broad term.
Q. Sure. It is a broad term. I'll try to be more specific. How does an attorney end up on the panel attorney list?
A. They make application. They fill out a panel attorney application.

Q. What does that application require them to provide?

A. Name, address, other personal identification such as bar number, years of practice, recent jury trial experience, a couple of references for us to check, and if they want anything beyond misdemeanors and C and D felonies, then they have to outline their experience in those other areas, such as A and B felonies, homicides, appeals, etc.

Q. Do all panel attorneys have criminal defense experience prior to becoming panel attorneys?

A. No.

Q. Do all panel attorneys have jury trial experience prior to becoming panel attorneys?

A. No.

Q. Roughly what percentage would you say of panel attorneys have criminal defense experience prior to becoming panel attorneys?

A. The large majority, but I can't tell you beyond that.

Q. Roughly what percentage would you say of panel attorneys have jury trial experience prior to becoming panel attorneys?

Page 18

A. I can't really say. I couldn't answer that question.

Q. How often are panel attorney applications rejected by the MSPD?

A. Probably, you know, five to ten percent.

Q. And are those rejections generally new applicants or reapplications by existing panel attorneys?

A. Well, they would be new applicants. Existing panel attorneys don't have to reapply unless they leave our panel and then apply again.

Q. Why would a new applicant be rejected for the panel?

A. Either because of concerns raised by reference checks. Sometimes concerns about their prior performance that we're aware of.

Q. Once someone is on the panel, how are they assigned a case?

A. On the -- I forgot to mention, on the panel attorney application they also indicate what circuits they're willing to handle cases in. Our general rule is that you have to take an entire circuit. You can't choose county by county.

We do make a few exceptions when it's in our -- in our interest to do so because of our desperate need for attorneys in those counties that they'd be willing to go to without the entire circuit.

So then we have our panel attorneys broke up by counties that -- that they're eligible for, and presumptively it is a rotating assignment with a -- with a preference for what we call a home county preference. By home county, we don't mean where their home is, we mean where their office is.

So we would first go to, you know -- for instance, if there's a case in Crawford County and, you know, our presumptive pick would be whoever is up next in line who has an office in Crawford County who is eligible for the type of case that we're assigning based upon what types of cases they apply for and that they were approved for. There are exceptions, but that's the general rule.

Q. Are panel attorneys free to turn down assignments or is there a requirement that they accept a certain number of cases?

A. Certainly not a requirement that they accept a certain number of cases, but they are expected to accept assignments. We -- we occasionally make exceptions, but no, the expectation is they take the assignment. We don't ask them will you take this assignment.

Q. Does MSPD require conflict counsel to -- for panel attorneys specifically to report the nature and quantity of their caseloads outside of panel attorney appointments?

A. No.

Q. Does MSPD track the workload or caseload of panel attorneys based on their panel attorney assignments?

A. To an extent, yes.

Q. What is that extent?

A. Well, we either have -- the cases originally we would refer to as an open case, which means it's pending. They're supposed to advise us when that case has been disposed of and we close the case and it's designated as closed.

And if we also learn some other fashion that the case has been disposed of before we learn from them, then we would close the case. So we have open cases and we have closed cases, and so we can view what someone's open caseload is. It's not entirely accurate, but we do try to check against Case.net every six months to keep as accurate as we can.

Q. Once a panel attorney has a case, if they -- how would they request payment for litigation expenses or expert witnesses or other case-associated expenses?

A. They use an Excel spreadsheet that we provide to them on-line and they submit that to our contracts assistant, and she works with them to get that and the proper information that we require, and then that is submitted to me for my either -- for my consideration.

Q. Are those requests generally approved as submitted or are there rejections or modifications?

A. They're generally approved. I mean, there are modifications. There are denials, but they're generally approved.

Q. How often do panel attorneys request to use expert witnesses, investigators, or other assistance on cases?

A. I don't have a percentage number. It's not unusual.

Q. How are panel attorneys paid for the cases they accept?

A. They are paid a flat fee at the beginning of the case. How much the flat fee is depends upon the case type. There is a mechanism for them to request additional compensation for -- for complex or extraordinary cases beyond what would normally be expected in that type of case. They are also paid a per diem fee for days spent in trial.

Q. How often do panel attorneys request additional compensation for complex or extraordinary cases?

A. Not very often.

Q. When those requests are made, how often are they approved?

A. I don't have a percentage, but certainly a lot of them are denied. I have granted some.

Q. Would you say in a given year it's more or less than ten?

A. Less.

MS. SHIPMA: More or less than ten that are --

MR. SHAHABIAN: Ten cases.

MR. QUINLAN: That are?

MS. SHIPMA: The requests that are made.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Sorry. Let me clarify.

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Would you say in a given year it's more or less than ten requests for payment?

A. Less.

Q. Just taking a step back, is the panel attorney program also referred to as the Code 49 program?

A. No. Code 49 is one part of the case contracting program. It has to do with disposition codes we use in our case management system.

Q. What are the -- so could you explain what the Code 49 program is?

A. Sure. Code 49, we began using that code when we first began conflicting out some first-level conflicts, which was prior to July 1st, 2017. We -- we had enough funding that in some areas we were able to contract out first-level conflicts.

So those -- our offices, when they sent those to us, would use disposition code 49 to identify them as first-level conflicts. Since July 1st we've continued to use code 49 for all the first-level conflicts, so it's a first-level conflict that's been contracted out.

Q. There are other codes for conflicts other than first-level conflicts?

Page 24

A. There are.

Q. So Code 49, it's fair to say, is a subset of the overall panel attorney program?

A. Correct.

Q. Have conflict counsel commented to you or to your knowledge anyone in the MSPD on the rates that are paid for conflict counsel cases?

A. Yes.

Q. What to your knowledge have those comments been?

A. That they're ridiculously low.

Q. Is that a frequent comment that's made?

A. Pretty frequent.

Q. How often are the fee payments adjusted, the fee schedule adjusted?

A. You mean the overall fee schedule? I've been doing this since July 1st of 2014. I can tell you they haven't been adjusted since then.

Q. Generally speaking, what is the experience level of a typical panel attorney?

A. I can't say there's a typical experience level.

Q. Are you aware of a voluntary pro bono program that has started to assist the MSPD with criminal cases?

Page 25

A. Yes, if you're referring to the Missouri Coalition For the Right to Counsel.

Q. I am. Could you describe what that program is?

A. It is a law firm initiative where the law firms -- where the law firms identify certain attorneys within their firm to take assignments from us for pro bono, and -- and they will work with our local district defender and identify cases to send to those associates and -- and we will assign them to them.

Q. The cases are assigned to associates at law firms?

A. Yes. It depends upon the model. Ultimately that's who handles them. Some law firms have us assign them to a partner who then distributes them within the firm, but --

Q. The expectation is associates will be handling the cases?

A. As far as I know, yes.

Q. Is there an experience threshold for an associate to handle these cases?

A. No.

Q. How many cases have been referred to pro bono attorneys this way?

Page 26

A. I think approximately 60.

Q. What kinds of cases have been referred to pro bono attorneys?

A. I think all levels. Sitting right here today I can't tell you whether or not we've assigned a homicide case to one, but other than that I think we've assigned all levels.

Q. Does the MSPD supervise the associates in the performance of those cases?

A. No.

Q. Does the MSPD supervise the performance of panel attorneys who are assigned cases?

A. No.

Q. Does the MSPD train the pro bono attorneys?

A. MCR, pro bono attorneys, we did conduct MCR training several months ago when it was kicked off and we're doing some training again later this week, two-day training.

Q. About how many hours of training would a pro bono attorney have before getting a case assignment?

A. Approximately 16 from us.

Q. Does the MSPD provide training to panel attorneys?

Page 27

A. Occasionally. We have had training on post-conviction matters that we've invited panel attorneys to. We also at our last annual training that's available to all of our in-house attorneys, we call it spring training, but we also invited a certain number of panel attorneys to that.

Q. Are panel attorneys required to attend those trainings?

A. No.

Q. How often do panel attorneys leave the panel?

A. Frequently.

Q. Do they provide reasons when they decide to leave the panel?

A. Sometimes.

Q. What kinds of reasons are given for leaving the panel?

A. Could be because of the fees are too low. Could be because they're retiring from the practice of law. Could be because they're going to a job where they aren't allowed to take assignments from us.

They might be unhappy with a particular practice of ours, such as our requirement that they take an entire circuit, and just decide that they're not in a position to do that anymore. I mean, those would be the most common that I can think of.

Q. Does the MSPD keep statistics on how frequently -- on how much turnover there is in the panel attorney system?

A. No. But -- no, we don't keep statistics.

Q. Can you give a ballpark estimate?

A. I was going to say is they leave about the same rate they come on. People come and go, but the level of panel attorneys stays pretty level.

Q. Do panel attorneys ever withdraw from cases they have been assigned to?

A. They do occasionally.

Q. What happens when they decide to move to withdraw from a case?

A. We ask them to consult with us before moving to withdraw. That may or may not happen. If they haven't consulted with us and we agreed to it, then we might ask them to do a resume representation and that might happen, but ultimately if -- if they're allowed to withdraw and they don't resume representation, then we would reassign it to someone else generally.

But you know, we also sometimes take the position that if it's done at a client's request, that the client has chosen to -- to proceed pro se or hire private counsel, then he doesn't get to select what -- which public defender or which special public defender, which are panel attorneys, are assigned to them. I can't think of a particular situation where the client has actually ended up going pro se, but --

Q. When you say that the cases are reassigned to someone else generally, do you mean another panel attorney or an MSPD public defender?

A. Another panel attorney.

Q. Does the MSPD ever take back cases that have previously been assigned to panel attorneys?

A. Rarely, but I'm sure it's happened.

Q. And just to clarify, you used the term special public defender. That refers to a panel attorney?

A. Yes.

Q. What happens to the fees that are paid to a panel attorney who withdraws from a case?

A. Depends upon their reason for the withdrawal. Sometimes it results in us believing that the -- the entire fee needs to be returned to us. Sometimes we feel like they may have earned a portion of the fee and we'll determine which -- what portion of that, and any unearned portion we'd expect it to be returned to us.

And when I say returned, our preference is that -- that we recoup the money through reduced fee assignments rather than literally have the money returned to us.

But if they're not able to do that for either they leave the panel -- well, if they leave the panel for some reason and so can't take any additional assignments, then we ask them to return the money, which goes to general revenue. It does not go to the Missouri State Public Defender system.

Q. So to break that down, if a panel attorney withdraws from a case and has been paid a fee, the first resort of the MSPD is to pay them a reduced amount on future cases?

A. Yes.

Q. But if the panel attorney leaves the panel before the MSPD is able to recoup through reduced future payments, then the MSPD does not receive money back from the panel attorney?

A. Missouri State Public Defender system does not return money -- does not get the money, that's correct.

Page 31

Q. The panel attorney may be asked to return the actual money paid to them, but that is returned to the general revenue fund for the state of Missouri?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right? And that money is not disbursed back to the MSPD?

A. Correct.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 6, Panel attorney circuit court criminal disposition form, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) So I'm showing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 6. Do you recognize this document?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It's our panel attorney circuit court criminal disposition form.

Q. Is this the form you were referring earlier to when you mentioned that the MSPD attempts to keep track of which cases are opened or closed?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this an accurate copy of this form?

A. I believe so. We revise it occasionally. And this one at the bottom shows this one was last revised on April 21st, 2016 as sitting right here. I mean, I assume that's our most recent one.

Q. So this form is sent to panel attorneys to fill out upon when a case is disposed of?

A. They access it on our panel attorney website.

Q. Are there any other forms that MS -- I'm sorry, that panel attorneys are required to submit to the MSPD to inform the MSPD of the progress of ongoing cases?

A. There is a different form for -- I believe for appeals and PCRs, post-conviction relief cases.

Q. For trial-level cases are there any other forms that panel attorneys must submit?

A. No, not for disposition of the case.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 7, Panel attorney memorandum of understanding, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) So I'm showing you now what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 7. Do you recognize this document?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

Page 33

A. It's our panel attorney memorandum of agreement.
Q. Is that the same as the panel attorney contract?
A. Yes. Yes, that combined with a notification of case assignment I would consider the contract.
Q. Is this an accurate copy of that memorandum of agreement?
A. Yes.
Q. If you look at the last page of the document, do you see what appears to be a fee schedule?
A. I do.
Q. Is that an accurate statement of the current fee schedule for panel attorneys?
A. The fees are correct because of the revision of the criminal code we now refer to what's identified as C, D felony, drug, etc., where it says C, D, we now refer to it as CDE.
Q. But otherwise the fees are accurate?
A. Yes.
Q. Do panel attorneys need to renew this memorandum of agreement once they've signed it?
A. No.

Q. You mentioned that in addition to the fee schedule panel attorneys can request extraordinary compensation in special cases. What would constitute an extraordinary case to deviate from this fee schedule?
A. Well, I can remember one for example recently. I -- I approved where we had to assign an attorney from a long distance, and the person was in the department of corrections and he was traveling those long distances both to visit the client and to attend multiple hearings, something that was, you know, it was very unusual because of the distance from where the client was located.
There's also been times when -- when we've asked panel attorneys to take cases for counties they're not assigned to because we had nobody else to assign them to, and -- and I have paid additional fee for that.
Q. The contract also references extraordinary expenses as opposed to payment to counsel. What would constitute an extraordinary litigation expense?
A. Can you refer to me -- tell me where you're referring to that?
Q. Sure. If you look at the third page under attorneys and staff, section five, the second sentence says (quote as read):

Where extraordinary expenses are necessary to provide effective assistance of counsel, the panel attorney may submit a request for extraordinary expenditure approval to MSPD.
Do you see that there?
A. I do.
Q. What would that mean? What would constitute an extraordinary expense?
A. I think that's referring to litigation expenses.
Q. What in your opinion would be an example of an extraordinary litigation expense?
A. Well, I think it's -- I mean it's what -- it's referring to litigation expenses. I wouldn't say extraordinary litigation expenses. It's simply referring to litigation expenses, and that could include depositions or hiring of various types of experts.
Q. So just to make sure I understand what you're saying, generally litigation expenses are to be paid for by the panel attorney. However, in extraordinary cases they can submit for reimbursement. Is that correct?

A. No. No, they're not expected to pay the litigation expenses. We will pay for any necessary litigation expenses. They don't have to be extraordinary litigation expenses.
Q. Okay. Are cases ever reassigned from one panel attorney to another?
A. Without going through us?
Q. Correct.
A. No. I mean, they will have someone appear for them, but to my knowledge they -- they don't hand off cases. They're not -- that would be contrary to our policies and practices.
Q. So let's shift topics away from conflict counsel for a bit and talk about MSPD public defenders and how they perform their cases. Does the MSPD have written policies and procedures relating to requests for expert witnesses?
A. There is not a lot in terms of written. There is a -- a memo I think probably from around 2008 or so stating what sort of information to be included in requests for -- for different types of litigation expenses.
Q. How would an MSPD attorney request a -- the use of an expert witness?

A. They complete an encumbrance request. That's an electronic form. It first goes to their district defender for first-level approval. I mean, that's how it's submitted.
Q. What limits, if any, are placed on MSPD attorneys who are requesting expert witnesses?
A. There's no -- what kind of limits, dollar limits?
Q. Are there monetary limits?
A. No.
Q. Does the availability of funds affect the ability of the MSPD to pay for expert witnesses?
A. Yes, I think that's fair to say.
Q. Who makes the ultimate decision on whether an expert witness will be hired?
A. For noncapital cases where the request is for less than $500, the district defender makes that decision, ultimate decision. For any capital case -- I say capital case. I really mean for any homicide case.
For any homicide case or for any expense request that's for $500 or more, that ultimately requires division director approval. Or in the instance of the divisions that

Page 38

Mr. Mermelstein supervises, the deputy director, his ultimate approval since there aren't division directors in his divisions.
Q. How often are requests for expert witnesses rejected?
A. I can't say at the district defender level. It's pretty infrequent at the division director level. I don't know at the district defender level because they have to either give the ultimate approval on some or the first-level approval on others. Those denials don't come to us.
Q. Is that process any different for other expert witnesses or -- I'm sorry, strike that.
How would an MSPD attorney request the use of an investigator for their case?
A. Well, we have in-house investigators in every office, so how a particular investigator is assigned to a case would be up to the practice of the local district defender. In theory they could request funds for outside investigators the process I just described for litigation expenses.
Q. To your knowledge, do MSPD attorneys request funds for an outside investigator?
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. For the in-house investigators, who decides whether they are available to work on a specific case?

A. That would be the district defender.
Q. Do resource constraints affect the availability of investigators to assist on cases?
MR. QUINLAN: Object to the vague form of the question.
A. Certainly it can. It probably affects more on when they'll be gotten to than whether or not they're available, but I'm sure that it impacts and you end up having attorneys do some of their own investigation or in theory some investigation may not get done, but yes, yes, it would impact it.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) To your knowledge, have district defenders requested more resources to either hire additional investigators or for investigators to be assigned to their offices?
A. Yes.
Q. How would an MSPD attorney request the use of a social worker?
A. Through litigation expense request. We do have mitigation specialists for our capital cases, but other than that, through hiring of outside social worker.
Q. So for noncapital cases, if an MSPD attorney requests the use of a social worker, it's an outside litigation expenditure?

A. Yes. They may occasionally if one of our mitigation specialists had time in the capital division, there might -- we might ask them to work on it, on noncapital requests, but that's rare.
MR. QUINLAN: Did you say mitigation specialist?
A. Yes.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) How would an MSPD attorney request the use of an interpreter?
A. Through the encumbrance request process I've described.
Q. Does the MSPD have interpreters on staff?
A. No.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 8, Protocols, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 8. Do you recognize this document? To be clear, it's double-sided.
A. No, specifically I don't.
Q. Can you tell from reviewing the document what it appears to be?

Page 41

A. Well, it states its protocols for various things, such as indictments, investigative requests --

(Court reporter interruption.)

A. Indictments, investigation requests, expense requests.

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Does this appear to you to be a document produced by someone in the MSPD?

A. Yes.

Q. You see the second page of the document is investigation requests?

A. Yes.

Q. If you want to take a minute and -- and review that page before I ask you any questions about it. So the top of this page under the heading it says (quote as read):

Effective immediately, please follow the below referenced new procedure whenever making investigation requests in your cases.

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And then the document outlines a set of steps to follow that involves documentation of investigation requests. Do you see that?

Page 42

A. Yes.

Q. Does this appear to be an accurate statement of MSPD procedures for requesting an investigator?

A. From paragraph four under section two, this states address the e-mail to LaDonna and cc myself. I can only assume this is a document prepared by a particular office, though I'm not sure who LaDonna is, but -- I think that's why I wasn't familiar with it, but -- and also just scanning it -- well, that's the one name I see.

Q. If you look at the first page, the names are Betty or Heather. Does that refresh your recollection on -- on what office may have prepared this?

A. No.

Q. Setting aside the names referenced in the document, does the general procedure of how to request an investigator appear to be accurate reflection of MSPD practices for requesting an investigator?

A. No. I would say it would -- varies widely from office to office. This may be the procedure. It may not be for a particular office.

Page 43

Q. Particular offices can set varying procedures on how to request investigators?

A. Yeah, and it may not be -- yes.

Q. If you look at page three of the document, the heading is expense request. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And then the document sets out how electronic encumbrances works. Do you see that?

A. On page three, yes.

Q. On page three.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Does that appear to you to be referencing the encumbrance expenditure process you referenced earlier for requesting things like expert witnesses or social workers?

A. If I could have one minute to read it. Yes.

Q. Does this appear to be an accurate statement of MSPD's policies or practices for making an encumbrance request?

A. Yes. I mean, there is the additional memo I referenced earlier that states certain information that should be included, but --

Q. So certain districts may require additional information above and beyond what the MSPD generally requires; is that fair to say?

Page 44

A. That might happen.

Q. But generally this appears to be a correct statement of the -- the policies or practices to request an encumbrance?

A. Yes.

Q. Taking a step back to general oversight, how does the MSPD central office oversee districts?

A. I guess I need more clarification of your question.

Q. Do district defenders have to check in with the central office before issuing district specific policies?

A. Local policies I believe still, you know, are supposed to be approved by division directors, but not everything would we consider a local policy. There's quite a bit of autonomy given to our district defenders.

Q. Does the central office impose reporting requirements on individual districts to report statistics or case information back to the central office?

A. No. Most of it's there in our databases that they use, so we can generate reports from that. They aren't expected to send in reports.

Q. The database that districts use to compile case information is accessible by the central office as well?

A. Yes.

Q. What are some of the metrics that the central office may look at to oversee district offices?

A. I can't give you an exclusive list, but depends upon what we're looking at, but if we're looking at caseload, we'll look at number of cases, we'll look at type of cases, we'll look at number of clients, we'll look at miles covered, we'll look at how many counties they're covering, we'll look at number of staff they have and what types of staff. We look at expenditures.

Q. You mentioned miles covered. What do you mean by miles covered?

A. Work-related travel.

Q. What kinds of work-related travel are MSPD attorneys expected to perform?

A. Going to court, investigating cases, meeting with clients, attending training.

Q. Are there auditing practices that the central office uses to oversee districts?

Page 46

A. Our comptroller is considered our internal auditor, Kathleen Lear.

Q. Does the MSPD impose timekeeping requirements on MSPD attorneys?

A. There is a time sheet that has to be completed every pay period indicating the number of total hours worked each day, and then if there are insufficient number of hours worked, then appropriate use of either annual or sick leave.

Q. Is there any more detailed timekeeping that MSPD attorneys are required to perform, such as specific tasks performed that day?

A. Not currently.

Q. At any time were MSPD -- to your knowledge MSPD attorneys required to keep such time statistics?

A. Yes, we had time logging, which is the sort of detailed timekeeping that you're referring to.

Q. When did the MSPD do that time logging?

A. You know, I think it ended approximately a year and a half ago. I would have to look to tell you for sure, but -- and it -- I think we had done it up to that point for around three and a half years or so.

Q. Why did the MSPD do time logging for that three and a half years?

A. Well, both in terms of providing us necessary data for the RubinBrown report and then after that for legislative request. But also for resource allocation within offices by district defenders, resource allocation statewide by -- by the director and the performance monitoring by -- by supervisors to see what sort of work and how much work in certain areas was being done.

Q. Why did the MSPD stop doing time logging?

A. That was director Barrett's decision. I think he could best answer that question, but -- but I think it's fair to say that the primary reason was -- was the amount of time that it was -- was taking. It couldn't be justified given our workload.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 9, All staff survey response summary, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 9, and I apologize for the ridiculously small font size on this document. Do you recognize this document?

Page 48

A. Yeah, I believe I know what it is.

Q. What is it?

A. It's entitled All Staff Survey Response Summary. I believe it was a time sufficiency survey that was conducted as part of the RubinBrown report, the Missouri project to come up with the appropriate rates.

Q. Do you know approximately when this document was produced?

A. No, I don't remember. I wouldn't want to guess.

Q. Do you know how it was -- how this survey was conducted?

A. I was not part of senior management at that time, but I don't remember. As I remember, it was sent to everyone to -- to fill out. I don't remember if it was from MSPD or if it was from RubinBrown that sent it.

Q. Do you know if the MSPD has any more recent surveys similar to this one?

A. Not to my knowledge.

(Exhibit 4, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm showing you now what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4. Do you recognize this document?

Page 49

A. It's our workload capacity report. Specifically what we call the Missouri State Public Defender cumulative caseload metrics.

Q. What does this report show?

A. This report is a three-month report for January through March of 2017. It shows the percent of capacity for -- for each office's caseload. By percent of capacity, I mean as compared to the RubinBrown standard.

Q. So capacity refers to the RubinBrown standards for -- for workload?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who prepared this document?

A. Anthony Johnson of our IT department.

Q. Do you know how this document was created?

A. Not the specifics of it, no. That would be an IT function, but it's -- you know, the case numbers are -- are pulled out of our case management databases. The -- the travel time currently is pulled from our -- our expense reports. In-court time is pulled from averages from when we were keeping time log data.

Q. So I just want to make sure I understand this document. So I apologize for the excruciating detail upon which we are about to embark. What does the report mean when it refers to cumulative caseload metrics?

A. I didn't -- it existed before me as far as what title was given. I don't know why the word cumulative is necessarily included.

Q. So let me ask it a different way. To your knowledge, do the case numbers on this document reflect only cases that were opened between March -- between January 1st, 2017 and March 31st, 2017 or are these all cases on the docket of the MSPD between those dates?

A. They are cases in which we commenced representation during that period of time.

Q. So these are -- this spreadsheet reflects only cases where representation was commenced between January 1st, 2017 and March 31st, 2017?

A. Correct.

Q. Is that what the fourth column cases initiated refers to?

A. Yes.

Q. What does minus cases withdrawn mean?

A. For purposes of our percent of capacity, we do not count cases in which we withdrew within I believe 30 days. That's correct.

Q. And those -- and that column is subtracted from the cases initiated column to create the net new cases column; is that right?

A. Yes. And actually looking closer at the top at the time of the preparation in this report, withdrawn conflict cases closed in the same month they were open. We now do it based upon 30 days, but at the time it was if they were -- if we withdrew within the same month.

Q. What is the next column net case units opened (RB) mean?

A. That -- that is the net new cases multiplied by the RubinBrown weight given the different case types. So in other words, that 441 has a lot of different case types in it. And each of those case types has a specific RubinBrown number of hours, and -- and so you know, in the background IT is through a formula multiplying each of those number of case type codes by the RubinBrown numbers that -- that are associated with that case type code and arriving at that net case units.

Q. Next column is -- excuse me, the next column is attorney court time (estimated). What does that mean?

Page 52

A. That is an estimation of the time that -- that attorneys spend in court where if you read the RubinBrown report, specifically footnote 14 is an uncontrollable task, and RubinBrown said that their standards do not include any time spent in court. So to accurately determine a percent capacity, you have to add that time in.

Q. The next column is attorney travel time (estimated). What does that mean?

A. That's an estimation of the travel time the attorneys spent, and again, according to the RubinBrown report, that time is not considered in arriving at their -- at their weight. So that -- that time has to be added in.

Q. Next column is workload (units plus court time plus travel). What does that column mean?

A. Well, that's net case units plus attorney court time plus attorney travel time.

Q. The next column is capacity. What does that mean?

A. That is the number of attorneys times -- trying to make sure I get this, understand this correctly. I'm looking at the numbers. Give me one minute. Yeah, that would be the number of attorneys times two hundred -- 2,080 hours per year, but this is a three-month report so that would have to be divided by four.

Q. So capacity in that column refers to the capacity for the three months of this report?

A. Yes.

Q. What does percent of capacity refer to?

A. That would be essentially the capacity divided by, you know, the number of hours for those three months, which would be 2,080 divided by four, which is approximately 520.

So I think that's, you know, probably -- well, I would have to sit down and do the math, but it's -- it's how much they -- you know, how many -- out of the workload -- I'm sorry. Give me a minute. It's the workload divided by the capacity is -- is what it is.

Q. And so that is the capacity utilization for new cases in the three months January 1st to March 31st, 2017?

A. Yes.

Q. Stepping back to the travel time column for a minute, does travel time include the time spent visiting clients?

A. If they had to -- if it was travel time that appeared on their expense reports, yes, associated with that client visit.

Q. What about to cover conflict cases prior to July 1st of this year?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there other kinds of travel that this may refer to?

A. Yes, anything that would appear on the expense reports, which is work-related travel. So it could be travel time to investigate cases. It could be travel time for training.

Q. And you see the report breaks down each area name and provides statistics for each area name?

A. I do.

Q. And then below that there's a row that says trial division total?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it your understanding that the area names that precede that refer to cases in the trial division for those area names?

A. Yes.

Q. How often is this report updated?

Page 55

A. Every three months. At the end of each quarter.

Q. Could you provide us with copies of more recent reports than March 31st, 2017?

A. We have done the one for -- for April 1st through June 30th would be the last one that was done, so yes, we could provide that.

Q. Does the MSPD prepare reports that compile not only new cases for the time period, but also existing caseloads?

A. I mean, in our case management database it shows open cases and -- and closed cases, which is the same terminology I use when describing -- or conflict database, whether or not a case has been disposed of or not.

Q. Is a report like this prepared using that data?

A. No.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 10, List of public defenders spreadsheet, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm showing you now what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 10. This one is a little more readable, but a lot longer. Do you recognize this document? And if it would perhaps reflesh -- excuse me, refresh your recollection, I would encourage you to flip towards the back where there's a sheet that starts with the column with the row last name, first name, etc., and the first name listed is Daniel Radke. I believe that may be --

A. Which page are you referring to?

Q. So the document unfortunately as produced is not page numbered. It is the --

MR. QUINLAN: It's not in alphabetical order?

MR. SHAHABIAN: It is -- so it was produced -- this is a compilation of spreadsheets that are sorted by fiscal year from fiscal years '09 through '17. The --

MR. QUINLAN: Looks like the names on this are by bar number.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Correct. But for each fiscal year the sheet starts over.

MR. QUINLAN: I see.

MR. SHAHABIAN: And the way we printed from Excel, there's no way to reflect those sheet names, so ...

MR. QUINLAN: Okay.

A. So which page are you referencing?

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) So it is -- if you flip back one, two, three, four, the fifth page from the end of the document.

Page 57

A. I do see that, yes.

Q. And the first row is last name, first name, bar number, caseload, workload, and the first entry is Radke, Daniel. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that perhaps refresh your recollection as to what this document may be?

A. To the best of my recollection, this was a report prepared as a result of a discovery request in this litigation, I think.

Q. If you flip through starting from the page with Daniel Radke to the end of this document and scan the list of names, do these names mean anything to you?

A. Well, I recognize a lot of the names. I think for whatever period of time this is for it is attorneys who handled cases for us during that period.

Q. And by handle cases, are you referring to employees of the MSPD or --

A. Yes.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Just to help in terms of identification purposes, I'm also going to show you what's been premarked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 11.

Page 58

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 11, List of public defenders spreadsheet, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) A similar, but much shorter document. If you go to the last page, which is double-sided, and the first side of that page, that may refresh your recollection. Similar to the other document, this was produced as a series of spreadsheets dated fiscal years '09 to '17. '17 is at the end here. Do you recognize this list of names?

A. Yes. Again, I think it's attorneys who handled cases for us during for whichever period of time. This is in-house attorneys, and I recognize these names as attorneys within our appellate PCR division, which makes me think that probably the prior exhibit, Exhibit 10, were probably attorneys within our trial division, but Exhibit 11 I think is attorneys within our appellate PCR division.

Q. So to be clear, your understanding is the names on the last two pages of Exhibit 11 refer to appellate and PCR attorneys of the MSPD?

A. Yes.

Q. And turning back to Plaintiffs'

Page 59

Exhibit 10, those last five pages, that list of names you believe refers to attorneys within the trial division, employed within the trial division of the MSPD?

A. Yes.

Q. So let's look at Plaintiffs' Exhibit 10. What does caseload, the column caseload refer to?

A. You know, if my memory serves me correctly, that is in a case that they handled during that -- by any case they handled, I mean that was assigned to them at any particular time during that year.

It may have a case that carried over from a prior fiscal year but was still pending at the beginning of that fiscal year, or it may mean a case in which they actually commenced representation during that fiscal year, but ...

Q. But you're not sure sitting here today whether it's just new cases commenced that year or total docket for that year?

A. I'm fairly confident it's both.

Q. Okay. What does workload refer to?

A. I think that's probably a comparison of the caseload to the -- to the workload capacity of that attorney.

Q. How would that workload --

A. By use of the RubinBrown weights.

Q. So workload incorporates the RubinBrown metrics?

A. I believe so.

Q. Do you see going down about a quarter of the way on that fifth page starting Daniel Radke an entry for Nancy Pew.

A. I do.

Q. And for Nancy Pew the caseload 1.00. Do you see that?

A. That's what it indicates, yes.

Q. And it says the workload is 1.20 percent. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have an understanding of why an MSPD trial attorney might have a caseload of one or a workload of 1.2 percent?

A. I'd assume she either left right after the beginning of the -- the reporting period or -- or was hired right before the end of the reporting period.

Q. So the attorneys on this list to your understanding reflect attorneys employed by the MSPD at any point during the fiscal year for which this is reporting?

A. Yes.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 12, 11-16-15 Blau e-mail, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 12. Do you recognize this document?

A. In general, yes. I don't remember seeing this specific e-mail, but yes.

Q. What does it appear to you to be?

A. A guide for certain information for district defenders to -- to look at in appraising attorneys in line for promotion, the assistant public defender three or assistant public defender four.

Q. What is a assistant public defender three?

A. Well, our assistant public defender classification level, it's a -- it's a merit-based promotion system with minimum tenure requirement. So an APD III for instance means someone who has met the minimum tenure requirement of two years as an assistant public defender two and who meets the -- mirror requirements for the promotion.

Q. What is an assistant public defender four?

A. That would be someone who has met the minimum tenure requirements, which for an assistant public defender four is two years as an assistant public defender three and meets the -- the performance requirements.

Q. What is an assistant public defender two?

A. That is someone who has met the minimum tenure requirement as one year as an assistant public defender one and meets the performance requirements for the position.

Q. And apologies for going out of order, but what is an assistant public defender one?

A. A brand-new attorney.

Q. Are there --

A. Brand-new assistant public defender. They may not be a brand-new attorney.

Q. Are there assistant public defender classifications above four?

A. Not for assistant public defenders, no.

Q. What would be the next promotion after assistant public defender four?

A. There would be no further promotions after that.

Page 63

Q. How would an assistant public defender become a managerial-level public defender such as a district defender?

A. To apply for a vacancy when it occurs and be selected.

Q. If there is no vacancy or they are not selected, assistant public defenders do not progress past assistant public defender four?

A. Correct. We pay differentials for capital work, but that's not a promotion, just a different pay scale.

Q. This document Plaintiffs' Exhibit 11 is from --

A. You mean 12?

Q. I'm sorry, 12. Thank you. Appears to be from Ellen Blau. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. And could you refresh my recollection as to who Ellen Blau is?

A. She's our trial division director.

Q. So these standards for promotion to assistant public defender three and public -- assistant public defender four apply throughout the MSPD system?

Page 64

A. I would not refer to these as the standards. These are the metrics that they -- that Ellen would like to see in the appraisal, things to be looked at.

Q. What do you mean by metrics?

A. Well, client contact, you know, the substance, how is the client contact, how frequently it's occurring. Trials, what trials have they had, what types of dispositions are they getting, what's the quality and extent of their motion practice, etc.

Q. Do these metrics apply throughout the MSPD system for purposes of promotions from -- to assistant public defender three and assistant public defender four?

A. This is a trial division document.

Q. Do these metrics apply throughout the MSPD trial division system for purposes of promotion to assistant public defender three and four?

A. This was sent in 2015. Whether or not Ellen has -- has altered it somewhat as far as her guidance of what to put in an appraisal, you would -- I -- I wouldn't want to say for sure, but it generally does.

Q. For a promotion from assistant public defender one to assistant public defender two, is that promotion based solely on the attorney's tenure with the MSPD?

A. No, there's also performance standard, but it's obviously a lot lower than for a three or four.

Q. What sort of performance standard is?

A. Successful performance in C and D felonies.

Q. What would a successful performance in a C and D felony look like?

A. An attorney that can -- you know, essentially I'm just sort of summarizing, but an attorney who successfully -- you know, providing the necessary representation that should be provided in cases up to and including C and D felonies.

Q. Is it often for an assistant public defender one who meets the tenure requirements for assistant public defender two not to be promoted to assistant public defender two?

A. That would be rare.

Q. Is it fair to say that promotions to assistant public defender three and assistant public defender four are more merit-based than those to assistant public defender two?

Page 66

A. I think that's fair to say.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 13, District 12 Trial Observation Form, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13. Do you recognize that document?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a trial observation form. This specific one is one that obviously came from our Fulton trial office, District 12.

Q. Is it a -- is the trial observation form used only in District 12 or is it used throughout the MSPD system?

A. It's not necessarily used everywhere, but it's used more than at District 12. It depends upon if a district defender finds it useful and decides to use it.

Q. Do you know who prepared this document?

A. I did.

Q. Why is this document used more at District 12?

A. I don't know that it is used more in District 12. I prepared it when I was a district defender in the Kansas City trial office, and I think it's been shared by the division directors for district defenders to use if they wanted to.

Q. Is there any systemic review of the use of this form to your knowledge?

A. I'm not sure what you mean by systemic review.

Q. Is there -- let me rephrase. Is there a practice to how this form is used in District 12 or more generally?

A. No.

Q. What could it be used for?

A. Well, it could be used at any time someone has a trial in District 12, that most likely their supervisor or more senior attorney would fill out when they either second-chaired the trial or observed the trial.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 14, District 12 Case Review, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you now what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 14. Do you recognize that document?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It's district defender -- District 12's case review form.

Page 68

Q. What is the difference between Exhibit 14, the case review form, and Exhibit 13, the trial observation form?

A. The trial observation form would be limited to cases that were tried. A case review might be performed in any particular case during the pendency of the case.

Q. What is a case review?

A. That's when a district defender or senior attorney sits down with an attorney and it reviews the case with them, including what preparation has been done and needs to be done.

Q. Who prepared this document?

A. The form itself?

Q. Yes.

A. I did.

Q. To your knowledge, is it used outside of District 12?

A. I used it in a Kansas City trial office. Truthfully this form wasn't used nearly as much as the trial observation form. I can't -- I don't know which other offices are using it or how frequently they're using it if they do use it.

Q. Is there a standardized MSPD policy to conduct a case review?

Page 69

A. No.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 15, District 12 Guilty plea or sentencing observation form, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 15. Do you recognize that document?
A. Yes.
Q. What is it?
A. District 12's guilty plea or sentencing observation form.
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. District 12's guilty plea or sentencing observation form.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Do you know who prepared this document?
A. I did.
Q. What would this guilty plea or sentencing observation form be used for?
A. Again, it's something that would be filled out most likely by a manager or a senior attorney for a guilty plea or sentencing that -- that they witnessed.
Q. To your knowledge, is this document used outside of District 12?

Page 70

A. I don't know.
Q. Is there any MSPD policy that districts use to form similar to this form for purposes of guilty plea or sentencing observations?
A. No.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 16, District 12 Motion hearing observation form, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 16. Last one, I promise. Do you recognize this document?
A. I do.
Q. What is it?
A. District 12's motion hearing observation form.
Q. What would this motion hearing observation form be used for?
A. Completed again most likely by a manager or a senior attorney who observed an attorney handle a motion hearing.
Q. Do you know who prepared this document?
A. I did.
Q. To your knowledge, is it used outside of District 12?
A. I don't know.

Page 71

Q. Does the MSPD have a policy or practice for how districts should document observing a motion hearing?
A. No.
Q. I want to go back to Exhibit 13 just for a minute to clean up a question I missed. That's the trial observation form. To your knowledge, is there a policy or practice of the MSPD in how districts should document observing a trial?
A. No.
MR. SHAHABIAN: I think it's a good time for a break.
THE WITNESS: If you'd like.
VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 2:34 p.m.
(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)
VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 2:45 p.m.
MR. SHAHABIAN: Mr. Elmer, thanks for coming back.
THE WITNESS: You're welcome.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I want to turn a bit more to the topic of training and supervision of MSPD attorneys. Are there centralized policies within the MSPD for how new attorneys are trained?

Page 72

A. Only in the sense that there is certain training events that they're required to attend.
Q. What -- what events are they required to attend?
A. They attend a new employee orientation. Normally the first one that occurs after they begin employment. They have to attend new defender workshop, which is usually sometime within their first year of employment. They attend a trial skills workshop that usually occurs within their first year of employment.
I think that was trial skills I had said there. And then finally we have an annual training available to all attorneys which I mentioned earlier we call spring training. They're required to attend that for their first three years and it's optional after that.
Q. How long is the new defender workshop?
A. Several days. Less than a week. Or no more than a week.
Q. What topics does the new defender workshop cover?
A. I haven't attended one for a few years, but specifically I think things like probation violations, preliminary hearings, client contact, things like that.

Page 73

Q. How long is the new employee orientation? Apologies. I missed that.
A. One day.
Q. What is covered in the new employee orientation?
A. Things like indigency determination, policies, promotions, the path of the case through the criminal justice system, and then various operations, personnel make presentations. Our general counsel and I think our HR manager covers things within their -- their areas, HR practices.
Q. How long is the trial skills workshop?
A. I think that's again several days. No more than a week.
Q. This may be an obvious question, but what topics are covered in the trial skills workshop?
A. Trial skills, from voir dire through -- through closing and everything in-between.
Q. How long is spring training?
A. I believe that's usually two or three days.
Q. What topics are covered in spring training?

Page 74

A. That varies from year to year. It's more advanced training and then very specific. There might be something on, you know, immigration one year, there might be something on motion practice another year. There will be several topics covered. Usually multiple tracks where folks can choose which presentations to -- to attend.
Q. Is there special training for juvenile defense?
A. We do try to do juvenile training. It usually occurs about once a year.
Q. Is that for all MSPD attorneys or for attorneys focused on juvenile cases?
A. It's generally focused on attorneys handling juvenile cases. We request that offices send at least one person.
Q. Is at least one person from each office required to attend a juvenile training?
A. I wouldn't say required, no.
Q. Is there training for handling defendants with mental health issues?
A. You know, occasionally we may have -- we may have held specialty training. I couldn't say for sure. Certainly that might be a presentation in spring training.

Page 75

Q. You mentioned immigration concerns. Are new attorneys required to receive training on immigration concerns in providing defense?
A. No. Let me say I'm referring to statewide training. I can't tell you what the requirements of particular district defenders would be within their office.
Q. Do district defenders add additional requirements on top of the statewide training?
A. They may. Something within their control such as undergoing training within their own office.
Q. Aside from these statewide training workshops you've mentioned, are there other forms of training that are offered on a statewide basis?
A. Well, as I said, different presentations given in spring training. You know, there's probably other, you know, single focused training that are periodically put on, such as appellate training or post-conviction training or on some other subject that's more -- more periodic than annual.
Q. Who is charged with training new attorneys?
A. Well, statewide we have a training director, and the district defenders certainly also have that responsibility.

Q. District -- what is the role of a district defender?
A. They are the managing attorney for their local district office.
Q. What are their responsibilities as the managing attorney for the local district office?
A. Well, to train the attorneys, to assign the workload, to monitor the performance of the attorneys, to do -- make -- to do appraisals, to make promotion requests, to work with general counsel and our HR manager and division director with any performance concerns. Manage their budget.
Q. Are district defenders expected to take on case assignments?
A. That is a decision the district defender makes in consultation with the division director, but generally, yes, our district defenders handle caseload.
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. Handles caseload, personal caseload.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) How are new MSPD attorneys recruited?
A. You know, for specifics I'd want to defer to our HR manager, but in general we -- we do on-campus recruiting at the law schools. Generally the law schools within Missouri.

I know they -- I think they do some posting of vacancies in publications or on the Missouri Bar website. Certainly by -- by word of mouth. We also have a website. I believe our employment application is on it.

Q. Does the MSPD face any problems in recruiting new attorneys?

A. We do.

Q. What kinds of problems?

A. Not enough. Oftentimes don't have -- don't have any or any sufficiently qualified attorneys to -- to fill a vacancy with. It's not unusual. Frequently is a vague term, but it's not unusual, especially in rural areas.

Q. Why is that?

A. Why don't we get enough? Pay. Their particular interest, whether or not they want to do the work. How many people want to live in that area. I mean, it could be for various reasons, but certainly the pay has a lot to do with it.

Q. Who decides when MSPD attorneys are promoted?

A. Well, I described the promotion process and the -- the minimum requirements. Within the confines of that, the district defender makes a recommendation. That ultimate decision lies with the district defender for promotion to APD II.

For APD III the ultimate decision lies with the division director, or in the case of Greg Mermelstein's division, with him as a deputy director. With assistant public defender four after the district defender recommends it and a district defender approves, then -- then for the trial division I have to approve it. For the appellate PCR division, capital division, CDU, that would be Mr. Mermelstein.

Q. How often is -- strike that.

You mentioned it is rare for an assistant public defender one to not -- who meets the tenure requirements to not be promoted to assistant public defender two. How frequently does an assistant public defender two not get promoted to assistant public defender three?

A. Depends upon which time frame you're meaning. Ultimately, I mean, I -- I suppose we have people who obviously have left the system who -- and before they're promoted to APD III, even though they met the minimum time and tenure requirements, but I don't -- I'm not sure how to answer your question.

But certainly there are assistant public defender twos who are not promoted to three at their minimum tenure eligibility date, but we certainly strive to get them to that point by then.

Q. Just going back to our -- our last topic, you mentioned that part of the reason the MSPD has trouble recruiting is pay, but I didn't ask you to be specific. What do you mean by pay?

A. Our low salaries.

Q. What is the starting salary for a new public defender?

A. I think it's approximately 39,000.

Q. Is there adjustments for locality?

A. No.

Q. So for any public -- new public defender placed in any office in the state of Missouri, the starting salary is approximately 39,000?

A. Yes. I mean, they're in the process for -- for requesting tenure credit, but -- but yes, that's the starting salary.

Q. And by tenure credit, you mean credit for experience as an attorney prior to joining the public defender's office?

A. Yes.

Q. How often is that tenure credit granted?

A. I don't have a number. It's not very often.

Q. Approximately how many years of experience would an attorney have before the MSPD would consider granting tenure credit?

A. There's no particular number. I mean, we would certainly -- sort of compare it to our -- to our in-house promotion criteria.

Q. So I'd like to turn now to a new topic, the process by which MSPD attorneys are permitted or required to refuse case appointments. Are you familiar with the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in I believe it's Missouri Public Defender Commission v. Waters?

A. Yes.

Q. What is your understanding generally? Not asking for recitation of the specific holding, but generally what that case meant?

A. They upheld our caseload rule that we had promulgated at the time under the -- our power to adopt rules under the code of state regulations.

Page 81

They upheld that rule, which allowed us to certify an office as overloaded and -- and not take on new cases.

Q. After that decision came down, how often did MSPD offices certify that they were overloaded and could not take on new cases?

A. I don't have a certain number. There were -- there were several, but it was short-lived.

Q. Why was it short-lived?

A. Because of the statutory change and the legislative push leading up to that statutory change.

Q. What was the statutory change?

A. In essence that -- that we could not use that rule that we had promulgated under the code of state regulations as a basis for turning away cases.

Q. You also mentioned the legislative push leading up to that change. What did you mean by legislative push?

A. There was legislation that would -- required us to contract out certain of our cases.

Q. What do you mean by require to contract out certain cases?

A. Well, specifically as I -- the best I could remember them, the legislation would have required us to contract out all C and D felonies and below, but given us no more money to do it. So we would have to find the money to do it.

Q. So the legislation would have sent C and D felonies to panel attorneys or something similar?

A. It would have -- it would have required as I remember for us to essentially go through a process of letting -- letting contract attorneys submit bids for -- for bulk contracts to handle cases of certain parts of the state.

Q. In your opinion, would that have been an effective way to provide indigent defense in the state of Missouri?

A. It would not have been.

Q. Why not?

A. Well, first of all, it wouldn't have solved our problem because no more money would have been given us. So we would have had to lay off staff in order to pay for it, and whatever staff was left would have had to handle all the A, B felonies and homicides. And it wouldn't have been enough.

We still -- our staff would have been in the same position. There would have been fewer, but individually they would have been in the same position. So the clients that we handled through in-house representation still would have been working with overloaded attorneys.

As far as using contract attorneys for the rest of the cases it was -- it was fraught with problems. I think it would have been more expensive. I think, you know, we wouldn't have been able to provide training for those attorneys.

I think because they likely would have been trying to, you know, get the winning bid, they would have been very low. You know, they would have been low bids. They couldn't justify them spending much time on the -- on the cases.

Flat fees -- certainly flat fees such as in this which would have been an agreement to handle any -- an indefinite number of cases that came, an unlimited number of cases that came in for a certain price, but it's looked down upon by the ABA as not -- not a good practice.

In many areas of the state I don't think there would have been either any attorneys or attorneys qualified to be handling those cases. For all sorts of reasons.

Q. One of the reasons you mentioned is that it would have been more expensive. Could you elaborate on that concern a little bit?

A. I believe that within the trial division our average cost per case annually is I think $325. The cases that we contract out currently to private attorneys, the average is approximately $700. So it costs us more than twice the dollar amount to handle a case to contract a case privately as opposed to handling it in-house.

Q. Is it your understanding that following Waters MSPD officials in some districts agreed not to assign attorneys to cases where prosecutors promise that defendants would face no jail time?

A. I think when -- if the case became a fine-only case, then we would not handle the case, and so I don't think it was just a matter of the prosecutor agreeing not to -- not to seek jail time. The judge would have to agree up-front the case would be a fine-only case, that nothing more than a fine would be imposed on the case ever.

Q. And was that for certain districts or statewide?

A. If you -- you know, it was by district.

Q. Do you know which districts entered into such agreements?

Page 85

A. There were various for lack of a better term Waters agreements entered into. I don't know how many or any -- if any of them included declaring certain classes of cases as fine-only. I don't remember.

Q. Regardless of the specifics of the agreements, to use your term Waters agreements, do you know which MSPD districts entered into Waters type agreements?

A. Not as I sit here today.

Q. Do you know of any cases where the MSPD agreed not to take a representation because of a promise of no jail time only to learn later that the -- that the defendant received jail time?

A. I don't remember the specifics, but that would not surprise me.

Q. Why would it not surprise you?

A. There was frequently confusion over what fine-only meant. For instance, you know, suspended imposition of sentence or a suspended execution of sentence does not meet the terminology of fine-only even though the person is given probation at that time, unless the judge says if he gets revoked I will never impose anything more than a fine.

Page 86

If he's leaving jail on the table at that time, even up-front the person is entitled to counsel because he ultimately may get jail, and there was often confusion over that.

Q. What is the source of your knowledge for that confusion?

A. Just general recollection at the time.

Q. Recollection based on your work in the MSPD?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware that the -- so the then head of the MSPD was Cat Kelly; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Are you aware that Cat Kelly was told that if local offices continued to turn away cases, the legislature would privatize the entire indigent defense system?

A. I -- yes.

Q. What is the source of your knowledge for that?

A. Working with Cat at the time at the -- at the capitol and there were legislators sponsoring the bill there.

Q. What -- do you recall in any more detail what specifically was said either to you or to Cat or other MSPD officials by legislators about privatizing the system?

Page 87

A. Not specifics, no.

Q. What about generally?

A. Well, generally that, you know, they were sponsoring bills and appeared they very well might have the votes to do it. Then that was in the House, and then the Senate substitute bill was offered that -- that took out that language and added ultimately what became language in the new statute.

But once the Senate did that then -- then the House member amended other bills to include his language that had been taken out of the Senate bill. So it was -- it ended up being in various pieces of legislation.

Q. Do you remember which legislators those were?

A. It was Representative Stanley Cox who -- who was sponsoring the language.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 17, 1-16-13 Kelly e-mail, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 17. Do you recognize this document?

Page 88

A. Yes.

Q. What does it appear to you to be?

A. An a e-mail from director Cat Kelly to the district defenders regarding timekeeping.

Q. Approximately when was this e-mail sent?

A. January 16th, 2013.

Q. Did you receive this e-mail?

A. Yes, I would have received it.

Q. If you could please turn to page two of this document. Do you see the heading in the e-mail that says caseload relief, about halfway down the page?

A. I do.

Q. Could you read the first paragraph following that heading out loud, for the record out loud, please?

A. (Quote as read):

I know there is a fair amount of angst, anger, frustration, fill in the blank here about the current state of our efforts to obtain caseload relief. When we won the Supreme Court ruling last summer, we all thought we'd be well on our way to reasonable caseload by this time. That of course hasn't turned out to be the case.

Q. Do you know what Cat Kelly may have been referring to here in saying that hasn't turned out to be the case?

MR. QUINLAN: Object to form, calling for speculation.

A. I think she's referring both to the legislative efforts to -- to keep us from using our rulemaking authority and to require us to contract out certain of our cases, as well as the fact that the Waters meetings that were required under the Waters decision were not bearing any useful fruit.

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Is that under -- is that consistent with your understanding of the state of affairs at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you read the next sentence out loud, please?

A. The next sentence or paragraph?

Q. Just the next sentence.

A. (Quote as read):

There are quite a few who argue we should have forged ahead and not pulled back on certification when we did regardless of the pushback from policymakers.

Q. Do you have an understanding of what certification refers to?

A. Yes.

Q. What does it refer to?

A. The process under our -- our caseload rule that had been upheld by the Waters decision that allowed us to certify an office and therefore not take on new cases.

Q. Do you have an understanding of what pull back refers to?

A. That we abandon the certification process.

Q. Do you have an understanding of what pushback from policymakers refers to?

A. I think he's referring to the legislative efforts.

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 18, 12-29-16 Winfrey e-mail chain, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 18. Do you recognize this document?

A. Without reading the entire document, no, I -- I don't remember seeing it, but I may have.

Page 91

Q. If I could focus your attention on the e-mail from Justin Carver starting at the bottom of page two and continuing to pages three and four. Does that e-mail look familiar to you?

A. I don't remember it specifically.

Q. Who is Justin Carver?

A. He's our district defender in our Jefferson City office.

Q. And if you look at the bottom of page two, who does it appear he is sending this e-mail to?

A. I would say it looks like he's sending it to judges and courts where Jefferson City is responsible for the handling of public defender cases.

Q. If you look at page three --

A. Along with the -- some prosecuting attorneys, or attorney.

Q. If you look at page three, the second full paragraph says (quote as read):

The struggles of the public defender office remain. Every single one of my lawyers has expressed to me that their caseload is too high and that they cannot effectively handle the cases that they have.

Is that statement consistent with your understanding of the caseload in the Jefferson City office?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that statement unique to the Jefferson City office?

A. No.

Q. Is that a statement that could be applied more generally to the MSPD system?

A. Yes.

Q. The next sentence says (quote as read):

I have lawyers threatening to quit if I don't get their caseloads down to a level where they can be effective.

Do you see that sentence?

A. Yes.

Q. To your understanding, is that statement consistent with the state of affairs of the Jefferson City public defender's office?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that unique to the Jefferson City public defender's office?

A. No.

Q. Are lawyers threatening to quit throughout the MSPD system due to high caseloads?

Page 93

A. Yes.
Q. To your knowledge, have lawyers quit the MSPD due to high caseloads?
A. Yes.
Q. The next sentence says (quote as read):
Director Barrett tells me that agency turnover is now at 22 percent.
Does that appear to you to be an accurate statement of where total MSPD turnover stood at that time?
A. Yes.
Q. And to be clear, going back to page two, this e-mail was sent near the end of December 2016?
A. Yes.
Q. If you look down at the -- near the end of the page, the largest full paragraph says (quote as read):
Starting in January when I receive a qualifying application for public defender services I will do one of two things. If the applicant is in jail, I will assign the applicant a lawyer immediately until all of my lawyers have become overloaded. If the applicant is not in jail, I will hold the application until the end of the month. If I have available lawyers at the end of the month, I will assign it to one of my lawyers. If I don't have available lawyers, I will be filing a motion to appoint a lawyer who is employed by the state of Missouri.

Do you see that?
A. Yes.
Q. Did Justin Carver discuss his plan with the central MSPD office before sending this e-mail?
A. Before sending the e-mail, I don't know.
Q. Did the MSPD office become aware of this plan after this e-mail was sent?
A. Either before or after, yes.
Q. Do you have an understanding of why Justin Carver refused cases for applicants not in jail?
A. Yes, for the reasons stated in his e-mail.
Q. To your understanding, are the reasons in this e-mail for refusing cases unique to the

Page 95

Jefferson City office?
A. They are not unique.
Q. Could they be applied to the rest of the MSPD system?
A. Yes.
Q. If you could turn back to page two of this e-mail, e-mail chain, sorry, do you see an e-mail from PeggyRichardson@courts.mo.gov?
A. I do.
Q. Do you know who Peggy Richardson is?
A. I believe she's a judge.
Q. Looking at the e-mail she sent, it says starting with the sentence in any event, it says (quote as read):
In any event, here is what I wish you could do. Instead of holding back on applications, go ahead and let us know if the defendant qualifies. After all, the fact of his or her qualification will not change. It is much easier to manage the cases with the lawyer in the case and then grant continuances due to the caseload. We know that on any given jury week there is no way the public defender can prepare for the number of cases that get set, so at least for me continuances will be pretty freely given. It is a whole different ball game however when the case is just sitting there spinning on a return with counsel date. Perhaps what I'm asking doesn't fit what you're thinking, but please consider it.

Do you see that suggestion by Peggy Richardson?
A. I do.
Q. Is it consistent with your understanding of an attorney's ethical responsibilities to accept appointment to a case that they cannot handle and seek continuances?
A. No.
Q. Would an MSPD attorney be risking their bar license to accept an appointment to a case they cannot handle and seek continuances?
A. Yes.
Q. What makes you think an MSPD attorney would be risking their bar license for doing that?
A. Well, for one, the specific rules of professional conduct regarding competence, diligence, and communication. Two, ABA formal opinion, which has been cited favorably by the Missouri Supreme Court.

Three, the Pratt and Water decisions where they've stated that bar licenses would be at risk. Four, various bar complaints that are being made against our attorneys both by judges, clients, and perhaps prosecutors. And four, the recent decision regarding one of our attorneys named Karl Hinkebein.

Q. What was that recent decision?

A. It was an order. It wasn't a written opinion. It was an order suspending his license for one year, but staying that suspension for a period of probation of either one or two years.

I might have the exact specifics wrong, but suspend his license, stayed it, and put him on probation. And I should add that not only the complaints, but the recommendations being made by the Office of Chief Disciplinary Counsel in light of those complaints.

Q. What recommendations are you referring to?

A. Well, for example, in the Hinkebein case, ultimately their recommendation was Missouri Supreme Court was that his license be suspended.

Page 98

(WHEREIN, Exhibit 19, 4-28-17 Barrett letter to Pratzel, was marked for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 19. Do you recognize this document?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It's a letter dated April 28th, 2017 to Alan Pratzel, chief disciplinary counsel, from our director Michael Barrett regarding request for guidance.

Q. To your knowledge, was this sent -- letter sent before or after the chief disciplinary counsel recommended that Mr. Hinkebein's bar license be suspended?

A. I believe it was before.

Q. To your knowledge, did the chief disciplinary counsel provide Mr. Barrett or the MSPD with a response to this letter?

A. I believe after a long while there was technically a response, but I believe the response was I can provide you no guidance.

Q. Was that response documented?

A. I don't know.

Q. So to your knowledge, you don't know if the MSPD received a written response from the chief disciplinary counsel to this request for guidance?

Page 99

A. No, I don't know for sure.

Q. How have MSPD offices reacted to the Supreme Court's decision in Hinkebein?

A. Alarm, fear. Attorneys quitting. And ultimately with district defenders reviewing caseloads with their attorneys and finding out from their attorneys whether or not they would think that continuing -- continuing to accept new assignments would violate their duties under the rules of professional conduct, and that if that is the case, to -- to alert the local judges to that fact and that they would not be accepting new cases.

Q. Are you aware of any counties that have alerted judges to the fact that they will not be accepting new cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Which counties?

A. You know, I can tell you our district offices. If I start naming counties I'll get them wrong, but it's our --

Q. District offices are fine too.

A. Our District 13, which is our Columbia trial office. Our West Plains office, which I think is District 37. Our Kennett office, which I think is District 35. Our Rolla office, which I believe is District 25. Our Nevada office, which I believe is District 28. And I believe that's the list -- those are the offices that I'm aware of.

Q. And those are offices that have communicated to judges that they will not be accepting new cases?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any other offices that are considering communicating to judges that they will be no longer accepting new cases?

A. Yes.

Q. What offices are those?

A. I don't specifically -- I can't recall those, but I know I've seen e-mails from other offices who are engaging in the process with their attorneys to sit down with them and educate them on the rules of professional conduct and hear from them whether or not they can.

(Exhibit 2, Previously marked exhibit.)

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2. Do you recognize that document?

A. Yes.

Page 101

Q. What is it?
A. It is a letter dated September 11th, 2017 from our director Michael Barrett that was sent to all of our attorneys regarding the Hinkebein order.
Q. What is your general understanding of the intent of this letter?
A. To let them know of the Hinkebein decision, and that the Supreme Court expected them and rules of professional conduct require them to follow the rules of professional conduct.
Q. If you look about halfway down that letter, do you see a reference to, quote, materials for withdrawing due to excessive caseload?
MS. SHIPMA: End of the third paragraph.
A. Yes, uh-huh.
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Do you know what that is referring to?
A. To material that's posted on our litigation resource board.
Q. What sorts of materials?
A. Sample motions or materials for drawing due to excessive caseload, and the ABA opinion I think is probably posted there. Mister --

Page 102

Mr. Mermelstein, who moderates litigation resource board, would be -- you know, best be able to tell you exactly what's on there.
Q. If you haven't yet produced those documents, could you produce those?
MS. SHIPMA: Uh-huh. We've been preparing a supplemental response to you for a couple of weeks now.
MR. SHAHABIAN: Thanks for letting me know.
(Exhibit 3, Previously marked exhibit.)
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you what's been marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 3. Do you recognize this document?
A. Yes.
Q. What is it?
A. It is a e-mail sent by presiding Judge Crane in Boone County to the Boone County Bar Association alerting them to the fact that our public defender office, our Columbia trial office specifically had stated that they could no longer accept new cases under the rules of professional conduct, and as a result Boone County judges would be appointing private counsel to handle indigent representation in those cases.

Page 103

Q. Does the MSPD have any role in overseeing private counsel appointed to handle cases by Judge Crane in Boone County?
A. No.
(WHEREIN, Exhibit 20, Missouri Bar President announcement, was marked for identification.)
Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) I'm handing you Plaintiffs' Exhibit 20. Do you recognize this document?
A. Yes.
Q. What is it?
A. It is an announcement sent out I believe to all the Boone County attorneys alerting them to what was happening in Boone County and as set forth in Judge Crane's e-mail essentially, and also outlines other efforts the Missouri Bar has undertaken and will undertake.
Q. If you look at the fourth full paragraph starting with the second sentence, it says (quote as read):
That's why I met with the Missouri State Public Defender system director to discuss these challenges two weeks ago immediately following the board meeting where I was elected president of the State Bar. Then I met with the deputy director.

Is that referring to a meeting with you?
A. It is.
Q. What did you discuss at that meeting?
A. Our hope that the Missouri Bar could -- could work with us in solving our caseload problem.
Q. What if anything did Morry Cole, Missouri Bar President, say to you in response to that?
A. That they would -- they would take back our ideas. They had -- the meeting he was referring to, they had -- they announced they were forming a public defender committee within the bar to help look at the problem and come up with the ideas, and any ideas that Michael Barrett or I had given them, that, you know, they would -- they would take those under consideration and look at them along with any other ideas that they came up with.
Q. If you look at the first paragraph of this letter, the last full sentence says (quote as read):
To assist lawyers appointed in these cases, the Missouri Bar is providing educational resources and sample forms in the members-only section of mobardot.org. under criminal defense appointment resources.

Did the MSPD have any role in the -- in the preparation or providing of those materials to attorneys appointed in Boone County?

A. You know, some of them -- I haven't looked to see what's there recently. Some of them may be left over from when we were certifying offices under the Waters decision. Some of them may be new.

You might ask Mr. Mermelstein. It seems like I heard either him or our training director state that they had been contacted about supplying some materials, but I'm not sure. You'd want to check with Mr. Mermelstein.

Q. Did the MSPD oversee how the Missouri Bar provides resources to lawyers appointed to represent clients in Boone County?

A. No.

Q. We've talked about district offices and lawyers in the MSPD refusing new cases. To your knowledge, since the Hinkebein decision, have any

Page 106

MSPD attorneys filed motions to withdraw from existing cases due to excessive caseloads?

A. I don't think so.

Q. So I want to go back for a second to something we talked about at the beginning of this deposition. You mentioned that on July 1st of this year the MSPD began using panel attorneys almost exclusively for conflict cases. Is that an accurate statement of what your prior testimony?

A. For new conflict cases that came to us after July 1st.

Q. What precipitated that change?

A. Increase in our appropriation from the legislature that -- that allowed us to do that.

Q. Do you expect that change to be permanent?

A. We hope. I mean, there's an appropriation process every year.

Q. If the resources are not there, would the MSPD go back to using MSPD attorneys from other districts as conflict counsel in conflict cases?

A. To the extent that we could provide them and -- and those offices were accepting new cases as far as I know. And we haven't really talked about that.

Page 107

Q. You mentioned earlier that the timekeeping requirement was suspended by Mr. Barrett. Do you know if that requirement is suspended indefinitely?

A. Yeah, it's suspended indefinitely, but -- but I say that, it's suspended. It could start up again, but suspended indefinitely.

Q. But there are no plans to reimpose timekeeping requirements?

A. No.

Q. I know we're jumping around a bit, but going back to the Waters agreements we talked about earlier, in a case where the prosecutor's office had agreed not to seek jail time, would it be your understanding within the experience of those agreements for courts to still require defendants to post bail?

A. I'm not sure I understand the question.

Q. Let me rephrase. You testified that Waters agreements covered generally cases where the prosecutor and the judge agreed not to impose jail as a sentence?

A. Correct.

Q. Or fine-only to use your words. Setting aside sentencing, would it have been within -- would the MSPD still have agreed not to take a representation in a case like that where even though there was no threat of jail at the sentencing phase, the judge imposed a bail requirement that required the defendant to remain in pretrial custody until bail had been posted?

A. That may very well have been the case, but I don't have any specific recollection.

Q. Are there any policies or procedures from the state office, from the central MSPD office on how MSPD attorneys should use depositions in representing clients?

A. No.

Q. If an MSPD attorney wanted to take a deposition, how would they do that?

A. Through the encumbrance request process that -- that I've described.

Q. And that encumbrance request process would be used to pay for a court reporter --

A. Yes.

Q. -- or videographer? Are there any monetary limits that govern the use of depositions?

A. We -- we have a list of court reporters who have agreed to the state contract, and by state contract I don't -- I'm not referring to a public defender contract, but a state contract rates. And unless there's a reason to deviate from that, to use those court reporters as the most cost effective.

Q. Are there any other limits placed on MSPD attorneys who are requesting depositions?

A. No.

Q. Are there differences in how districts supervise the use of depositions?

A. I believe so.

Q. What kinds of differences?

A. Well, I mean, I can't say specifically, but certainly there are offices that submit more -- more deposition encumbrance requests than other offices, and that could be because of district defender policies or -- or practices. It could be by the culture of the -- the offices.

Q. Does the central office of the MSPD track the number of requests for depositions?

A. We have an encumbrance number database that would have that information.

Q. Is that database broken down by district?

A. Yes.

MR. SHAHABIAN: If you haven't provided that information previously, could you provide that in your forthcoming supplemental production?

MS. SHIPMA: I think I did provide it.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Okay. And I may have missed it.

MS. SHIPMA: There were only 23,000 pages of documents. How you missed it ...

Q. (By Mr. Shahabian) Are there policies and procedures governing travel cost reimbursements by MSPD attorneys or investigators?

A. Well, they have to fill out a monthly expense report to -- to get reimbursed. There are statewide travel regulations that apply to the state, not just to the public defender system.

We -- you know, where it's practical and cheaper we -- we ask attorneys to use rental car rather than drive their own vehicles. Beyond that, if there's any other policies it would be at the local level.

Q. Does the MSPD reduce caseloads for attorneys that have to travel great distances?

A. That would be a district defender decision about how to allocate caseload within their own offices.

Q. Isn't it your understanding the district defenders generally would adjust caseloads for attorneys who have to travel great distances for a case?

A. It could happen.

Q. But you don't have an understanding of a general practice one way or another?

A. No.

Q. Are there policies and procedures relating to how often MSPD trial attorneys meet with their clients?

A. We have guidelines for representation addressing client contact.

Q. What do those guidelines state generally?

A. The initial contact is to occur within seven days of commencement of representation. The ongoing contact is to occur monthly.

Q. And that's a statewide policy?

A. It's a guideline.

Q. That's a statewide guideline?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the MSPD track how often trial attorneys meet those guidelines?

A. It's reviewed through the appraisal process.

Q. How is that information collected for the appraisal process?

A. File reviews. And by file reviews I mean review of both physical files and electronic files in our case management database.

Q. So MSPD attorneys should mark when they visit clients in the files?

A. Yes. It should be documented.

Q. Does the MSPD have any immigration expert attorneys on staff?

A. Currently no. I don't believe we do.

Q. Does the MSPD have agreements with outside attorneys who specialize in immigration matters for consulting purposes?

A. I wouldn't say agreements. I mean, there are particularly in the urban area, at least Kansas City, a particular immigration law firm that requests would most often go to, I believe.

Q. Do you know how often requests are sent to that law firm?

A. Only if there's an encumbrance request.

Q. Do any districts in the state of Missouri have sizable immigrant communities?

A. Yes.

Q. Which districts?

A. I don't know specifically. Certainly the urban areas, but it's not confined to that. I mean, I think numerous rural areas do.

Q. Do you know roughly how many public defenders are employed in the trial division right now?

A. In the trial division, no. I mean, within the -- with the system attorneys, including assistant public defenders and district defenders and deputy district defenders I think it's around 378, somewhere around there, attorneys in the public defender system.

Q. 378 refers to not just trial division attorneys, but also appellate and PCR attorneys?

A. Right.

Q. Do you know roughly the average number of years that a trial division attorney has been employed by the MSPD?

A. No.

Q. When an MSPD attorney decides to leave the MSPD or is terminated, is it the practice of the MSPD to have an exit interview?

A. We provide them with an exit interview and offer them to schedule a discussion with the HR manager to go over the -- the exit interview.

Q. Roughly how -- how often do MSPD attorneys who are leaving the MSPD's employment go through an exit interview?

A. I don't know.

Q. During those exit interviews do the public defenders explain why they are leaving if they are leaving voluntarily?

A. They're asked and they frequently provide that answer.

Q. What sorts of answers do MSPD attorneys give for leaving?

A. Well, by far the majority are caseload and salaries.

Q. And by caseload and salaries, you mean caseloads are too high?

A. And salaries are too low, yes.

Q. Do you know how many public defenders leave the MSPD to join district attorney's offices?

A. Not specifically, no.

Q. Does it happen?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say it's rare, infrequent, occasional?

A. Occasional would probably be the best word?

Q. Why would an MSPD attorney leave for the district attorney's office?

A. Well, again, I think it's frequently because their caseloads there would be lower, salaries would be higher. Might be for other reasons.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Can we go off the record?

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 3:45 p.m.

(WHEREIN, a recess was taken.)

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record at approximately 3:52 p.m.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Thanks very much for your time, Mr. Elmer. I have no further questions at this time.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. RAMSEY:

Q. Mr. Elmer, my name is Steven Ramsey. I represent the State of Missouri and Governor Eric Greitens, and I have a handful of questions.

A. All right.

Q. I apologize for being mildly sporadic, but we're going to jump around just a bit. Okay. If I understood your testimony correctly, you've been in the system for over 30 years, the MSPD system for over 30 years?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, in that time when it comes to written policies and procedures, it sounds as if it's very much a discretionary system in terms of the various districts have discretion to -- to promote guidelines. Is that accurate?

A. I would describe it as very decentralized with a lot of autonomy to our district offices.

Q. So my question concerns the types of procedures and policies that are centralized. At this point in time are you aware of any policies and procedures that deal with attorney supervision?

A. You know, the -- not specifically. Appraisal process and promotion process and promotion criteria, but --

Q. But none as to the actual supervision of how attorneys tasked with supervisor should go about that process?

A. Correct.

Q. Are there any policies and procedures concerning ensuring the effective assistance of counsel of assistant public defenders?

A. Our guidelines are representation.

Page 117

Q. I don't quite follow.
A. Well, the point of them is to -- is to make sure that by following those guidelines that our clients will be effectively represented.
Q. Let me ask this question a different way. In terms of the various training opportunities that you have throughout the course of the year, whether it's the spring training or the new employee orientation, are any of those geared at just ensuring the effective assistance of counsel, like --
A. In the sense that they're providing the attorneys with some of the training they need in order to do that.
Q. And are there any trainings -- are there any trainings tasked with teaching supervision or -- or helping those who are managing other attorneys to -- to supervise attorneys underneath them?
A. We have defender management workshop that's normally held once a year.
Q. About how long is that training?
A. Approximately three days.
Q. Okay. And is it mandatory or discretionary?

Page 118

A. It's mandatory.
Q. Who all is -- who all is required to go to that?
A. District defenders and deputy district defenders.
Q. At this point in time are you familiar with any instances within your tenure at the Missouri State Public Defender's system where there's been a judicial determination of ineffective assistance of counsel?
A. Sure.
Q. How many would you say, like one? Would you say ten?
A. Over what period of time? 30 years?
Q. Yeah, let's go with that, over 30 years.
A. A lot.
Q. And would that normally come in a PCR motion, a post-conviction?
A. Usually a post-conviction motion. They frequently never find their way to the appellate courts. It will be a trial court ruling. That's why if you just look at appellate court decisions it may not seem as many as there actually are.
Q. But your sense is that there's quite a few?

Page 119

A. Yeah, over a 30 period -- 30-year period, yes.
Q. Would you be able to ballpark figure that in terms of --
A. No.
Q. Is it 50 or what do you mean by quite a few?
A. Not infrequent.
Q. Not infrequent. So you would not be able to -- in any way to put a number on that in terms of just like a hundred, 200, you just -- it's not infrequent, but you can't put a figure on it?
A. Correct.
Q. Would there be any records kept in your Missouri State Public Defender system in terms of there's one judicial determination, there's two, is there any recordkeeping of that?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So this is all from your vantage point of view 30-year career?
A. Yeah, from being specifically aware of some at the time of having to conflict off cases because of allegations or finding of ineffectiveness, which may have occurred at a post-conviction level or sometimes occurs at motions to withdraw before a sentencing.

A judge allows an attorney or client to withdraw his plea based upon claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, and then those that come to me to be conflicted off.
Q. Are you aware -- same vein, just a different part of the office question. Are you aware of any ethical complaints against Missouri state public defenders?
A. Yes.
Q. Would you say -- so there's the one obvious example that was -- that's been referenced today. Are you familiar with more than that?
A. Yes.
Q. And are you familiar with any of those complaints that have risen to the level that we've seen in the Supreme Court case recently?
A. Do I remember a public defender being -- his license having been suspended, not right offhand, no.
Q. Slightly different topic. Turning more towards the caseloads. Are you familiar with the state statute that allows for public defenders to motion to the court to have a conference concerning caseload concerns?

A. Yes.
Q. In your recollection and in your experience, has that statute ever been used to -- to consider workload concerns?
A. What do you mean by consider? Has it ever been used?
Q. Yeah. Have you all ever filed a motion to your knowledge to have a conference with the judge to have a conversation about having too much workloads for a public defender or set of public defenders?
A. Not that I'm aware of.
Q. Concerning the communication from the various districts to the various judges saying we're not going to be taking any more cases, are all of those to your knowledge e-mails or just informal conversations with -- with the judge to your knowledge?
A. I think they've all been letters to the judges, probably mixed with conversations along with the letters.
Q. But no motions?
A. No.
Q. Okay.

Page 122

A. They're not in the case, there's no motion to be filed -- to be filed.
Q. Turning to the time logging system, at any point before -- I think it was said about three and a half year time period where you all kept time logs, did that ever occur before that time period?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know about when did that occur?
A. A few years before that there was a short sort of -- I would refer to it as -- I know it was designed to be short. It was done for one of the studies that was being -- was happening at the time, I think.
Q. So it happened for a short stint before that three and a half year period?
A. Yes.
Q. Then it happened for that three and a half year period?
A. Yes.
Q. And then it's been discontinued indefinitely at this point in time?
A. Correct.
Q. During any of those periods did the system keep track of the time spent per the system public defender?

Page 123

A. Yeah.
Q. Did it keep track per case?
A. Yeah. There were -- there were some tasks that were case related, case specific. Some tasks were not case specific. So some of the time showed up under our case, yes.
Q. And then per task?
A. Yes.
Q. Was it on a daily basis similar to the time entry system you alluded to earlier in terms of each two-week period?
A. Yes.
Q. Was it separate from that system?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know the precise time that the logging system was discontinued?
A. Not offhand.
Q. Do you know who would know that?
A. Offhand, I -- you know, I could easily figure it out.
Q. It's just not in front of you right now?
A. I think it was about a year and a half ago, but I don't have the date in my mind.
Q. Is there currently a repository of raw data from that system?

A. Yeah. There's a database.
Q. And is that historical data available in terms of the per day, per task, per case written down?
A. It's there.
Q. And currently even though that system has been discontinued, are you all still tracking that data in any way, the per case, per defender, per task?
A. No.
Q. So not at all?
(Court reporter interruption.)
A. No.
Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Are you familiar with any constitutional requirement for the public defender system to represent those in immigration cases? Pardon me.
A. As an immigration court? Or in --
Q. Either/or.
A. I'm not sure what you mean by immigration cases.
Q. Well, I -- the question was very general, but sure, immigration court or a case that touches immigration.

Page 125

MR. SHAHABIAN: Objection to vague as to any case that touches immigration.

Q. (By Mr. Ramsey) Any case that occurs in an immigration court?

A. No, we don't provide representation in immigration court.

Q. Now, I apologize for my sporadic questions, but I'm going to jump back into the conflict realm. Just so I understand, so the conflict system is much broader than simply the Code 49 system. Is that accurate? Or Code 49 is a subsection of the conflict?

A. It's a subsection.

Q. So at this point in time are all conflicts being handled or being contracted out to contract attorneys or these panel attorneys?

A. New cases coming in, virtually all of them absent a rare exception.

Q. And at this point in time in terms of contract attorneys, is the only purpose or the only use of contract attorneys conflict cases or is there any other way that the MSPD system utilizes contract attorneys?

A. We -- if there's sufficient money in our budget, we will do some what we call overload contracting of nonconflict cases.

Q. Do you have a sense for how often that occurs when you have that excess budgetary allocation to do that?

A. It varies from year to year. We've done it a little bit this year already, this fiscal year. It's a small percent of our budget.

Q. Would you take a stab at maybe two or three percent or how would you --

A. I'd have to look.

Q. Okay. Now, just a clarification on Exhibits 10 and 11, and those were the exhibits -- I believe they're still in front of you with the various list of attorneys by bar number, caseload, and workload. And I believe one was alluded to as being from the trial --

A. Yes.

Q. -- department, the other was from the PCR. Was it your understanding that that -- those figures came from the aggregate sum of all cases handled by those attorneys in-between the years 2009 and 2017?

A. I don't know the time period. I don't know over what period of time. I mean, there's various documents it looks like all stapled together which I can only guess have to do with different time periods.

MR. RAMSEY: Just wanted to clarify if we were talking about the same thing on that matter. No further questions.

MS. SHIPMA: I have a couple of questions.

EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MS. SHIPMA:

Q. Joel, are the RubinBrown numbers used in any way with respect to the cases that you send through the contract system?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain how that is?

A. I'm aware of any -- at any given time that for the current fiscal year what -- you know, what is the RubinBrown weight of the cases we have assigned to a panel attorney for that fiscal year.

Q. Okay. Are you familiar with an attorney by the name of Richard Scherrer?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is his relationship with MSPD?

A. He spearheads our Missouri Coalition For Right to Counsel. I think actually he's a volunteer member of our St. Louis city staff.

Page 128

Q. And what is his function there on the St. Louis city staff?

A. I think the liaison with the Missouri Coalition of Right to Counsel attorneys and firms.

Q. Does he supervise any of the attorneys who are providing that representation?

A. Oh, I don't think so.

Q. Okay.

MR. QUINLAN: How do you spell his last name.

MS. SHIPMA: S-C-H-E-R-E-R [sic], I believe. Not the same Richard Sher who was our mediator.

MR. QUINLAN: Right.

Q. (By Ms. Shipma) I want to ask a question about management training. When new district defenders are brought on, is there any type of training for them other than the three-day yearly management training?

A. Some one-on-one coaching and mentoring by their division directors.

Q. Is there a systemwide training?

A. There is also, I forgot, a periodic new district defender training that I think usually is one day of the newest district defenders. I say periodic. It's essentially a handful of new district defenders will schedule them.

MS. SHIPMA: Okay. That's all the questions I have.

MR. SHAHABIAN: Just have a few more follow-up questions based on those questions. I'll be really short.

FURTHER EXAMINATION

QUESTIONS BY MR. SHAHABIAN:

Q. Mr. Elmer, you mentioned that in your 30 years at the MSPD you had seen cases involving a judicial finding of ineffective assistance of counsel. To the best of your recollection, did any -- did excessive caseloads factor into the finding of ineffective assistance in any of those cases?

A. I don't know.

Q. You mentioned something about overload contracting for panel attorneys. Why would the MSPD use overload contracting to assign cases to panel attorneys?

A. To help alleviate our caseload problem.

Q. You mentioned that it fluctuates from year to year. Why would the caseload -- how would that -- could you help me understand why it fluctuates year to year if the goal is to relieve caseloads?

A. Because there's only a certain amount of money available. I go into each fiscal year knowing my -- my working budget for case contracting. We may be coming in under budget because there are fewer conflicts than we anticipated so that will free up money.

On the other hand there may be other areas within the public defender system such as litigation expenses that are going over budget, so I need to come in under budget to -- to help fund litigation expenses.

And -- and so, you know, once that first scenario would allow us to do more overload contracting, the second scenario would allow us to do less overload contracting or no overload contracting.

Q. And you mentioned the Missouri Coalition Right to Counsel pro bono attorneys. In your opinion, how impactful is that program to the ability of the MSPD to meet its mission to provide indigent defense?

A. Well, as far as alleviating our caseload issue, it's not effective at all. I mean, 60 cases out of 85,000 doesn't make much of a dent.

Page 131

MR. SHAHABIAN: I have no further questions at this time.

VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record at approximately 4:10 p.m.
